BERKSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire, from which it is separated by the Thames; on the east by Surrey; on the south by Hampshire, and on the west by Wiltshire; its north-west corner just meets a small point in Gloucestershire. It was inhabited by the Attrebatii, Bibroces and Segontiaci, before the island was divided into Roman provinces, when it was included in Britannia Prima, and during the Saxon Heptarchy, in the kingdom of Wessex. In 889, when Alfred, a native of Wantage, divided the kingdom into counties, it received the name of Berocscire. The shape of the county is irregular, being about 42 miles long, 28 broad, and about 130 in circumference, comprising 148 parishes, 4 borough towns, and 8 other market towns; containing at the last census 24,705 houses, and 131,977 inhabitants, of whom 8873 families are returned as being employed in trade and manufactures. A part of this county lies in Oxfordshire, and a part of Wiltshire is in this county. It is in the province of Canterbury, and the diocese of Salisbury. It sends nine members to Parliament; being two for the county, two for Windsor, two for Reading, two for Wallingford, and one for Abingdon. The principal river is the Thames; it has also the Kennet, the Loddon, the Ocke, the Isis, the Auborne, the Cole, the Emme, and the Lambourn. The western and middle parts of the county are fertile; the eastern is chiefly occupied by Windsor Forest and its appendages. A range of chalk hills crosses from Oxfordshire, and bounds the noted vale of White Horse. The air is esteemed healthy even in the vales. It is well stored with timber, particularly oak and beech. Its principal manufactories are woollen, paper, sacking, and sail-cloth. Besides its navigable rivers, it has the Kennet and Avon Canal from Reading to Hungerford, and the Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal from Abingdon, through Wantage, to Trowbridge in Wiltshire. The Roman Watling-street, from Dunstable, enters Berkshire at Streatley, and crosses the county to Marlborough. Another Roman road, from Hampshire, enters this county, and passing to Reading and Newbury, there divides and branches off to Marlborough and Cirencester. Near Wantage there is a Roman camp of a quadrangular form; at Lawrence Waltham is Castle Acre, a Roman fort, and near Denchworth, is Cherbury Castle, supposed to have been a fortress of Canute. Uffington Castle near Farringdon is said to be Danish; and near it is Pendragon Hill, supposed to be the burying-place of Uter Pendragon, a British prince. Berkshire was constituted an Earldom by James I., who created Francis Lord Norris, Earl of Berkshire, Jan. 28, 1620; the title became extinct at his death, but was revived by Charles I., who created Thomas Lord Howard of Charlton, Earl of Berkshire, Feb. 5, 1626, whose descendant is Thomas Howard, now Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire. This county was the residence of our ancient Kings at Wantage, Wallingford Castle, Letcombe Regis, and Reading Palace, as well as Windsor, which has long been famous for its magnificent Castle, originally founded by William the Conqueror. Besides Cumberland Lodge, Cranbourn Lodge, and other residences belonging to the Crown, the very ancient mansion at Wytham, the seat of the Lord Lieutenant, and above one hundred and fifty seats of noblemen and gentlemen, are in this county.

1. Beynhurst Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the Thames and Buckinghamshire, on the south and west by Wargrave hundred, and on the east by Bray and Ripplesmere hundreds.

BISHAM, 4½ miles N.W. from Maidenhead in a very beautiful situation on the banks of the Thames, is 30 miles from London, P. T. Marlow. The church contains arms in the windows and curious monuments of its ancient benefactors, &c.: here were buried the founder of the abbey, and several Earls of Salisbury.

Bisham Abbey, founded by William Montagu first Earl of Salisbury, in the reign of Edward III., was after the Dissolution granted to the Hoby family, who built the house and resided here.—Queen Elizabeth visited Sir Philip Hoby in 1592. The chamber now called Queen Elizabeth's Council-room bears her initials. A pointed arch of one of the entrances to the house is the only vestige of the conventual buildings, which by a most perverted taste is painted to imitate marble. Sir Edward Hoby of Bisham Abbey was Speaker of the House of Commons temp. Eliz. In the abbey are a few portraits of this distinguished family, and some arms painted in the windows. It is now the property of George Vansittart, Esq., and residence of Mrs. East, widow of Augustus Henry brother of the late Sir Gilbert East, Bart. On the banks of the river are Temple Mills for the manufacture of copper work.

HURLEY, 5 miles N. W. from its P. T. Maidenhead, and 31 from London, contains 196 houses and 1065 inhabitants: it is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* The church, dedicated in 1086, has fine circular arches with chevron ornaments. Here was also a priory of Black monks, a cell to Westminster Abbey. In 1536 lands in Westminster were given to the King by the Convent, for the site and many of the lands of Hurley Priory, when Covent Garden was granted to the King in exchange for Hurley Wood.

Near it is Lady Place, the seat of W. Troughton, Esq. This house was built in 1600 by Sir Richard Lovelace, Knt., who acquired considerable wealth in an expedition with Sir Francis Drake. It was greatly embellished by John, third Lord Lovelace, who lived here in a splendid style. During the reigns of Charles II. and his successor the principal nobility held frequent meetings in this mansion, and in one of the chambers the revolution in 1688 is said to have been concerted. An inscription to that effect has been placed in it; and the chamber was visited by the Prince of Orange after he attained the Crown, and by Their late Majesties on Nov. 14, 1785.

The hall and staircase are very magnificent: there is also a large saloon with a painted ceiling; the panels of this room, about fifty in number, contain landscapes coarsely painted but heightened with gilding; the soffits of the large bay window are panelled in the same style, reputed to have been the work of Salvator Rosa, whose receipt for the performance is said to have been in the possession of Mr. Wilcox, the late resident here and descendant of Lord Lovelace. The stables were the identical refectory of the priory.

Adjoining Birches Green is Hall Place, the seat of Lady East, relict of the late Sir Gilbert East, Bart., on whose death in 1828 the title became extinct.

REMENHAM, on the banks of the Thames, 2 miles N. E. from its P. T. Henley, and 34 from London, contains 72 houses, and 368 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of Jesus College, Oxford. It commands pleasing views of Fawley Court, Bucks, on the opposite side of the river, Henley Bridge, and Park Place.

SHOTTESBROOKE, or Sotesbrok, 4 miles S. E. from its P. T. Maidenhead, and 30 from London, contains 17 houses, and 135 inhabitants. It is a vicarage united with White Waltham. Shottesbrooke House is a modern brick edifice covered with stucco. The manor was anciently held by a singular species of grand serjeanty; viz. providing charcoal to make the crown and other regalia at the coronation; a sum of 60*s.* 10*d.* being allowed for the same. This tenure originated in the time of William Rufus, when the manor was held by Alward the goldsmith. In the reign of Edward III. the manor was held by Sir William Trussell, who here founded a small college with a chantry dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and appropriated the church of Shottesbrooke for the revenue of it; and having received a considerable accession, the convent continued in a flourishing state, till its suppression in the time of Henry VIII. The last warden, Dr. Throckmorton, lies buried in the church. In the reign of Elizabeth, the estate passed to the Cherrys, the representative of which family sold it to the family of the present proprietor, Arthur Vansittart, Esq.

WHITE WALTHAM, 4 miles S. W. from its P. T. Maidenhead, and 29½ from London, contains 127 houses, and 795 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, united with Shottesbrooke. The ancient manor house which stood within a moat, was, by tradition, a residence of Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII. It was afterwards the property of the family of Norris.

Thomas Hearne, the Oxford antiquary, was born at Littleford Green in this village, son of the parish clerk. A number of Roman coins and other antiquities discovered here in 1695, was probably the cause of his subsequent application to the study of antiquities, in which he was encouraged by the patronage of Francis Cherry, Esq. of Shottesbrooke House.

At Heywood House in this parish died Sir Constantine Phipps, Lord Chancellor of Ireland in 1723. John Kearney, Esq. has a seat here. Waltham Place is the seat of Philip Rawlings, Esq.

2. Bray Hundred

Is bounded by Beynhurst hundred on the south and west, on the east by the Thames, and on the north by a detached part of Cookham hundred. It contains only one parish, from which it derives its name, including part of Maidenhead Thicket and part of St. Leonard's Hill in Windsor Forest, and is divided into four parts,—Bray, Maidenhead, Touchen, and Water Oakley.

BRAY, on the banks of the Thames, 1 mile S. from its P. T. Maidenhead, and 25 from London, contains 636 houses, and 3159 inhabitants. Bray is supposed to be the Bibracte of the Romans; and part of a Roman Way is said to have been discovered between the river and the east angle of the church-yard: several Roman coins, weapons, and fragments of armour, have certainly been found at different times in the East Hay, a common field on the east side of the town. The vicarage, valued at 25*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, is in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Philippa, Queen of Edward III., held Bray and Cookham, which are still considered part of the Royal demesne and attached to the liberties of Windsor Castle, retaining some privileges, amongst which is exemption from tolls in the adjacent market towns. An almshouse was founded here by William Goddard, in 1627, whose effigy is over the door. It is famous in song and proverb for its parish priest, Simon Aleyn, who, adhering to his determination of living and dying vicar of Bray, in the reign of Henry VIII. and his three successors actually changed his religion three times: he died here in 1588. Braywick Lodge, the seat of Sir J. Waller, Bart., stands on an eminence commanding a fine view of Windsor, Maidenhead, Taplow and Clifden woods, &c. Filberts, at Hollyport in this parish, was originally built for the celebrated Nell Gwynn, when mistress to King Charles II. The Willows, between Bray and Windsor, the seat of Henry Townley Ward, Esq., commands fine views of Eton and Windsor.

Monkey Island, in the river Thames, derives its name from a rustic building erected by Charles second Duke of Marlborough, the interior of which was decorated with paintings of monkeys, similar to the Monkeyana of Landseer. Cannon Hill at Braywick, the seat of Mrs. E. Law, is eminently picturesque in its situation.

Ockholt or Ockwells Manor-house, a very remarkable and curious specimen of domestic architecture of the reign of Henry VI., is in this parish, and belonged at that time to the family of Norris or Norreys, who also held Mores and Hynden, two other manors in the parish of Bray.

This house was built by John Norreys, who held the offices of usher of the chamber, esquire of the body, and master of the wardrobe to King Henry VI. He was also esquire of the body to King Edward IV. The building, it appears, was not quite completed in 1465, in which year he made his will, bequeathing "to the full building and making uppe of the chapell, with the chambre adjoyning, not yet finished, 40*l.*:" he also bequeathed to Lord Wenlock, one of his executors, a gilt cup covered, called the Housewife; he died in 1467. The greater part of this very curious structure is still preserved, and the hall, an important feature in every old house, remains in its original state; it has a large oriel window, besides a continued range of windows filled with armorial decoration in painted glass; the ground, in alternate quarries diagonally disposed, contains the badges and mottoes of the family, upon which are displayed the following coats of arms, the three first with supporters, &c.: 1. King Henry VI.; 2. Margaret his Queen; 3. Norreys; 4. The Abbot of Abingdon; 5. Beaufort Duke of Somerset; 6. Edmund Earl of March; 7. Henry Duke of Warwick; 8. De la Pole Duke of Suffolk; 9. Sir William Beauchamp Lord St. Amand; 10. Sir William Lacon of Bray, Chief Justice of the King's Bench; 11. Lord Wenlock; 12. Sir Richard Nanfan; 13. Sir John Pury of Chamberhouse Castle, Thatcham; and 14. Bulstrode quartering Shobingdon. Recently the mansion came into the possession of the Powneys, an ancient Berkshire family. Colonel Powney, M.P. for Windsor, resided at Ives Place near this town, and was son of Penystone Powney, Esq. M.P. for the county.

MAIDENHEAD, or South Alington, P. T., partly in the parish of Bray and partly in Cookham, 9 miles N.W. from Colnbrook, and 26 W. from London. The market is on Wednesday; fairs, Whit. Wednesday, Michaelmas, and St. Andrew's Day. It contains, including Cookham, 638 houses, and 3995 inhabitants. A new chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was erected in 1825 on a better site than the old one founded by John Husbands, and was built from designs, by C.A. Busby, in the architectural style of Edward IV. The altar-piece, 'Christ desiring little Children to be brought to him,' was painted, and presented to the Corporation, by Isaac Pocock, Esq. of Maidenhead Bridge: a gallery at the east end contains an organ which had been presented to the old chapel by the late Lady Pocock; behind it is a stained glass window, by Willement, containing the arms of Margaret, Queen of Edward I., who granted the first charter of incorporation to the town; the arms of King Richard II., who confirmed that charter; and the arms of King Henry VI., who granted a second confirmation of it to the town. There are also in the window the armorial bearings of Queen Elizabeth, in whose reign the chapel was dedicated to the Protestant religion; and the Royal badges of the several sovereigns connected with the history of the town. In the west window of the chapel are the arms of the town, apparently copied from the curious ancient seal belonging to the Corporation.—There is a school for boys endowed by the Corporation, and one for girls supported by the benefaction of the late Lady Pocock.

The bridge, of thirteen arches altogether, over the Thames, was erected in 1772, from designs by Sir Robert Taylor, at an expense of 20,000*l.* The barge pier of the bridge is maintained by the Corporation, for which they receive toll. A charter of James II. placed the town under a mayor and aldermen, with liberty to choose a high steward and deputy. From the ten aldermen two bridge-masters are annually chosen. The mayor is justice of the peace, coroner, and clerk of the market; he is also judge of a Court which he must hold once in three weeks, exclusive of two sessions. It has a gaol for debtors and felons, and eight almshouses for poor men and women, who are allowed 4*s.* per week besides 30*s.* per annum for coals. The principal trade is in malt, meal, and timber. In the neighbourhood are several handsome houses. Formosa Place, the rural villa of Sir Samuel Young, Bart., is seated in a valley encompassed with fertile meadows and sheltered by the beautiful hanging woods of Hedsor, and Clifden; Stubbings, at Maidenhead Thicket, the seat of Lady Dorchester; &c. In Water Oakley division of Bray Parish lived Richard Tonson, M.P. for Windsor, who built here a large room and antechamber for the reception of the celebrated portraits of the members of the Kitcat Club, composed of the principal Whig nobility and gentry, wits and scholars in the reign of Queen Anne; of which club Jacob Tonson, the bookseller, was the secretary. These pictures were first placed at Barn Elms, in Surrey, the house of his eldest son Jacob; on whose death, in 1767, they descended to his brother Richard, of Water Oakley, and, upon his demise in 1772, to Mr. Baker of Hartingfordbury Park, where they now remain.

3. Charlton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Reading hundred, on the east by Sunning hundred, on the south by Hampshire, and on the west by Theale hundred.

BARKHAM, on the borders of Windsor Forest, 3 miles from its P. T. Wokingham, and 35 from London, contains 34 houses, and 215 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* Here is the seat of the Honourable Henry Clive.

In Early Liberty, a tithing to the parish of Sonning, 2½ miles E. from Reading, are Early Court, the seat of Mrs. Townshend, and Early Place, of John Usborne, Esq.

FINCHAMPSTEAD, on the borders of Windsor Forest, 3 miles S. from Wokingham, and 36 from London, contains 91 houses, and 552 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* P. T. Bracknell.

SHINFIELD, 3 miles S. from its P. T. Reading, and 40 from London. Part of the parish is in Wiltshire. It contains in Berkshire 107 houses, and 579 inhabitants; and in Wiltshire 78 houses, and 155 inhabitants. Hartley Dammer, a liberty on the west side of this parish, is in Theale hundred. Shinfield is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 3*s.*

Shinfield Park is the seat of E. F. Maitland, Esq. M.P. Shinfield Place is the seat of Mrs. Cobham, and on the opposite side of the river Loddon is Arborfield House, an old mansion built by the Standens, of which family William Standen was sheriff of the county in 1615; Edward Standen, the last heir male of his family, was the lover in Gay's ballad of "Molly Mog." This seat afterwards belonged to S. W. Barret, Esq., and is now the residence of Major-general Dawson.

Sheep Bridge between Three-mile Cross and Riseley, in the road from Reading to Alton, crosses the Loddon. Near it are Oakfield House, Wentworth Ray, Esq.; Oakfield Lodge, J. Murdoch, Esq.; and Farley Hill, C. Dickinson, Esq.

SWALLOWFIELD, 6 miles S. of its P. T. Reading, and 40 from London, contains 178 houses, and 983 inhabitants. Part of the parish forms a detached portion of Wiltshire.

Swallowfield Place is the seat of T. A. H. Earl, Esq. This house was rebuilt in 1689, after designs by William Talman, the architect of Chatsworth, for Henry second Earl of Clarendon, who obtained the estate in marriage with Flower, the daughter and heiress of William Backhouse, Esq. of Swallowfield.

4. Compton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wantage and a part of Reading hundreds, on the east by Moreton hundred, on the south by Faircross, and on the west by Kintbury hundred.

ALDWORTH, pleasantly situated on a hill, 10 miles N. W. from its P. T. Reading, and 50 from London, contains 50 houses, and 293 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 16*s.*

Here was anciently a mansion belonging to the family of De La Beche; its site is now Beach Farm. In the churchyard is a remarkable yew-tree. This church is celebrated for the very ancient monuments, nine in number, disposed in enriched arches on each side, and in the centre, of the interior. These are supposed to belong to the De La Beche family, and from the costume of the figures upon the tombs may be referred to the 14th century; six of them are knights in armour, two are females, and one in the common habit of the time; some of the knights are represented lying cross-legged; these had vowed or accompanied a crusade: the workmanship is excellent, and the attitude and expression of each of the figures, that remain perfect, exceedingly graceful; but several of the monuments are now considerably mutilated. The font is very ancient and remarkably plain, but capacious and somewhat singular in its form.

CHILTON, 3 miles N. from Ilsley, in the road from Newbury to Abingdon, and 50 from London, P. T. Newbury, contains 50 houses, and 229 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*

COMPTON, 1½ mile E. from Ilsley and 52 from London, contains 100 houses, and 482 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

FARNBOROUGH, 3 miles W. from East Ilsley, and 57 from London, contains 47 houses, and 210 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* with Catmore.

EAST ILSLEY, a market town, situate on an eminence, to the south of the Cuckhamsley Hills, which extend across the county from Aston to Wantage: it is 8 miles N. from the P. T. Newbury, and 54 from London, containing 119 houses, and 676 inhabitants. It is celebrated for its sheep-market, next to that of London, said to be the largest in England, which commences on Wednesday in Easter week, and continues to be held every alternate Wednesday till Midsummer. Not less than 20,000 sheep have sometimes been sold in one day to the farmers of Hertfordshire and Buckinghamshire, in which counties chiefly they are fattened for the London market.

WEST ILSLEY adjoins the foregoing; containing 84 houses, and 328 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 22*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*

5. Cookham Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by Wargrave and Ripplesmere hundreds, on the south by Surrey, and on the west by Sonning hundred.

BINFIELD, situated in the midst of the Royal Hunt in Windsor Forest, 3½ miles N.W. from Wokingham, and 28 from London, contains 202 houses, and 1057 inhabitants. P. T. Bracknell.

Near Binfield Place, on the summit of a hill, is a very large encampment, defended by a double ditch, called Cæsar's Camp; and about half a mile south of this camp is the Devil's Highway, a raised road so called, nearly 90 feet wide, with a trench on each side running east and west. At this place Pope resided with his father in the early part of his life, and here composed his earliest poems. His "Pastorals," written at the age of sixteen, introduced him to the acquaintance and friendship of Sir William Trumbull, a statesman, who then lived at East Hampstead. In a retired part of the forest, consisting entirely of beech trees, on the edge of a common, within half a mile of his father's house, is a large tree, inscribed by George Lord Littleton, in capital letters about 12 feet from the ground, HERE · POPE · SVNG. This emphatic sentence is annually revised.

Bracknell, a part of the parish of East Hampstead, is in this hundred, on the borders of Ascot Heath.

COOKHAM is a detached portion of this hundred, on the banks of the Thames, and includes part of its P. T. Maidenhead, whence it is 2½ miles N. and 24 miles from London; containing 509 houses, and 2734 inhabitants, who are mostly employed in agriculture. It is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*

SUNNING-HILL, 5 miles S.W. from its P. T. Staines, and 22 from London, contains 225 houses, and 1125 inhabitants. It is a very pleasant village in the most delightful part of Windsor Forest; the Wells in the neighbourhood, neatly fitted up, are much frequented during the summer season. The church, a specimen of our earlier parochial churches, consists of a nave and small chancel divided from the nave by a square belfry tower. It is a curacy, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge. Sunning-Hill Park, the seat of George Henry Crutchley, Esq., was formerly part of the Royal demesne, and was granted by King Charles I. to Thomas Carey, Esq., whose daughter and heiress conveyed it by marriage to Sir Thomas Draper, created baronet in 1660. The park is enriched by luxuriant woods and a spacious lake; and possesses the privilege of being tithe free, as long as sixteen head of deer are kept in it. The house was nearly rebuilt, by the late James Wyatt.

Silwood Park, the seat of George Simson, Esq., was built by the late Sir James Sibbald, Bart. in 1787, from designs by Robert Mitchell, in the composite order: the estate is laid out as a ferme ornée, with much taste; a riding of four miles in circuit embraces the successive features of the whole.

6. Faircross Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Compton hundred, on the east by Moreton, Theale, and a part of Reading hundreds, on the south by Hampshire, and on the west by Kintbury Eagle hundred.

BEEDON, 2 miles S. from East Ilsley, 7 miles N. from its P. T. Newbury, and 56 from London, contains 60 houses, and 213 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*

BOXFORD, 4 miles from P. T. Newbury, and 60 from London, contains 108 houses, and 563 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.* with Westbrook, in Kintbury hundred.

BRIGHTWALTHAM, 3 miles W. from East Ilsley, P. T. Newbury, and 85 from London, contains 82 houses, and 450 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 15*s.*

BRIMTON is situate on the river Kennett, 5½ miles S. E. from Newbury, and 51 from London; containing 83 houses, and 464 inhabitants. Here was formerly a house of knights templars. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.*

CHIEVELEY, 4¾ miles N. from its P.T. Newbury, and 58 from London; containing 224 houses, and 1163 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* Near it is Prior's Court, the seat of John Thomas Wasey, Esq.

Leckhampstead, and Winterhurn, with the tithings of Oare, Courage, and Snellsmore, are in this parish.

FRILSHAM, 11 miles from Reading, and 48 from London, contains 37 houses, and 171 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.*

HAMPSTEAD NORRIS, 3 miles S.E. from East Ilsley, and 52 from London, contains 156 houses, and 1111 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

Midgham is in Thatcham parish; and Greenham is also a tithing of Thatcham. Midgham House is the seat of William Stephen Poyntz, Esq. M.P., to whom it descended from Lord Viscount Montague.

NEWBURY, P. T., seated in a valley on the banks of the Kennet, 16½ miles S.W. from Reading, and 53 W. from London. It is a borough and market town; and contains 1132 houses, and 5347 inhabitants, of whom 800 families are employed in various trades and manufactures, principally woollen. The market, on Thursday, is considered one of the largest corn-markets west of London. Fairs: Holy Thursday, Midsummer-day, St. Bartholomew's-day, and St. Simon's and St. Jude's. The church was built in the reign of Henry VII., and was chiefly raised at the expense of John Winchcombe, whose monumental floorstone is near the chancel. It is a rectory, value 38*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

In the reign of Henry VIII. John Winchcombe, the greatest clothier in England, better known by the name of Jack of Newbury, kept 100 looms in his own house, for the weaving of broad cloth only. The manufactory is now an inn, the sign of which is The Jack of Newbury. According to tradition, King Henry VIII. together with his Queen, Katherine of Arragon, and many of the nobility, were splendidly entertained in this house in the early part of his reign. On the breaking out of the war with the Scots, in the expedition which led to the battle of Floddon, he joined the King's army, with 100 men, clothed and armed at his own expense. He died 15th Feb. 1519.

Newbury is one of the largest towns in the county; it was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, in 1596, under a mayor, high steward, six aldermen, and 24 capital burgesses: the Corporation seal, inscribed Burgus Newberie, bears on a mount, a castle with three domed towers, on each a penon. The town hall, over the market-place, is ornamented with a picture of the surrender of Calais, by Price, purchased by the Corporation in 1762, and with a portrait of John Winchcombe. Besides the church, there are five other places of worship, almshouses for poor men and women, and a charity-school for boys. It carries on a considerable traffic in malt and flour, by means of the Kennet and Avon canal, and the rivers Kennet, Thames, and Avon, which connect this town with London and Bristol. On the banks of the Kennet have often been dug up petrified wood and animal fossils. In this neighbourhood were two obstinate battles, in 1643 and 1644, between the Royal and Parliamentary armies. The first was fought on the Wash, a common so called, and the other in the fields between Newbury, Speen, and Shaw; the King commanding his army both days in person.

Speenhamland, a tithing to the parish of Speen, adjoins the town of Newbury. Dr. William Twiss, a very learned Non-conformist divine, was born here about 1575.

Sandleford is a tithing in Newbury parish, and 2 miles S. of it. Sandleford Priory, erected from designs by the late James Wyatt, descended to Lord Rokeby, from his aunt Mrs. Montagu, a learned and benevolent lady, distinguished by her classical and elegant "Essay on the Genius and Writings of Shakspeare," and as founder of the literary society, familiarly termed "The Blue Stocking Club." After her death, in 1800, four volumes of her Epistolary Correspondence were published by her nephew and executor, Matthew Montagu, Esq. now Lord Rokeby.

PEASEMORE, 4 miles S. W. from East Ilsley; P. T. Newbury, 58 miles from London; contains 61 houses, and 248 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.*

SHAW, 1 mile from P.T. Newbury, and 56 from London, near the river Lambourn; containing, together with Donnington, 111 houses, and 53 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

Shaw Place, a very curious mansion of the Elizabethan age, was erected in the year 1581 by T. Dolman, an eminent clothier, and sheriff of the county in 1588, at which time he had the honour of entertaining the Queen here: over the porch of entrance is inscribed ENDENTVLVS · VESCENTIVM · DENTIBVS · INVIDET · ET · OCVLOS · CAPREARVM · TALPA · CONTEMNIT. This house was made the head-quarters of the King at the time of the last battle of Newbury: in a panel of one of the chambers is a hole said to have been made by a musket-shot fired at the King while he was standing near a window. The mansion was secured at this time by a high rampart of earth, still remaining. It continued in the family of Dolman till 1727, when it was sold to James Duke of Chandos, of whose heir it was purchased by Jos. Andrews, Esq. in 1749. His son was created a baronet in 1766, who on his death in 1800 was succeeded by his nephew Sir Joseph, son of James Petyt Andrews, of Donnington Grove, a well-known author of miscellaneous works: those relating to this county were a description of Shaw, in Mores's Berkshire Collections, and an account of Saxon Coins found in Kintbury churchyard. Sir Joseph Andrews, Bart. his son, died in 1822, and was succeeded by his sister Mrs. Hunt, on whose death in the same year Shaw Place descended to the Rev. Dr. Penrose, Fellow of New Coll. Oxford, and vicar of Writtle in Essex.

In the immediate vicinity is Donnington Castle, beautifully situated on a rising ground near a branch of the river Lambourn, backed by a hill crowned with wood. The remains consist of the gray walls of the Gate House. In the south tower are steps leading to the top, whence is a fine view of the Hampshire hills and intermediate country. The castle is said to have been built by Sir Richard Abberbury, in the latter part of the reign of Richard II. Of his son it was purchased, it is supposed, by Chaucer, the father of English Poetry. Three oaks in the park are said to have been planted by the poet; one was called the King's, the second the Queen's, and the third Chaucer's Oak. It is more certain that the castle was in the hands of Thomas de Chaucer for many years, and that it descended to William De La Pole Duke of Suffolk, who enlarged the outbuildings of the castle, and resided here. Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk also held it by grant from King Henry VIII. In the Civil Wars it was a post of consequence, and was twice besieged; at the conclusion of the war, it was pulled down, and the house at the bottom of the hill erected with the materials, by the family of Packer, to whom it then belonged.

Donnington Grove, the seat of J. Bebb, Esq., is pleasantly situated on a sloping lawn, at the foot of which the river has been enlarged, forming a sheet of water a mile in length, with islands in it; the grounds are well wooded, and possess every attraction of luxuriant nature and tasteful cultivation.

STANDFORD DINGLEY, 9 miles from Newbury, and 53 from London, contains 28 houses, and 135 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* Rushdens, an ancient house in this parish, was for more than two centuries the seat of the Lyford family, whose heir general married into the Granger family.

WASING, 7 miles S.E. of Newbury, and 49 from London, contains 13 houses, and 68 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Wasing House is the seat of W. Mount, Esq.

WELFORD, 5 miles N.W. of its P. T. Newbury, and 61 from London, contains 197 houses, and 1058 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 35*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*, with Wickham chapel annexed. Welford House is the seat of John Archer Houblon, Esq.

YATTENDEN, 6 miles S.E. from East Ilsley, P. T. Newbury, 45 miles from London, contains 43 houses, and 230 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.* 6*s.* Fair, Oct. 13. Yattenden was the manor and residence of the family of Norris, afterwards Earl of Berkshire. Thomas Carte, the very learned English historian, lies buried in a vault on the north side of the chancel of the church, without any memorial. He died 1754, at Caldicot-house, near this place. Within the last ten years a very remarkable excavation has been discovered here by workmen in digging for chalk. It consists of various passages intersecting one another, the arches supported by square piers hewn out of the chalk, of which the entire cavern is formed; it is of unascertained extent, and no tradition of its existence had been preserved: although, by a date inscribed within it, it appeared to have been visited in the early part of the 17th century.

7. Farringdon Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames in the north-west part of the county, on the opposite side of which, within the confines of Oxfordshire, are two detached portions of this hundred, which is nearly inclosed on the other sides by Shrivenham hundred, except at the north-east corner, where it is bounded by Ganfield hundred.

GREAT COXWELL, 1½ mile S.W. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 69 from London, contains 60 houses, and 306 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.*; patron, the Bishop of Salisbury. A remarkable barn here, which as well as Farringdon Priory belonged to the abbot and convent of Beaulieu in Hampshire, is 148 feet long by 40 feet wide; the walls, 4 feet thick, are fine pieces of masonry, and the roof is supported by two rows of upright timbers, which rest on stone piers. Little Coxwell is a township of Farringdon parish.

FARRINGDON, P. T., about 2 miles from the Thames, 14 miles W. from Abingdon, and 68 W. N. W. from London, on the W. side of Farringdon Hill, contains 379 houses, and 2271 inhabitants; with a good market on Tuesday. Fairs, 13th Feb. and Whit-Tuesday, for pedlary; and on the 29th Oct. a statute fair is held for hiring servants. It is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* The town has a very large and handsome church, the east end of which is of great antiquity, having windows similar to those of the Temple church in London: it contains several very handsome monuments; one on the south side is that of the founder, and on the north side is another of Sir Edward Unton, K.B. of Wadley, who married Anne, daughter of Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset. In the middle of the same chapel are some ancient monuments of Thomas de Farringdon, 1394, and others of the Unton and Purefoy families. In the middle of the church are monuments of the Darnleys, formerly lords of the manor. In Pleydell's aisle are monuments of the Pleydell, Rich, and Pye families. The town is governed by a bailiff.

There are ruins of an ancient castle, built by Robert Earl of Gloucester, in the time of Stephen; and here King John founded an abbey for Cistercian monks. The principal business of this town is in bacon, not less than 4000 hogs being slaughtered here in some years. Farringdon House was built by Henry James Pye, the Poet Laureate; the old house was garrisoned for the King in the Civil War, when Sir Robert Pye the owner, a colonel in the Parliament army, headed the assailants in an attack upon it; the spire of the church was at the same time beaten down by the artillery.

Farringdon Hill, surmounted by a grove, and celebrated by the Muse of Pye, commands an extensive view over part of Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire. Little Farringdon is a tithing to, and adjoins the above. On the top of Bradbury Hill, on the north side of the road leading from Farringdon to Highworth, is a circular camp 200 yards in diameter, with a ditch 20 yards wide, said to be Danish.

Radcot Bridge, distant 2¼ miles from Farringdon, is one of the oldest structures of its kind over the Thames, and consists of three arches. For the improvement of the navigation a cut was completed in 1787, which beginning a short distance above the bridge crosses a meadow, and passes through an arch which continues the road; afterwards it joins the main current, now entirely deserted, except by the fisherman who follows his occupation in its unfrequented water. Radcot weir, at some distance below the bridge, presents a charming little picture of rustic scenery. When the river is high, the overfall of the water forms a large cascade; but at all times it affords variety to the view, breaks the line of the river, and produces some head of waterfall.

At Radcot Bridge a battle was fought in 1387 between Robert de Vere, Marquess of Dublin, and the Barons, headed by Thomas Duke of Gloucester, and Henry Earl of Derby, where the forces of the favourite were routed, and himself obliged to swim the river to effect his escape.

LANGFORD, 2 miles N.E. from Lechlade in Gloucestershire, and 78 from London, contains 76 houses, and 387 inhabitants. This is quite a detached part of Berkshire, and is entirely surrounded by Oxfordshire, and Gloucestershire.

SHILTON, 3 miles S.E. from Burford, and 70 from London, contains 46 houses, and 256 inhabitants. This also is a detached part of the county surrounded by Oxfordshire.

8. Ganfield Hundred,

In the north-west part of the county, is bounded on the north by the river Thames, on the south and east by Ock hundred; while Wantage, Shrivenham, and Farringdon hundreds complete the boundary on the south-west sides.

BUCKLAND, 4½ N.E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 63 from London, contains 151 houses, and 893 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Hugh de Bocland, who held this manor, was sheriff of the county in the reign of Henry II., and one of the ancient Barons of the realm. It was afterwards in the possession of the De La Poles, Dukes of Suffolk, and was purchased in 1545 by the family of Yate. Edward Yate, of Buckland, was created a baronet in 1622. From this family it devolved to that of Throckmorton in 1690. The house was built by Sir Robert Throckmorton in 1757, after designs by John Wood of Bath. The drawing-room contains some valuable pictures by old masters, and the ceiling of the library was painted by Cipriani. The present proprietor, Charles Courtenay, Esq. assumed that name in right of his mother, heiress of John Courtenay, Esq. of Molland, county of Devon. Carswell is a hamlet to the parish of Buckland.

HINTON WALRIDGE, 5 miles E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 62 from London, contains 49 houses, and 315 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 23*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

LONGWORTH, 7 miles from Abingdon, and 62 from London, contains 98 houses, and 537 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 27*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* with Charney chapel annexed; in the patronage of Jesus Coll. Oxford.

PUSEY, 3 miles from its P. T. Farringdon, and 64 from London, contains 21 houses, and 122 inhabitants. The manor of Pusey was held by cornage, or by the service of blowing a horn in times of danger. The horn now at Pusey House is exceedingly curious, but probably not older than Richard II., although it bears the following inscription: KYNG · KNOWD · GAVE · WYLLYAM · PEWSE · YYIS · HORNE · TO · HOLD · BY · THY · LOND · implying that it was presented by Canute; and according to tradition the original possessor received the manor in reward for intelligence of an ambuscade formed by the Saxons to intercept that monarch. The length of the horn is two feet, and its greatest circumference one foot: it is of a dark brown colour, and is garnished at each end with hoops of silver; to another hoop in the middle are dogs' feet, and the cap represents a dog's head.

SHILLINGFORD, 3 miles S.E. from Farringdon, contains 53 houses, and 253 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* An ancient castle here was formerly a seat of the family of Packer.

STANFORD-IN-THE-VALE, 4 miles S.E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 64 from London, contains 151 houses, and 772 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, together with Goosey chapel annexed.

9. Hormer Hundred,

Anciently Hornemere, is bounded on the north and east by the river Thames, and upon the south and west by Ock hundred.

ABINGDON, P. T., 56 miles W. from London, at the very edge of the county on the banks of the Thames, contains 1013 houses, and 4801 inhabitants; was called Shoevesham by the Anglo-Saxons, until the foundation of the Abbey, when it began to assume the name of Abbandun, or the Town of the Abbey. This monastery was originally founded by Cissa, an Anglo-Saxon monarch, A.D. 675. In the reign of Alfred it was destroyed by the Danes, and continued in ruins till the year 954, when King Edgar partly restored it. Ethelwold, the abbot at that period, erected and embellished the church; succeeding abbots contributed to its increase, and soon after the Conquest the wealth and grandeur of the Abbey were equal to any similar foundation in England. Abbot Fabricius, who died in 1117, commenced building a new church; the central tower, the nave, with the west front and its towers, were erected by four succeeding abbots. William the Conqueror kept Easter in the abbey, A.D. 1084; and here was educated his youngest son Henry, surnamed Beauclerc, afterwards King Henry I. Amongst the illustrious persons who were buried here, was Cissa, the founder, St. Edward the martyr, 978, Sydeman, Bishop of Devonshire, 990, and Robert Doyley, High Constable of England, and Baron of Hook Norton, Oxon. In the reign of Henry I. one of the most eminent characters who received sepulture in this abbey was the famous Jeffery of Monmouth, author of the British History,—a romance which has supplied some of our best poets with materials for their sublime compositions. Shakspeare's Lear, and Milton's Comus, are both derived from Jeffery's History. He flourished in the reign of Henry I. At the Dissolution, the revenues of this abbey were valued at 2000*l.* per ann. It was a mitred abbey, and was dedicated to St. Nicholas for Benedictine Monks. Thomas Pentecost, the last abbot, received a grant of the park and mansion of Cumner with a yearly pension of 200*l.* Nearly the whole of this splendid fabric was then destroyed, with the exception of the Gate House, adorned with the figure of the Virgin over the arch, afterwards used as a prison; and part of the abbot's lodgings, amongst the buildings now forming Child's brewery *. The abbot had a licence to embattle, 4 Edw. III. 1330. Two chambers probably of that age are each 34 feet, by 14 feet, in dimension; but in one is a large fire-place apparently of earlier date; the jambs are ornamented by slender octagonal shafts, with capitals of foliage, the windows however are more modern; the arms of the abbey were argent, a cross fleury, between four martlets, sable.

Previously to the erection of Culham Bridge, in Oxfordshire, 2 miles S. of this town, in 1416, the abbey formed the chief support of the inhabitants; but the road from Gloucester to the metropolis being then carried through Abingdon, it soon became one of the chief towns in the county. It consists of several streets, which centre in a spacious area, where the market is held on Monday and Friday. The market-house, a remarkable structure, was erected in the reign of Queen Anne. In the middle of the market-place stood a cross of superior elegance, destroyed by the troops of General Waller, after a repulse received from the Royal army at New Bridge. This beautiful cross is reported to have been the model for the celebrated one at Coventry, erected in the reign of Henry VIII.: it was of stone, octangular in plan, and enriched with three courses of statues; the lowest course consisted of six kings, the next of a mitred prelate, the Virgin Mary and four female saints, and the uppermost of small figures of the Prophets; there were besides upon the cross, numerous shields of arms, sculptured and painted, amongst which was the arms of Sir John Golafre, Barry wavy of six, argent and gules, on a bend sable, three bezants. He was one of the commissioners, by whom the Guild of Holy Cross was incorporated in the reign of Henry VI., which fraternity it is not improbable erected the cross.

The church dedicated to St. Helen is a very noble edifice, situated near the river; it has a lofty and elegant spire raised on a tower, having pinnacles at the angles; the architecture is of various dates, corresponding with the different periods at which it was altered and enlarged. Over the S. porch is a shield with the initials T · R · 1543, and over a porch at the W. end the date 1617. The church dedicated to St. Nicholas was built by an abbot of that name in the reign of Edw. I.; the west door is under a fine circular arch enriched with the chevron moulding. Near this church and abutting on the town-hall is the grammar school, founded in 1563 by John Royse; in which were educated Clement Barksdale, author of the Life of Grotius, and Sir Edward Turnour, Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1671. Dr. Thos. Godwin, rector of Brightwell, and author of "Romanæ Historiæ Anthologia," was elected master in 1609; and the Rev. Dr. Lempriere was elected in 1792, when he removed from Bolton in Lancashire: the second edition of his Classical Dictionary was prepared here in 1793. Christ's Hospital, anciently St. Helen's, near the river, was originally founded by Geoffrey Barbour, a merchant, but received its present name from Sir John Mason, an eminent native of this town, who in 1553 endowed it for 13 poor men and women. There is an ancient bridge at the entrance of the town from London; and for the convenience of the barges a wharf has been completed at the side of a cut, which, forming a small curve, joins the main river below

* Lysons.

Culham Bridge. King Henry VIII. visited Abingdon several times, and in 1518 received here the homage of the University of Oxford. During the Civil Wars it was garrisoned for the King, at which period the ancient earth-works in the neighbourhood were applied to military purposes by both Royalists and Republicans. The Corporation consists of a mayor, two bailiffs, nine aldermen, and sixteen assistants. The charter was granted by Queen Mary in 1557; and the arms, confirmed to the borough in 1623, are vert, a cross fleury or, between four crosses pattée argent. It sends one member to Parliament, the right of election to whom is in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, about 600. The present M.P. is John Maberley, Esq. of Shirley House in Surrey.

The tithings Barton and Pumney, Norcott, Sandford, and Sheppon, are hamlets of St. Helen's parish, Abingdon.

Bagley Wood is 4 miles from Abingdon on the road to Oxford. This wood is extra-parochial, and was formerly of very great extent.

BARTON, 4 miles from its P. T. Hungerford, and 61 from London, contains only 2 houses, and 21 inhabitants. Compton Read, Esq. of Barton, was created a baronet by King Charles II. 4th March, 1661; the principal seat of this family is now at Shipton in Oxfordshire.

BESSELSLEIGH, 6 miles from Oxford, and 62 from London, contains 22 houses, and 130 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Here was an ancient seat of the Fettyplaces, who inherited it from the Blessels family. It afterwards came to the Lenthalls, who rebuilt it; one or two gateways of stone remain.

CUMNER, 3 miles W. from its P. T. Oxford, and 58 from London, contains 94 houses, and 508 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 17*s.*; patron the Earl of Abingdon. Here is a medicinal spring.

Cumner has been brought into such general notice by Sir Walter Scott's delightful romance of Kenilworth, that it becomes necessary to give a more particular description than our limited space will generally admit. The parish was originally of very great extent, and included both the Hinxeys and Wootton, together with the chapelry of Seckworth within its boundary. The village is built on the brow of a hill commanding an extensive view over part of the counties of Oxford and Gloucester—a tract in the highest state of cultivation, richly studded with copses, and diversified with hedgerow timber. The manor had belonged from a very early period to the opulent abbots and convent of Abingdon, by whom it appears to have been used as a lazaretto. At the dissolution of the abbey, Cumner Place was granted by the King to Thomas Pentecost, the last abbot, for his life. This was the house which afterwards coming into the possession of Anthony Forster was enlarged by him and made his residence, after the Reformation; the death of the unfortunate Amy Robsart Countess of Leicester, while under confinement here, so pathetically described in the popular historical romance, has doomed the spot to eternal celebrity. The Hall House, as it was subsequently termed, occupied a gentle eminence on the south side of the road towards the eastern extremity of the village, and abutted on the church-yard: it is the more requisite to be thus particular in pointing out the site, as the whole was pulled down about the year 1810, when the materials were used to rebuild Wytham church. The house commanded a prospect of the vale, and was sheltered on the north and east by Botley Hill and the elevated spot called Cumner Hurst. The building, of various dates, was disposed in a quadrangular form, inclosing a court-yard; to which were attached a pleasure garden and a small park of about 25 acres in extent.

The principal portions of the building displayed in their architectural features the style which characterizes the structures of the time of Edward III. The Hall, 44 feet long by 22 feet wide, was in the centre of the west side of the quadrangle; its entrance is now in the porch of Wytham church; the chimney-piece was ornamented with a shield bearing I · H · S·, between two mitres, and the roof was of framed timber. At the northern extremity of this west side was a large room projecting beyond the line of the other buildings, called the Buttery. Over this was a spacious chamber, the entrance to which was by a pointed arch doorway in the corner of the quadrangle, opening upon a flight of stone steps carried round a newel which led to the apartment, having but one window, the largest in the whole mansion, and which has been carefully re-erected at the east end of the chancel of Wytham church. According to tradition, this was the identical chamber occupied by the Countess of Leicester previously to her melancholy decease; a certain degree of probability attaches itself to the opinion of the villagers, from the manner in which it communicated with the stairs corresponding so accurately with the description given by Ashmole. The whole had been for some time in a state of great dilapidation previously to its total destruction.

Cumner church, called the handsomest parish church in the neighbourhood, consists of a nave and north aisle; a chapel at the east end of the south side, and a chancel, with a simply elegant square tower at the west end, containing six bells; the rafters of the roof rest upon rudely sculptured corbels of stone, and against the north wall of the chancel is the rich altar tomb of the notorious Anthony Forster; but none of the inscriptions upon it mention his death, nor is there any parochial record extant to prove that he died at Cumner. In the churchyard is the base of an old stone cross; and near the church is a school-house, erected with materials obtained from Cumner Place; the school is under the care of the parish clerk.

The parish of Cumner contains the tithings of Botley, Bradley, Chawley, Chilswell, Hexwood, Hill End, Stroud, Swinford, Whitley, and Wootton.

At Dane Court, about a mile N.W. of Cumner, there was anciently a mansion house; a large stone statue of Queen Elizabeth, which formerly adorned it, now stands in the garden of Mr. Richards, near North Hinksey.

GRAMPOUND, or Grand Pont, is a tithing to the parish of St. Aldate in the city of Oxford.

HINKSEY, (North and South,) 2 miles from Oxford, contains 65 houses, and 324 inhabitants.

RADLEY, 2 miles N.E. from its P.T. Abingdon, and 53 from London, contains 66 houses, and 412 inhabitants. It is donative.

The manor belonged to the Abbot and Convent of Abingdon, and after the Dissolution was purchased by George Stonhouse, Esq. one of the clerks of the Board of Green Cloth in the reign of Elizabeth. William Stonhouse, Esq. of Radley Hall, his descendant, was created a baronet by King Charles I., 7th May, 1628. He died 1631; and against the south wall of the chancel is a monument to his memory, containing the effigies of Sir William and his lady, Elizabeth the daughter and heiress of John Powell.

The manor, in 1792, passed by will to the gallant Capt. Bowyer, who distinguished himself on the glorious 1st of June. He was the eldest son of Sir William Bowyer, Bart. of Denham, Bucks, and was himself created a baronet in 1794; he died in 1799. Thruppwick is a liberty of this parish; and Kennington, a tithing partly in Sunningwell, is partly in the parish of Radley.

SUNNINGWELL, on the banks of the Thames, 2 miles N. from its P. T. Abingdon, and 57 from London, contains 52 houses, and 227 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* A part of this parish is situate on the opposite side of the river, in Oxon, and in the church is buried its learned rector, Dr. Samuel Fell, Dean of Christ Church, Oxon; on a small lozenge-formed slab, is this short memorial "Depositum S · F · February, 1648." He contributed very largely towards the completion of Christ Church College.

WYTHAM, 3 miles N.W. from Oxford, at the foot of a hill of the same name; on the summit of which was a castle, where Offa, King of the Mercians, is reported to have kept his Court. The mansion of the Earl of Abingdon was erected about the reign of Henry VI.; the Gate House, in the centre of the front, and the Hall, are fine examples of ancient architecture. The church, originally built by the monks of Abingdon, has been rebuilt by the present Earl, who has here most carefully preserved the very interesting fragments of the mansion at Cumner.

Seckworth, or Seacourt, in the vicinity of Wytham, was granted by the Abbot of Abingdon, in the reign of Henry VIII., to John Audelet and Katharine his wife. Some traces of a more considerable place are visible on the bank of the river, which here separated the territories of the Attrebatii and Dobuni; a bridge crossed the stream at Binsey.

BUCKLAND, 4½ N.E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 63 from London, contains 151 houses, and 893 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Hugh de Bocland, who held this manor, was sheriff of the county in the reign of Henry II., and one of the ancient Barons of the realm. It was afterwards in the possession of the De La Poles, Dukes of Suffolk, and was purchased in 1545 by the family of Yate. Edward Yate, of Buckland, was created a baronet in 1622. From this family it devolved to that of Throckmorton in 1690. The house was built by Sir Robert Throckmorton in 1757, after designs by John Wood of Bath. The drawing-room contains some valuable pictures by old masters, and the ceiling of the library was painted by Cipriani. The present proprictor, Charles Courtenay, Esq. assumed that name in right of his mother, heiress of John Courtenay, Esq. of Molland, county of Devon. Carswell is a hamlet to the parish of Buckland.

HINTON WALRIDGE, 5 miles E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 62 from London, contains 49 houses, and 315 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 23*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

LONGWORTH, 7 miles from Abingdon, and 62 from London, contains 98 houses, and 537 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 27*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* with Charney chapel annexed; in the patronage of Jesus Coll. Oxford.

PUSEY, 3 miles from its P. T. Farringdon, and 64 from London, contains 21 houses, and 122 inhabitants. The manor of Pusey was held by cornage, or by the service of blowing a horn in times of danger. The horn now at Pusey House is exceedingly curious, but probably not older than Richard II., although it bears the following inscription: KYNG · KNOWD · GAVE · WYLLYAM · PEWSE · YYIS · HORNE · TO · HOLD · BY · THY · LOND · implying that it was presented by Canute; and according to tradition the original possessor received the manor in reward for intelligence of an ambuscade formed by the Saxons to intercept that monarch. The length of the horn is two feet, and its greatest circumference one foot: it is of a dark brown colour, and is garnished at each end with hoops of silver; to another hoop in the middle are dogs' feet, and the cap represents a dog's head.

SHILLINGFORD, 3 miles S.E. from Farringdon, contains 53 houses, and 253 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* An ancient castle here was formerly a seat of the family of Packer.

STANFORD-IN-THE-VALE, 4 miles S.E. from its P. T. Farringdon, and 64 from London, contains 151 houses, and 772 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, together with Goosey chapel annexed.

9. Hormer Hundred,

Anciently Hornemere, is bounded on the north and east by the river Thames, and upon the south and west by Ock hundred.

ABINGDON, P. T., 56 miles W. from London, at the very edge of the county on the banks of the Thames, contains 1013 houses, and 4801 inhabitants; was called Shoevesham by the Anglo-Saxons, until the foundation of the Abbey, when it began to assume the name of Abbandun, or the Town of the Abbey. This monastery was originally founded by Cissa, an Anglo-Saxon monarch, A.D. 675. In the reign of Alfred it was destroyed by the Danes, and continued in ruins till the year 954, when King Edgar partly restored it. Ethelwold, the abbot at that period, erected and embellished the church; succeeding abbots contributed to its increase, and soon after the Conquest the wealth and grandeur of the Abbey were equal to any similar foundation in England. Abbot Fabricius, who died in 1117, commenced building a new church; the central tower, the nave, with the west front and its towers, were erected by four succeeding abbots. William the Conqueror kept Easter in the abbey, A.D. 1084; and here was educated his youngest son Henry, surnamed Beauclerc, afterwards King Henry I. Amongst the illustrious persons who were buried here, was Cissa, the founder, St. Edward the martyr, 978, Sydeman, Bishop of Devonshire, 990, and Robert Doyley, High Constable of England, and Baron of Hook Norton, Oxon. In the reign of Henry I. one of the most eminent characters who received sepulture in this abbey was the famous Jeffery of Monmouth, author of the British History,—a romance which has supplied some of our best poets with materials for their sublime compositions. Shakspeare's Lear, and Milton's Comus, are both derived from Jeffery's History. He flourished in the reign of Henry I. At the Dissolution, the revenues of this abbey were valued at 2000*l.* per ann. It was a mitred abbey, and was dedicated to St. Nicholas for Benedictine Monks. Thomas Pentecost, the last abbot, received a grant of the park and mansion of Cumner with a yearly pension of 200*l.* Nearly the whole of this splendid fabric was then destroyed, with the exception of the Gate House, adorned with the figure of the Virgin over the arch, afterwards used as a prison; and part of the abbot's lodgings, amongst the buildings now forming Child's brewery *. The abbot had a licence to embattle, 4 Edw. III. 1330. Two chambers probably of that age are each 34 feet, by 14 feet, in dimension; but in one is a large fire-place apparently of earlier date; the jambs are ornamented by slender octagonal shafts, with capitals of foliage, the windows however are more modern; the arms of the abbey were argent, a cross fleury, between four martlets, sable.

Previously to the erection of Culham Bridge, in Oxfordshire, 2 miles S. of this town, in 1416, the abbey formed the chief support of the inhabitants; but the road from Gloucester to the metropolis being then carried through Abingdon, it soon became one of the chief towns in the county. It consists of several streets, which centre in a spacious area, where the market is held on Monday and Friday. The market-house, a remarkable structure, was erected in the reign of Queen Anne. In the middle of the market-place stood a cross of superior elegance, destroyed by the troops of General Waller, after a repulse received from the Royal army at New Bridge. This beautiful cross is reported to have been the model for the celebrated one at Coventry, erected in the reign of Henry VIII.: it was of stone, octangular in plan, and enriched with three courses of statues; the lowest course consisted of six kings, the next of a mitred prelate, the Virgin Mary and four female saints, and the uppermost of small figures of the Prophets; there were besides upon the cross, numerous shields of arms, sculptured and painted, amongst which was the arms of Sir John Golafre, Barry wavy of six, argent and gules, on a bend sable, three bezants. He was one of the commissioners, by whom the Guild of Holy Cross was incorporated in the reign of Henry VI., which fraternity it is not improbable erected the cross.

The church dedicated to St. Helen is a very noble edifice, situated near the river; it has a lofty and elegant spire raised on a tower, having pinnacles at the angles; the architecture is of various dates, corresponding with the different periods at which it was altered and enlarged. Over the S. porch is a shield with the initials T · R · 1543, and over a porch at the W. end the date 1617. The church dedicated to St. Nicholas was built by an abbot of that name in the reign of Edw. I.; the west door is under a fine circular arch enriched with the chevron moulding. Near this church and abutting on the townhall is the grammar school, founded in 1563 by John Royse; in which were educated Clement Barksdale, author of the Life of Grotius, and Sir Edward Turnour, Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1671. Dr. Thos. Godwin, rector of Brightwell, and author of "Romanæ Historiæ Anthologia," was elected master in 1609; and the Rev. Dr. Lempriere was elected in 1792, when he removed from Bolton in Lancashire: the second edition of his Classical Dictionary was prepared here in 1793. Christ's Hospital, anciently St. Helen's, near the river, was originally founded by Geoffrey Barbour, a merchant, but received its present name from Sir John Mason, an eminent native of this town, who in 1553 endowed it for 13 poor men and women. There is an ancient bridge at the entrance of the town from London; and for the convenience of the barges a wharf has been completed at the side of a cut, which, forming a small curve, joins the main river below

Culham Bridge. King Henry VIII. visited Abingdon several times, and in 1518 received here the homage of the University of Oxford. During the Civil Wars it was garrisoned for the King, at which period the ancient earth-works in the neighbourhood were applied to military purposes by both Royalists and Republicans. The Corporation consists of a mayor, two bailiffs, nine aldermen, and sixteen assistants. The charter was granted by Queen Mary in 1557; and the arms, confirmed to the borough in 1623, are vert, a cross fleury or, between four crosses pattée argent. It sends one member to Parliament, the right of election to whom is in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, about 600. The present M.P. is John Maberley, Esq. of Shirley House in Surrey.

The tithings Barton and Pumney, Norcott, Sandford, and Sheppon, are hamlets of St. Helen's parish, Abingdon.

Bagley Wood is 4 miles from Abingdon on the road to Oxford. This wood is extra-parochial, and was formerly of very great extent.

BARTON, 4 miles from its P. T. Hungerford, and 61 from London, contains only 2 houses, and 21 inhabitants. Compton Read, Esq. of Barton, was created a baronet by King Charles II. 4th March, 1661; the principal seat of this family is now at Shipton in Oxfordshire.

BESSELSLEIGH, 6 miles from Oxford, and 62 from London, contains 22 houses, and 130 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Here was an ancient seat of the Fettyplaces, who inherited it from the Blessels family. It afterwards came to the Lenthalls, who rebuilt it; one or two gateways of stone remain.

CUMNER, 3 miles W. from its P. T. Oxford, and 58 from London, contains 94 houses, and 508 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 17*s.*; patron the Earl of Abingdon. Here is a medicinal spring.

Cumner has been brought into such general notice by Sir Walter Scott's delightful romance of Kenilworth, that it becomes necessary to give a more particular description than our limited space will generally admit. The parish was originally of very great extent, and included both the Hinxeys and Wootton, together with the chapelry of Seckworth within its boundary. The village is built on the brow of a hill commanding an extensive view over part of the counties of Oxford and Gloucester—a tract in the highest state of cultivation, richly studded with copses, and diversified with hedgerow timber. The manor had belonged from a very early period to the opulent abbots and convent of Abingdon, by whom it appears to have been used as a lazaretto. At the dissolution of the abbey, Cumner Place was granted by the King to Thomas Pentecost, the last abbot, for his life. This was the house which afterwards coming into the possession of Anthony Forster was enlarged by him and made his residence, after the Reformation; the death of the unfortunate Amy Robsart Countess of Leicester, while under confinement here, so pathetically described in the popular historical romance, has doomed the spot to eternal celebrity. The Hall House, as it was subsequently termed, occupied a gentle eminence on the south side of the road towards the eastern extremity of the village, and abutted on the church-yard: it is the more requisite to be thus particular in pointing out the site, as the whole was pulled down about the year 1810, when the materials were used to rebuild Wytham church. The house commanded a prospect of the vale, and was sheltered on the north and east by Botley Hill and the elevated spot called Cumner Hurst. The building, of various dates, was disposed in a quadrangular form, inclosing a court-yard; to which were attached a pleasure garden and a small park of about 25 acres in extent.

The principal portions of the building displayed in their architectural features the style which characterizes the structures of the time of Edward III. The Hall, 44 feet long by 22 feet wide, was in the centre of the west side of the quadrangle; its entrance is now in the porch of Wytham church; the chimney-piece was ornamented with a shield bearing I · H · S·, between two mitres, and the roof was of framed timber. At the northern extremity of this west side was a large room projecting beyond the line of the other buildings, called the Buttery. According to tradition, this was the identical chamber occupied by the Countess of Leicester previously to her melancholy decease; a certain degree of probability attaches itself to the opinion of the villagers, from the manner in which it communicated with the stairs corresponding so accurately with the description given by Ashmole. The whole had been for some time in a state of great dilapidation previously to its total destruction.

Cumner church, called the handsomest parish church in the neighbourhood, consists of a nave and north aisle; a chapel at the east end of the south side, and a chancel, with a simply elegant square tower at the west end, containing six bells; the rafters of the roof rest upon rudely sculptured corbels of stone, and against the north wall of the chancel is the rich altar tomb of the notorious Anthony Forster; but none of the inscriptions upon it mention his death, nor is there any parochial record extant to prove that he died at Cumner. In the churchyard is the base of an old stone cross; and near the church is a school-house, erected with materials obtained from Cumner Place; the school is under the care of the parish clerk.

The parish of Cumner contains the tithings of Botley, Bradley, Chawley, Chilswell, Hexwood, Hill End, Stroud, Swinford, Whitley, and Wootton.

At Dane Court, about a mile N.W. of Cumner, there was anciently a mansion house; a large stone statue of Queen Elizabeth, which formerly adorned it, now stands in the garden of Mr. Richards, near North Hinksey.

GRAMPOUND, or Grand Pont, is a tithing to the parish of St. Aldate in the city of Oxford.

HINKSEY, (North and South,) 2 miles from Oxford, contains 65 houses, and 324 inhabitants.

RADLEY, 2 miles N.E. from its P.T. Abingdon, and 53 from London, contains 66 houses, and 412 inhabitants. It is donative.

The manor belonged to the Abbot and Convent of Abingdon, and after the Dissolution was purchased by George Stonhouse, Esq. one of the clerks of the Board of Green Cloth in the reign of Elizabeth. William Stonhouse, Esq. of Radley Hall, his descendant, was created a baronet by King Charles I., 7th May, 1628. The manor, in 1792, passed by will to the gallant Capt. Bowyer, who distinguished himself on the glorious 1st of June. He was the eldest son of Sir William Bowyer, Bart. of Denham, Bucks, and was himself created a baronet in 1794; he died in 1799. Thruppwick is a liberty of this parish; and Kennington, a tithing partly in Sunningwell, is partly in the parish of Radley.

SUNNINGWELL, on the banks of the Thames, 2 miles N. from its P. T. Abingdon, and 57 from London, contains 52 houses, and 227 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* A part of this parish is situate on the opposite side of the river, in Oxon, and in the church is buried its learned rector, Dr. Samuel Fell, Dean of Christ Church, Oxon; on a small lozenge-formed slab, is this short memorial "Depositum S · F · February, 1648." He contributed very largely towards the completion of Christ Church College.

WYTHAM, 3 miles N.W. from Oxford, at the foot of a hill of the same name; on the summit of which was a castle, where Offa, King of the Mercians, is reported to have kept his Court. The mansion of the Earl of Abingdon was erected about the reign of Henry VI.; the Gate House, in the centre of the front, and the Hall, are fine examples of ancient architecture. The church, originally built by the monks of Abingdon, has been rebuilt by the present Earl, who has here most carefully preserved the very interesting fragments of the mansion at Cumner.

Seckworth, or Seacourt, in the vicinity of Wytham, was granted by the Abbot of Abingdon, in the reign of Henry VIII., to John Audelet and Katharine his wife. Some traces of a more considerable place are visible on the bank of the river, which here separated the territories of the Attrebatii and Dobuni; a bridge crossed the stream at Binsey.

10. Kintbury Eagle Hundred.

On the south and west, this hundred is bounded by Hampshire and Wiltshire; the hundreds of Lambourn and Shrivenham are also on the west; on the north is Wantage hundred, and on the east are the hundreds of Compton and Faircross.

AVINGTON, 4 miles E. from its P. T. Hungerford, on the road from Speenhamland, and 61 from London, contains 17 houses, and 77 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* The church is a very curious specimen of Saxon architecture*; the font is also singular for its antiquity; it is circular, with figures under arches, in rude sculpture, upon its sides.

BENHAM, a hamlet to the parish of Speen, 3 miles from Newbury, and 59 from London.

The seat of the Hon. R. Keppel Craven, is about 1 mile W. of the village, with an entrance to the park from the road. The house is of stone, with an Ionic portico on the south front. The grounds, laid out by the late Margravine of Anspach, present a scene of great beauty, watered by a branch of the river Kennet; on the south, beyond the vale of that river, is a fine view of the park and woods of Hampstead Marshal; the higher grounds on the west are crowned with woods, beyond which are the Wiltshire Downs. John Baptist Castillon had a grant from Queen Elizabeth, of Benham and Woodspeen. The first Earl of Craven purchased this manor of his descendant Sir Francis Castillon, and the late Earl sold it to the Margrave of Anspach; the Margravine left it to its present possessor.

CHADDLEWORTH, 4 miles S.W. from Ilsley, and 58 from London, P. T. Newbury; contains 83 houses, and 448 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, with Woolley, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. Woolley Park is the seat of R. Wroughton, Esq.

ENBORNE, 3 miles W.S.W. from its P. T. Newbury, and 59 from London, contains 55 houses, and 349 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.*; patron, Earl of Craven. This place was remarkable for the peculiar custom of its manor: viz. on the death of a copyhold tenant, the widow was to have her free benefit in all her copyhold lands dum sola et casta fuerit. If these conditions were not complied with, the estates were forfeited, unless the widow appeared at the next Court, held at the manor, riding backwards on a black ram; and reciting an acknowledgement of her incontinency in a quaint formula, not worth repeating, but which may be found in Blount's Jocular Tenures.

FAWLEY, 5 miles from Wantage, and 60 from London, contains 38 houses, and 212 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

HAMPSTEAD MARSHAL, so called from being held by the Earls Marshal of England, 3 miles W. from its P. T. Newbury, and 59 from London, contains 45 houses, and 304 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*; patron, Earl of Craven. A noble mansion was built here by Sir Thomas Parry, treasurer of the household to Queen Elizabeth, which was pulled down in 1662, when another was begun by William Lord Craven, after the model of the Castle of Heidelberg, for Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, daughter of King James I., to whom it was said His Lordship was privately married. Sir Balthasar Gerbier was the architect. It was completed in 1665, but was destroyed by fire in 1718. Some large brick piers in the park are now the only remains of this once magnificent structure. Sir Balthasar Gerbier died in 1667, and was buried in the church. Hampstead Lodge is now the seat of the Earl of Craven.

HUNGERFORD, P. T., partly situate in this hundred, at the western extremity of the county, and partly in Wiltshire. It stands on the banks of the Kennet, 10 miles east from Marlborough, and 64 west from London; containing 198 houses, and 1130 inhabitants. Market on Wednesday, for pigs, corn, and provisions. Fairs, August 10, and the last Wednesday in April; the former is a statute fair, the latter for cattle. It is a vicarage, rated at 9*l.* 13*s.*; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Windsor.

A new church was opened, with a grand selection of sacred music, on August 30, 1816. Near the church is a free grammar-school, with a good endowment. The town is governed by a constable, who is elected annually, and is coroner, clerk of the market, and lord of the manor for the time being, holding his right immediately of the King; the assistant officers under him, are, a portreve, steward, town clerk, and other inferior officers. A horn made of brass is preserved in the town-chamber over the market-house, bearing this inscription: JOHN · A · GAVN · DID · GIVE · AND · GRANT · THE · RIALL · OF · FISHING · TO · HUNGERFORD · TOVNE · FROM · ELDRENSTUB · TO · IRISH · STIL · EXCEPTING · SOM · SEVERAL · MIL · POVND ·

JEHOSPHAT · LVCAS ·

WAS · CVNSTABL ·

It is blown every Hock Tuesday, to collect the inhabitants at the election of the constable. The liberty of a royal fishery, within certain bounds of the river, was confirmed by the present of a drinking-cann, which is also preserved. From this town the ancient barons of Hungerford took their name and title. By means of its canal navigation, it has a considerable traffic, but no manufacture. The town consists principally of one long street, near the centre of which is the market-house, erected in 1787, and over it a large room used as the town hall. Hungerford Park, at the eastern extremity of the town, has its south and west sides closed with fine woods, but is open on the north to a considerable range of diversified scenery. The mansion, in the Italian style, was erected on the site of a house said to have been built by Queen Elizabeth, and given by her to the Earl of Essex.

INKPEN, 4 miles S.E. from its P. T. Hungerford, and 61 from London; containing 141 houses, and 617 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*

KINTBURY, 4 miles S.E. from Hungerford, and 61 from London, contains 296 houses, and 1409 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 20*l.*

LETCOMBE BASSETT, 2 miles S.W. from its P. T. Wantage and 60 from London, contains 56 houses, and 280 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi Coll. Oxford.

LETCOMBE REGIS, ½ a mile N. from the preceding, contains 84 houses, and 388 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* with East and West Challow chapels annexed; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The manor remained in the possession of the Crown till the year 1246, the 31st of Henry III. The manor house, a royal residence, and called King John's Palace, stood within a moat, and a large chamber of the gate-house, over the entrance, was distinguished as the guard-room. It is now entirely demolished.

SHALBOURN, 3 miles S. from its P. T. Hungerford, and 66 from London, on the border of Wilts, contains 101 houses, and 531 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Windsor.

SHEFFORD, East, 5 miles N.E. from P. T. Hungerford, and 63½ from London, contains 15 houses, and 59 inhabitants. In the churchyard are the remains of an ancient cross. West Shefford, a hamlet in the above parish, contains 98 houses, and 490 inhabitants.

SPEEN, near its P. T. Newbury, and 56 from London, contains 116 houses, and 600 inhabitants. Benham, Church Speen, Woodspeen, Speenhamland, and Bagnor, form the parish of Speen, which was a Roman station, and called Spina.

WEST WOODHAY, 6 miles S.W. from Newbury, and 62 from London, contains 22 houses, and 144 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*, and was the capital seat of the Barons of St. Amand.

11. Lambourn Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Shrivenham hundred, on the south and east by the hundred of Kintbury, and on the west by Wiltshire.

LAMBOURN, 5 miles N. from P. T. Hungerford, and 65 from London, takes its name from the river Lambourn, which joins the Kennet near Thatcham. The parish contains 208 houses, and 1096 inhabitants. It formed part of the estate of the ancient Baronial family of Fitz Warine, who in the reign of Henry III. procured for the town the grant of a market and three fairs, viz. market on Friday;—fairs, May 1; Whit-Monday; Sept. 21; and Nov. 23. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. On the north side of the church is a hospital for ten men, six of whom are nominated by New College, Oxford, and four by the Hippesley family. William Essex, Esq. of Lambourn, was created a Baronet in 1612 by King James I., but the title is now extinct. On the neighbouring downs horse races are annually held. Upper Lambourn, a hamlet to the foregoing, and 1 mile distant N.W., contains 54 houses, and 354 inhabitants. Lambourn parish also contains the tithings of Blagrave and Hadley, Eastbury and Bockhampton. In the latter, certain land was formerly held by the singular tenure of keeping six damsels * at the King's charge. And other land within three miles of Letcombe Regis before mentioned was held by the service of keeping a kennel of the King's harriers.

12. Moreton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Ock hundred, on the east by the river Thames and Oxfordshire, on the south by Reading, Theale, and Faircross hundreds, and on the west by Compton hundred, and a detached part of the hundred of Reading.

ASHAMPSTEAD, 8 miles N.W. from Reading, and 45 from London, contains 71 houses, and 335 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ASTON TIRROLD, 3 miles S. from P. T. Wallingford, and 42 from London, contains 74 houses, and 355 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*; patron, Magdalen College, Oxford.

ASTON UPTHORPE, a hamlet to the parish of Blewberry, 4 miles S. from its P. T. Wallingford, and 42 from London, contains 44 houses, and 215 inhabitants. This place is famous for a battle fought in 871, when Ethelred and his brother Alfred routed the Danes.

BASILDON, 7½ miles N. W. from Reading, between Pangbourn and Streatley, and 44 from London, contains 157 houses, and 686 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, with Ashampstead chapel annexed. Basildon Park, the seat of Sir Francis Sykes, Bart., is about 3 miles in circumference, presenting a great variety of scenery, embellished by the mazy windings of the Thames, which divides the county from Oxfordshire. The house was erected in 1767 from designs by John Carr of York; it is entirely of stone, consisting of a large central building and two wings. The Ionic corridor in the front is in excellent taste, and the principal rooms are elegant, particularly the saloon, painted in relievo by T. De Bruyn. Basildon was the estate and residence of Charles Viscount Fane, of whose heirs it was purchased by Francis Sykes, Esq., created a baronet 24th March 1781, whose descendant is the present proprietor.

BRIGHTWELL, 2 miles W. from its P. T. Wallingford, and 47 from London, contains 96 houses, and 546 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 44*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*; patron, the Bishop of Winchester.

DUDCOTE, 6 miles W. from Wallingford, and 52 from London, contains 40 houses, and 197 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Brazen Nose College, Oxford. The church, a Norman edifice, was probably dedicated to St. Michael, the feast being on the Sunday next after Michaelmas. The manor, anciently in the hands of the Blounts, from whom it came into the possession of the Stonor family, of Oxfordshire, is now held by John Baker, Esq. Ralf de Dudcote, one of the abbots of Dorchester, died in 1294.

EAST HAGBORNE, 4¼ miles W. from its P. T. Wallingford, and 50 from London, contains 96 houses, and 524 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* West Hagborne, a liberty of the foregoing parish, is half a mile further S.W.

HARWELL, 7 miles W. from Wallingford, and 54 from London, contains 124 houses, and 701 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

NORTH MORETON, 3 miles W. from Wallingford, and 48 from London, contains 53 houses, and 348 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

SOUTH MORETON is 1 mile from the foregoing, and contains 59 houses, and 364 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*

MOULSFORD, 4 miles S. of Wallingford, P. T., contains 32 houses, and 176 inhabitants. It stands in the road to Reading, on the banks of the river Thames, over which, as its name implies, it had a ford.

SOTWELL is 2 miles N.W. of Wallingford, P. T., between that town and Shillingford Bridge, which was erected by the influence of Sir Wm. Blackstone, over the Thames, on the road to Dorchester in Oxfordshire.

STREATLEY, 5½ miles S.W. of Wallingford, P. T., on the banks of the Thames, contains 115 houses and 590 inhabitants. It is supposed to derive its name from having been situated on a Roman Way, which entering the county at this place, from Oxfordshire, proceeded to Wantage, and thence to Avebury in Wiltshire.

UPTON, 5 miles N.E. from East Ilsley, is a hamlet of Blewberry parish in Reading hundred.

WALLINGFORD, 45 miles from London, contains 366 houses, and 2093 inhabitants. It is evidently of great antiquity, and has been ascribed to a British origin: the Anglo-Saxon name of Gwalleng, a ford, being derived from Gual Hen, or old fortification, in ancient British, with the addition of ford, an etymology rendered plausible by the shallowness of the river in the immediate neighbourhood of the town. The castle is known to have been enlarged and repaired in the reign of William the Conqueror, who is said to have encamped here after the defeat of Harold. At the time of the Domesday Survey, the castle and honour of Wallingford was held by Milo De Crespin, a potent baron, who obtained it by marriage with Maud, the heiress of Robert D'Oily, by Agatha the daughter and heir of Wygod the Anglo-Saxon Baron of Wallingford. Milo De Crespin dying in 1106 without issue, the castle came into the possession of Brian Fitz Count, who married Maud his widow. This nobleman strongly supported the Empress Maud against King Stephen, and received her within the castle, which resisted all attempts made by the monarch for its destruction, during a vigorous siege by the Royal army. After the death of Fitz Count, the honour of Wallingford devolved to the Crown, and was granted by Richard I. to his brother John, and by him to his second son Richard Earl of Cornwall, who repaired the castle; and upon his marriage with Sanchia, the daughter of Raymond Earl of Provence, in 1243, kept house with great splendour. The King and almost all the nobility of the realm spent the Christmas of that year at Wallingford Castle. On the death of Richard it devolved to his son Edmund, together with the advowson of all the churches. When he died, the castle became the property of the King, whom he had chosen for his heir. King Edward II. granted this castle together with the Earldom of Cornwall, to which it had been annexed, to Piers Gaveston; and afterwards to Hugh Spencer the elder. The King next granted it to his Queen Isabella, from whom it descended to Edward III., who granted it with other manors and the Dukedom of Cornwall to Edward the Black Prince, in 1355. The castle remained vested in the Royal Family till the reign of Henry VIII., when it was granted to Cardinal Wolsey, for the use of Christ Church College, Oxford, founded by him. Upon his disgrace, the castle appears to have been separated from the manor, the latter being annexed to Ewelme in Oxfordshire; afterwards given by King James I. to Prince Charles, while the former remained in possession of the College. The remains of the ancient castle are near the river side, amidst garden grounds and cornfields; the ramparts may yet be traced, and the walls of the Keep, of considerable height, are clearly to be distinguished.

Wallingford was a borough in the reign of Edward the Confessor, and has sent members to parliament ever since the 23rd year of the reign of Edward I. The right of election is in the Corporation, and inhabitants paying scot and lot and not receiving alms, in number about 140; the present members are Col. W. L. Hughes of Kemmel Park, Denbighshire, and Robert Knight, Esq. of Barrells, Warwickshire.

The Corporation, by the charter of King James I., consists of the high steward, an office held by the Earl of Radnor, a mayor, recorder, six aldermen, who act as justices within the borough, a town clerk, a chamberlain, and 18 burgesses. Their seal is ancient, and represents a knight completely armed, with his sword drawn, on a horse current, fully caparisoned, bearing a shield charged with the arms of France and England, quarterly; on his helmet the crest of England, with this legend, Sigillum Commune de Wallingford.

The town contains four parishes, St. Mary, St. Leonard, All Hallows, and St. Peter. The castle is extra-parochial. The church of St. Mary is adorned by a painted window, representing the Ascension of Christ, a single figure with tracery, &c., executed by Miller of London, and put up within these few years. St. Peter's church was rebuilt about 1762, chiefly through the influence and after the designs of Sir William Blackstone of Priory Place: the connection of this learned Judge with the town, both from the office of recorder, which he held from 1749, and from his frequent residence here, led him to form many plans which contributed to its benefit and improvement. To him the town was indebted for the formation of two new roads through it, one affording a communication by means of a new bridge over the Thames at Shillingford, between Oxford and Reading; the other to Wantage, through the vale of Berkshire. At his death, 14th February, 1780, he was buried in a vault he had built for his family in the parish church of St. Peter. Clapcot is a liberty of All Hallows parish.

Amongst the more eminent natives of this town were Richard Wallingford, Abbot of St. Albans; and John Wallingford, the historian, whose Chronicle was published by Dr. Gale in the collection of English Histories.

13. Ock Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by the county of Oxford and Hormer hundred; and on the south and west by Moreton, Wantage, and Ganfield hundreds. It derives its name from the river Ock, which rises in the Vale of White Horse, and falls into the Thames at Abingdon.

APPLETON, 6 miles S.W. from Oxford, containing 65 houses, and 304 inhabitants, is situated on a branch of the river Ock. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College, Oxford.

Here is one of the most remarkable manor houses in the county, which is also one of the most ancient in the kingdom. Parts are probably coeval with the reign of Henry II., the first of the Plantagenet line of kings. It is surrounded by a moat. The principal entrance has four small cylindrical shafts with capitals of foliage on each side, supporting a semicircular arch, of some depth, enriched with plain mouldings; this doorway opens upon a passage, at the end of which was formerly a similar arch; on the left hand of the passage are two plain doors with semicircular arches. This very curious remain of ancient domestic architecture never formed any part of a religious house*; but the history of the manor of Appleton is involved in some obscurity. By Robert Stokes, it was granted in 1308 to Giles De La Mote, one of the grooms of the chamber, in the household of King Edward II. From this family it passed by female heirs to the families of Fitz Warine, Caston, and Petyt, and was afterwards held by that of Fettyplace, who sold it in the reign of Elizabeth to the Hanleys, of whom it was purchased by an ancestor of the present proprietor, Robert Southby, Esq., who resides here.

Edmund son of William Dickenson, rector of Appleton, was born here in 1624; he became a celebrated chemist, and was successively physician to the household in the reigns of Charles II. and James II.

DRAYTON, 2½ miles S.W. from Abingdon, in the road to Wantage, contains 23 houses, and 154 inhabitants.

FYFIELD, on a branch of the Ock, 7½ miles S.W. from Oxford, contains 70 houses, and 407 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* In the south aisle of the church is the tomb of Sir John Golafre, lord of the manor, who died 1442: several ancient monuments are in the chancel.

Goosey, and Circourt, form a tithing of Stanford parish in Ganfield hundred. Sir Charles Saxton of Circourt was created a baronet 26th July 1794.

East Hanney, and Lyford, are townships of West Hanney parish, in Wantage hundred. Oliver Ayshcombe, Esq. of Lyford, was created a baronet 28th May 1696; the title is now extinct.

KINGSTON BAGPUZE, 7 miles W. from Abingdon, contains 68 houses, and 327 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford.

MARCHAM, 2¾ miles S.W. from Abingdon, contains 156 houses, and 829 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Church College, Oxon.

Marcham was long the seat and residence of John Elwes, Esq. M.P. for this county, a gentleman no less distinguished for his courtesy and gentleness of manners than for his excessive penuriousness, being at the same time in possession of immense property both in landed estates and in money. With a countenance that Rembrandt would have studied with delight, he was gifted with a clear perception, sound judgment, and unshaken integrity, which qualities were held in such estimation by his constituents and others in this neighbourhood, that numberless disputes were decided by his sole arbitriment. At his death in 1789, he had exceeded the age of fourscore, when his estates devolved to his nephew. This seat is now the residence of George Elwes, Esq.—Garford and Fulford are townships of this parish.

MILTON, 3½ miles S.W. from Abingdon, containing 83 houses, and 421 inhabitants, is situated on a brook, which, rising on the downs near Wantage, here turns a mill and afterwards falls into the Thames at Sutton Courtenay, the adjoining parish on the north. The manor house is said to have been built after designs by Inigo Jones; but has been enlarged by the addition of wings erected by Bryant Barrett, Esq., who purchased the manor and estate of the Calton family, who had held it from the time of Henry VIII. While in their possession, the house was honoured by a visit from King William III., and also the Czar Peter of Russia. The bed in which they had successively been lodged was presented by the Calton family to Mrs. Mary Walker, and is still preserved.

Milton is a rectory, value 17*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* The church is small and ancient. Portway, a road at the southern extremity of the parish, is generally supposed to be Roman.

STEVENTON, 4½ miles S.W. from Abingdon, contains 122 houses, and 652 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

SUTTON COURTENAY, 3 miles S.E. from Abingdon, contains 166 houses, and 652 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor.

The rectory house, apparently erected in the 15th century, is still standing; parts have been altered, but much of the old building remains. John, the second son of Reinfred Arundell, sheriff of Cornwall in 1437, was chaplain and physician to King Henry VI.; he became a canon of Windsor in 1448, and was rector of Sutton Courtenay.

* Lysons.

He died, bishop of Exeter, 15th March 1503.—Appleford and Sutton Wick, are townships of this parish.

TUBNEY, 4½ miles W. from Abingdon, contains 29 houses, and 138 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College, Oxford, which is a sinecure, as there is no parish church. Tubney Lodge, is the seat of J. Ingram Lockhart, Esq. M.P. for Oxford.

LITTLE WITTENHAM, 4 miles N.W. from Wallingford, contains 24 houses, and 107 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.*

The manor was granted by Queen Elizabeth to William Dunch, Esq. of the body, extraordinary, to Her Majesty. He was M.P. for Wallingford, 1562, sheriff of the county in 1569, and the progenitor of a wealthy family remarkable for their tergiversation in politics. Sir William Dunch his descendant, uncle by marriage to Oliver Cromwell, was knighted by King James I., and was also M.P. for Wallingford. He died in 1612, and is commemorated by a costly monument in this church. His eldest son Edmund Dunch, Esq. M.P. for Wallingford in the reign of Charles I., was a strenuous supporter of his relation the Protector, from whom he received a patent of peerage 26th April, 1658, by the title of Lord Burnel of East Wittenham in Berkshire, and the appointment of governor of Wallingford Castle. He took an active part in the restoration of King Charles II.; but died a private gentleman in 1678, and was buried here. His grandson Edmund Dunch, Esq. joined heartily in the Revolution, and was master of the household to both Queen Anne and King George I. He was also a member of the celebrated Kitcat Club, and M.P. for Wallingford. At his death in 1719, he left this estate to his three daughters, one of whom married Sir George Oxenden, Bart. of Dene in Kent; another, Lord Robert Montagu, afterwards Duke of Manchester; and the youngest, Edw. Thompson, Esq. of Marsden in Yorkshire. The ancient seat at Little Wittenham is still standing*; it adjoins the church, and was one of the residences of the late Sir Henry Oxenden, Bart.

LONG WITTENHAM, one mile W. of Little Wittenham, contains 107 houses, and 496 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Exeter College, Oxford.

Wittenham Hill, on the banks of the Thames, is the site of a Roman fort, supposed to have been destroyed by the Danes; the summit is now cultivated.

14. Reading Hundred

Is completely intersected by Theale hundred, dividing it into three detached parts, which have Moreton hundred and the river Thames on the north, Sonning and Charlton hundreds on the east, and Faircross hundred on the south and west; other detached parts lie in Moreton hundred, having Compton and Wantage hundreds on the south and east.

BEENHAM, 8½ miles S.W. from Reading, contains 180 houses, and 407 inhabitants; it was the vicarage, residence, and burial-place of the Rev. Thomas Stackhouse, author of the History of the Bible, &c. He died here in 1752, aged 72.

BLEWBERRY, 5 miles S.W. from Wallingford, contains 125 houses, and 572 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. Aston Upthorpe and Upton are adjoining hamlets of this parish, although locally situated in Moreton hundred.

BUCKLEBURY, 7 miles N.E. from Newbury, contains 183 houses and 1143 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, with Marston chapel annexed, value 17*l.* The manor, part of the possessions of the abbots of Reading, was granted in 1539 to John the son of John Smallwode, alias Winchcombe, who became celebrated as Jack of Newbury; in the reign of Henry VIII., and died in 1519. The manor house was built by John Winchcombe, Esq.; and in one of the chambers is his portrait with the date 1550, æt. 61: from this picture the portrait of Jack of Newbury in the town hall was copied, but is clearly that of his son. Henry Winchcombe, Esq. of Bucklebury was created a baronet by King James I. in 1617. Frances, the daughter and coheiress of Sir Henry Winchcombe, the last baronet of this family, married Lord Bolingbroke, an eminent statesman in the reign of Queen Anne, who came into possession of this house and estate in right of his wife; but dying without issue, the estate devolved to the representative of the original family, whose descendant is Winchcombe Howard Hartley, Esq. In the churchyard is a yew-tree of prodigious girth.

CHOLSEY is situated in a detached portion of this hundred, 2 miles S. from Wallingford, and contains 184 houses, and 975 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Crown, value 18*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* The manor formerly belonged to the abbots of Reading, who had a residence here; and Cholsey farm was long reputed the largest and at the same time the most compact of any in England. The great barn was taken down in May 1815. It was a curious building, but its construction did not warrant a supposition of the barn having been erected earlier than the beginning of the 16th century. It was no less than 303 feet in length, by 54 feet in width, and 51 feet high. The walls were of boulder, and not more than 8 feet high; the interior was in three grand divisions, formed by 17 stone piers, each 3 feet square, rising two thirds the height of the building; these supported the immense roof, framed chiefly of hewn oak, although chestnut was used for some of the timbers. The number of tiles it took to cover it was calculated at 230,000. The manor descended through the family of Rich to Lord Kensington. A monastery situated here is referred to in the foundation charter of Reading Abbey by Henry I. It was founded by King Ethelred about 896, in atonement for the murder of his brother King Edward the Martyr.

PANGBOURN, 6 miles N.W. from Reading, on the banks of the Thames, built in the form of the Roman T, contains 125 houses, and 703 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.*

Bere Court, a manor house, was formerly the residence of the abbots of Reading.

READING, 39 miles W. from London, on the banks of the Kennet near its junction with the Thames, contains 1652 houses, and 9026 inhabitants: the name is supposed to have been derived from the quantity of fern growing in the neighbourhood, termed Redyng in the British language. Two castles were erected here at different times, although no walls at present remain. On the site, and with the materials of one, King Henry I. founded an abbey of Benedictines in 1121, which was completed in 1125; but the abbey church was not consecrated till 1164, when Archbishop Becket performed the ceremony in the presence of the King and many of the nobility; it was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and St. James the Apostle. The body of the founder, who died in Normandy in 1135, was here deposited, but his heart, &c. were interred in the church of Nôtre Dame at Rouen. In 1787, an ancient coffin was discovered in digging the foundations of the county gaol, afterwards erected on the site of the abbey, and proclaimed to contain the bones of Henry I. the founder, but upon very slight authority.

In the reign of John a council was held here by Pandulph, the Pope's Legate, when the abbot was appointed a delegate for promulgating the sentence of excommunication against the Barons opposed to the King. Another council was held here by Archbishop Peckham in the reign of Edward I. The Parliament, assembled here in the 31st year of Henry VI., 1452, is supposed to have met in the refectory of the abbey, a room 72 feet long, by 38 feet wide.

The annual revenue of the abbey at the Dissolution was 1938*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.*; hardly inferior to any in England. Hugh Farringdon, the last and 31st abbot, was attainted of treason, and, together with two of the monks, was hanged at Reading in November 1539.

The Abbey of St. James occupied a space of ground in circumference nearly half a mile, a nd after its dissolution became one of the palaces of King Henry VIII., who visited it in 1541. It had ceased to be a Royal residence in the reign of Charles I., who, when in this neighbourhood, usually remained at Caversham, or other houses in the vicinity of Reading. Little now remains of the once magnificent abbey, except fragments of massive walls, composed chiefly of flint, and the Gate House. The arms of the abbey was azure, three escallop shells, or.

* Noble's Memoirs of Cromwell.

There were other religious houses in the town. Aucherius, the second abbot, founded a hospital for poor lepers, dedicated to Mary Magdalene, near the church. There was also a priory, afterwards converted to a prison, and a convent for nuns in Castle Street, also used as a prison, which since the erection of the present county gaol, has been pulled down. The town consists of three parishes; the churches of which are dedicated to St. Lawrence, St. Mary, and St. Giles. In St. Lawrence's church, rebuilt or considerably repaired in the reign of Henry VI., is a monument to John Blagrave, who died in 1611. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford. The parish of St. Mary is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown, and contains the tithing of Southcot; and the parish of St. Giles, a vicarage, value 11*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, contains the hamlet of Whitley.

The Right Hon. Viscount Sidmouth is high steward of Reading; and the Corporation, according to the charter of Charles II., consists of a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, and as many burgesses, from amongst whom the aldermen are elected. The town hall adjoins the grammar school. In the council chamber are portraits of Queen Elizabeth, Sir Thomas White, John Kenrick, and Archbishop Laud. The manor was granted by King James I. to Prince Charles his second son, but it is now vested in the Corporation, who hold four quarter sessions yearly for the more important business, as well as a Court every Wednesday for minor offences. Reading has two weekly markets, on Wednesday and Saturday, the last chiefly for corn. The borough has sent members to parliament ever since the 23rd year of the reign of Edward I. The right of election is in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, in number about 700. The present members are John Berkeley Monck, Esq. of Coley Park in the immediate vicinity of the town, and Charles Fyshe Palmer, Esq. of Langley House. On a general election the nomination of representatives for the county is made at Reading; but if a poll is demanded, the election is held at Abingdon. The town was formerly celebrated for its clothing manufactories, which have fallen to decay, from the very circumstance that was intended to promote the increase of trade.

John Kenrick in 1624 bequeathed 7500*l.* for the purpose of building a house for the employment of persons in the woollen manufactory, and supplying them with materials; but the money was soon perverted to the benefit only of the great clothiers, who were enabled to undersell the lesser manufacturers, and who were obliged to make their cloths of an inferior quality, which injured the credit of the town. The inhabitants, convinced that the decay of trade arose from misapplication of the fund, petitioned King Charles I. for relief, who decreed that the house erected in conformity with the donor's will, called The Oracle, should be preserved to the use of poor manufacturers only, and certain sums of money lent on good security, to poor beginners, clothiers, without interest. The Oracle was afterwards occupied by sacking manufacturers, who were allowed the use of the building gratis.

Sir Thomas White, a native of this town, and Lord Mayor of London, 1553, founded a grammar school, of which Dr. Richard Valpy, an eminent classical scholar, was long the head master. Sir Thomas White, when he founded St. John's College, Oxford, gave two fellowships for natives of Reading, educated at this school.

Julinus Palmer, one of the masters of this school, suffered martyrdom in Mary's reign; and here were educated Archbishop Laud, Blagrave the mathematician, Merrick a divine and poet, and the Rev. Charles Coats, F.S.A., who died in 1813, and was the author of a history of this town.

In 1643 Reading sustained a siege by the Parliament forces, at which time St. Giles's church was much damaged by the cannon. The Earl of Forth, with the van of the King's army, was repulsed at Caversham Bridge in an attempt to relieve the town.

The river Kennet separates Reading into two parts, and is navigable westward to Hungerford, &c. The country in its vicinity is adorned with many gentlemen's seats; Wokefield Park, the seat of Bernard Brocas, Esq. is in the immediate neihbourhood, and about two miles west of the town is Calcot House, the seat of J. Blagrave, Esq., situated on an eminence near the road to Newbury, in a park remarkable for producing venison of superior flavour.

SULHAMPSTEAD ABBOTS, 6 miles S.W. from Reading, contains 32 houses, and 150 inhabitants; a detached parish entirely surrounded by the hundred of Theale. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of Queen's College, Oxford.

Sir Richard Simeon of Graisley, a tithing of this parish, was created a baronet 27th December 1814. John Simeon, Esq. was M.P. for Reading in the late reign.

THATCHAM, 3 miles E. from Newbury, containing 32 houses, and 150 inhabitants, is a neat village, chiefly composed of one street, in the road to Reading. It is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, with Greenham and Midgham chapels annexed.

Dunstan House, immediately on the north, a seat of the late Sir Archer Croft, Bart., which he inherited from the Waring family, was considered one of the most magnificent mansions in the county; it has been pulled down and the materials sold.

TILEHURST, 2½ miles W. from Reading, contains 314 houses, and 760 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

Sir Peter Van Loer of Tilehurst was created a baronet by King Charles I., October 3, 1628. In the church is a costly monument to his memory. Dr. Chandler, author of the Life of Bishop Waynfleet, and of Travels in Asia Minor, was rector of Tilehurst. He died here in 1810, aged 72.

15. Ripplesmere Hundred,

Part of Windsor Forest, on the east side of Berkshire; where it is bounded by the river Thames, Buckinghamshire, and by the county of Surrey: on the west are Beynhurst and Wargrave hundreds; and on the south, Cookham hundred, on the west of which is East Hampstead, a detached portion.

CLEWER, 4 miles W. from Windsor, contains 364 houses, and 2115 inhabitants; part of Clewer is in the borough of Windsor.

Clewer Lodge is the seat of John Ramsbottom, M.P. for Windsor; and Clewer Cottage, of Richard Foster, Esq.

EAST HAMPSTEAD, a detached portion of this hundred, 3½ miles S.E. from Wokingham, contains 104 houses, and 615 inhabitants. East Hampstead Park, the seat of the Marquess of Downshire, was the residence of Sir William Trumbull, the early patron of Pope.

WINKFIELD, 5½ miles S.W. from Windsor, contains 288 houses, and 1676 inhabitants.

In this parish is Ascot, celebrated for its race-course, made by William Duke of Cumberland.

WINDSOR, 23 miles from London, containing 677 houses, and 4288 inhabitants, derives its name from the Saxon, Windle shora, expressive of the serpentine course of the Thames, on the banks of which the Castle is built. This magnificent residence of the British Sovereign was founded by William the Conqueror in the beginning of his reign; his son Henry I. added much to it, and surrounded the whole with a strong wall.

Edward III., who was born here, rebuilt nearly the whole of the Castle, under the superintendence of William of Wickham, afterwards Bishop of Winchester; many additions and alterations were subsequently made, particularly in the reign of Charles II., under the direction of Sir Christopher Wren. St. George's Chapel was completely repaired by His late Majesty George III.

This noble Castle, the principal seat and residence of His present Majesty, is divided into two courts, the upper and lower wards, separated by the Keep, or Round Tower, in the centre of the Castle.

Soon after his accession, a grant was made by Parliament for the purpose of completely renovating the building: when the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Farnborough, &c., were appointed commissioners to superintend the execution of the work; and with the approbation of His Majesty, Sir Jeffery Wyattville was appointed architect; this gentleman has given general satisfaction, by the sound judgment and good taste he has displayed in the fulfilment of this bold and arduous undertaking. The alterations have given a new and splendid effect to the embattled walls and towers of this ancient Castle. In the lower court, all the incongruous buildings by which it was disfigured have been removed; the Gate House, built in the reign of Henry VIII., was restored by the late James Wyatt; upon it are royal badges, of the rose, portcullis, and fleur de lis, with the pomegranate, and the castle; on the north side of this court is St. George's Chapel, the largest in dimension of the three Royal chapels. It is chaste and elegant in its architectural style and character; the design is generally attributed to Richard Beauchamp, Bishop of Salisbury in the reign of Edward IV.; he was succeeded by Sir Reginald Bray in the superintendence of this great work, whose badge may be observed in many parts of the ceiling and in the windows. At the east end of St. George's Chapel is the Royal Mausoleum.

It is intended to raise the Round Tower of the Castle 40 feet in height, and when completed, this will be higher than any of the other towers. It was always the residence of the castellan, or constable of the castle, the first of whom was Walter Fitz Other, surnamed Windsor; and the present, the Marquess of Conyngham, K.P.

The south and east sides of the upper ward, or great quadrangle of the Castle, have been rebuilt by His present Majesty. The principal entrance to this court is on the south, from the Long Walk in Windsor Park, one of the most majestie avenues in the world; it is perfectly straight, about three miles and a half in length, and shaded on each side by double rows of stately trees; at the end of this walk is King George the Fourth's Gateway, flanked by two towers each about 100 feet high, which bear, as formerly, the old English titles of York and Lancaster. This magnificent gateway opens upon the great quadrangle, or Royal court, where the additional height of the edifice is produced, not only by adding one story in height to the building, but by lowering the surface of the whole area six or eight feet: on the south and east sides of the court is a noble cloister and gallery, which for size and splendour are unrivalled. The decorations of this corridor, under the tasteful direction of His Majesty, are on the most magnificent scale; the choicest specimens of the arts of sculpture and painting ornament the sides; portraits of the most celebrated characters in the history of the country, busts, statues, and bronzes, profusely arranged with consummate taste, are set off by the carved and gilded groins of the ceiling, and interspersed with numerous candelabra, which produce an almost magic effect upon the gorgeous assemblage of art in this noble corridor, or principal communication with the private apartments of the King and Royal family; those of His Majesty being on the east side, while the Queen's and the Duke and Duchess of Clarence's occupy the south side of the court. Beyond the York and Lancaster towers is the King's Tower, at the south-east angle; then the Chester, Clarence, and Black Prince towers. Immediately abutting on the Black Prince Tower, at the north-east angle, is the Wyattville Tower, rising 120 feet above the level of the terrace, and higher than any other part of the building. It was so named by His Majesty, who conferred a very high compliment on the architect, to whose talents the renovation of the Castle is so much indebted.

The suite of private apartments opens upon the library, and the suite in which His Majesty receives visitors; where the splendour is consistent with the dignity and high station of England's Monarch. These rooms appear to vie with each other in grandeur and richness of effect: the drawing-room has in the centre an oriel window, commanding views of the park, the village of Datchet, and the Surrey hills; the dining-room, of magnificent proportion, has windows on the east and north-east, overlooking Eton College, and the rich valley of Buckinghamshire, with the majestic Thames rolling at the base of the Castle. Immediately connected with the drawing-room is the music-room, in plan octagonal, of ample dimensions, and admirably constructed in regard to the conveyance of sound.

The Terrace, forming a crescent, of about two acres of ground, is an instance of the great taste displayed by His Majesty in the improvements of his palace; nothing of the kind existed previously to this, executed under the direction of Sir Jeffery Wyattville, and denominated the Parterre, consisting of an inclosed lawn of the finest turf, inlaid with flower beds of curious shapes, amidst ample gravel walks which intersect each other. Around it runs an elevated terrace of equal height with the eastern terrace of the Castle, of which it is a continuation; and under the new terrace on the east side of the Castle is the Orangery.

In the great quadrangle of the palace, the statue of King Charles II., which formerly stood in the centre, has been removed to the west side, under the walls of the Round Tower. The new porch of St. George's Hall, called the Clock Tower, is on the north side of the court opposite the grand entrance, or King George the Fourth's Gateway; it opens upon a lofty groined hall extending to the north terrace of the Castle; from this hall the grand staircase communicates with St. George's Hall and the state apartments. St. George's Hall has been extended in length to 200 feet: the throne and gallery are of British oak; the windows have been restored to their original character, and are to be filled witht he arms, badges, and armorial cognizances of the Knights of the Garter, in painted glass; while opposite, the portraits of all the Sovereigns of the Order are to be arranged on the walls. At the west end of the hall is the grand armory, where every suit has been carefully put together, and studiously displayed with the most striking effect, by Dr. Meyrick, whose abundant experience has been devoted to the service of His Majesty in the arrangement of the whole collection. To the numerous pieces of ancient armour formerly preserved here, His Majesty has added a very curious selection from the Island of Malta, formerly belonging to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

The King's guard-chamber has been considerably enlarged; its lofty walls are covered with a spendid elliptical ceiling of white and gold, and now forms a very elegant ball-room.

The King's private entrance is by an open arch in the south-eastern angle of the great court; it is highly enriched with architectural ornament, and opens upon a double staircase of solid oak, communicating with the corridor before mentioned. Over the corridor is the long gallery, 520 feet in length, communicating at intervals with the adjoining apartments of His Majesty, and with the staircases of the several towers.

On the north side of St. George's Hall, a space formerly occupied by Horn Court, is to be erected a Waterloo Hall, to receive the statues of the most celebrated warriors of the English nation. Here the service of presenting the banners of France will in future be performed by the representatives of the Dukes of Marlborough and Wellington, on the anniversaries of the victories of Blenheim and Waterloo; by which tenure of grand sergeantry the estates granted to these distinguished generals are held.

In the King's audience chamber, which has not yet been altered, are seven pictures by the late Benjamin West, President of the Royal Academy, illustrative of the principal events of the reign of Edward III., painted by command of George III. about 1789.

Numerous other pictures of great value adorn the walls of this untouched part of the castle, which our limits will not allow of noticing particularly.

At the extremity of the Long Walk on the south side of the Castle the very noble equestrian figure of King George III. by Westmacott is speedily to be erected.

The origin of the town of Windsor is connected with the Castle, upon which it has been always in some measure dependent. King Edward I. constituted it a free borough, and invested it with sundry privileges, confirmed and enlarged by succeeding monarchs. On the Restoration, a new charter was granted by King Charles II., by which the government of the town is now enforced. The Corporation consists of thirty brethren, ten of whom are aldermen, and the remainder benchers and burgesses. The borough sent members to parliament in the 30th year of Edward I., and again in the 7th of Edward II., and since the 25th of Henry VI. it has been regularly represented in parliament. The right of election extends to all the inhabitants paying scot and lot, the number of whom is about 280. The present members are John Ramsbottom, Esq., of Clewer Lodge, and Sir Richard Hussey Vivian, one of the equerries to the King.

The Guildhall, erected in 1707, is a handsome building; in the council-room are portraits of all the sovereigns from James I. down to Queen Anne; George Prince of Denmark, Prince Rupert, Archbishop Laud, &c. The seal of the Corporation bears, a castle in base, surmounted by three towers, and in chief a stag's head caboshed, between the attires, a shield charged with the arms of France and England quarterly, with this legend, Sigillum Majoris Burgi de Nova Windsore.

On September 15, 1820, the foundation stone of the new church was laid, by J. Ramsbottom, M.P., as proxy for His late Royal Highness the Duke of York; and a new bridge, communicating with the town of Eton, has been completed within the last four years.

Windsor Forest was formerly of very great extent; it now comprises twelve entire parishes, and part of five others. It contains fifteen principal manors, within which are several subordinate manors. The deer have much diminished of late years. The lodges in the forest, besides those occupied by the under-keepers, are Cranbourne Lodge, New Lodge, Swinley Lodge, and Bagshot Lodge; also Trys Lodge, near Chertsey, annexed to the office of out-ranger. Old Windsor is beautifully situated on the banks of the Thames, about 2 miles from Windsor. Near it is Beaumont Lodge, the seat of Viscount Ashbrook; it is of Portland stone, and was erected from designs by Henry Emlyn, an architect of Windsor.

Frogmore, the residence of Her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta, was chiefly erected by James Wyatt, for Her late Majesty Queen Charlotte.

St. Leonard's Hill, the seat of Field Marshal the Earl of Harcourt, was erected from the design of Thomas Sandby on the site of a house once the residence of the celebrated Earl of Chatham.

16. Shrivenham Hundred,

At the western extremity of the county, is bounded on the north by Farringdon hundred and Gloucestershire, on the east by Ganfield, Wantage, and Kintbury hundreds, on the south by Lambourn hundred, and on the west by Wiltshire.

ASHBURY, 7 miles S.W. from Farringdon, contains 195 houses, and 498 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 30*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, a sinecure and a vicarage, value 11*l.* 18*s.*, in the patronage of the rector. For Chapel Wick, which is annexed, Magdalen College Oxford names three candidates, one of whom is presented by the rector. In this parish is Ashdowne Park, a seat of the Earl of Craven.

White Horse Hill, in the neighbourhood, is so named from the figure of a horse cut in the chalk, on the side of a high and steep hill, facing the N.W., and supposed to be commemorative of a great victory obtained by the West Saxons over the Danes, at Ashdowne, by King Alfred, in the year 871. The figure of the white horse, extending over an acre of ground, is formed by a trench of 2 or 3 feet deep, and about 10 feet broad.

BUSCOT, or Burwascot, on the banks of the Thames, 1½ mile S.E. from Leachlade in Gloucestershire, contains 78 houses, and 421 inhabitants.

Buscot House was built in 1783 by Edward Loveden, Esq., a principal promoter of the junction of the rivers Thames and Severn, and of every improvement of the navigation of the upper districts made during the last fifty years; a large portion of his estate being situated on the banks of the Thames. He died at this seat in 1822, aged 72, when it devolved to his eldest son by his first wife, Pryse Pryse, Esq. of Gogerthan, M.P. for Cardigan. At Buscot Wick is St. John's Bridge over the river to Leachlade.

The church, a rectory value 21*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, is ancient and small; it contains some memorials of the Loveden family.

COLESHILL is 4 miles S.W. from P. T. Farringdon, in a most fertile part of the county, on the immediate borders of Wiltshire; the town of Highworth being distant about 2 miles on the W.: it contains 52 houses, and 324 inhabitants. The village is situated on the side of a hill near the river Cole, which forms one of the boundaries of the parish, and whence it evidently derives its name.

The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a vicarage value 17*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, and consists of a body and two aisles; in the south aisle is a circular window of painted glass, by Price, the arms of Sir Mark Stuart Pleydell, Bart.

Coleshill House, the seat of the Earl of Radnor, displays a perfect and unaltered specimen of the architecture of Inigo Jones. It was erected in 1650 for Sir Henry Pratt, created a baronet July 28, 1641, and descended to the present noble proprietor, through the heiress of Pleydell, who is also the representative of the families of Forster and De La Mare of Aldermanston, &c. At Binbury are vestiges of a Roman camp.

COMPTON BEAUCHAMP, or Compton Regis, 7½ miles W. from Wantage, contains 22 houses, and 103 inhabitants. Sir Francis Pile, of Compton, was created a baronet by King Charles I. in 1628. But the family afterwards made Axford, in Wiltshire, their principal residence.

EATON HASTINGS, 3 miles N. from Farringdon, contains 25 houses, and 178 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*

SHRIVENHAM, 5½ miles S.W. from Farringdon, contains 131 houses, and 696 inhabitants: a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Beckett and Bourton are tithings; Fernham a hamlet, Longcott a chapelry, and Watchfield a township, all in this parish.

Beckett House, on the east side of the town of Shrivenham, the seat of Viscount Barrington, has been nearly rebuilt in the pointed style by Atkinson.

UFFINGTON, 4½ miles S.E. from P.T. Farringdon, contains 79 houses, and 523 inhabitants. The first Earl of Craven received from King Charles II. the subordinate title of Viscount Craven, of Uffington. Baulking is a hamlet, and Woolstone a township, of this parish.

17. Sonning Hundred,

Bounded on the north by a detached part of Wiltshire and Oxfordshire, on the east by Ripplesmere and Cookham hundreds, on the south by Surrey and Hampshire, and on the west by Charlton hundred.

ARBORFIELD, 5 miles S.E. from P. T. Reading, contains 32 houses, and 245 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 10*d*

Arborfield House has been mentioned in Charlton hundred.

HURST. Newland, and Winnersh, liberties, and Whistley in Charlton hundred, including Twyford, form the parochial chapelry of Hurst, which is partly in Wiltshire, and contains 158 houses, and 847 inhabitants.

RUSCOMB, one mile E. from Twyford, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 38 houses, and 208 inhabitants.

SANDHURST, 5 miles S. from Wokingham, contains 95 houses, and 771 inhabitants. On either side of the west window of the church were in 1823 very curious legendary paintings on the walls, of the early date of the reign of Edward I.; these paintings, in tolerably good preservation, were in distemper and had been coloured over with lime wash, which had then been carefully removed.

The Royal Military College at Sandhurst, a splendid building by the late James Wyatt, was instituted in 1799, and is under commissioners, consisting of the Duke of Wellington, K.G. &c. The present governor is the Honourable Sir Edward Paget. The chapel of the college was consecrated by the Bishop of Salisbury, 8th August, 1813.

SONNING, 3½ miles N.E. from Reading, on the banks of the Thames, over which it has a bridge, contains 162 houses, and 889 inhabitants. A vicarage, value 20*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* Sonning is said to have been the See of a Bishop before the Conquest, whose diocese included Berkshire and Wiltshire, afterwards removed to Salisbury. The Bishops of Salisbury had a residence, with a park, here. King John visited Bishop Herbert Pauper at this mansion, from the 8th to the 14th September, 1216; and Isabella, Queen of Richard II., resided here after the King's confinement at Pomfret. This estate was exchanged with the Crown for lands in Dorsetshire by Bishop Edmund Gheast, in 1574. The seat of Robert Palmer, Esq., M.P. for this county, at Holme Park, part of this manor, was erected in 1796; it is a handsome edifice, of white brick.

Sir Thomas Rich of Sonning was created a baronet in 1660; and in the church are several monuments of this family. Sandford and Woodley are included in this parish, as also Early Liberty in Charlton hundred.

WOKINGHAM, or Oakingham, 32 miles W. from London, containing 487 houses, and 2490 inhabitants, is on the confines of Windsor Forest, and consists of several streets, which centre in a spacious area, where the market-house now stands. The church, a perpetual curacy under the Dean of Salisbury, situated in a detached part of Wiltshire. The Corporation consists of an alderman, and several burgesses, a high steward, an office held by Lord Braybrooke, a recorder, and a town clerk; the seal bears an acorn, slipped and leaved. Wokingham being the only town in Windsor Forest, all the Forest Courts are held here. Archbishop Laud gave 60*l.* per annum to the poor of this town, and every third year 70*l.* additional for portioning maids and apprenticing boys. Charles Palmer bequeathed 20*l.* per annum for the education of children; and Mr. Staverton left a house in Staines, for the purchase of a bull to be baited in the market-place on St. Thomas's Day, annually, and then given to the poor. The "Molly Mog," or fair Maid of the Inn, of Gay's Ballad, was the daughter of John Mog, landlord of the Rose; but in despite of her charms she died a spinster in 1766, at an advanced age. Thomas Godwin, Bishop of Bath and Wells, was a native of this town; he died in 1590, æt. 73.

At Luckley Green, in the neighbourhood, is a hospital for 16 poor men and a master, founded in 1665 by Henry Lucas. The Drapers' Company of London are the trustees of this charity. Luckley House is a seat of Charles Fyshe Palmer, Esq.

18. Theale Hundred

Has portions of Reading hundred on the north-east and west; Faircross and Norton hundreds adjoin it on the north-west; Charlton hundred bounds it on the east, and Hampshire on the south.

ALDERMANSTON, 10½ miles S.W. from Reading, on the southern border of the county, contains 128 houses, and 653 inhabitants.

Aldermanston House, the seat of William Congreve, Esq., in a park on the south side of the town, was built in 1636 by Sir Humphrey Forster; created a baronet in May 1620. It is a large brick mansion, not remarkable on the exterior, but within deserving of very particular attention, all the original decorations remaining in a pure unaltered state; the windows are enriched with painted glass, containing the arms and impalements of the ancestors of the family from the earliest period; the staircase is a perfect model of domestic grandeur, being exceedingly massive and adorned with large statues from the heathen mythology.

Close to the house is the venerable and picturesque parish church, with its wooden spire. A vicarage, value 12*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College, Oxford.

BRADFIELD, 7 miles W. from Reading, contains 178 houses, and 646 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 19*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* Bradfield Hall is the residence of the Rev. John Connop.

BURGHFIELD, 5 miles S.W. from Reading; containing 170 houses, and 881 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.* 19*s.*

John Williams, of Burfield, second son of Sir John Williams and Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Richard More, of Burfield, was created Lord Williams, of Thame, by Queen Mary, 5th April, 1553, and was appointed Lord Chamberlain of the Household to King Philip, her consort. He died without issue in 1559. Sir James Bland Burgess, of Burfield, was created a baronet 31st October, 1795; he was also appointed Knight Marshal of the Royal Household, for life. In 1821 Sir James assumed the name of Lamb. He died in 1825.

ENGLEFIELD, 6 miles W. from Reading, contains 78 houses, and 343 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* At a very early period the manor was held under the Baronial family of Somery. John, Marquess of Winchester, in the reign of Charles I., became possessed of this estate in marriage with Honora, daughter of the Earl of Clanricarde by the heiress of the celebrated statesman Sir Francis Walsingham. The Marquess of Winchester built Englefield House after the demolition of Basing Castle; Sir Balthasar Gerbier, the fashionable architect at the Restoration, pays a high compliment to the Marquess for the taste displayed in its erection. He calls it "a well seated palace, with a wood at its back, like a mantle about a coat of arms." From the Marquess of Winchester it descended through the family of Wright to that of its present possessor Richard Benyon De Beauvoir, Esq. On the north side of the chancel of the church are several monuments of the Englefield family, who occasionally resided at a mansion in the village; and on the north side is a monument to the memory of John Marquess of Winchester, the celebrated defender of Basing House, with an epitaph by Dryden.

PADWORTH, 9½ miles E. from Newbury, contains 51 houses, and 271 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

PURLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Reading, on the banks of the Thames, contains 36 houses, and 196 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the church is a curious Norman font.

Purley Hall, the seat of J. Wilder, Esq. was erected about 1720. Anthony Morris Storer, Esq. F.S.A. a member of the Dilettanti Society, &c., who died in 1799, resided chiefly at Purley, where he had embellished the grounds round his house, with the aid of Repton. His library was curious and select in a variety of departments; it was rich in old bindings, old plays, and books printed by Caxton; had many books illustrated by himself, with prints and with drawings by various artists. All these he left to Eton College, together with a fine collection of prints. He also left 15,000*l.* for the erection of a superb mansion, with an injunction that the building should be commenced immediately upon his decease.

STRATFIELD MORTIMER, 7 miles S.W. from Reading, on the borders of Hampshire, contains 107 houses, and 647 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College.

SULHAM, 5 miles W. from Reading, contains 24 houses, and 152 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.*

SULHAMSTEAD BANISTER, 5 miles S.W. from Reading, contains 22 houses, and 165 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of Queen's College, value 6*l.* 5*s.*

Sir Samuel Morland, created a baronet by King Charles II., July 18, 1660, was the son of the Rector of Sulhamstead, and was born here in 1625; he was a man of considerable celebrity as a machinist, and invented the speaking-trumpet; the steam-engine appears also upon good testimony to have been really invented by him. He died in 1696, after disinheriting his only son, the second and last baronet of the family.

TIDMARSH, 6 miles N.W. from Reading, contains 28 houses, and 139 inhabitants. A rectory, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*

UFTON, 7½ miles S.W. from Reading, contains 37 houses, and 154 inhabitants. A curacy.

WOOLHAMPTON, 7 miles E. from P.T. Newbury, pleasantly situated on the south side of a chain of hills, finely tufted with wood, contains 73 houses, and 386 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

Woolhampton House, the seat of the Earl of Falmouth, stands on an elevated spot sheltered with woods; the sides of the hills are composed of steep and bold irregularities, shelving into deep valleys, and admit of a fine variety of scenery.

19. Wantage Hundred

Is bounded on the north, for about the distance of a mile, by Ganfield hundred, but chiefly by Ock hundred, on the east by a detached part of Reading hundred, on the south by Compton and Kintbury hundreds, and on the west by Shrivenham hundred.

ARDINGTON, 3 miles W. from P. T. Wantage, contains 73 houses, and 403 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of Christ Church College, Oxford, value 8*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*

CHILDREY, 2½ miles from Wantage, contains 134 houses, and 478 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. William Fettyplace founded a chantry in the south aisle of this church with a house for the cantarist or chaplain, and three almsmen, who were to pray for the soul of the founder, and for the souls of all his family, by name, for ever. At the Reformation, the salary, valued at 8*l.* per annum, was given to a school-master, and the house, which still remains, was appointed for his residence. In the tower of the church is a ring of six bells, said to be the most musical, for their number and size, of any in the kingdom. Sir John Fettyplace, of Childrey, was created a baronet by King Charles II., March 30, 1661. The title is now extinct.

DENCHWORTH, or Denchurch, 3 miles N.W. from Wantage, contains 34 houses, and 254 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of Worcester College, Oxford, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

EAST GARSTON, in a detached part of this hundred, is chiefly in that of Lambourn.

WEST HANNEY, 4 miles N. from P. T. Wantage, contains 75 houses, and 387 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, value 22*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

East Hanney, about a mile distant, and Lyford, in Ock hundred, are townships of this parish.

EAST HENDRED, 4 miles N.E. from Wantage, containing 148 houses and 863 inhabitants, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury, value 15*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* It was formerly a considerable market town. The church is handsome, and there are remains of a once beautiful chapel in the parish.

WEST HENDRED, about 1½ mile distant from the above, containing 49 houses, and 319 inhabitants, is a vicarage, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, value 8*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*

EAST LOCKYNGE, 3 miles S.E. from Wantage, including the tithings of West Ginge and Betterton, contains 73 houses, and 342 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 31*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College, Oxford. Sir Henry Martin, of Lockynge, was created a baronet, June 21, 1791. Sir Henry William, the present baronet, has a seat at East Lockynge; and Lockynge Park is the residence of E. Bastard, Esq. West Lockynge is in Wantage parish.

SPARSHOLT, 3½ miles S.W. from Wantage, contains 96 houses, and 460 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of Queen's College, Oxford, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* Sparsholt House is the residence of Barrington Price, Esq. The parish of Sparsholt contains the tithings of Farlow and of Kingston Lisle in Shrivenham hundred, anciently the capital seat of the Lords Lisle. Near it the river Ock takes its rise.

WANTAGE, or Waneting, P. T. 59 miles from London, contains 520 houses, and 2560 inhabitants. It is situated on one of the numerous branches of the Thames, on the borders of the prolific Vale of White Horse, and principally consists of four streets; being intersected by the roads from Hungerford to Oxford, and from Farringdon to Wallingford. The church is handsome, and is a vicarage, value 35*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The market, on Saturday, is noted for its fine corn, a great part of the best seed-wheat being purchased here from the Vale farmers. The market was obtained by Sir Fulk Fitz Warine, about 1316; and upon the market-cross, long since removed, was this legend: "Pray for the good Earl of Bath, and good Master William Barnabe, the builder hereof, 1580; and for William Lord Fitz Warine." The upper portion of the shaft of this cross has been carefully preserved, and contains figures of eight of the apostles, within niches, rudely sculptured. There are fairs held the first Saturday in March, and the first Saturday in May, on the 17th of July, and on the 18th of October. Alfred the Great, the youngest son of Ethelwolf, King of the West Saxons, was born here in the year 849. The exact spot where the palace stood, is described by F. Wise, an able antiquary, to be a space of about six acres, near the entrance of the town from Farringdon. The ruins called Alfred's Cellar are supposed to have been a bath. Near Limborough, north of the brook, is Court Close; and Pallett's Moor adjoining, is supposed to have been originally Palace Moor. Alfred succeeded to the Crown in the year 871, and in the 22nd year of his age; in the same year he obtained the important victory over the Danes, which the White Horse was formed to commemorate. He died, after a reign of 28 years, on 28th October A.D. 900. Many circumstances connected with the glory of our constitution have been confidently referred to the reign of Alfred; but it must be remarked, that for all the facts of his history we are completely at the mercy of the monkish writers, whose assertions at this distance of time cannot easily be disproved, and there is good reason to question their authenticity with respect to his having founded the University of Oxford, and having established the trial by jury. The hamlets of Charlton and Grove, and West Lockynge, are in the parish of Wantage.

20. Wargrave Hundred

Is bounded on the north-east by Beynhurst hundred, on the east by Ripplesmere, and on the south by Cookham hundred, on the west by a detached part of Wiltshire, and on the north-west by the Thames and Oxfordshire.

WALTHAM ST. LAWRENCE, 5½ miles S.W. from P.T. Maidenhead, contains 116 houses, and 638 inhabitants. A vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* In the church is a stately monument of Sir Henry Nevile, of the Privy Chamber to Henry VIII. and Edward VI., who died in 1593.

In Weycock Highrood, a spacious field in the immediate neighbourhood, is Castle Acre, the site of a Roman fort, which commands a delightful view over a large extent of country. Many Roman coins, chiefly of the lower empire, have been found on the spot.

WARFIELD, 5 miles N.E. from Wokingham, contains 178 houses, and 1155 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 43*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* In the church was found a fresco painting of Henry VI., with his name under it. John Benn, Esq. of More Row, and Ormathwaite, in Cumberland, married Margaret, niece and heiress of John Walsh, Esq. of Warfield, M.P. for Worcester, who died in 1795; upon which he assumed the name of Walsh, and was created a baronet 12th May 1804. He died in 1825, and was succeeded by his son Sir John Walsh, Bart. of Warfield. Billingbere, the seat of Lord Braybrooke, is about 3½ miles N.W. of Warfield.

WARGRAVE, 6½ miles N. E. from Reading, on the banks of the Thames, contains 274 houses, and 1409 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Park Place, the seat of Henry Piper Sperling, Esq., was formerly the residence of Field Marshal Conway, of whose widow it was purchased in 1796 by the Earl of Malmsbury. It was then greatly altered from designs by Holland. It stands on the brow of a range of hills nearly 300 feet above the level of the Thames, and sheltered by extensive plantations. The grounds, comprising 400 acres, are diversified with lofty eminences and low valleys. The forest wildness of the woods, intermixed with shrubberies, produces scenes that would delight Salvator Rosa, and others that Claude would admire, presenting all the varieties of English landscape. On a height is a circle of stones, denominated a Druid's Temple, brought from the Isle of Jersey; a singular relict of antiquity, deserving of preservation.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the west by Monmouthshire and Herefordshire; on the north by Worcestershire and Warwickshire; on the east by Oxfordshire and a small part of Berkshire, and on the south by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It extends in length, from Clifford Chambers in the north-east to Clifton in a south-western direction, about seventy miles; in breadth, from Leachlade south-east to Preston north-west, about forty miles; and in circumference is about one hundred and sixty miles. It was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, inhabited by the Dobuni, and received the present name of Gloucestershire from the Anglo-Saxons. At Woodchester and Cirencester considerable Roman remains have been discovered, and there are encampments at Norbury and Sodbury. The county contains two cities, Bristol and Gloucester, and had formerly four mitred abbeys, at Gloucester, Tewksbury, Winchcombe, and Cirencester. It is in the province of Canterbury, and diocese of Gloucester, excepting the city of Bristol, which is in its own diocese, and two chapelries in that of Worcester. There are in this county 26 market towns and 280 parishes; containing at the last census 60,881 houses, and 335,843 inhabitants. It returns ten members to Parliament; viz. two for the county, the Right Hon. Lord Robert Edward Henry Somerset, K.T.S., and Sir Berkeley William Guise, Bart.; two for Gloucester city, two for Bristol, two for Cirencester, and two for Tewksbury. The general aspect of the county is greatly diversified, by a natural division into hill, vale, and forest. The hill district, comprehending the Cotswold and Stroudwater Hills, may be regarded as a continuation of the central chain proceeding from Derbyshire, through this county towards Wiltshire and the Land's End. The extent of the Cotswold Hills from Broadway to Tetbury is thirty miles; the climate, considering the natural elevation of the land, is unusually mild: the sides of the hills abound with springs, and almost every dip has its rill and every valley its brook. The downs, which formerly lay open, are now with few exceptions converted into arable inclosed fields, with roads forming an easy communication between the villages: here the crops of grain and the breed of sheep have long been famous. The Stroudwater Hills partake both of the Cotswold and Vale character; the soil on the hills is principally adapted to the cultivation of turnips and barley: the woodlands are chiefly beech, and here is the chief seat of the woollen manufacture. The Vale district includes the entire tract bounded by the Cotswold Hills and the river Severn on the west, and is subdivided into the vales of Evesham, Gloucester, and Berkeley. The Vale of Evesham, highly famed for its fertility and beauty, and comprehending a portion of Worcestershire, extends south to Campden and Moreton, and following the course of the river Avon east to Stratford in Warwickshire, in its climate, produce, &c. may be considered as a continuation of the Vale of Gloucester. The latter is in extent from north to south about fifteen miles, and about eight miles from east to west; the land is appropriated to arable, meadow and pasture. Cattle purchased in the neighbouring counties are here fattened for the London markets; the dairies are not large, but the cheese and butter are of a very superior quality. The Vale of Berkeley extends from Aust Cliff to the foot of Matson Hill about twenty-five miles, but is in width not more than four miles; the soil is principally appropriated to grass, and the dairies produce cheese of the best quality. The Forest district, separated from the rest of the county by the river Severn, compreliends the Forest of Dean, the soil of which is peculiarly favourable to the growth of the styre apple; its principal minerals are iron and coal. The rivers of Gloucestershire are the Upper, Lower, and Little Avon, the Badgworth, the Carron, the Chilt, the Churn, the Colne, the Evenlode, the Frome, the Isborne, the Leach, the Leden, the Severn, the Stour, the Stroud, the Swilly, the Thames, the Windrush, and the Wye. The navigation is composed of the Thames and Severn canal, the Hereford and Gloucester canal, the Thames, the Stroudwater navigation, and the Gloucester and Berkeley canals. The staple commodities of this county are its woollen cloth and its cheese: at Stroud, Dursley, Wotton-under-Edge, Painswick, Minchinhampton, &c. cloths are made for the army and the Turkey and India trade. The cheese has been considered the best in the kingdom, excepting the Cheshire; but the cloth of this county has been successfully rivalled in Yorkshire, and its cheese in North Wiltshire. The forests of Dean and Kingswood abound in mines of iron and coal. The Cotswold games were of great celebrity in the reigns of James and Charles I., and have been commemorated by Ben Jonson, Drayton, and other poets of that age, collected and published under the title of "Annalia Dubrensia," in 1636.

1. Barton Regis Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Henbury hundred, and on the north-east by Langley and Swinehead hundred. It is separated from Somersetshire on the south by the Lower or Bristol Avon.

BRISTOL, 120 miles W. from London, situated on the rivers Avon and Frome, contains 7,736 houses, and 52,889 inhabitants. Its name is Anglo-Saxon, Bright stowe, or pleasant place. Robert Earl of Gloucester in the reign of Henry I. rebuilt the castle, then a strong and spacious structure, and encompassed the town by a wall. In the reign of Henry II. Bristol became a rich and flourishing place; and ever since the reign of Edward III. has been an independent county within itself, of which Bedminster in Somersetshire forms a part. The old town, within the inner wall, stood upon a narrow hill, the descent from which in many places was formerly very steep, but has been rendered easy by modern improvements. This hill is bounded on the S. by the Avon, on the N. and W. by the Frome, and on the E. by the fosse of the castle, now arched over at the lower end of Castle-street. The valley is on the other side of the two rivers; on the N. side of it is St. Michael's Hill and King's Down, the highest ground in the city. On the W. side is College Green, a considerable eminence, and on the S. side is Red Cliff Hill: the whole of this extent is covered with buildings. The summit of St. Michael's Hill and King's Down being considerably higher than any other quarter, the houses here command a fine view of the city and surrounding country. The old town is crowded with houses; but being seated on a hill, and the streets intersecting each other, there is always a free current of air even in the lowest situations. The city on the whole is handsome and well built, and contains many structures deserving particular attention. The castle was destroyed by order of Cromwell in 1654, so effectually, that but very few vestiges of the foundation are now to be seen, incorporated with other buildings. The diocese of Bristol was one of the six Sees erected by Henry VIII. out of the revenues of the monasteries and religious houses which that monarch dissolved. The cathedral was the church of the Abbey of St. Augustine, founded by Robert Fitz Hardinge, ancestor of the Berkelcys, for Canons Regular, in 1148. At the Reformation King Henry VIII. placed therein a Dean and six Prebendaries, which mode of government still continues. During a great part of Elizabeth's reign the See was held in commendam by the Bishop of Gloucester. This diocese was formed chiefly out of that of Salisbury, with a small part from the dioceses of Wells and Worcester. It contains most of the city of Bristol, and all the county of Dorset. The revenue of the Abbey of St. Augustine in Bristol was valued at the Dissolution at 670*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, when it was erected into a cathedral by Henry VIII. by the name of the cathedral church of the Holy Trinity. The arms of St. Augustine's Abbey were sable, three dueal coronets, in pale, or, now used by the See of Bristol. The length of the church from east to west is 175 feet, whereof the very beautiful choir includes 100 feet; the length of the transepts from north to south is 128 feet; the width of the body and side aisles is 73 feet, and the height of the tower is 127 feet. The edifice displays two distinct species of beautiful architecture. The Chapter House and elder Lady's Chapel were built towards the close of the 12th century, and the present nave and choir in the beginning of the 14th. It is but an incomplete structure, great part of the nave having been destroyed.

The fine painted windows are very much admired; and on the north side is an ancient monument supposed to be that of Robert de Berkeley, who died in 1219. In the cloister is the entrance to the Chapter House and Bishop's Palace; west of the church is a magnificent Gatehouse enriched with statues. There are 18 parish churches. St. Stephen's church is remarkable for its very fine tower. The church of St. Mark, opposite the cathedral, was formerly collegiate, and is now the Mayor's chapel: that of St. Mary Redcliffe, one of the finest architectural specimens in the kingdom, contains the monument of its founder, William Canninge, Mayor of Bristol, and of Sir William Penn, father of the founder of Pennsylvania. The principal hospitals in Bristol are Queen Elizabeth's and Colston's, in each of which 100 boys are educated. The Right Hon. Lord Grenville is High Steward of the city; and the government is under a mayor and 12 aldermen, who are justices, one for each ward; 2 sheriffs, 28 common-council men, a town clerk and deputy, a chamberlain, vice-chamberlain, under sheriff, &c. besides a city marshal, and other inferior officers. The mayor holds a Quarter Session, and a Court of Requests is held every Monday. Arms of Bristol:—Gules, a castle with two towers, argent, on a mount vert, on each tower a banner of St. George, on the dexter side of the castle a ship with three masts with waves in base, proper. Motto—"Virtute et Industria." Besides the Guildhall, an ancient edifice, there is a handsome Exchange, and a Commercial Hall, built by the merchants. There are 13 city companies, several of whom have halls; that of the Merchants in Prince's-street has a curious front of stone, and Coopers' Hall in King-strect has a Corinthian front of four columns. The new Commercial Rooms were opened in 1811, and the Corn Market in 1813. The several squares in Bristol are handsome; Queen-square has a spacious walk shaded with trees, with an equestrian statue of William III., by Rysbrach, in the centre. King-square is well built on an agreeable slope: on the north-west side of the city is Brandon Hill, where the laundresses dry their linen by charter from Queen Elizabeth.

On the east bank of the Avon is Red Cliff Parade, affording a beautiful prospect of the city, shipping, and surrounding country. Over the river Frome is a draw-bridge; and the quay is above a mile in length from St. Giles's to Bristol Bridge, under the names of the Back, the Grove, and the Gib: on the banks of the river below the city are several dock-yards, as well as the merchants' floating-dock. The tide rises greatly, affording depth of water for any merchant ship at spring tides; and the whole trade of the city is brought to the quay, where every possible convenience is prepared for loading and unloading; but at low water the vessels lie aground, and, together with various difficulties in navigating to and from the Severn through a narrow river, were disadvantages under which the city formerly laboured, but a spirit of improvement has induced the inhabitants to amend the navigation by forming a dam near the Hotwells. In King's Road, at the Avon's mouth, vessels ride securely while waiting for the opportunity of entering the river. The principal branch of foreign commerce is to the West Indies; with the north and south of Europe it has a general trade, of which that with Spain is the most important: the trade with Portugal is likewise considerable, as well as to the continent of America, Newfoundland, the Baltic, and an extensive commerce with Ireland. This city sends two members to Parliament; Richard Hart Davies, of Mortimer House, Clifton; and Henry Bright, Esq. The right of election is vested in the freemen and freeholders, about 6000 in number, the sons of freemen and the husbands of freemen's daughters being considered freemen.

CLIFTON, 2 miles W. from Bristol, charmingly situated on the summit of the northern cliffs, immediately above the river Avon, contains 1088 houses, and 8811 inhabitants, having rapidly increased within these few years; many of the houses are occupied as a temporary residence for those who seek the aid of Bristol Hot Wells, situated at the western extremity of Clifton, near the stupendous rock of St. Vincent. From its eminence above the banks of the Avon, the environs present a fine prospect of that river, and over the fertile lands of Somersetshire, as well as of the western parts of Bristol; this view is terminated in one direction by Dundry Hill, with the beautiful tower on its summit. On Clifton Downs are extensive remains of Roman fortifications.

MANGOTSFIELD, 4 miles N.E. from Bristol, contains 610 houses, and 3179 inhabitants. A part of Kingswood Forest is included in the parish, which is situated on the banks of the Frome.

STAPLETON, 2 miles N.E. from Bristol, contains 412 houses, and 2137 inhabitants. It is remarkable for a spring, called the Boiling Well.

2. Berkeley Hundred

Is situated on the eastern bank of the river Severn, and is bounded on the north by Whitstone hundred, on the east by Longtrees hundred, and on the south by Grumbalds Ash and Thornbury hundreds. A detached part of this hundred lies on the north, on the banks of the Severn, and others are on the south.

Lower Division.

ALMONDSBURY, 7 miles N. from Bristol, in the road to Gloucester, contains 83 houses, and 447 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol. A part of the parish is in Langley hundred; and the following hamlets are within the parish: Hempton, Patchway, Over, Easter Compton, Woodland, and part of the village of Tockington. Over Court, the seat of John Vaughan, Esq. is a brick house of the Elizabethan character, in a pleasant and well wooded park. In a chapel on the S. side of Almondsbury church are several monuments of the hereditary lords of the manor, and former proprietors of Over Court. The view of the Severn from Almondsbury hill is one of the most interesting any where to be found, the river winding through a beautiful country, with the distant mountains of Wales rising beyond it. At Tockington is the seat of Samuel Peach Peach, Esq.

ELBERTON, 11 miles N. from Bristol, contains 36 houses, and 203 inhabitants. It is 2 miles from Aust, on the E. bank of the Severn. Its ancient name Eld Berton is the Old Barton, as the farms are here denominated. The church is a vicarage, value 40*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol.

FILTON, 5 miles N. from Bristol, contains 40 houses, and 210 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol.

HENBURY. This parish is chiefly in Henbury hundred, but the tithings of Kings Weston and Lawrence Weston are in a detached part of this hundred. Kings Weston, the seat of the Right Hon. Lord De Clifford, is 4 miles N.W. from Bristol; the mansion, built by Sir John Vanbrugh, occupies a fine eminence in a park 500 acres in extent, on the banks of the Avon; the entrance hall is large, and the staircase singularly elegant. The apartments contain many fine pictures by the old masters, and a series of portraits of the Southwell family, particularly Sir Richard Southwell by Holbein; a collection of miniatures of illustrious personages from the reign of Elizabeth to James II., extremely curious in their selection. The park abounds in eminences, planted with taste, so as to display the varieties of scenery. At the distance of two miles is the Severn, into which the rapid river Avon discharges itself. From Kings Weston Inn, and Penpole Hill are very beautiful views of the estuaries of the Avon and the Wye, the shores of Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire, the Old and New Passages, and a considerable part of Gloucestershire.

HILL, or Hull. This parish is locally situated in the upper division of Berkeley hundred, otherwise the divisions of this hundred are quite distinct. It is 4 miles N. from Thornbury, contains 36 houses, and 259 inhabitants. The church is a curacy in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. Nupdown and Woodend are hamlets of this parish. Sir Edward Fust of Hill was created Baronet, Aug. 21st, 1662; the title is now extinct.

HORFIELD, 3 miles N. from Bristol, contains 30 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol.

Upper Division.

ARLINGHAM, or Erlingham, 9 miles S.W. from Gloucester, contains 132 houses, and 715 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*; within the parish are the hamlets of Overton and Milton End. From Barrow-hill is a beautiful prospect over the Severn, by which river the parish is nearly encompassed.

ASHELWORTH, or Ashleworth, on the side of Cooks Hill, is 4 miles N. from Gloucester, and 5 miles S. from Tewksbury, in a detached part of this hundred. It contains 85 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* The following hamlets are in this parish: Longridge, Knights Green, Nupping End, Whit End, High Cross, Wickeridge, and Mare End.

BERKELEY, 15 miles S.W. from Gloucester, and 114 miles W. from London, is situated on the Little Avon, and contains 165 houses, and 836 inhabitants. It is an ancient corporate town, under a mayor and twelve aldermen, and a court is held every three weeks for the recovery of small debts. The name is possibly derived from Berk a beech and Lea a pasture; the adjacent country, consisting chiefly of rich meadow lands, is noted for good cheese. There is a market on Wednesdays, and an annual fair on May 14. The Gloucester and Berkeley canal enters the Severn near this place at Berkeley Pill, whence it passes Slimbridge, Frampton, Wheatenhurst, Hardwick, and Quedgley, and terminates on the south side of the city of Gloucester, being 18¼ miles in length. This canal, one of the finest in the kingdom, admits vessels of 500 tons burthen, and has proved of the greatest utility, by uniting the city of Gloucester with the port of Bristol. The church is a vicarage, value 32*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Berkeley. The parish contains the tithings of Alkington, or Almintone, Hinton and Ham; the hamlets of Bradstone and Hamfallow, and the chapelry of Stone. Berkeley Castle, an ancient baronial residence of the Lords Berkeley, stands on rising ground, commanding a view of the Severn, and is supposed from its structure to be of Norman origin. It was granted by Henry II. to Robert Fitz Hardinge, with power to enlarge and strengthen it, about 1150. The ground plan of the edifice is very compact, consisting of an irregular court, having on the S. and E. sides an extensive range of buildings. The Donjon Keep is built on a mount, and rises above the rest of the castle; it is flanked by three semicircular towers, and a square one of later date, all embattled. The murder of King Edward II. has made this castle remarkable in history, and the very place where the deed was perpetrated is still shown; it is a detached chamber, situated over the steps leading to the Keep. Thomas Lord Berkeley, who had the care of the King, was commanded to deliver his castle and the prisoner to John Lord Maltravers, and Thomas Gourney, which he accordingly did, and retired to his manor-house of Bradley, near Wotton, and was therefore acquitted of any connivance in the murder. The castle underwent considerable repairs in the reign of Henry VII., and was besieged in 1645, when it was surrendered to the Parliament, after a defence of nine days. Since that time it has remained with little alteration to the present day; the chapel, the hall, the dining chamber, and the kitchen, have remained upwards of three centuries in use for the purposes for which they were originally constructed. In the various apartments of the castle is preserved a series of family portraits, amongst them one of George Lord Berkeley, 1616, to whom Burton dedicated his "Anatomy of Melancholy"; several original royal portraits, and a few pictures by the old masters, &c. It is now the seat of Colonel William Fitz Hardinge Berkeley.

BEVERSTONE, or Bureston, 2 miles W. from Tetbury, contains 33 houses, and 160 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A barn belonging to the rector, called the Parish Priest's Hall, was used to afford refreshment in their journeys from Kingswood to Malmesbury. Beverstone Castle, the seat of the Barons Gourney, is very ancient, and was formerly square, with a tower at each angle, surrounded by a moat. It was enlarged by Thomas Lord Berkeley in the reign of Edward III., by means of the ransom of prisoners taken at the battle of Poictiers. One of the towers remains, together with part of the walls and the chapel, which is occupied as a dwelling; it was purchased, together with the manor, by Sir Michael Hickes, whose son, Sir William, was created a baronet 21st July 1619. Chevenage House is the seat of Mrs. Stevens.

CAM, situated on a small river of the same name, one mile N. from Dursley, contains 375 houses, and 1885 inhabitants. The town lies low and is frequently inundated; the meadows afford admirable pasture, and the district produces the best cheese. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester; a figure of the patron saint carved in wood, formerly placed in the porch, was suffered to be carried to Colnbrooke, and used as a sign for the George Inn at that place. The parish is in two divisions, the Upper and Lower: in the Upper Cam are Upthorpe, Ashmead, and Hockerhill; in Lower Cam are Tils Down, Clingus, and Bowes Lye.

COALEY, or Cowley, 4 miles N.E. from Dursley, contains 154 houses, and 1117 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. From Coaley Peak, a conical hill in this parish, is a remarkably fine prospect over the vale.

CROMHALL ABBOTS, so called from having belonged to the Abbot of St. Augustine in Bristol. It is situated in a detached portion of this hundred, 2 miles N.W. from Wick War, and contains 135 houses, and 703 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 80*l.* Cromhall Lygon is a tithing of this parish.

DURSLEY, 109 miles W. from London, contains 608 houses, and 3186 inhabitants, and consists of two principal streets. It is a corporation, governed by a bailiff and four constables. The town has a considerable trade in broadcloth and card-making for the clothiers. The market-house was erected in 1738; market on Thursday, and fairs May 6, and Dec. 4. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. On the S. side of the church-yard a copious spring of water rises, which drives a fulling-mill near it, and adjoining the town is an extensive paper manufactory. Berkeley Castle, and the church here, were built with stone from this neighbourhood, which, though soft in hewing, becomes exceedingly durable when exposed to the air. Castle Field is considered to be the site of an ancient castle. Woodmancot is a hamlet of this parish.

KINGSCOTE, 4 miles W. from Tetbury, contains 54 houses, and 266 inhabitants. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; it is the site of a Roman station. Builey, Hailecut, and Smithshop are hamlets of this parish.

NEWINGTON BAGPATH, 1 mile S. of Kingscote, contains 44 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 14*l.* Bagpath is a hamlet of this parish. Calcot, a considerable farm, belonged to the abbots of Kingswood, the barn of which is remarkable for its large size. Lurgesale, another farm, belonged to the abbots of Gloucester, now to the mayor and aldermen.

NORTH NIBLEY, 2 miles S.W. from Dursley, contains 294 houses, and 1553 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin of Tours, is a curacy, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. Church End, Fortroy, Mill End, Whor End, Smarts Green, Water Leigh, Redemisse, Swinny, Wooderlin, Great and Little Green, and South End, are hamlets of this parish.

NYMPHSFIELD, 4 miles S.W. from Stroud, contains 111 houses, and 532 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Kinline, in which was formerly a priory, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a hamlet of this parish. Nymphsfield Hill lies on the road from Bath to Gloucester.

OWLPEN, or Oldpen, 3 miles E. from Dursley, contains 48 houses, and 232 inhabitants.

OZELWORTH, 3 miles S.E. from Dursley, contains 26 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory. Newark, a seat on an eminence, was built by Sir Nicholas Poyntz, out of the ruins of Kingswood Abbey, one mile distant.

SLIMBRIDGE, near the banks of the Severn, 6 miles N.E. from Berkeley, contains 161 houses, and 807 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 28*l.* 2*s.* 4*d*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. Hurst, Sages, Church End, More, Gossington, Kingston, Slimbridge Street, and Cam Bridge, are hamlets of this parish. The new grounds, rich meadow lands, were gained from the Severn.

STINCHCOMBE, 2 miles W. from Dursley, contains 84 houses, and 432 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Seir, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Gloucester. Stancombe is a hamlet, and Clingen, or Cleithingen, a tithing of this parish. On Stinchcombe Hill, a bold elevation terminating the Cotswold range, is the most extensive prospect in the county, commanding a view of the Severn, from Gloucester below Bristol. It is also famous for the robust game of sto ball.

ULEY, 2 miles E. of Dursley, contains 501 houses, and 2655 inhabitants. Here is a very considerable manufactory of broadcloths. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the church is Basset's Chapel, belonging to Basset's Court, a manor of this parish; there is a large monument to Robert Basset, ob. 1572. White Court and Benecomb are also in the parish. Bury Hill is the site of a Roman encampment.

WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, 3 miles S. from Dursley, and 108 from London, containing 968 houses, and 5004 inhabitants, is situated under a ridge of wooded hills, and consists of two parallel streets. It is governed by a mayor and twelve aldermen; and the petty sessions for this hundred, which is sometimes called Wotton hundred, are held here: the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the clothing trade, which is carried on to a considerable extent.

The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is very large and handsome. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. In the church is the monument of Thomas Lord Berkeley, ob. 1417, and Margaret his Lady, the daughter and heiress of Lord Lisle, ob. 1392; and many others worthy of particular attention. There are several distinct hamlets in this parish, viz. Sinwell, Bradley, Comb (formerly belonging to Bordesley Abbey, Worcestershire), Rudge (to the Abbey of Kingswood), Symonds Hall, Huntingford, and Wortley.

3. Bisley Hundred

Is bounded on the north-west by Dudstone and Kings Barton, and Whitstone hundreds; on the north-east by Rapsgate and Crowthorne hundreds, and on the south by Longtrees hundred.

BISLEY, or Bisleigh, 4 miles N.E. from Minchinhampton, and 96 from London, contains 1150 houses, and 5421 inhabitants. The town is supported by the clothing trade; it has no regular market, but two sheep fairs, 4th May and 12th November. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is spacious, and being situated on an eminence, its spire may be seen at several miles distant. It was built by one of the family of Mortimer, and is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Its hamlets are, Trougham, Steanbridge, Bidfield, Tunley, and Daneway. Chalford, or Chafford, is a chapelry on the banks of the Stroud, on which river are numerous mills, employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth for the army. The first clothing-mill in this part of the country was erected at Todgmore Bottom in this parish, where Roger Bacon, a learned Franciscan, was born; he was educated at St. Mary's Chapel, now Bury Mill, on Stroud river, in which is a room still called Friar Bacon's Study*; he is however generally said to have been born near Ilchester, Somersetshire. The Thames and Severn canal runs through this parish. Lypiat Park is the seat of William Lewis, Esq.

EDGEWORTH, or Egesworde, 2½ miles E. from Bisley, and 6 miles from Cirencester, contains 25 houses, and 134 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.*

MISERDEN, or Musarden, 3 miles N. from Bisley, contains 90 houses, and 514 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In it is a handsome monument of Sir William Sandys, sheriff of the county in the reign of Charles I.; he died 1640.

Miserden Park, about 7 miles in circumference, is the seat of Sir E. B. Sandys, Bart.: the mansion, an ancient edifice of stone, contains a series of family portraits. The grounds are richly wooded with noble beeches. Wishanger, Sudgrove, and Slade, are hamlets of this parish.

PAINSWICK, 3 miles N. from Stroud, and 105 from London, contains 788 houses, and 4044 inhabitants. The town is irregularly built, and is chiefly supported by the clothing trade. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a spire 174 feet high; in the tower is a very musical peal of twelve bells. It is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* In a chapel on the north side is a monument of Sir William Kingston, lord of the manor temp. Henry VIII. Painswick is situated on the southern acclivity of Sponebed Hill, on the summit of which is an encampment doubly entrenched, called Kinesbury Castle, Kynemans Barrow, the King's eminence. It was occupied by the Royalist army after the siege of Gloucester, and commands a fine view of the Severn, and of the vale. The tithings of Edge, Sponebed, Shepscombe, and Stroud End, are in this parish.

SAPPERTON, or Salperton, 4½ miles W. from Cirencester, and 6 miles E. from Stroud, contains 78 houses, and 476 inhabitants, including the tithing of Frampton Marshal. The Thames and Severn canal passes through this parish, and at Sapperton hill enters a tunnel of solid masonry 2½ miles in length. Their late Majesties visited this tunnel July 19th, 1788. Here was the residence, now the burial place, of Sir Robert Atkyns, Bart. author of "The Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire," published in 1712 in folio.

STROUD, 101 miles from London, contains 1419 houses, and 7097 inhabitants. It is situated on the ridge of a declivity near the confluence of the Frome and the Slade, and on the Stroudwater navigation, which here unites with the Thames and Severn canal, and affords great facility of water carriage. Here are very extensive manufactories of fine cloth, the water being celebrated for dyeing scarlet and other grain colours, on which account the clothing trade has been extended for upwards of 20 miles along the various rivers, on the banks of which are numerous fulling-mills. Stroud may be considered the centre of the clothing district, all the surrounding valleys exhibiting a continued range of houses and villages, inhabited by persons engaged in this flourishing business. The Stroudwater canal begins at Walbridge, passes by Cain's Cross, Stonehouse and Ebley, and enters the Severn at Framilode, being in length more than 8 miles, and having a fall of 802 feet. Stroud has a market on Friday, and fairs on May 12, and August 21. A mail coach, direct to this town, through Fairford and Cirencester, has been established within these few years, affording vast accommodation to this populous district. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was formerly a chapelry to Bisley. It is now a perpetual curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Gloucester. It is large, and has a high spire: here is a monument of Thomas Stephens, Attorney-general to Prince Henry and Prince Charles, who died in 1613; one to Thomas Fream, Esq. of Lypiat Hall, ob. 1664, &c. Upper and Lower Lypiat, Paganhill, and Stainbridge, are tithings of this parish. The scenery of the neighbourhood is extremely beautiful, on account of the diversified irregularity of the ground.

WINSTONE, 6½ miles N.W. from Cirencester, contains 41 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* Washbrook is a hamlet of this parish.

4. Blidesloe Hundred,

On the western banks of the Severn, is bounded on the north and south for a short distance by Westbury hundred, and on the west by St. Briavels hundred.

ALVINGTON, 4 miles S. W. from Blakeney, in the road from Gloucester to Chepstow, and 6 miles N.E. from the last, is situated in the Forest of Dean, and is supposed to be the Abone of Antoninus. It contains 54 houses, and 272 inhabitants.

AWRE, 3 miles S. E. from Newnham, on the banks of the Severn, contains 208 houses, and 1138 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Haberdashers' Company of London. This parish includes the tithings of Blakeney, Blidesloe, Etloe and Etloe Duchy, and Hagloe. A river runs into the Severn at Breams Pill, over which are two bridges at Blakeney and Poulton. Thomas Sternhold, the psalmist, was born here. He became Groom of the Robes to Henry VIII., and was considered as a personal favourite of that King. His translation of the Psalms was first printed in 1549, in which year he died.

LYDNEY, 6 miles S. W. from Newnham and 123 from London, is situated on the banks of the Severn, and contains 241 houses, and 1393 inhabitants. Fairs, 4th May and 8th Nov. The church is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. There are several hamlets in the parish, Aylburton, Nasse, Newton, Purton, Hurst, and Alliston.

Lydney Park is the seat of the Hon. C. Bathurst. Sir William Wintour, Vice Admiral of England in the reign of Elizabeth, was rewarded for his services against the Spanish Armada by a grant of this estate; he commenced a stately mansion here called White Cross. It was made a garrison in 1643, and was afterwards demolished. In the neighbourhood of Lydney are collieries, and an extensive iron forge.

5. Botloe Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Herefordshire and Worcestershire, on the south by Lancaster Duchy, and on the east by Deerhurst, and Dudstone and Kings Barton hundreds.

BROMSBERROW, 11 miles N.W. from Gloucester, and 4 miles S.E. from Ledbury, contains 58 houses, and 335 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 15*s.*— Wood End, a small hamlet of the parish, extends to the top of Malvern hill: here is a brook called the Glinch, which runs into the Leden. Bromsberrow Place is the seat of W. A. Yate, Esq.

DYMMOCK, 3 miles N. from Newent, contains 284 houses, and 1558 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* Leddington, Ryeland, and Wood End are hamlets of this parish. From Ryeland King Edward IV. sent a breed of sheep to Spain, which now produce the finest wool; for this important present he is censured by Rapin in his History. Great quantities of cider and perry are made from the produce of the numerous orchards in this parish. The Hereford and Gloucester canal passes here; and through Pauntley, Upleadon, Rudford, and Lassington, to the city of Gloucester, across the Alney Island.

KEMPLEY, 4 miles N.E. from Ross, contains 50 houses, and 301 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. A brook here runs into the Leden.

NEWENT, anciently Noent, situated in the Forest of Dean, 9 miles N.W. from Gloucester and 112 from London, contains 531 houses, and 2660 inhabitants. It has a market on Friday, and fairs on Wednesday before Easter and Whitsuntide, 12th Aug., and Friday after 19th Sept., the Nativity of the Virgin. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* The priory of Newent, a cell to the abbey of Cormeille in Normandy, was dissolved, and the revenues granted to the Master and College of Fotheringay by King Henry IV. The hamlets of this parish are Compton, Carswall, Waters End, Hays, Stardens, Malwick (in which is comprehended Okely), Cugley, Boulsdon, and Kilcot. Several coal mines are in this neighbourhood, and a collateral cut from the Hereford and Gloucester canal extends to this town.

OXENHALL, 1 mile W. from Newent, contains 66 houses, and 323 inhabitants. The church is an impropriation, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The Ell Brook runs through this parish and Newent into the Severn.

RUDFORD, on the Leden, 4 miles N.W. from Gloucester, contains 16 houses, and 97 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. High Leden is a hamlet of this parish. The Hereford and Gloucester canal runs through it.

TAYNTON, 4 miles S.E. from Newent, contains 87 houses, and 516 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. Little Taynton is a hamlet of this parish, and Little Oakly (part of the manor of Monmouth) is also within it.

UPLEADON, situated on the river Leden, 6 miles N.W. from Gloucester, contains 33 houses, and 182 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester.

6. Bradley Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Kiftsgate and part of Deerhurst hundred, on the east by Slaughter hundred, on the south by Brightwells Barrow and Rapsgate hundreds, and on the west by Cheltenham hundred.

ASTON BLANK, or Cold Aston, on the Windrush, 3 miles N. from North Leach, contains 54 houses, and 296 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Little Aston farm belongs to Pembroke College Oxford.

COLN ROGERS, 3 miles S. from Northleach, contains 28 houses, and 139 inhabitants. It is situated on the Colne, and is a rectory, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

COMPTON ABDALE, near the source of the Colne, 3 miles W. from Northleach, contains 36 houses, and 184 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. Compton Park, on the south, is large; the mansion was originally built by Sir Richard How, M.P. for Wiltshire in 1712.

DOWDESWELL, at the bottom of a long steep hill, 12 miles from Gloucester, in the road to London, contains 34 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church is cruciform in plan, and has a small spire, built in 1577. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The P. T. Andoversford and Cold Comfort are in this parish. On Dowdeswell Hill is a large camp called the Castles, and several others. Peglesworth farm is accounted the highest ground in Cotswold. From the hill is a fine prospect of the Vale of Evesham, with Cheltenham, &c., bounded by the Malvern Hills. Sandywell Park, the seat of Miss Timbrell, is on the N. of the town. The mansion was built by Henry Bret, Esq. about 1700. In digging the foundation several leaden coffins were found with the bodies lying N. and S.

FARMINGTON, 1½ mile N.E. from Northleach, contains 48 houses, and 245 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* Near is Norbury, a very extensive Roman encampment.

HAMPNETT, 1 mile N.W. from Northleach, contains 22 houses, and 121 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* The river Leach rises here, and falls into the Thames at Leachlade.

HAZLETON, 3 miles N.W from Northleach, contains 47 houses, and 265 inhabitants, with Yanworth Chapelry annexed. It is a rectory, value 19*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*

NORTHLEACH, situated in the very centre of the Cotswold Hills on the river Leach, 25 miles E. from Gloucester, contains 150 houses, and 773 inhabitants. The town is governed by a bailiff and two constables, and has a market for grain on Wednesdays. The fairs are held Wednesday before 23rd April, third Wednesday in May, and Wednesday before 29th Sept. Here is a well-endowed free-school, with an exhibition every fourth year to Pembroke College Oxford. The church, situated on the side of a hill, was built by John Forty, a clothier, and the south aisle by William Bicknell, in 1489. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The Roman Foss-way passes Northleach.

NOTGROVE, 3 miles N. from Northleach, contains 44 houses, and 198 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SALPERTON, 4 miles N.W. from Northleach, contains 39 houses, and 173 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.*

SEVENHAMPTON, or Seninton, 5 miles E. from Cheltenham, contains 87 houses, and 386 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy. Brockhampton is a hamlet of this parish.

SHIPTON OLIFFE, 5 miles W. from Northleach, contains 40 houses, and 177 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*

SHIPTON SOLLARD, ½ mile S. of Shipton Oliffe, contains 13 houses, and 62 inhabitants.

STOWELL, 2 miles S.W. from Northleach, contains 6 houses, and 33 inhabitants. Stowell Park, the seat of Lord Stowell, is situated on a gentle eminence surrounded by excellent plantations, and is watered by the river Churn. Sir William Scott, elder brother of the Earl of Eldon, was created Lord Stowell July 9th, 1821. The estate formerly belonged to Lord Chedworth.

TURKDEAN, 2 miles N. from Northleach, contains 29 houses, and 228 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford.

WHITTINGTON, 4½ miles E. from Cheltenham, contains 42 houses, and 215 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Syreford is a hamlet of this parish.

WITHINGTON, 6 miles N.W. from Northleach, contains 161 houses, and 759 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. Cassey Compton, Foxcot, or Fuscot, Broadwell End, Little Colesborne, and Dowdeswell, are hamlets of this parish. The remains of a Roman villa were discovered in 1811 about half a mile S. of the village, in a field called the Old Town, or Withington upon Wall Well, from a spring which rises near it. The Mosaic pavements found here are now in the gallery of the British Museum.

7. St. Briavels Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Herefordshire; on the east by the Duchy of Lancaster, Westbury, and Blidesloe hundreds; on the south by Westbury hundred; and on the west by Monmouthshire.

ABINGHALL, 1 mile S. from Mitchell Dean, was a seat of the Abbot of Flaxley, whence it derives its name. It contains 42 houses, and 215 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

ENGLISH BICKNOR, (so called to distinguish it from Welsh Bicknor, Monmouthshire,) 3 miles N. from Coleford, and 6 miles W. from Mitchell Dean, contains 105 houses, and 534 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* East Pitch brook rises in this parish, and falls into the Wye.

ST. BRIAVELS, or Brulais, 3 miles S. from Coleford, contains 216 houses, and 1112 inhabitants. The householders by charter are entitled to cut wood in 3000 acres of the neighbouring coppices in Hunknolls and the Mund, in the Forest of Dean, which they convert into hoops, &c., for Bristol and the West India trade.

St. Briavels castle was built by Milo Earl of Hereford in the reign of Henry I. It was strong and of large extent, but very little except the Gate-house, on the N.W. front, now remains, which is used as a prison for the hundred. His Grace the Duke of Beaufort is Constable of the Castle and Warden of the Forest. The surrounding landscape is one of the most romantic and beautiful imaginable, and together with the venerable remains of the castle form a splendid coup d'œil. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is an impropriation belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. Three brooks rise in the parish; Mark brook and Rodmore brook run into the Wye, and Aylesmore brook into the Severn.

DEAN FOREST, in the extreme western part of the county between the rivers Severn and Wye, is extra-parochial. Its population appears now to exceed 5500 persons, the extension of coal mines in this district having caused a considerable increase since the year 1811. It is divided into Denby Walk, Herberts Walk, Little Dean Walk, Speech House Walk, Worcester Walk, and York Walk. A Swainmote Court is held at the Speech House in the middle of the forest, to preserve the vert and venison. The Judges are the Verdurers, chosen by all the freeholders in the county. Another court called the Miners Court is held by the Steward, who is appointed by the Warden of the Forest, and by Juries of Miners: witnesses in this court, who are miners, touch the Bible with a stick, that the Holy Writ may not be defiled with their unclean hands*. The Forest presents from the vale of Gloucester a variety of eminences covered with underwood and detached groups of timber trees. The bases of these hills, studded with meadows and corn-fields, with cottages peeping through the trees, have a pleasing and beautiful effect. The Severn assumes the appearance of a placid lake with sloping shores, except on the Forest side, where a small chain of cliffs appear, crowned with stunted oaks. The foresters, from the secluded situation of this part of the country, retain many ancient customs.

MITCHELL DEAN, or Great Dean, 11 miles N.W. from Gloucester, on the borders of the Forest, contains 133 houses, and 556 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory; it is large and handsome, with a spire rising 184 feet. The roof is timber framed and carved. In an E. window are some curious remains of painted glass; angels with musical instruments, heads of a king, queen, &c.

LITTLE DEAN, 3½ miles S. from Mitchell Dean, and 1 mile N. from Newnham, contains 150 houses, and 807 inhabitants. The church is an impropriation, belonging to the corporation of Gloucester.

FLAXLEY, 2 miles N. from Newnham, contains 30 houses, and 196 inhabitants. An Abbey was founded here for monks of the Cistercian Order, in the reign of Henry I., by Roger Earl of Hereford, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It was under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Hereford, and the Abbots were consecrated by him: at the Dissolution the lands were granted to Sir William Kingstone, who made the Abbot's lodgings his residence; from which family it passed to that of Clerk, and afterwards to the Boevey family. Sir Charles Barrow of Hygrove was created a baronet, 10th December 1783, with a special limitation in favour of Thomas Crawley Boevey of Flaxley Abbey, who succeeded to the title. The ancient mansion was destroyed by fire in 1777, and has been rebuilt. It is situated amidst scenery highly picturesque. The church of Flaxley, formerly belonging to the Abbey, is a curacy.

HEWELSFIELD, 5 miles S. from Coleford, contains 83 houses, and 434 inhabitants. The church is a vicarage.

* Atkyns.

LEA, 9 miles W. from Gloucester, is partly in Herefordshire. It contains 15 houses, and 89 inhabitants in this county. The church is a curacy, annexed to Linton in Herefordshire.

NEWLAND; 1 mile S.W. from Coleford (which is a chapelry of this parish), contains 628 houses, and 3383 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. In this parish, which is bounded by the river Wye, is Wye Seat, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The hamlets are Clearwell, or Clowerwall; Coleford, or Covert; Breem, and Lea Bailey. There are many coal-pits and iron-mines in the neighbourhood.

RUAR DEAN, or River Dean, on the banks of the Wye, 3 miles W. from Mitchell Dean, contains 152 houses, and 729 inhabitants. The church is annexed to that of Walford in Herefordshire.

STAUNTON, 2 miles N.W. from Coleford, contains 43 houses, and 200 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 17*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* From Staunton Hill is a fine view of the town of Monmouth, of Herefordshire, Brecknockshire, and Worcestershire. There are several iron-mines, in the parish.

8. Brightwells Barrow Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Slaughter and Bradley hundreds; on the west by part of Rapsgate and Crowthorne hundreds; on the south by Wiltshire and Berkshire; and on the east by Oxfordshire.

ALDSWORTH, 7 miles W. from Burford, contains 68 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. It has a lofty spire, and being seated on a hill is a conspicuous object.

BARNSLEY, 4 miles E. from Cirencester, contains 59 houses, and 318 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 13*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* It was built by Sir Giles Tame of Rendcombe, who also built an inn here, midway between his seat and Fairford. Barnsley Park is the seat of Sir James Musgrave, Bart. The mansion is built in the Italian style, with the saloon painted in fresco: there are fine plantations in the park.

BIBURY, beautifully situated on the Colne, 7 miles E. from Cirencester, contains 74 houses, and 361 inhabitants. The church is a curacy. Ablington and Arlington are tithings of this parish; as well as Winson, situated in Bradley hundred. Richard Cresswell, Esq., has a seat at Bibury.

COLNE ST. ALDWINS, 4 miles N. from Fairford, is situated on the river Colne, over which is a bridge to Quennington. It contains 88 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Aldwin, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

Williamstrip Park, the seat of Hickes Beach, Esq., is in this parish.

EAST LEACH MARTIN, or Burthorpe, 4 miles N. from Leachlade, derives its present name from the river Leach, upon which it is situated. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Michael the Archangel, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown. Feifield and Coat are hamlets of this parish.

EAST LEACH TURVILLE, ¼ mile N. from the above, contains 71 houses, and 333 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester.

FAIRFORD, situated on the river Colne, at the foot of the Cotswold Hills, 8 miles E. from Cirencester, and 80 from London. It contains 315 houses, and 1547 inhabitants, and has a market on Thursdays, and fairs May 14, and Nov. 12. There are two bridges over the river. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. It forms the chief attraction of the town from the peculiar beauty of its structure and decoration; and was built in the reign of Henry VII. by John Tame, a wealthy clothier, who having captured a vessel laden with painted glass, bound from Flanders to Italy, determined on erecting an edifice worthy of its reception. It is 120 feet in length, and 55 in breadth. There are 28 windows, with four or more compartments in each. The designs are attributed to Albert Durer, but it is more probable they were by Francesco Francia, a native of Bologna, who was peculiarly eminent in painting on glass. The windows are now carefully preserved.—Fairford Park, the seat of John Raymond Barker, Esq., is delightfully situated, and is adorned with very extensive pleasure-grounds.

HEATHEROP, 3 miles N. from Fairford, is situated on the Colne, and contains 70 houses, and 290 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a rectory, value 10*l.*

KEMPSFORD, or Kynemerisford, the King's eminent ford, over the Thames or Isis, upon which the town is seated, 2 miles S. from Fairford. It contains 173 houses, and 838 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a vicarage, value 19*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. Dunvill, Horcote, and Welford, are hamlets of this parish.

LEACHLADE, at the confluence of the Leach with the Thames, is 76 miles W. from London, and 13 E. from Cirencester. It contains 221 houses, and 1154 inhabitants; and has a considerable trade in cheese and corn, with a market on Tuesdays, and a fair on September 9. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was built by Conrad Ney, vicar, in the reign of Henry VII. It is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Linhill in Oxfordshire is a hamlet of this parish. The Thames and Severn canal commencing at Wallbridge, where the Stroud navigation ends, proceeds in a devious course through the county to Leachlade, where it joins the Thames.

QUENNINGTON, or Queenington, 2 miles N. from Fairford, situated on the Colne, contains 63 houses, and 345 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Here was a preceptory of the Knights Templars, and afterwards of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

SOUTHROP, on the Leach, 2 miles N. from Leachlade, contains 51 houses, and 313 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

9. Cheltenham Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cleeve and Deerhurst hundreds, on the west by Dudstone and Kings Barton hundred, on the south by Rapsgate hundred, and on the east by a detached part of Deerhurst, and Bradley hundreds.

CHARLTON KINGS, 1 mile S.E. from Cheltenham, contains 299 houses, and 1607 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Haw is a tithing of this parish. Charlton Park, the seat of William Hunt Prynne, Esq., is planted judiciously, so as to give effect to the scenery on the banks of the little river that runs through it.

CHELTENHAM, 94 miles from London, containing 2297 houses, and 13,396 inhabitants, has risen into consequence and popularity from the reputation of its springs. It is situated on the Chilt, a river which runs into the Severn, with the Cotswold Hills almost immediately behind the town, which shelter it on the N. and E. The High Street, more than a mile in length, is of considerable width, in the centre of the town, and forms a promenade for the visitors. Cambray Street and the Crescent are fine buildings. The Well Walk, shaded by tall elms, is a delightfully cool resort leading to Pump Square, on the E. side of which is the Spa and Long Room: a shaded walk is continued to Orchard Well, where a serpentine walk is terminated by Grove Cottage; and near it is Montpelier Spa. His late Majesty George III. visited Cheltenham in 1788; he resided at Bays Hill Lodge, the seat of Lord Fauconbergh.

The spring was first observed to possess medicinal properties in 1716, since which time new springs have been discovered.

The town has a market on Thursdays, and fairs on 2nd Thursday in April, Holy Thursday, and Aug. 5. Its convenient situation between the Cotswold Hills and the Vale always rendered it a considerable mart for sheep and corn, but the only article of commerce manufactured here are worsted stockings. The church is a curacy, in the presentation of Jesus College Oxford. A beautiful circular window of the church 15 feet in diameter is very much admired. Arle, Alston, Westal, Naunton, and Sandford, are hamlets of this parish.

LECKHAMPTON, 2 miles S. from Cheltenham, contains 56 houses, and 315 inhabitants. It is a curacy. From Leckhampton Hill is a beautiful prospect of the vale extending into Worcestershire, bounded by the Shropshire and Malvern Hills on one side, and Kings Road and Somersetshire on the other. In front are seen Gloucester, Tewksbury, and Upton, with the meandering of the Severn bounded by the Welsh mountains.

SWINDON, 2 miles N.W. from Cheltenham, contains 38 houses, and 201 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 13*l.* The Swilly runs through this parish, and falls into the Severn below Tewksbury.

10. Bishops Cleeve Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Tewksbury hundred, a detached part of Deerhurst hundred, and Worcestershire; on the east by Kiftsgate hundred; on the south by a detached portion of Deerhurst hundred; and on the west by Cheltenham and Deerhurst hundreds.

BISHOPS CLEEVE, formerly belonging to the Bishops of Worcester, the only parish in this hundred, to which it gives name, is 4 miles N. from Cheltenham, and is situated on the side of a hill. The church, dedicated to St. Michael the Archangel, is a rectory, value 84*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* There are several hamlets in this parish, viz. Gotherington, Stoke Orchard, or Stoke Archer, Southam, Brochampton, or Brockington, and Woodmancott. The entire parish contains 316 houses, and 1548 inhabitants. Southam House, one of the finest old seats in the kingdom, was built by Sir John Huddleston, sheriff of the county in 1501; and it came by marriage to the De La Bere family, the last lineal descendant of which, Thomas Baghot De La Bere, died in 1821. The mansion retains much of its original character, both in the exterior and internally; the hall is paved with painted tiles from Hailes Abbey: here is a collection of ancient portraits. The views are very picturesque, of the valley, backed by the Malvern Hills, with Cleeve Cliff, rising perpendicularly 630 feet on the opposite side, having its base nearly lost in fine woodland scenery.

11. Crowthorne and Minety Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Rapsgate hundred, on the east by Brightwells Barrow hundred, on the south by Wiltshire, and on the west by Bisley and Longtrees hundreds.

AMPNEY CRUCIS, or Holy Rood Amney, on the river Ampney, 3 miles E. from Cirencester, contains 126 houses, and 590 inhabitants. The church is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Ampney House is the seat of Mrs. Blackwell.

DOWN AMPNEY, 6 miles S.E. from Cirencester, on the Ampney river, which falls into the Thames about 2 miles below the town. It contains 76 houses, and 365 inhabitants. The church is a vicarage, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. In the S. aisle is a fine tomb of Sir Nich. De Villiers and his wife; and in many of the windows of the N. aisle are reaping hooks, (badges of the Hungerford family). Down Ampney House, the seat of the Earl of St. Germains, is an ancient mansion, built by the Hungerfords, which came by marriage into the Dunch family, of East Wittenham, Berkshire.

AMPNEY ST. MARY, or Ashbrook, 3 miles E. from Cirencester, on the Ampney, contains 29 houses, and 130 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

AMPNEY ST. PETERS, or Easington, 4 miles E. from Cirencester, contains 38 houses, and 177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Gloucester.

BADGINGTON, on the river Churn, 3 miles N. from Cirencester, contains 32 houses, and 137 inhabitants. It is a rectory, valued 8*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Bearidge Bridge over the Churn is in this parish.

BAUNTON, on the Churn, 1 mile N. from Cirencester, contains 27 houses, and 129 inhabitants; and is a curacy.

SOUTH CERNEY, on the Churn, 3 miles S. from Cirencester, contains 206 houses, and 922 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The Barons St. Amand were anciently lords of the manor. The Thames and Severn canal runs through this parish.

CIRENCESTER, 89 miles from London and 18 miles S.E. from Gloucester, is situated on the Churn at the meeting of the Foss-way, Ermine Street, and Ickneild Street, and was the Corinium Dobunorum of the Romans. It contains 1006 houses, and 4987 inhabitants. The chief trade of the town is wool, and the manufactory of edge tools and carpets. The markets are on Monday and Friday; and fairs on Easter Tuesday, July 18, and Nov. 8. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is one of the most magnificent parochial edifices in the kingdom. It consists of a nave 77 feet in length by 74 feet in breadth, including its lateral aisles, with a chancel 50 feet long by 24 wide; at the west end rises a lofty well-proportioned tower terminated by enriched battlements and pinnacles; there are handsome porches of entrance on the north and south sides; that on the South is very large, and fronts the market-place. It was erected in the reign of Henry VIII., chiefly by the relatives of Thomas Ruthall bishop of Durham, a native of this town. Over the entrance to the church is the Town Hall, where the general sessions are often held; the ceiling of the entrance is groined with fan tracery and pendents, very rich; on each side are large chambers, now converted into dwellings. A large and richly mullioned window at the west end of the church contains some fine specimens of ancient painted glass. Another window at the east end is also decorated with this splendid material. Here are figures of all the ecclesiastical orders of the church, from the Pope to the Mendicant friar; full-length effigies of Peter King of Castile, Richard Duke of York, Thomas Earl of Surrey, Richard Earl of Salisbury; a large full-length representation of Richard Duke of York, Earl of Cambridge, &c., in his paternal coat armour, with the arms of Mortimer Earl of March on the pomel of his sword. The pulpit is of stone, with sculptured panels and mouldings. In Trinity Chapel are monuments of the Bathurst family. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Crown. The town is governed by two High Constables and fourteen Wardsmen, who are appointed annually at the Court Leet over the seven wards. It has a free grammar-school, several hospitals and alms-houses; and the borough has returned 2 members to Parliament since the year 1568; the right of election being in the inhabitants and householders legally settled. The present members are the Right Hon. George Lord Apsley, D.C.L., son of Earl Bathurst; and Joseph Cripps, Esq., of this town. The hamlets of this parish are Spiringate, Wiggold, Chesterton, Barton, and Oakley.

There was an Abbey of Black Canons of the Order of St. Augustine, founded by King Henry I. in 1117, who dedicated it to St. Mary and St. James. It was a mitred Abbey from about 1416, and at the Dissolution was valued at 1057*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* per annum. The arms of the Abbey are, Argent, on a chevron gules, three rams heads affronteé, or.

Oakley, or Cirencester Park, the seat of the Right Hon. Earl Bathurst, K.G., adjoins the town. It is very extensive, abounding with fine woods and avenues; one is nearly five miles in length, extending to Pinbury Park, now united in one domain. The mansion was originally built by Henry Earl of Danby, K.G., founder of the Physic Garden at Oxford, and was purchased by the father of Allen, first Earl Bathurst, a nobleman of distinguished abilities, the friend and patron of Pope, Addison, and Swift. The house fronts a beautiful lawn, backed by wooded scenery of the most luxurious description, Oakley woods being connected with the grounds at this point. About a mile from the house, nearly in the centre of the deer park, is a column surmounted by a statue of Queen Anne; there is also a terrace adorned with buildings and plantations of evergreens. In the entrance hall is an equestrian portrait of the Duke of Wellington by the late Sir Thomas Lawrence, and in the dining-room are some excellent portraits by Sir Peter Lely. Another seat in the immediate vicinity of Cirencester is East Court, J. Pitt, Esq. M.P.

COATES, 3 miles W. from Cirencester, contains 53 houses, and 309 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Part of the hamlet of Torleton is within the parish; and at Trewsbury is an ancient camp with double entrenchments, called Trewsbury Castle. The head of the river Isis is in this parish.

DAGLINGWORTH, 3 miles N.W. from Cirencester, contains 55 houses, and 253 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A Roman tessellated pavement was discovered at Cave Close. The Duntsborne runs through the parish, and falls into the Churn at Cirencester.

DRIFFIELD, 4 miles S.E. from Cirencester, contains 31 houses, and 144 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*

DUNTSBORNE ABBOTS formerly belonged to the Abbots of Gloucester, and is situated on the Duntsborne or brook, which falls into the Churn. It contains 35 houses, and 171 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 3*l.* Duntsborne Leer, a hamlet of this parish, is in Rapsgate hundred; it formerly belonged to the Abbey De Lyra, in Normandy, whence it derived its name Leer.

DUNTSBORNE ROUSE, 1½ mile S. from the above, on the same brook, 3 miles N.W. from Cirencester, contains 20 houses, and 100 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford. Pinsbury is a hamlet of this parish; it belonged to the Abbey of the Holy Trinity, in Caen, and, when alien priories were suppressed was granted to that of Sion in Middlesex. After the Dissolution this manor, with Avening, Hampton, and others, were exchanged by the King with Andrew Lord Windsor for Stanwell and other lands in Middlesex.

HARNHILL, or Hornhill, 2 miles S.E. from Cirencester, contains 12 houses, and 75 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

MAISEY HAMPTON, or Meysey Hampton, a name derived from the Meyseys, formerly lords of the manor, 6 miles E. from Cirencester, contains 75 houses, and 362 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 26*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford. Marston, in Wiltshire, 2 miles S. of the village, is a hamlet of this parish.

MINETY, in a detached part of the county near Malmesbury in Wiltshire, contains 110 houses, and 562 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage. The parish is divided into three hamlets, Wiltshire Row, East End, and West End; the two latter only are in Gloucestershire.

PRESTON, 1 mile S.E. from Cirencester, contains 35 houses, and 160 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* The Abbey is the seat of Thomas Master, Esq., so called from the manor having formerly belonged to the Abbey of Cirencester. Northcote is a hamlet of this parish.

SIDDINGTON ST. MARY, and SIDDINGTON ST. PETER, 2 miles S. from Cirencester, contain 79 houses, and 349 inhabitants. A rectory, value 8*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

STRATTON, 1 mile N.W. from Cirencester, contains 55 houses, and 271 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and derives its name from its situation on the Ermine Street; on Stratton Common is a bush which gives name to Crowthorne hundred.

12. Deerhurst Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Worcestershire and Tewksbury hundred, on the east by Cleeve and Cheltenham hundreds, on the south by Dudstone hundred, and on the west by Botloe hundred: there are several detached portions.

Lower Division.

DEERHURST, on the banks of the Severn, 2 miles S.E. from Tewksbury, contains 27 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church contains several ancient monuments; it is a curacy. Here was a priory founded in the Anglo-Saxon æra, which afterwards became a cell to Tewksbury Abbey. Thomas Coventry was created Earl of Coventry and Viscount Deerhurst by King William III., April 26, 1697, at which time he was in possession of the lands of the ancient priory. Guildable Bridge and Olney Island are in this parish, as also the hamlets of Walton, Apperley, and Whitefield; the two latter are in Westminster hundred. A chalybeate spring was discovered at Walton about 1786.

ELMSTONE HARDWICKE, on the Swilly, (which falls into the Severn,) 4 miles S. from Tewksbury, contains 26 houses, and 178 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Uckington is a hamlet of this parish.

LEIGH, 4 miles N.W. from Cheltenham, contains 77 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Evington is a hamlet of this parish. In 1827 a tessellated pavement, about 60 feet in length by about 8 feet in width, was discovered in a field belonging to Mrs. Hill, near the road from Gloucester to Tewksbury.

PRESTBURY, 2 miles E. from Cheltenham, contains 152 houses, and 906 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.* On Prestbury Hill is a large encampment, whence the view is very fine; Cleeve Cloud Hills on the S., and the distant Malvern Hills on the N.E.; while the village beneath appears environed by orchards. Overton is a hamlet of this parish.

STAVERTON, or Starton, 4½ miles N.E. from Gloucester, contains 48 houses, and 262 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, with Bodington chapelry annexed.

TIRLEY, or Turley, 3 miles S. from Tewksbury, situate on the W. bank of the Severn, and Haw on the E. side of the river, contain 75 houses, and 443 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In July 1824, at the erection of the Haw bridge, an ancient metal vase was found in the bed of the rivern Severn, ornamented with compartments, representing the story of Scilla and the King of Megara, and is in the possession of J. Hawkins, Esq. of the Haw.

WOOLSTONE, in a detached portion of this hundred, near Tewksbury, contains 20 houses, and 89 inhabitants. The church, built in 1499, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* It commands a fine prospect over the river Severn and the vale.

Upper Division.

COLN ST. DENIS, or Coln Deans, formerly belonged to the Abbey of St. Denis, near Paris. It is situated on the river Colne, 3 miles S.W. from Northleach, and contains 30 houses, and 179 inhabitants; a rectory, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* Calcot is a tithing of this parish.

LITTLE COMPTON, 6 miles S.E. from Campden, on the borders of Oxfordshire, contains 59 houses, and 314 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of Christ Church College Oxford. Sir William Juxon of Little Compton was created a baronet, 22nd Dec. 1650; he was nephew and heir of Archbishop Juxon, and was sheriff of the county in 1676.

PRESTON-UPON-STOUR, 7 miles N.E. from Campden and 2 miles from Stratford-upon-Avon, contains 70 houses, and 334 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The Stour falls into the Avon 2 miles below Preston. Alscot, or Alvescot, is a hamlet to this parish. Alscot Park, the seat of J. R. West, Esq. is bounded by the road to Shipston. James West, Esq. who died in 1773, was distinguished as a book collector; his MSS. were purchased by the Marquess of Lansdowne, and are now in the British Museum. Some alterations to the house were made by Hopper.

WELFORD is situated on the Avon, 3 miles S.W. from Stratford, and contains 140 houses, and 614 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value, 29*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* The hamlets of Littleton, Dorsington, Brickmarsh, and Bedlam, belonging to this parish, lie in Warwickshire.

13. Dudstone and Kings Barton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Botloe and Deerhurst hundreds, on the east by Cheltenham and Rapsgate hundreds, on the south by Bisley, and on the west by Whitstone hundred, and the Duchy of Lancaster.

Lower Division.

HARTBURY, 4 miles N.W. from Gloucester, contains 123 houses, and 111 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. Tiberton river runs through it into the Leden, and the Hereford and Gloucester canal. Morewent End, More End, Corse End, Blackwelis End, Lampers End, and Butlers End are hamlets of the parish.

LASSINGTON, 3 miles N.W. from Gloucester, on the Leden, contains 12 houses, and 52 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.* The Hereford and Gloucester caual passes through it.

MAISMORE, or Mayse More, on the Leden, 3 miles N. from Gloucester, contains 58 houses, and 404 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Gloucester. Overton is a hamlet of this parish.

PRESTON, 12 miles N.W. from Gloucester, contains 13 houses, and 87 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester.

Middle Division.

BROOKTHROP, or Brookrupp, 4 miles S. from Gloucester, contains 26 houses, and 160 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester.

ELMORE, 4 miles S.W. from Gloucester, on the banks of the Severn, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 70 houses, and 355 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. Sir Christopher Guise, of Elmore Court, was created a baronet 10th July, 1661.

GLOUCESTER, 106 miles W. from London, contains 1732 houses, and 9744 inhabitants. The city is situated on a gentle eminence upon the east side of the river Severn, and, from the intersection of the four principal streets, the buildings occupy an easy descent each way, a circumstance which greatly contributes to its health and cleanliness. Six parish churches, besides the cathedral, are within the city; St. Aldates, St. John the Baptist, St. Mary de Crypt, St. Mary de Grace, St. Nicholas, and the Holy Trinity. Parts of four other parishes are without the boundaries of the city; St. Katherine, St. Mary de Lode, St. Michael, and St. Owen. Gloucester was anciently regarded as a distinct hundred, and it is still privileged as a county within itself. His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, K.G. is high steward of the city, and Earl Somers the recorder; the other corporate officers are a mayor, 12 aldermen, a town clerk, 2 sheriffs, 26 common councilmen, a sword-bearer, and 4 serjeants-at-mace. The public business of the city is transacted in the Tholsey, and the county business in the Booth-hall, where also the assizes are held. The arms of Gloucester are, Or, three chevrons gules, between ten torteaux; but in the reign of Henry VIII. another coat was granted, viz. Vert, on a pale gules, between two horse-shoes, each between three nails argent, a sword bearing on its point a cap of maintenance, proper. On a chief per pale, or and purpure, a boar's head couped, argent, between two demi roses and sunbeams, the dexter Lancaster and the sinister York, the sunbeams or. The principal tradesmen are associated into twelve companies; the trade results chiefly from the navigation of the Severn, from the hemp and flax dressing business, and from the pin manufacture. The markets, on Wednesday and Saturday, are plentifully supplied; and fairs are held 5th of April for cheese, 5th July, 28th September, and 28th November, for cheese, horses, cattle, and pigs.

The county gaol, built in 1791 on the site of the ancient castle, from a plan suggested by Howard, is a remarkable edifice; the boundary wall incloses nearly three acres of ground, and the prisons consist of the gaol, the bridewell, and the penitentiary. In front is the turnkeys' lodge, and on the flat roof above is the place of execution.

Gloucester returns two members to parliament, a privilege granted 23 Edward I., and vested in the freemen, about 2200. The present members are E. Webb, Esq. and Bransby Cooper, Esq. The Bishop's See, one of the six erected by King Henry VIII. in 1541, was formerly part of the diocese of Worcester. The diocese comprehends all Gloucestershire, two chapelries excepted, Bristol deanery, and the parish of Kingswood in Wiltshire. The see is valued in the King's books at 315*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* The cathedral was the church belonging to the abbey, the revenues of which on the Dissolution were appropriated to the maintenance of the bishop. To the cathedral also belong a dean, an archdeacon, a chancellor, 6 prebendaries, and other inferior officers. Osrick, afterwards King of Northumberland, founded a monastery at Gloucester about 681, near the place where the cathedral now stands. Being destroyed by the Danes, it was rebuilt in 1058, and converted into a monastery of Benedictines. In 1061 Aldred Bishop of Worcester completed the edifice. In 1088 it was destroyed by fire, when it was refounded by Robert Bishop of Hereford: few churches in England exhibit a more complete school of ecclesiastical architecture in its gradations, from the time of the Conqueror, than this cathedral. The Anglo-Norman style distinguishes the nave, which is the chief part of the original structure. The north aisle is of contemporary architecture, observable in the round arches of the windows. Two centuries later, the opposite aisle was finished by Abbot Thokey in another manner: the heads of the windows are of the obtuse lancet form; the western front and the additional arcade present a much later style; the nave having been considerably lengthened by Abbot Horton at the close of the 14th century. It is scarcely possible, says an elegant writer*, to enter the choir of Gloucester, which includes every perfection to which architecture had attained during the 15th century, without feeling the influence of veneration. In the nave

> "—— the arched and ponderous roof
> By its own weight made stedfast and immovable, > Looking tranquillity,"

immediately engages the attention, and by its simplicity renders the highly wrought ornaments of the choir more conspicuous and admirable. At the termination of the nave, under the tower, is the approach to the choir, on the north and south sides of which are the arches of support to the vaulting of the transepts. Both of these are intersected at the springing by a flying arch with open spandrils, each spanning the space of the tower; the corbels are figures of angels bearing shields, with the arms of the abbey, of King Edward II., and the munificent Abbot Sebroke. Upon the exact point of these intersecting arches is a pillar, forming an impost of the great vaulted roof, which is there divided into sharp lancet arcades, and has an air of incredible lightness. From this part there are five more arcades, divided by clusters of semi-columns, which reach from the base to the roof, the ribs of which, at the intersections, are studded with orbs and rosettes, so various as not to be repeated in a single instance. Over the high altar are angels in full choir, with every instrument of music practised in the 15th century. There are thirty-one stalls of rich tabernacle work, carved in oak, on either side. This choir was built in the grand æra of stained glass, when it was more frequent and excellent than at any other period. At present the naked transparent window destroys the intended harmony, and the primary idea is sadly impoverished. The great east window occupies the whole space of the end of the choir, and is said to be of the largest dimensions of any in England, containing 2798 square feet of glass; put up in the time of Edward III., when the price of stained glass was one shilling a square foot, so that it originally cost 139*l.* 18*s.* The subjects are now so decayed and mutilated that nothing like a regular Scriptural history can be discovered. The Lady Chapel was originally added to the choir in 1228, but was totally rebuilt between the years 1457 and 1498 by Abbots Stanley and Ferleigh; the interior is peculiarly elegant.

The pavement before the high altar is entirely composed of painted tiles, most of which repeat the armorial devices of the Plantagenets, the Clares, and De Spencers, Earls of Gloucester, and of Abbot Sebroke. Near the altar is the monument of Edward II., still in the highest preservation, with the figure of the monarch finely carved. The rich workmanship of the cloisters is well worthy attention; one side of the square, extending 148 feet, with a window of stained glass at the termination, attracts the eye immediately upon entering the cathedral, as the very striking perspective is admitted through an iron grate, being a happy illustration of the picturesque principle. These cloisters, begun by Abbot Horton in 1351, and left incomplete for several years, were finished by Abbot Frocester about 1390, when all the windows were filled with stained glass, which being placed low, was the more easily taken away or destroyed. The river Severn is navigable to the wharf, near the bridge, for trows, &c. but vessels of large burden can only get up at spring tides, the narrow channel of the river near the city being obstructed by rocks and sand-banks. To remedy this inconvenience the Gloucester canal has been formed, which now unites this city to the port of Bristol.

HARESCOMB, 4 miles S. from Gloucester, contains 18 houses, and 104 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 8*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester.

HEMPSTEAD, 1 mile S.W. from Gloucester, contains 108 houses, and 598 inhabitants, with the South Hamlets, to whichit is annexed. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* The church stands upon a hill, whence is a fine prospect of the vale of the Severn. Rea is a hamlet of this parish. The South Hamlets lie on the south side of the city of Gloucester, and consist of Lanthony, Sudmead, Tuffly, and Woolstrop.

The Priory of Lanthony was first founded in Monmouthshire, and removed to its present site in the reign of Henry I. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist, for Canons Regular of the Order of St. Augustine, and at the Dissolution was valued at 748*l.* Newark, the lodgings of the prior, commands a fine view of the city of Gloucester, and the scenery on the banks of the river.

LITTLEWORTH is extra-parochial, and contains 42 houses, and 237 inhabitants. It adjoins the south gate of Gloucester.

MATSON, or Matesden, 2 miles from Gloucester, contains 7 houses, and 35 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. Matson House, now the property of Lord Sidney, is the residence of Mrs. Niblett. This house was the head-quarters of King Charles I. during the siege of Gloucester in 1642. It was long the seat of the Selwyn family.

PITCHCOMBE, 5 miles S. from Gloucester, contains 29 houses, and 187 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

Prinknash Park, the seat of Thomas Jones Howell, Esq., an ancient manor house of the abbots of Gloucester, is extra-parochial; the chapel in the house was re-consecrated in 1629, at which time it was in the possession of Sir John Bridgman, Chief Justice of Chester. Rooksmore brook rises in Prinknash Hill. Walpole describes the house as small and modernized, but not extravagantly. On the ceiling of the hall is the Jovial device of Edward IV. The chapel is low and small, but ancient, with angels in painted glass. Henry VIII. and his Queen Jane Seymour visited here; their arms, as also those of Queen Katherine of Aragon, of Bray and Bridges, are in the windows of the dining-room; under a window is a sculptured head temp. Hen. VIII. in bas relief.

UPTON ST. LEONARDS, 3 miles S.E. from Gloucester, contains 171 houses, and 895 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. Sudbrook runs through the parish to Lanthony mill.

WHADDON, 3 miles S. from Gloucester, contains 21 houses, and 139 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

Upper Division.

BADGEWORTH, 4 miles E. from Gloucester, contains 152 houses, and 715 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 2*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* The hamlets of Little Shurdington, Bentham, Little Witcomb, and part of Great Shurdington, are in this parish.

BARNWOOD, 1 mile S.E. from Gloucester, contains 81 houses, and 392 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael and All Saints, and was built by Abbot Parker. Barnwood Court is the seat of Mrs. Morris.

BROCKWORTH, 3 miles S.E. from Gloucester, contains 80 houses, and 386 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.*

Cowpers Hill is a hamlet, where resided John Thayer, Esq., an antiquary, in the reign of Charles I. He was in possession of the library of the Priory of Lanthony, (his grandfather having married the sister of Hart the last Prior), and at his death left 800 manuscripts, purchased by King Charles II. for the royal library at St. James's Palace. Elbridge is another hamlet of this parish.

CHURCHDOWN, 3 miles E. from Gloucester, contains 178 houses, and 954 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Hucklecot. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church stands on a steep high hill. The hamlets of Noke, Pirton, Paston, and Brickinton are also in this parish.

DOWN-HATHERLY, 4 miles N.E. from Gloucester, contains 27 houses, and 170 inhabitants; it is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

UP-HATHERLY, 3 miles S.E. from the above, contains 4 houses, and 32 inhabitants. It is about 2 miles S.W. from Cheltenham.

NORTON, 4 miles N.E. from Gloucester, contains 68 houses, and 349 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. Bishops Norton and Priors Norton are considerable manors, which formerly belonged to the Archbishop of York and to the Prior of St. Oswalds in Gloucester, whence the names.

SANDHURST, 3 miles N. from Gloucester, contains 65 houses, and 473 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol.

GREAT SHURDINGTON, 6 miles E. from Gloucester, contains 22 houses, and 102 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

WHITCOMBE MAGNA, 5 miles S.E. from Gloucester, in the bottom, under Birdlip Hill, contains 22 houses, and 155 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Whitcombe Park is the seat of Sir William Hicks, Bart.; and Bowden Hall, about a mile distant, is the seat of J. H. Byles, Esq.

14. Crumbalds Ash Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Berkeley hundred; on the east by Longtrees hundred and Wiltshire; on the south by parts of Thornbury and Langley hundreds, and by Pucklechurch hundred; and on the west by Henbury and Thornbury hundreds.

Lower Division.

ACTON TURVILLE, 5 miles E. from Sodbury, on the borders of Wiltshire, contains 45 houses, and 215 inhabitants. It is a curacy. In the centre of the town is a stone building, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, that was formerly considered a sanctuary.

DIRHAM, or Dyrham, 3 miles S. from Sodbury, and 7 miles N. from P. T. Bath, contains 91 houses, and 526 inhabitants, together with Hinton, a hamlet to this parish.

Dyrham Park, the seat of W. Blathwayte, Esq., is a spacious edifice, erected in 1698. The park contains about 500 acres, pleasingly diversified, and the gardens, of great extent, present various views of the city of Bristol and the Forest of Kingswood.

DODINGTON, 2 miles S. from Sodbury, contains 10 houses, and 106 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Dodington Park is the seat of Sir Christopher Bethell Codrington, Bart. Christopher Codrington, uncle of the first baronet, founded the library of All Souls College Oxford, in the centre of which his statue, by Cheere, was erected in 1730. Sir William Codrington of this place was created a baronet, 21st April, 1721.

WEST LITTLETON, 4 miles S. from Sodbury, and 1½ N. from Marshfield, contains 20 houses, and 109 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

CHIPPING SODBURY, 110 miles from London, contains 201 houses, and 1059 inhabitants. It is governed by a bailiff, who is chosen by the lord of the manor. The market, on Thursday, is the largest in the kingdom for cheese, except Atherstone-on-Stour. It is a curacy.

LITTLE SODBURY, 1 mile N.W. from the above, contains 21 houses, and 107 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Adeline, is a rectory, value 7*l.* Upon the top of Sodbury hill is an immense camp consisting of about 12 acres, and about half a mile north is a lesser square camp of about 8 acres; from both are very fine prospects over the vale.

OLD SODBURY, 1 mile E. from Chipping Sodbury, contains 145 houses, and 803 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. Lygrove, an ancient seat of the Stephens family, is in this parish.

TORMARTON, 3 miles S. from the above, contains 62 houses, and 320 inhabitants. The church, founded by Sir John De La Rivere, is a rectory, value 27*l.* In the chancel is the monument of the founder, with the model of the church in his hands. Tormery Well near this place is a petrifying spring. Sir Francis Top of Tormarton was created a baronet, 25th July, 1668; but the title is now extinct.

WAPLEY, 2 miles S. from Chipping Sodbury, contains 55 houses, and 307 inhabitants, with Codrington, a considerable hamlet of this parish. The church is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.*

The river Frome rises in Codrington hill and flows hence to Bristol.

Upper Division.

ALDERLEY, 2 miles S. from Wotton-under-Edge, contains 33 houses, and 235 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* The situation is hilly, and was anciently the bounds of the Forest of Kingswood. Sir Matthew Hale, the learned Chief Justice of the King's Bench, was born here, of a family long seated in this county: he died 25th December, 1675, æt. 67, and was buried in the churchyard, where is a marble monument to his memory.

BADMINTON, 4 miles E. from Sodbury, on the borders of Wiltshire, contains 96 houses, and 464 inhabitants. The church was rebuilt at the expense of the Duke of Beaufort in 1785, by Evans. It stands within the park; and the monuments of the Ducal family have all been carefully preserved; the pavement of the chancel represents the arms of Somerset in mosaic.

Badminton Park, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort, K.G. Lord Lieutenant of the county, one of the noblest in England, was founded by the house of Somerset after the destruction of Ragland Castle in the civil war. Badminton Castle had been a seat of the Botelers, who possessed the estate at a very early period of history. The present mansion was built by the first Duke of Beaufort, in the Palladian style; the principal front is of great length, having in its centre division a composite colonnade, surmounted by an attic, on which is sculptured the family arms; the wings extend considerably on each side, and are terminated by Tuscan arches leading to the offices and stables; over each extremity of the centre is a cupola. Internally, this seat is splendid in its decorations. In the dining-room is a profusion of carving in wood, by Gibbons; and in the picture-gallery is a series of family portraits. Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark visited the Duke of Beaufort here, 29th August, 1702. The park, bounded by Wiltshire on the east, is very extensive, being above nine miles in circumference; it contains some beautiful drives and very fine woods, and the scenery, although neither grand nor romantic, is of the most pleasing character.

BOXWELL, 5 miles W. from Tetbury, contains 62 houses, and 297 inhabitants, with Leighterton, a hamlet to this parish. It is a rectory, value 23*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*

CHARFIELD, 4 miles S.W. from Wotton-under-Edge, contains 58 houses, and 344 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 1*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* It is separated from Kingswood on the N.W. in a detached part of Wiltshire by the Little Avon, which flows hence to Berkeley.

DIDMARTON, 5 miles S.W. from Tetbury, on the borders of Wiltshire, contains 23 houses, and 101 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 8*l.*

HAWKESBURY, 4 miles W. from the above, contains 78 houses, and 389 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 9*s* 8*d.* The church is large, and was said to be the mother of seven daughters, having so many chapels within its jurisdiction, viz. Hillesley, Fresham, Kilcot, Settlewood, Upton, Wast, and Little Badminton. Sir Charles Jenkinson, Bart., was elevated to the peerage, August 21st, 1786, by the title of Lord Hawkesbury, and advanced to be Earl of Liverpool, May 28th, 1796.

HORTON, 1 mile S. from the above, contains 88 houses, and 385 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 16*l.* On the hill is a camp, near that of Sodbury.

OLDBURY-ON-THE-HILL, 5 miles S.W. from Tetbury, 1 mile N. from Didmarton, contains 75 houses, and 371 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.*

TORTWORTH, 3 miles W. from Wotton-under-Edge, contains 49 houses, and 277 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* The church is large; and the south isle, belonging to the Lord of the manor, contains handsome monuments of Sir Thomas Throckmorton, ob. 1568, and of his son, Sir Thomas, who died 1607. Tortworth Court is the seat of Lord Ducie. Sir William Ducie had licence from the Crown to inclose Tortworth and Cromhall Parks in 1661. He was sheriff of the county in 1663. A fine piece of water is within the park, and in the grounds is a venerable chestnut tree 44 feet 4 inches in compass.

WICK-WAR, 4 miles S.W. from Wotton-under-Edge, near the river Avon, contains 156 houses, and 919 inhabitants. It derived its name from its early possessors, the Lords De La War: has a market on Monday, and fairs on April 4, and July 2. The government of the town is vested in a mayor and an indefinite number of aldermen, the mayor being reputed an alderman ever after. It has a free school, endowed by Alexander Hosea in 1684. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.* Bagstone is a hamlet of this parish. Besides the Avon, the Winphin, a branch of that river, has a stone bridge over it of three arches. Pool Hall, said to have been erected in 1496, is near the town; the adjoining wastes abound with coal.

15. Henbury Hundred

Is bounded on the west by the Severn; on the north by Langley and Swinehead hundred; on the east by Berkeley hundred; and on the south by Somersetshire and Barton Regis hundred. It is divided into upper and lower districts.

COMPTON GREENFIELD, 5 miles N.W. from Bristol, contains 7 houses, and 42 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

HENBURY, 4 miles N. from Bristol, contains 89 houses, and 431 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 30*l.* Besides the hamlets of King's Weston and Lawrence Weston, noticed under Berkeley hundred, the following are in this parish: Redwick, Northwick, Aust, Stowick, and Charleton, which united contain 2283 inhabitants.

Blaise Castle, the seat of John Scandrett Harford, Esq., is situated on St. Blaise Hill, one of the most remarkable elevations in the county for the extent and beauty of the prospect: the hill is round, and tradition affirms it to be the site of a Roman fortification; and the discovery of some Roman coins and other antiquities seems to favour the assertion. The approach to the house, winding amidst the recesses of a glen diversified with wood and rocky projections, is one of the most remarkable features of the pleasure grounds. At Aust, which is situated on a high craggy cliff, is the lowest passage over the Severn in this county to Beachley in the parish of Tiddenham. The time of high water at Aust Passage is nearly the same as at Bristol Quay.

STOKE GIFFORD, 4 miles N. from Bristol, contains 65 houses, and 376 inhabitants. It is a vicarage: there are three hamlets in the parish, Great Stoke, Little Stoke, and Harris Stoke. Stoke Gifford Park, the seat of the Dowager Duchess of Beaufort, is situated on a natural terrace, in an extensive and diversified park, commanding a delightful prospect over the vale of Bristol. It was originally built in the reign of Elizabeth, but was considerably altered at the end of the last century.

WESTBURY-UPON-TRYM, 2 miles N.W. from Bristol, contains 185 houses, and 1203 inhabitants, and including the hamlets of Stoke Bishop and Shirehampton, contains 3721 inhabitants. Pen Park, in which is Pen Park Hole, proved to be nothing more than a deserted lead mine, is in Stoke Bishop; Kings Road and Hung Road, two stations for shipping, are within the precincts of Shire Hampton.

YATE, 3 miles S. from Wick-War, contains 154 houses, and 827 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*

16. Kiftsgate Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by Worcestershire, Warwickshire and Oxfordshire; on the south by Bradley and Slaughter hundreds; and on the west by Cleeve and Tibaldstone hundreds.

Lower Division.

ASTON SOMERVILLE, 6 miles W. from Campden, and 3½ miles S. from Evesham, in Worcestershire, contains 17 houses, and 110 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* The Somerville family, to whom the manor belonged from very early times, long resided in a large moated house, on the south side of the church, now demolished; here is still their burial place. John Lord Somerville, premier baron of Scotland, the President of the Board of Agriculture and founder of the Smithfield Club, who died at Vevay, in Switzerland, October 5, 1819, was interred here.

BUCKLAND, 2½ miles S.E. from the above, contains 63 houses, and 382 inhabitants, with the hamlet of Laverton, to which it is united. It is a rectory, value 29*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

CHARLTON ABBOTTS, 2½ miles S. from Winchcombe, to the abbots of which it formerly belonged: the parish contains 19 houses, and 87 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Tinning Well is the head of a rivulet.

CHILDS WICKHAM, 5 miles from Campden, contains 84 houses, and 428 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Murcot is a hamlet of this parish.

DIDBROOK, 3 miles N.W. from Winchcombe, contains 47 houses, and 291 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* It was rebuilt by William Whitchurch, Abbot of Hailes, in 1470; he was buried on the north side. Coscomb is a tithing of this parish, where was the lodging of the Abbot of Hailes, with a chapel annexed; and Wormington Grange, also belonging to the same abbey, which stood about a mile south from hence.

DUMBLETON, 4 miles N. from Winchcombe, contains 63 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* The Isbourne rises above Winchcombe, and flows hence into the Avon, near Evesham. Sir Charles Cocks, of Dumbleton, was created a baronet, Sept. 19, 1772, and Lord Somers, May 17, 1784. His son, John Somers Cocks, was created Earl Somers and Viscount Eastnor, July 9, 1821. His lordship is Recorder of the city of Gloucester, &c.

LOWER GUYTING, or Guiting Power, 6 miles W. from Stow-on-the-Wold, contains 139 houses, and 629 inhabitants, including Framcote, or Farmcot chapelry. It is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* A branch of the Windrush runs through the town. Guyting Park, the seat of the Rev. R. Wyniatt, lies on the east bank of the rivulet.

TEMPLE GUYTING, or Upper Guiting, 2 miles N. from the above, contains 91 houses, and 510 inhabitants. The church is a perpetual curacy, in the presentation of Christ Church College Oxford; but the manor and temporal revenues belong to Corpus Christi College. The hamlets of Ford, Hinton, and Barton, are in this parish. Temple Guyting Park is the seat of G. Talbot, Esq. In the church is a monument, by Scheemaker, to the memory of the Hon. and Rev. George Talbot, D.D., son of the Lord Chancellor, who died Nov. 19, 1785, æt. 70; he was curate of this parish, and expended large sums in repairs of the church.

HAILES, 2 miles N.E. from Winchcombe, contains 23 houses, and 136 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Richard Earl of Cornwall, brother of King Henry III., founded in 1246 a monastery of the Cistercian Order, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and to All Saints; the Earl and his Countess and Edmond Earl of Cornwall were buried in the church: a large house, which afterwards belonged to Lord Tracy of Toddington, was the residence of the Abbot. In the chambers are many Scriptural figures and inscriptions*. At the Dissolution, the Abbey was valued at 357*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* It is now almost wholly destroyed. The blood of Christ (some of which was given to the Abbey by Edmond, son of the founder) here performed the same miracle, as is now practised with that of St. Januarius at Naples. The arms of the Abbey were, Argent, a lion rampant, surmounted by a crosier in bend, gules, within a border sable, bezantée.

HAWLING, 4 miles S.E. from Winchcombe, contains 41 houses, and 195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* Rowell, or Rocl, is a hamlet of this parish. In the churchyard is a monument to George Townshend, Esq., of Rowell, ob. 1693, who gave large charities to several parishes in this part of the county.

PINNOCK, 3 miles N. from Winchcombe, contains 7 houses, and 33 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

SNOWSHILL, 7 miles W. from Moreton, contains 62 houses, and 301 inhabitants. It is a rectory, annexed to Stanton. Brookhampton is a hamlet of this parish.

STANDLEY PONTLARGE, 1½ mile N.W. from Winchcombe, contains 11 houses, and 48 inhabitants. It was a chapelry belonging to Evesham Abbey. Its church was rebuilt, in 1635, by Sir John Tracy.

STANTON, 4½ miles N.E. from Winchcombe, contains 58 houses, and 269 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* On Shunborough Hill, which is very high, is a large camp with double intrenchments. A branch of the Isbourne runs through the town.

SUDELEY MANOR, one mile S.E. from Winchcombe, contains 12 houses, and 90 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* Sudeley Castle was built by Ralph Lord Botelcr, Lord Chamberlain of the Household to Henry VI. It was raised in a style of uncommon magnificence, from the spoils obtained in the wars of France, and the windows were glazed with beryl, which is mentioned as a circumstance of extraordinary splendour. The Castle was afterwards granted to Thomas Lord Seymour, Lord High Admiral of England, who married Queen Katherine Parr, widow of Henry VIII. She was buried in the chapel, where her body was some years since discovered in perfect preservation. Queen Mary granted this castle to Sir John Bridges of Coberly, created Lord Chandos of Sudeley, 1554. Queen Elizabeth visited this seat in 1592. Grey, fifth Lord Chandos, lived here in great splendour, and contracted so great an interest in this county, that when he came to court he was commonly called the King of Cotswold: he died in 1621. In 1643 King Charles I. was at Sudeley Castle, which had suffered by a siege the year before. It came by marriage to George Pitt, Esq., of Strathfield Say, Hants, and is now the property of Lord Rivers. The remains of the castle, situated in a deep valley between the village and Winchcombe, consist of a spacious court, surrounded with buildings; the Gate-house is standing, and the walls of the great hall, now called the Castle Barn; the Keep also is unroofed. The chapel is particularly curious in its architecture, and deserves notice.

TODDINGTON, 3 miles N. from Winchcombe, contains 51 houses, and 355 inhabitants. The church, rebuilt by Lord Tracy about 1700, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Toddington Park is the seat of Charles Hanbury Tracy, Esq., who has lately erected a spacious mansion in the ancient style of architecture.

* Atkyns.

TWINING, situated in a detached part of this hundred, entirely surrounded by Worcestershire, 3 miles N. from Tewksbury, contains 181 houses, and 849 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, value 7l.9s.7d., in the presentation of Christ Church College Oxford. Mythe Hook, Woods End, Church End, Shutanger, Pickrup, Phelps, Hill End and Green End, are all hamlets of this parish. The Mythe is the seat of William Dillon, Esq., and Twining House, of the Rev. W. G. Maxwell. The Abbot's Court was an ancient seat of the Hancock family, and Gublen Hill, a moated house, formerly belonged to the Reads. The parish lies on a point of land between the Severn and the Avon; over the last was a ferry called Twining fleet, now a bridge in the road to Worcester on the west of the village.

WINCHCOMBE is beautifully situated amongst the Cotswold Hills, 99½ miles from London, at the source of a brook that falls into the Avon, and contains 475 houses, and 2240 inhabitants, which number includes ten hamlets belonging to the parish. It has a market on Saturdays, and fairs on April 25, and July 17. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a noble structure. It is a curacy, value 3l. 4s. The hamlets are Sudeley Tenements, Coats, Postlip, Cockbury, Langley, Gruton, Framton, Naunton, Greet, and Corndean. Here was a magnificent abbey of Benedictine Monks, originally founded by Kenulph, King of Mercia, in 787, and re-edified by Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, in 985, when it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Kenelme. At the Dissolution the revenues were valued at 759l. 11s. 9d. per annum. It was a mitred abbey, and bore for arms—Barry, argent and azure, in chief two pallets, between as many gyrons of the last, over all an escutcheon argent, charged with a cross crosslet, fitché, gules. The whole is entirely destroyed.

WORMINGTON, 4½ miles N. from Winchcombe, contains 17 houses, and 83 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 7l. 15s.

Upper Division.

ASTON-SUB-EDGE, 1½ mile N. from Campden, contains 24 houses, and 116 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10l. 2s. 2d. Endymion Porter was born here in 1544. He had a grant of the manor from King James, and at his death, in 1652, possessed it.

BATSFORD, 2 miles N.W. from Moreton, contains 18 houses, and 108 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13l. 3s. 8d. The ancient name was Bechesore, derived from a pointed hill, the extremity of the Cotswold range, distinguished by some beech trees, Ore signifying a point of land. Batsford Park is the seat of Lord Redesdale. The mansion is situated on a declivity of the hill, surrounded by pleasure grounds, the natural beauties of which have been considerably improved by the taste displayed in forming the plantations.

CAMPDEN, or Chipping Campden, situated in a valley surrounded by richly wooded hills, 90½ miles from London, about 2 miles N.W. from the road to Worcester, contains 257 houses, and 1249 inhabitants. It is an ancient town, and is celebrated as the traditional place of Congress of all the Kings of the Saxon Heptarchy in 689, where they deliberated upon the best mode of carrying on the war against the Britons. The charter was renewed in the third year of the reign of James I., by which it is governed by fourteen burgesses and a steward, two of which burgesses are annually chosen bailiffs. It has a weekly market on Wednesday, and four fairs annually, on St. Andrew's Day, Ash Wednesday, St. George's Day, and on St. James's Day. The manor was purchased by Sir Baptist Hicks, a wealthy tradesman of London, who was created a baronet, July 1st, 1620, and Viscount Campden in 1628. He built a noble house near the church, with a lantern on the top, illuminated on dark nights for the benefit of travellers, which was burnt down during the civil war. The church, supposed to have been erected about the beginning of the reign of Richard II., is a magnificent structure; the tower, enriched with 12 pinnacles, rises 105 feet: the whole length from W. to E. is 130 feet. In the middle aisle is a slab, inlaid with brass, representing the effigy of William Grevil, formerly of the city of London, woolstapler, who died in 1401; tradition relates that he built the tower and a considerable part of the church at his own expense. A curious old house, in the town, is said to have belonged to the family. The chancel was repaired at the expense of the first Lord Campden. On the N. side is a curious monument to the memory of Thomas Smith, Esq., lord of the manor, who died in 1593. In the middle of a chapel on the S. side, is a splendid monument with the effigies of Viscount Campden and his lady; he died in 1629. Upon the monument is an inscription, Ad Terram Campdenicam, reciting the benefit he conferred upon this town. In the same chapel is a monument with the effigies of the second Lord Campden and his lady; he died in 1642. The church is a vicarage, value 20l. 6s. 8d. The hamlets of Berrington, Wessington and Combe, and Broad Campden, are in this parish. A bridge in Berrington, was called Battle Bridge, in consequence of a battle fought here between the Mercians and West Saxons, when the camp of the Mercians was at Willersey, and the camp of the Saxons on Meen Hill, in the parish of Quinton; Burington, implying the burying-place of the slain.

CONDECOTE, 3 miles N.W. from Stow, is situated partly in Slaughter hundred, and contains 28 houses, and 165 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7l. 0s. 10d.

COW HONEYBORNE, 3½ miles N.W. from Campden, on the borders of Worcestershire, contains 66 houses, and 333 inhabitants. The church stands in Church Honeyborne in Worcestershire. An ancient chapel here has been converted into dwellings.

DORSINGTON, 6 miles N. from Campden, contains 24 houses, and 121 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12l. 19s. 2d.

EBRINGTON, or Ebberton, 2 miles E. from Campden, contains 103 houses, and 535 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Charingworth and Hitcoat Boyce. It is a vicarage, value 9l. Sir John Fortescue, Lord Chancellor in the reign of Henry VI., purchased the manor. His descendant, Hugh Lord Fortescue, was created Earl Fortescue and Viscount Ebrington, August 18, 1789. Ebrington Hall is one of the seats of his Lordship.

LONGBOROUGH, on the river Evenlode, 2½ miles N. from Stow, contains 125 houses, and 526 inhabitants, with Bankfee or Southfield, an adjoining hamlet. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 5l. 15s. In the church is a handsome monument to Sir William Leigh, who died in 1631; and in the windows, the armorial bearings of Sir Charles Cockerell, Bart. of Sezincote, in painted glass, by Miller of London.

MARSTON SICCA, or Long Marston, 5 miles N. from Campden, contains 52 houses, and 272 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17l. 10s.

MICKLETON, 2 miles N. from Campden, contains 131 houses, and 574 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9l. 14s. 3d. Hitcoat Batrim, and Upper and Lower Clapton, are hamlets of this parish. It is a curacy, value 10*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the presentation of the Bishop of Bristol. Morecot is a hamlet of this parish. John Guillim, author of the "Display of Heraldry," and Rouge Croix, Pursuivant of Arms, was born at Westbury, but resided chiefly at Minsterworth: he died in 1621.

TIBBERTON, 4 miles N.W. from Gloucester, contains 46 houses, and 282 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 16*s.* Tibberton brook falls into the Leden about a mile west from the village.

18. Langley and Swinehead Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by the river Severn and Thornbury hundred; on the east by Pucklechurch hundred; on the south by the river Avon and Somersetshire; and on the west by Henbury, Berkeley, and Barton Regis hundreds.

Lower Division.

ALVESTON, or Alliston, 8½ miles N. from Bristol, is situated partly in the upper division of this hundred, and contains 115 houses, and 657 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The hamlets of Urcot and Grovening are within the parish; near the last is a large round camp, on the edge of a hill called the Old Abbey, whence is a fine prospect of the Severn and of the town of Thornbury, distant about 2½ miles on the north. At Alveston is the seat of W. N. Tonge, Esq.

LITTLETON-UPON-SEVERN, 1½ mile W. from Thornbury, contains 23 houses, and 133 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* Aust Cliff is immediately west of the village.

OLVESTON, 9½ miles N. from Bristol, and 3 miles E. from Aust Passage Inn, contains 270 houses, and 1351 inhabitants, including Upper Tockington. It is a vicarage, value 24*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. There are several other hamlets in this parish, viz. Hazel, Ingst, Holm, Walning, Akeley, Pelvin, and Coat; the last is in Thornbury hundred.

ROCKHAMPTON, 2 miles N. from Thornbury, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 28 houses, and 159 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 15*l.* Newton and Sheperdine are hamlets of this parish; the last situated on the Severn.

Upper Division.

BITTON, 6 miles E. from Bristol, on the Boyd, which falls into the Avon at this place, contains 342 houses, and 1788 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, and belongs to the Prebendary of Bitton in Salisbury Cathedral. To this parish belong two large chapelries, viz. Hanham, containing 228 houses, and 1086 inhabitants; and Oldland, containing 846 houses, and 4297 inhabitants. The entire parish of Bitton contains 7171 inhabitants. Over the Boyd is a large stone bridge in the road from Bath to Bristol. A small brook at the eastern extremity of this parish separates it from Somersetshire at Swineford, which also gives name to the hundred *. Upton and Beach are also hamlets of this parish; within its boundaries is a great part of the N.W. side of Lansdown Hill.

DOYNTON contains 72 houses, and 415 inhabitants.

FRAMPTON COTTERELL, on the river Frome, 8 miles N.E. from Bristol, contains 306 houses, and 1610 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 16*s.* Wickwick is a hamlet of the parish.

WINTERBOURNE, 7 miles N.E. from Bristol, contains 321 houses, and 1659 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 7*s.* Hambrook and French Hay are hamlets of this parish. Hambrook Grove is the seat of — Bridges, Esq., and French Hay, of George Worral, Esq.

19. Longtrees Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Whitstone and Bisley hundreds; on the east by Crowthorne hundred; on the south by Wiltshire; and on the west by Grumbalds Ash and Berkeley hundreds.

AVENING, 3 miles N. from Tetbury, contains 222 houses, and 1118 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 24*l.* Nailsworth Chapelry is chiefly in this parish, but extends into Horsley and Minchinhampton. Aston is a hamlet of Avening.

CHEVRINGTON, 3 miles N.E. from Tetbury, contains 47 houses, and 215 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 13*l.* Westrip is a hamlet of this place.

HORSLEY, or Horkesley, 5 miles N.W. from Tetbury, contains 758 houses, and 3565 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the minor branches of the woollen manufactory, by the clothiers of the neighbouring towns of Minchinhampton and Stroud. Chevenage House is the seat of Mrs. Stephens; and at Horsley is the seat of Edward Wilbraham, Esq.: an old Gate-house near the church is said to be part of the residence of the Prior of a monastery dependent on St. Martin of Tours in Normandy. A prison for felons has been erected here.

MINCHINHAMPTON, 100 miles W. from London, contains 1005 houses, and 4907 inhabitants: it is pleasantly situated on a gradual declivity, with a south-eastern aspect, and consists of four principal streets at right angles. The clothing manufacture is of considerable extent, the numerous rivulets in the vicinity of the town being extremely favourable for the purpose. There are three market-houses, two of which were erected in 1700 for a wool-market, intended to be established here by the lord of the manor. Here is a market on Tuesdays, and fairs on Monday after Trinity, and Oct. 18, for horses, cattle, and sheep. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 41*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* It is large, and was founded about the reign of Henry III.; the plan is cruciform, with a tower rising from the intersection of the nave and transepts: the south transept was rebuilt in 1382 by Sir John De La Mere and Maud his wife. The great window is beautifully ramified: numerous monuments and sepulchral inscriptions adorn the interior. On the west side of the town is a large tract of common land, granted to the use of the poor housekeepers of the parish in the reign of Henry VIII. It is remarkable as the site of a very singular encampment, supposed to be Danish. Nailsworth Chapelry is partly in this parish, but chiefly in that of Avening, and contains 176 houses, and 898 inhabitants. Rodborough Chapelry contains 411 houses, and 2038 inhabitants. Hill House is the seat of Sir John Dean Paul, created baronet, July 27th, 1821; the title was originally granted to Sir Onesiphorus Paul in 1762. The Golden Vale, a romantic spot, is within this parish; as also Gatcombe Park, the seat of David Ricardo, Esq., high sheriff of the county. Box, Hewcombe, Iron Mills, Longfords, Burley, Hide, Walls Quar, Brimscombe, Dutton, the Knap, Cowcombe and Forwood, are hamlets, and remarkable places.

RODMARTON, 5 miles N.E. from Tetbury, contains 76 houses, and 357 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* Cuckerton, Hasledon and Torleton are hamlets of this parish.

Rodmarton is bounded on the south by the great Foss-way, which here separates the county from Wiltshire, and is situated on another Roman road leading from Cirencester towards the Old Passage over the Severn. A Roman hypocaust, pavements, and traces of building were discovered here by the late Samuel Lysons, F.S.A., a native of this place.

SHIPTON MOYNE, 3 miles S. from Tetbury, contains 74 houses, and 390 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

TETBURY, situated on an eminence, 99 miles W. from London, on the borders of Wiltshire, contains 527 houses, and 2734 inhabitants. The town has a manufactory of woollen cloth, and consists of four principal streets, with a large market-house in the centre, at which great quantities of yarn are sold. It has a market on Wednesdays, and fairs on Ash Wednesday and July 22. On a common, in the vicinity of the town, are annual horse-races. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was rebuilt in 1781, except the tower, which is ancient. It is a vicarage, value 36*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* The head of the Lower Avon is near this place. Upton, Dufton, Elmstree, Charleton, and the Grange, are hamlets of the parish. At Elmstree is the seat of J. P. Paul, Esq.

WESTON BIRT, on the borders of Wiltshire, 4 miles S.W. from Tetbury, contains 36 houses, and 198 inhabitants, with Lasborough, to which it is united. The church is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* Boulden farm, in this parish, formerly belonging to the Abbot of Kingswood, is remarkable for its large barn. Weston Birt is the seat of George Holford, Esq., M.P.; the house appears to have been built about the reign of James I., but has been repaired with attention to its architectural peculiarities: the gables terminating in carved finials and handsome clustered chimneys, which form distinguishing features in the picturesque buildings of that early date, are here preserved, and give a very perfect character to the edifice.

WOODCHESTER, 2 miles S.W. from Stroud, and 2½ miles N.W. from P. T. Minchinhampton, contains 180 houses, and 929 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* The chancel windows are adorned with painted glass by Miller of London, put up at the expense of Sir Paul Wathen. The village is situated on an eminence, forming part of a range of hills which bound a fertile and delightful valley, and are covered with beech woods. It has obtained celebrity for the Roman antiquities that have been discovered here and in the neighbourhood, particularly the remains of a Roman villa of considerable extent, very ably described by the late Samuel Lysons, Esq., in the "Archæologia," who imagined it to have been the residence of the Roman governor of the province, and perhaps occasionally of the Emperor. It is doubtless the most extensive remain ever discovered in this country.

20. Pucklechurch Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Thornbury and a detached part of Henbury hundred; on the east by Grimbalds Ash, and a detached part of Thornbury hundred; on the south by Somersetshire; and on the west by Langley and Swinehead hundred.

ABSON, or Abston, 6 miles E. from Bristol, contains 146 houses, and 715 inhabitants, with Wick, to which it is united. It formerly belonged to the Abbots of Glastonbury, whence its name. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy. Birdwick, Holy Brook (so named from a spring dedicated to the Holy Virgin), Church Yate, Bridge Yate, and Toghill, are hamlets of the parish. On Toghill a battle was fought, July 5, 1643, between the forces of Lord Hopton and Sir William Waller, in which battle Sir Bevil Grenville was mortally wounded; in memory of whom the Lansdowne monument was dedicated by George Lord Lansdowne in 1720. Four streams, rising in the several parishes of Codrington, Pucklechurch, Dyrham, and Toghill, unite at Wick and take the name of the Boyd, which falls into the Avon at Bitton. There are many high cliffs near this place, about the middle of which is The Castles, an old encampment, in the parish of Deinton. Tracy Park near Upton is the seat of Robert Bush, Esq.

COLD ASHTON, 2 miles W. from Marshfield, and 4 miles N. from Bath, contains 53 houses, and 284 inhabitants. The church and parsonage-house were built by Thomas Keys, Dean of Durham, and rector of this parish, about 1509. The rectory is valued at 17*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* Hamsell House is the seat of Robert Whittington, Esq., descended from the Whittingtons of Pauntley. Turners Court had anciently a chapel.

PUCKLECHURCH, 7 miles E. from Bristol, contains 118 houses, and 612 inhabitants. The church is large, having a high tower, and standing on a hill, is seen at a great distance. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. Pucklechurch Court is an ancient seat of the Dennis family, of whom it is said there have been more sheriffs than of any other in the county.

SISTON, 5 miles N.E. from Bristol, contains 177 houses, and 902 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* Here are manufactories of brass and saltpetre, and tin ore has been found in the vicinity.

WESTERLEIGH, 7 miles N.E. from Bristol, on the Frome, contains 310 houses, and 1817 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Nibley, Mays Hill, Henvield, Wottons End, and Coal-pit Heath, are hamlets of this parish.

21. Rapsgate Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cheltenham hundred; on the east by Bradley hundred; on the south by Brightwells Barrow, Crowthorne and Bisley hundreds; and on the west by Dudstone and Kings Barton hundred.

BRIMPSFIELD, 8 miles S.E. from Gloucester, and about the same distance N.W. from Cirencester, contains 73 houses, and 348 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* Here was formerly a castle, the seat of the baronial family of Giffard. Fulk Fitz Warine, 23 Edward III., held Benham of Thomas Lord Berkeley, by the service of carrying a horn in Brimpsfield Park whenever the King should hunt there between the feasts of the Assumption and the Nativity of the Virgin Mary. Here also was an Alien Priory, dissolved 2 Henry V.; the lands were granted by Edward IV. to St. George's Chapel at Windsor. Caudle Green, Maulestown, and part of Birdlip are in this parish, and within its boundaries, is the head of the Stroudwater.

NORTH CERNEY, on the river Churn, 3½ miles N. from Cirencester, contains 118 houses, and 562 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 21*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* Woodmancote and Calmsden are hamlets of this parish.

CHEDWORTH, on a branch of the Colne, 4 miles S.W. from Northleach, contains 215 houses, and 975 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Oxford. John Howe, Esq., of Stowell Park, was created Lord Chedworth in 1741. John, four Lord Chedworth, died unmarried in 1804, when the title was presumed to be extinct.

COLDSBORNE, or Colesborn, 7 miles W. from Northleach, contains 49 houses, and 245 inhabitants. It is situated on the Lyde, which here falls into the Churn, and is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

COWLEY, on the Churn, 5 miles S. from Cheltenham, contains 58 houses, and 273 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* Stockwell and Birdlip are hamlets of this parish. Birdlip Hill, in the road from London to Gloucester, commands an extensive prospect, in which thick woods are blended with the populous villages; and the flat portions of the county are finely contrasted with the Malvern Hills. The Roman road has also a curious appearance, from the undeviating line which it pursues.

CRANHAM, 6 miles S.E. from Gloucester, and 5 miles N.E. from Stroud, contains 69 houses, and 321 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* It is situated in a finely wooded country, watered by numerous brooks, on which are several corn-mills.

CUBBERLEY, 4 miles S. from Cheltenham, contains 34 houses, and 237 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 10*l.* The river Churn rises at Seven Wells in this parish. It is also one of the reputed sources of the Thames. Pinswell is a hamlet, and also Upper Cubberley.

ELKSTONE, 7 miles S. from Cheltenham, contains 65 houses, and 296 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* Cockleford and Comb End are hamlets of this parish.

RENDCOMBE, on the river Churn, 5 miles N. from Cirencester, contains 32 houses, and 190 inhabitants. The church, built by Sir Giles Tame, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Rendcombe Park is one of the seats of Sir Berkeley William Guise, Bart., M.P. for the county: the house was built by Sir John Guise about 1700.

SIDE, 7 miles N.W. from Cirencester, on the road to Gloucester, contains 9 houses, and 40 inhabitants.

22. Slaughter Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Kiftsgate hundred; on the east by Oxfordshire; on the south by Brightwells Barrow; and on the west by Bradley hundred.

Lower Division.

GREAT BARRINGTON, on the Windrush, 5 miles E. from Northleach, and 4½ miles N.W. from P. T. Burford, contains 97 houses, and 462 inhabitants, including a part of the parish which extends into Berkshire. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Barrington Park, the seat of Lord Dynevor, is about three miles in circumference, tastefully planted. The mansion, of the Doric order, is seated on an eminence, and commands a fine prospect. There is a quarry of freestone in this parish remarkable for its durability; it has been used for repairs at Westminster Abbey church, and for building Blenheim.

LITTLE BARRINGTON, one mile S. from the above, on the opposite bank of the river, contains 31 houses, and 159 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Barrington Grove is the seat of C. Greenaway, Esq.

BOURTON-ON-THE-WATER, or Burgton, so called from its situation: three considerable rivulets meet in the parish, one from Guiting, another from Slaughter, and a third from Swell; these are joined below the town by a brook from Sherborne, and at Windrush form the river of that name. It is 3 miles S. from Stow, and contains 157 houses, and 758 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 27*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Near it is the Roman Foss-way. Nethercot is a hamlet of the parish.

CLAPTON, 4 miles N.E. from Northleach, contains 25 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church was rebuilt about 1670; it is a curacy.

NAUNTON, situated on a branch of the Windrush, 5 miles W. from Stow, contains 97 houses, and 439 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains some painted glass. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. Ayleworth, Bail Farm, with Upper and Lower Harford, are hamlets of this parish, which is partly in Bradley hundred. Lower Harford belongs to Corpus Christi College Oxford.

GREAT RISSINGTON, on the Windrush, 5 miles S. from Stow, contains 85 houses, and 446 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 22*l.* 2*s.*

RISSINGTON WICK, 1 mile N. from the above, and also on the Windrush, where the Dickler brook falls into it. It contains 40 houses, and 231 inhabitants, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SHERBORNE, 3½ miles E. from Northleach, contains 97 houses, and 525 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sherborne Park is the seat of Lord Sherborne. The spacious mansion consists of two quadrangular courts, and appertaining to the estate are two parks, each containing an area of between three and four miles. Sir Ralph Dutton of Sherborne, M.P. for this county, was created a baronet, June 22th, 1678; his descendant, James Lenox Naper of Loughcrew in Ireland, assumed the name of Dutton, whose son James Dutton was created Lord Sherborne, May 20th, 1784.

LOWER SLAUGHTER, 2½ miles S.W. from Stow, contains 48 houses, and 242 inhabitants. It is situated on a branch of the Windrush, and it is a curacy.

UPPER SLAUGHTER, on the same stream, ½ mile N. from the above, contains 52 houses, and 245 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*

WIDFORD, on the river Windrush, near Burford, contains 8 houses, and 51 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*

WINDRUSH, or Winrush, is 5 miles E. from Northleach, on a river of the same name, which falls into the Thames or Isis at Newbridge. It contains 60 houses, and 317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* Maris, Pinchpool, and Lamb Maris, are tithings of this parish.

Upper Division.

ADLESTROP, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles E. from Stow, contains 43 houses, and 229 inhabitants. It is a rectory. Adlestrop Park is the seat of Chandos Leigh, Esq.; the old mansion, as well as the grounds, was altered by the late Adey Repton. It is situated on the slope of a hill, whence a small stream rushes down a declivity over a rocky bed, and forms a lake at some distance from the house: on the east is the river Evenlode.

BLEDINGTON, 4 miles S.E. from Stow, contains 70 houses, and 340 inhabitants. It is a curacy, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* in the presentation of Christ Church College Oxford. The parish is separated from Oxfordshire on the E. by the river Evenlode.

BROADWELL, 1½ mile N. from Stow, contains 54 houses, and 296 inhabitants. It is a rectory. In the parish is a small stream which falls into the Evenlode. Broadwell Grove, the seat of W. Hervey, Esq., is delightfully situated amidst pleasure-grounds, laid out with judgement, and surrounded by rich woodlands, in which an opening affords a fine prospect over the Wiltshire and Berkshire Hills.

CONDICOTE, 3 miles N.W. from Stow, partly in Kiftsgate hundred.

EYFORD, 3 miles W. from Stow, contains 12 houses, and 67 inhabitants. It is situated on a branch of the Windrush.

ICCOMB, on the Evenlode, 2 miles S.E. from Stow, is partly in a detached part of Worcestershire: it contains, in this county, 2 houses, and 18 inhabitants.

ODDINGTON, 2 miles E. from Stow, contains 90 houses, and 458 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Oddington House is the seat of Lady Reade; it is well situated: the grounds, varied by gentle undulations, and pleasantly wooded, were greatly improved by the late Sir John Reade, Bart.; the S.E. front of the house faces a fine piece of water, supplied from springs within the grounds, and from a rivulet which, descending from the hills, runs through the village and discharges itself into the Evenlode, which separates the parish from Oxfordshire.

STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, or Stow St. Edward, is situated on a very high eminence, 85½ miles from London, and contains 269 houses, and 1304 inhabitants. The town is governed by two bailiffs, and has a market on Thursdays, and fairs May 12th, and October 24th, which have long been noted for the quantities of hops, cheese, and sheep annually sold here. The principal manufactory of the town is shoes. The ancient church was repaired in 1683; it is dedicated to St. Edward, and has an embattled tower on the S. side 81 feet in height, which is a prominent object in a circumference of many miles. It is a rectory, value 18*l.*; the sum of 5*s.* is yearly paid out of the meadows in Maugersbury, in lieu of rushes by custom cut in those meadows for the use of the church: there is an alms-house and a free school. From the elevated situation of this town it is generally said to want three elements out of the four,—fire, earth, and water. Air it possesses in plenty, and though uncommonly sharp, it is reputed to be very healthful; water is scarce. There are two considerable hamlets in this parish, Donnington and Maugersbury. The Roman Foss-way passes by Stow.

LOWER SWELL, one mile W. from Stow, contains 64 houses, and 263 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. Wick Hill House is the seat of Charles Pote, Esq.

WESTCOTE, or Comb Baskerville, 3 miles S.E. from Stow, contains 35 houses, and 185 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*

23. Tewksbury Hundred

Is in the north part of the county, on which side it is bounded by Worcestershire, and also on the east and west; on the south it is bounded by Cleeve and Deerhurst hundreds.

Lower Division.

ASHCHURCH, 2 miles N.E. from Tewksbury, contains 127 houses, and 643 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Aston-upon-Carron, Fiddington and Natton, Northway and Newton, and Pamington. It is a curacy. The river Carron runs through the parish, and the Turle, a brook, runs by Pamington, and between Natton and Newton, and falls into the Swilly near Tewksbury.

FORTHAMPTON, 2 miles W. from Tewksbury, contains 75 houses, and 474 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Swaily and Down End are hamlets of this parish. Forthampton Court is the residence of Joseph Yorke, Esq.

KEMERTON, on the Carron, 3 miles N.E. from Tewksbury, contains 119 houses, and 520 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.* 13*s.*

OXENTON, 4 miles E. from Tewksbury, contains 22 houses, and 178 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

TREDINGTON, on the Swilly, 2 miles S. from Tewksbury, contains 28 houses, and 138 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

TEWKSBURY, 107½ miles from London, near the junction of the Avon and Severn, contains 1044 houses, and 4962 inhabitants. The town consists of three principal streets; with a bridge over the Severn, built in 1824, of one arch, 176 feet span, which ranks amongst the first in the kingdom. The magistracy of the corporation is vested in two bailiffs, who are justices of the peace, chosen annually out of 24 burgesses: their common seal represents a castle embattled. The borough sends 2 members to parliament, the right of election being in the inhabitant householders paying scot and lot, in number about 550; the returning officers being the 2 bailiffs. The present members are John Edmund Dowdeswell, Esq. of Pull Court, very near this town, but situated in Worcestershire; and John Martin, Esq. of Overbury House, also in Worcestershire. The trade of the town consists in stockings, nails, mustard, and malt.

The abbey church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 44*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* This ancient building presents several distinct claims to notice; it exhibits the striking peculiarities of the Anglo-Norman style of architecture in a very prominent degree. The tower and beautiful western front are singularly fine, and nearly perfect examples of the enrichments used at that early period; while the choir and other parts of the edifice, constructed in later times, are no less interesting specimens of the pointed style: the magnificent monuments within its walls are more numerous and costly than are usually to be found, and the church is remarkable in its decoration for a very fine genealogical series of portraits of the Clares, Earls of Gloucester, and of the family of De Spencer, benefactors to the abbey, executed in stained glass, which from its early date is one of the most satisfactory references for the baronial costume to be obtained in the kingdom. The abbey was originally founded in 715, by Odo and Dodo, the Anglo-Saxon lords of the manor, for monks of the Benedictine Order. At the Dissolution it was valued at 1595*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per annum. The arms of the abbey was Gules, a cross engrailed or, within a border argent. The principal monuments are those of Isabel Countess of Warwick, 1439; Hugh Lord De Spenser, 1337; Sir Edward De Spenser, K.G., 1375; Sir Guy De Brian, 1391; Abbot Cheltenham, 1509; Abbot Wakeman, &c. &c. The battle of Tewksbury between the Yorkists and Lancastrians was fought in 1471. The Mythe and Southwick are hamlets of the parish. On the Ham are annual races.

WALTON CARDIFF, 1 mile S. from Tewksbury, contains 12 houses, and 51 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of All Souls College Oxford.

Upper Division.

ALDERTON, 6½ miles E. from Tewksbury, contains 63 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.* Dixon is a hamlet of this parish.

CLIFFORD CHAMBERS, on the Stour, in a detached portion of this hundred, in the N.E. part of the county, contains 39 houses, and 305 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* In the church is a monument of Hercules Rainsford, Esq., ob. 1583. Ashton and Wincot are hamlets of this parish.

LOWER LEMINGTON, situated on the Foss-way, 2 miles N. from Moreton, in a detached part of this hundred. It contains 13 houses, and 67 inhabitants; and is a curacy.

PRESCOTT, 3 miles N. from Cheltenham, contains 10 houses, and 56 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial.

SHENINGTON, 6 miles N.W. from Banbury, in a detached part of this hundred, surrounded by Oxfordshire, contains 71 houses, and 381 inhabitants.

STANWAY, 3 miles N.W. from Winchcombe, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 74 houses, and 415 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* Sir Paul Tracy of Stanway was created a baronet, 29th June, 1611. Tuddington is a hamlet of this parish.

GREAT WASHBORN, 4 miles E. from Tewksbury, contains 17 houses, and 80 inhabitants. It is situated on a brook that runs into the Carron; and is a curacy.

24. Thornbury Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Berkeley hundred; on the east by Grumbalds Ash, and part of Henbury hundred; on the south by Pucklechurch hundred; and on the west by Langley and Swinehead hundred, and the river Severn.

Lower Division.

IRON ACTON, 5 miles S.E. from Thornbury, contains 200 houses, and 1122 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 10*s.* On the north side of the church is a very fine large ancient cross. Lateridge and Acton Ilgar are hamlets of this parish.

THORNBURY, 6 miles S. from Berkeley, contains 220 houses, and 1261 inhabitants. It is governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 2 constables; and has a market on Saturday, and fairs on Easter Monday, 15th August, and Monday before St. Thomas's Day. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. Thornbury Castle, a magnificent pile, was erected by Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, K.G. in 1511, but was never entirely completed. The castle was quadrangular, with the exception of the east side, which it was intended to complete by the re-erection of the old hall. The apartments are numerous, and of spacious dimensions. The Gatehouse is very fine, and the chimneys are extremely curious; they are formed by clusters of spiral columns, with the bases charged with the badges, knots, and cognizances of the Stafford family. It is altogether a specimen of domestic architecture particularly worthy of attention in these times, when a knowledge of the earlier styles is so much required and so little understood. There are several hamlets within this parish; Falfield, Moorton, Kington, Oldbury-upon-Severn, and Rangeworthy.

TYTHERINGTON, or Tuderington, 2 miles S.E. from Thornbury, contains 50 houses, and 330 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* From the summit of Tower Hill is a fine prospect of the Severn. Itchington and Stidcot are hamlets to this parish.

Upper Division.

MARSHFIELD, 102 miles from London, and 5 miles N. from Bath, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 274 houses, and 1569 inhabitants. It has a market on Thursdays, and fairs 14th May, and 24th October. The chief trade is in malt. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 29*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. There are several hamlets within this parish; Weston, or Old Marshfield, Okeford, Ayford, Ashwick, and Bicks. At the Rocks near this town are the three shire stones for the counties of Gloucester, Wilts, and Somerset.

25. Tibaldstone Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Worcestershire; and upon the south and east by Kiftsgate hundred.

ASHTON-UNDER-HILL, in a rich vale on the south side of Bredon Hill, 6½ miles N.E. from Tewksbury and 5½ S.W. from Evesham, contains 68 houses, and 301 inhabitants. It is a curacy. From Bredon Hill, 990 feet above the Severn, is a fine view of Tewksbury, Cheltenham, and Gloucester, of Broadway Hill, and the Earl of Coventry's woods at Crome.

BECKFORD, 6 miles N.E. from Tewksbury, and about the same distance S.W. from Evesham, contains 88 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Barbara, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* Beckford Hall, the seat of Henry Wakeman, Esq., stands amidst rich woods and beautiful undulations of landscape. The river Carron rises here, and in its course marks the boundaries of this county and Worcestershire, and falls into the Avon a little above Tewksbury. Grafton, Bengrave, and Didcot, are hamlets of this parish.

HINTON-ON-THE-GREEN, in a detached part of this hundred, 3 miles S. from Evesham, contains 39 houses, and 195 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. It is situated on a rivulet which falls into the Avon at Evesham.

26. Westbury Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the Duchy of Lancaster; on the east by a detached part of Dudstone hundred, and by Whitstone hundred; on the south by the Severn; and on the east by St. Briavels hundred.

BLAISDON, 8 miles W. from Gloucester, and 2½ miles E. from Mitchell Dean, contains 47 houses, and 243 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* Natswood Brook runs through the parish, and falls into the Severn below Westbury.

CHURCHAM, 4 miles W. from Gloucester, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 143 houses, and 733 inhabitants, including a part of the parish in Dudstone and Kings Barton hundred, consisting of the hamlets of Higham, Over, and Linton. It is a vicarage, value 2*l.* 5*s.* Over bridge is the lowest on the Severn.

NEWNHAM, 12 miles S.W. from Gloucester, and 120 miles from London, on the banks of the Severn, contains 171 houses, and 1012 inhabitants. It was anciently a borough incorporated by King John; and a sword is still preserved here, said to have been given with the charter. It is now governed by two constables, and has a market on Friday; fairs June 11th, and Oct. 18th. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Corporation of Gloucester. Rudle, the Cockshoot, Blaiths Court, Stairs, and the Hill House, are hamlets of this parish. There is a passage over the Severn to Arlingham.

TIDENHAM, 2 miles N.E. from Chepstow, in a detached part of this hundred, is said to derive its name from the high tides of the Severn, by which it is affected. It contains 189 houses, and 1102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* Chepstow Bridge is partly in this parish; the hamlets are Church End, Bishton, Sudbury, Beachley, Wibden, Stroate, and Lancaught. At Beachley House is the Old Passage between Bristol and Wales.

WESTBURY-UPON-SEVERN, 8 miles S.W. from Gloucester, and 4½ miles S.E. from Mitchell Dean, contains 372 houses, and 1889 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 2*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Peacocks Brook rises in Yartleton Hill and falls into the Severn. Rodley, Claxhill, Bolloe, Upperlaugh and Netherlaugh, Boseley, Cleeve, Adset, Norwood, and Elton.

WOLLASTON, 4½ miles N.E. from Chepstow, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 169 houses, and 884 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* Keynsham, Evesend, Gumstod, Clusterwyne and Brook End, are hamlets of this parish.

27. Westminster Hundred

Is bounded on the north by a detached part of Worcestershire and by Warwickshire; on the east by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire; on the south by Kiftsgate hundred; and on the west by a detached portion of Tewksbury hundred.

Lower Division.

BODDINGTON, on the Chilt, 4½ miles S. from Tewksbury, and 5 miles N.W. from Gloucester, in a detached part of this hundred, contains 74 houses, and 413 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The hamlets of Barrow, Withy Bridge, and Heydon, are in this parish, which is partly in Tewksbury hundred.

CORSE, 6½ miles S.W. from Tewksbury, and 4 miles E. from Newent, contains 92 houses, and 446 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Horridge is a hamlet of this parish.

ELMSTONE HARDWICK, 3 miles S.E. from Tewksbury, contains 26 houses, and 178 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the presentation of the Crown. Uckington chapelry is in this parish, but in Deerhurst hundred.

HASFIELD, 5 miles S.W. from Tewksbury, contains 48 houses, and 237 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Mickeridge is a hamlet of this parish, which is bounded on the east by the river Severn.

Upper Division.

BOURTON-ON-THE-HILL, 2 miles W. from Moreton, contains 34 houses, and 180 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.*, and is partly in Tewksbury hundred.

MORETON-IN-THE-MARSH, or Moreton Henmarsh, 4½ miles N. from Stow, in the road from London to Worcester, contains 212 houses, and 1015 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a curacy. About a mile west is the Four Shire Stone, where the counties of Gloucester, Oxford, Worcester, and Warwick join.

SUTTON-UNDER-BRAILS, is locally situated in Warwickshire, 4 miles S.E. from Shipston, and 6 miles N.E. from the Four Shire Stone. It derives the name from its situation south from Brails, in Warwickshire, and contains 51 houses, and 236 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

TODDENHAM, 4 miles N.E. from Moreton, contains 86 houses, and 440 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas á Becket is a rectory, value 18*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Upper Lemington is a hamlet of this parish. FRAMPTON-UPON-SEVERN, 7½ miles W. from Stroud, contains 183 houses, and 996 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* The church contains several very ancient monuments of the Cliffords. A fair, called Frying-pan fair, is annually kept on Feb. 3.

FROCESTER, 4½ miles S.W. from Stroud, contains 64 houses, and 437 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage. It is situated at the foot of a high hill, which shelters it on the east: from the summit of this eminence a most extensive and delightful prospect is obtained; on the south is Cowley Peak; and the bold projecting head of Stinchcombe, the intermediate distances between the Forest hills, the Malvern, and the towers of Gloucester Cathedral, is fine rural scenery, with the Castle and town of Berkeley.

KINGS STANLEY, 2½ miles S.W. from Stroud, contains 438 houses, and 2269 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 18*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* Dudbridge, Stanleys End, The Leighs, Pig Street, High Street, and the Borough, are hamlets of this parish. Stanley Park is the seat of H. Burgh, Esq.; and Dudbridge of John Hawker, Esq.

ST. LEONARD STANLEY, 1 mile S. from the above, contains 138 houses, and 757 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a curacy. The prefix of St. Leonard is derived from a priory formerly situated here. Gidding, Franchies and Downton, are hamlets of this parish.

STONEHOUSE, 3 miles W. from Stroud, contains 399 houses, and 2126 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 22*l.* Deverell's Wood, a grove of trees on a hill in this parish, is seen at a very great distance.

WHEATENHURST, or Whitmister, 6 miles N.W. from Stroud, contains 48 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy.

Upper Division.

FRETHERNE, 8 miles N.W. from Stroud, on the banks of the Severn, contains 46 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The Manor House was built in 1598 by James Clifford, one of the Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber to Queen Elizabeth. It is a large stone edifice, with a turret; the staircase is very noble, and two chimney-pieces are sculptured with the arms of the Cliffords; on one is the date 1598. From the house is a fine prospect of the Severn and the Forest of Dean.

HARDWICK, 4 miles S.W. from Gloucester, and 7 miles N.W. from Stroud, contains 80 houses, and 446 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Coldrup, or Coldthorp, is a hamlet of this parish.

HEREFORDSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is in form nearly circular, and is bounded on the north by Shropshire; on the east by Worcestershire; on the south by Gloucestershire and Monmouthshire; and on the west by Brecknockshire, and Radnorshire. Some detached parishes and townships are situated beyond the general outline: of these, Farlow is entirely surrounded by Shropshire, Rochford is included in the county of Worcester, and Lytton in that of Radnor. The Futhog, a considerable tract of land, and a few acres on the Devauden Hill, are insulated by Monmouthshire. The greatest extent of the county, from Ludford on the north to the opposite border near Monmouth on the south, is thirty-eight miles; its greatest width, from Clifford on the west to Cradley on the east, is thirty-five miles, and its circumference is one hundred and eighty miles. Herefordshire, inhabited by the Silures, was included by the Romans in the district named Britannia Secunda. Two of the principal stations of the Itinerary of Antoninus, viz. Magna, now Kenchester, and Ariconium, near Ross, together with the smaller post of Bravinium, or Brandon Camp, are situated within the limits of the county. Upon the decline of the Roman power Herefordshire became incorporated with the Saxon kingdom of Mercia. The county has one city, Hereford, seven market towns, and 221 parishes; containing at the last census 20,061 houses, and 103,243 inhabitants. It returns eight members to Parliament; two for the county, viz. Sir John Geers Cotterell, Bart., of Garnons, and Robert Price, Esq., of Foxley; two for the city, two for Leominster, and two for Weobly. The whole county is in the province of Canterbury, and diocese of Hereford. The general aspect of the county is extremely beautiful, its surface being finely diversified, and broken by swelling heights; from many of these elevations the prospects are fine; but are peculiarly so from the Malvern Hills on the east, and the Hatterel or Black Mountains on the west: on every side a luxuriant vegetation is exhibited in widely extended corn-fields, teeming orchards, expansive meadows, and flourishing plantations. The courses of rivers and brooks may be traced from many of the adjacent eminences by the rich lines of wood skirting their margins, and every part is uniformly productive, excepting on the northern and western boundaries of the county. Herefordshire is particularly famous as a cider county, and plantations of fruit trees are found in every aspect. To Philips's Poem on Cider, written in imitation of the Georgics, is given this peculiar praise, that it is grounded in truth; that the precepts it contains are exact and just; and it is therefore at once a book of entertainment and of science. The orchards are of various sizes, from four or five to thirty and forty acres, and in years of abundance twenty hogsheads of cider have been made from the produce of a single acre of orchard ground. The Herefordshire cattle are equal, if not superior, to any breed in the kingdom, and the breed of sheep is almost equally as celebrated as that of its cattle, principally for the fineness of its wool, of which Leominster is noted as the place of sale. The cultivation of hops forms a very considerable branch of the rural economy of the county. The principal cultivated lands of Herefordshire are under tillage, and the wheat grown in the vicinity of Hereford, and thence through the clays towards Ledbury, is remarkably fine; but Herefordshire may be properly termed a woodland county, many species of trees growing up spontaneously, and becoming strong and vigorous in a very short period. The rivers of the county are the Arrow, the Dore, the Eskle, the Frome, the Gamar, the Garran, the Hothney, the Leddon, the Loden, the Lugg, the Monnow, the Olchron, the Pinsley, the Teme, the Tatnell, the Wadel, the Worme, and the Wye. The navigation is composed of the Hereford and Gloucester canal, and the Kington and Leominster canal. The Right Hon. John Earl Somers is Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county, and Chief Steward of Hereford.

1. Broxash Hundred

WOLFERLOW, 5 miles N. from Bromyard, contains 21 houses, and 117 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.*

2. Ewyas Lacy Hundred

Is situated in the south-western part of the county, where it is bounded by Brecknockshire; on the north it is bounded by Huntington hundred; on the east by Webtree hundred; and on the south by Monmouthshire.

CLODOCK, or Longtown, situated on the Monnow, in a sequestered vale, on the east side of the Hatterel mountains, 15 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 1796 inhabitants; and consists of the townships of Upper and Lower Craswall, near the source of the Monnow, containing 75 houses, and 374 inhabitants. Here was a Benedictine priory, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, founded by Walter de Lacy about the beginning of the reign of Henry III., and subordinate to the priory of Grandmont in Normandy. On its suppression, the revenue was granted by King Edward IV. to God's House, now Christ's College, in Cambridge. The chapelry of Llanveynoe contains 65 houses, and 323 inhabitants. The chapelry of Longtown contains 158 houses, and 842 inhabitants. Here are remains of an ancient castle, and it is supposed to be the Blestium of Antoninus, although Camden has fixed it at Castle Hên, or Old Castle, in a part of Monmouthshire two miles south. Eastward of Longtown is Money Farthing Hill.

Another township of Clodock parish is Newton, containing 53 houses, and 257 inhabitants, near the junction of the Hothney with the Monnow. The banks of both the streams are very picturesque. On the borders of Monmouthshire is Altrynis, long the seat of the Cecils. John Grandison, Bishop of Exeter, who died 1369, was born here.

Trewyn House is at the base of the southern extremity of the Hatterel mountains; and on the brow of a precipice rising above the house, are vestiges of an encampment, supposed to be of Roman origin, with Saxon additions: the situation is excellent as well for an exploratory camp as for the defence of the road near the foot of the eminence.

Most part of Cwmvoy parish is in Monmouthshire; but the township of Bwlch, containing 18 houses, and 81 inhabitants, and the township of Toot-hog, containing 23 houses, and 87 inhabitants, within the parish of Cwmvoy, are in this county.

CUSOP, 1½ mile S.E. from Hay, in the county of Brecon, and on a small river which falls into the Wye, contains 54 houses, and 266 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* The Cusop Hills extend for more than five miles in a south-easterly direction from the village.

LLANCILLO, on the banks of the Monnow, 13 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 15 houses, and 89 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ST. MARGARETS, 11 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 71 houses, and 317 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

MICHAEL CHURCH ESKLEY, 3 miles W. from the above, contains 81 houses, and 424 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Eskle, which rises in Cusop Hill.

ROWLSTONE, 13½ miles S.W. from Hereford, in the road to Abergavenny, contains 24 houses, and 145 inhabitants.

WALTERSTONE, 2 miles S. from the above, on the borders of Monmouthshire, contains 39 houses, and 176 inhabitants.

3. Greytree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Radlow hundred; on the south and east by Gloucestershire; and on the west by Wormelow and Webtree hundreds.

ASTON INGHAM, 5 miles E. from Ross, and on the lofty edge of the Forest of Dean, 3 miles W. from Newent, in Gloucestershire, contains 114 houses, and 551 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7l. 7s.

BRAMPTON ABBOTS, 1½ mile N. from Ross, contains 29 houses, and 158 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12l., in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. On Eaton Hill, one mile northward, is an entrenchment.

BROCKHAMPTON, 5 miles N. from Ross, on the Tatnell brook, contains 26 houses, and 116 inhabitants. It is a curacy. There are the remains of a double trenched Roman camp in the neighbourhood.

DORMINGTON, 5 miles E. from the city of Hereford, on the banks of the Frome, contains 22 houses, and 115 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4l. 6s. 8d. Bartestre chapelry in this parish, is situated on the opposite side of the river. Towards the south-west is a commanding eminence, on the summit of which is St. Ethelbert's camp.

FOWNHOPE, on the river Wye, 6 miles S.E. from the city of Hereford, contains 167 houses, and 866 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6l. 9s. 9d., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. Half a mile northward of the village is an eminence crowned with an encampment, and more distant is Capler Hill, finely wooded, whence is an extensive and rich prospect, in which the river Wye forms a prominent feature. On the summit of this hill is Woldbury, a double trenched encampment. Fawley Court, a mansion of the Elizabethan age belonging to Col. Kyrle Money, is two miles southward from Capler Hill.

Sir John Cornwall, K. G. was created Lord Faunhope by Henry VI.; in 1432 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, widow of John Earl of Huntingdon; but died without issue in 1443, when the title became extinct.

FOY, 2½ miles N. from Ross, is situated on the banks of the river Wye, and, including the township of Eaton Tregoes, contains 54 houses, and 293 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13l. 6s. 8d. At Ingeston-House, ¾ mile E. from this village, it is said Sergeant Hoskyns greatly entertained King James I., by exhibiting a morris-dance, performed by ten persons, whose collected ages amounted to more than 1000 years.

HOPE MANSELL, 4 miles S.E. from Ross, on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 26 houses, and 146 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6l. 5s., in the patronage of the Crown.

HOW CAPLE, 3½ miles N. from Ross, on the banks of the Wye, contains 18 houses, and 117 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Near an excavation called the Hole-in-the-Wall, towards Old Gore, many celts were found about thirty years ago; they were of a semi-metal, nearly as bright as brass. Perrystone is the seat of — Clifford, Esq.

LINTON, 4 miles E. from Ross, contains 115 houses, and 630 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8l. 10s. Part of the adjoining parish of Lea, in this county, contains 19 houses, and 91 inhabitants, but it is chiefly situated in St. Briavel's hundred, Gloucestershire, where it will be found noticed.

MUCH MARCLE, 4 miles S.W. from Ledbury, contains 186 houses, and 877 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 14l. 0s. 5d. Some ancient monuments within the church are attributed to Blanche, daughter of Roger Mortimer, wife of John Lord Audley, in the reign of Richard II.; and the great Roger Mortimer, and Joan his lady, daughter of Sir Peter Genevil. In a chapel is a very fine monument of Sir John Kyrle, of Much Marcle, created a baronet 16th May, 1627, and his lady Sibylla; it is of Italian workmanship, and may be regarded as an exquisite specimen of art. Holm House, now the seat of Colonel Kyrle Money, contains a dining-room fitted up by Sir John Kyrle. The chimney-piece, of marble, bears his arms with quarterings within a mantel, in a compartment of arabesque ornament, and the walls are panelled with oak.

Much Marcle was part of Lacy's barony; but coming into possession of the Crown was granted to Edmund Mortimer by Edward I. Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, who died 1397, demised it to the Wallwyn family. Near the church is the site of Mortimer's Castle; and Quarry Wood, at a little distance from the village, is said to be the site of Ellingham Castle.

The township of Yatton is in this parish. Yatton Court, now an opulent farmer's residence, is an ancient building; the parlour, with fixed seats around it, contains a large and curious chimney-piece of carved oak. Rocks Place, in the road from Ledbury to Ross, is also a remarkably curious timber-framed building, situated on a terrace, with an entrance-porch, and an open gallery over it. The oaken parlour has a large fire-place, with dogs for burning wood, and the other rooms remain nearly in their original state. It is the residence of Mr. Robert Woodward, the representative of a family long seated here, which is reported to have made great sacrifices for its loyalty in the service of King Charles I.

MORDIFORD, 4 miles E. from Hereford, at the confluence of the rivers Lugg and Wye, contains 133 houses, and 638 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10l. 6s. 5d. Sufton Court, about a mile north from the village, is the seat of James Hereford, Esq. The manor of Sufton was originally held by the service of presenting the king with a golden spur whenever he should pass over Mordiford bridge. The present mansion is modern, having been erected near the site of the former. Few places are more indebted to nature than Sufton, and the art of Repton has been employed to give the finish of picturesque beauty. On the east, Backbury Hill commences a grand ridge, which extending towards Fownhope, exhibits a forest of the finest timber as far as the eye can reach. The western prospect is over a fertile valley, in which the course of the Lugg can be distinctly traced winding through luxuriant meadows; and at a distance are seen the spires of the city of Hereford, backed by the mountains of Wales. The groves of Rotherwas and Hom Lacy form interesting points in the scenery, and the river Wye presents a serpentine channel for many miles.

PUTLEY, 4 miles W. from Ledbury, contains 30 houses, and 163 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3l. 8s. 4d., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. Very marvellous tales have been related respecting this part of the county. Marcley Hill is reported to have moved for three days in the year 1570. It is seriously stated to have begun on 17th Feb., when a mass of at least twenty acres passing along, overthrew a chapel at Kinnaston, and removed a yew-tree in the churchyard from the west to the east. With the same force, it thrust before it highways, sheepfolds, hedges, and trees; made tilled ground pasture, and turned pasture into tillage. According to present appearances the whole was nothing more than a land-slip, arising probably from causes similar to those which occasion an eboulement, common in the Alps. The land that actually moved seems to have been about two acres; but its motion was certainly agreeable to the laws of gravitation. The yew-tree is still existing, but the chapel bell was afterwards dug up.

ROSS, 12 miles S.E. from Hereford, and 115 from London, contains 585 houses, and 2957 inhabitants. It is situated on a ridge overhanging the river Wye, and ascending from the east. On the road from Hereford in an opposite direction, it assumes a very commanding appearance; scars of the rock jut out from the green banks, while the church, environed by trees, exhibits its spire from the highest point of the eminence. A gentle undulatory descent on the south towards the river is flanked on the east by Penyard Chase and Howl Hill, and closed in by the ridges and hills forming the exquisite banks of the Wye. Ross was made a free borough by Henry III., the Bishops of Hereford being its lords. Their residence was westward of the church, on a site still called the Bishop's Court. The town is now governed by a sergeant and four constables, and has a market on Thursday. The market-house, a conspicuous building, was erected in the reign of Charles II. Fairs: Ascension day, Corpus Christi, from the 20th to 25th July, 10th October and 11th December, which are well supplied with provisions and cattle. The lines written by Pope, during one of his visits to Hom Lacy, have stamped eternal celebrity on a benevolent inhabitant of this town. The house in which Mr. Kyrle, the Man of Ross, resided, is now the King's Arms, an inn near the entrance of the town from Gloucester. His portrait is preserved in the house; and at his death in 1724, æt. 84, he was buried in the church. The Prospect Ground adjoining the churchyard, and a walk that extends thence nearly a mile southward, were formed by him. The church is a rectory and vicarage united, value 38*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. It contains monuments of Judge Rudhall and his lady, of the time of Henry VII., of Sir Richard Rudhall, knighted at Cadiz in the reign of Elizabeth, and other Lords of the Manor of Rudhall. The east window contains some painted glass, consisting of a bishop, inscribed Thomas Herefordensis, and other fragments. The views from the churchyard are very much admired. The river below makes a fine reach, at the extremity of which are the ruins of Wilton and Bridstow Castles, and beyond, an extensive and luxuriant vale, terminated by the distant mountains of Wales. It is usual to embark here on making the celebrated tour of the Wye.

SOLLERS-HOPE, 6 miles N. from Ross, situated on Tatnell brook, which flows on the W. side of Marcley Hill, contains 36 houses, and 187 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

UPTON BISHOP, 4 miles E. from Ross, on the edge of the Forest of Dean, contains 75 houses, and 613 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

WALFORD, 3 miles S. from Ross, in a beautiful situation on the banks of the Wye, opposite Goodrich, contains 227 houses, and 1060 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, with Ruardean in Gloucestershire annexed, under the Precentor of Hereford Cathedral. About a mile southward is Bishop's Wood, a fine eminence; and on the north the bold coppices of Penyard Chase and Park.

WESTON-UNDER-PENYARD, 2 miles E. from Ross, contains 121 houses, and 674 inhabitants. It derives the affix to its name from its situation below Penyard Chase, an eminence finely covered with oaks. Ascending through the wood is the very sequestered site of Penyard Castle upon the southern side of the hill. It appears to have been originally constructed for the purpose of defending the narrow pass through the woods from Gloucestershire towards the counties of Monmouth and Pembroke, by the way of Walford and Goodrich. It was demolished in the civil wars; but a part of the remains are occupied by the Keeper of Penyard Wood.

WOOLHOPE, 8 miles N. from Ross, and 6 miles S.E. from Hereford, contains 154 houses, and 825 inhabitants, including the township of Buckenhill, a mile southward of the village.

4. Grimsworth Hundred,

In the centre of the county, is bounded on the north by Stretford and Wolphy hundreds; on the east by Broxash, with portions of Radlow and Greytree hundreds towards the south; on the south-west it is bounded by the river Wye and Webtree hundred.

BISHOPSTONE, 6 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 63 houses, and 270 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* On the southern declivity of Bishopstone Hill is Garnons, the seat of Sir John Geers Cotterell, Bart., one of the representatives of the county in Parliament. The mansion, in the castellated style, was built by Atkinson. It stands on a terrace, under which is the arch of entrance. The views from the house are extensive, displaying the meanderings of the Wye; the gardens and shrubberies, as well as the plantations formed by the present proprietor and his father, greatly add to the beauty of its situation. The drives are of very considerable extent. In the mansion are a library and museum, and also a carved oak bedstead, (removed from Hatfield, another seat of the family, on the borders of the county,) in which the unfortunate Charles II. slept after the battle of Worcester. Sir John Geers Cotterell, many years colonel of the Herefordshire militia, was created baronet 5th Oct. 1805. He is lord of the manors of Mansell-Gamage, Strutton, Brobury, Kilkington, Bridge-Sollers, and Hatfield, all in this county. He inherited this estate from his mother, Anne daughter and heiress of John Geers, Esq., of Garnons.

BREINTON, situated on the Wye, 2 miles W. from Hereford, contains 47 houses, and 259 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 1*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Hereford.

BRIDGE-SOLLERS, 6 miles W. from Hereford, and on the river Wye, contains 10 houses, and 58 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 10*s.*, and was the seat of Simon de Brugge in the reign of Henry III., who was the founder of the family of Brydges Lords Chandos. The serpentine direction of the river below this point is remarkably pleasing.

BRINSOP, 5½ miles N.W. from Hereford, on the W. side of Creden Hill, contains 19 houses, and 107 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* Easton is the seat of Dansey Richard Dansey, Esq.

BROBURY, situated on the river Wye, 10 miles W. from Hereford, contains 17 houses, and 79 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* Brobury Scar and Burbridge Hill are fine objects in the bold scenery of the vicinity.

BURGHILL, 4 miles N. from Hereford, contains 77 houses, and 431 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* Burghill-House is the seat of B. Biddulph, Esq. On the summit of Burghill itself, which is covered with wood, are the remains of a square encampment, and three miles distant north-west is another encampment somewhat larger, about a mile from Canon-Pyon. An ancient tract called the Portway is about a mile north from Burghill, pointing towards Kenchester, a Roman station. Tillington is a township of this parish. Tillington-Court is the seat of Rev. Edward Eckley; and near it is The Lodge, the residence of Mrs. Lingen.

BYFORD, on the river Wye, 6½ miles W. from Hereford, contains 41 houses, and 211 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

CANON PYON, 7½ miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 126 houses, and 634 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. Here is the seat of David Thomas, Esq.

CREDEN HILL, 5 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 41 houses, and 199 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* North of the village is a very high and steep eminence crowned by a vast encampment, surrounded by almost inaccessible works, and forming a very conspicuous object for many miles round. Its apex, which composes the area, includes an extent of about thirty acres, bounded by a double ditch and ramparts. The view from the summit is one of the most extensive in the county, and equally beautiful. The declivity of the hill is covered with wood, and has a very fine appearance, particularly when viewed from the south, where its continuity of line is broken by several deep ravines.

DINMORE, 8 miles N. from Hereford, in the road to Leominster, whence it is about the same distance. On a very considerable eminence is the site of a preceptory of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, founded in the reign of Henry II. It is extra-parochial. Dinmore Hill commands an extensive prospect, and although not so steep as other eminences in this county, the ascent is in some places very abrupt. The northern view is extremely rich, being varied with slopes of foliage intermixed with meadows and cultivated grounds, and bounded by distant hills. On the opposite side the descent commences with irregular declivities and romantic breaks occasioned by quarries, which form the fore-ground of a prospect composed of Burghope, Burghill, and a great extent of that country towards the south-west, where the view is terminated by the Skyrrid and the Black Mountains on the borders of Breconshire. Burghope-House, formerly the seat of the family of Goodere, of which Sir Edward Goodere, M.P. for the county, was created a baronet 5th December 1707, is an ancient edifice, with curious gables and clustered chimneys. It is pleasantly situated on a part of Dinmore Hill.

from Hereford, contains 47 houses, and 204 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Tupsley is a township of this parish.

HEREFORD, 136 miles N.W. from London, contains 1763 houses, and 9090 inhabitants. It is situated on the northern bank of the river Wye, over which the Wye bridge was erected in the 15th century. The streets are in general wide, and modern buildings have improved the appearance of the city. In an open space in the High-street is the Shire Hall, where the assizes are held twice a year, and the sessions for the county once a quarter. The city is governed by a mayor, six aldermen, a common council consisting of thirty-one members, a high steward, viz. Earl Somers, and a recorder. Ancient privileges of the city were confirmed by a charter granted by King John; and Richard II. granted a mayoralty, which has been confirmed by several successive monarchs, the last of which was William III. The arms of the city of Hereford are: Gules, three lions passant gardant argent, within a border azure, charged with ten saltiers of the second. Motto "Invictæ Fidelitatis Præmium."

Hereford has three weekly markets, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; and five annual fairs, the first Tuesday after Candlemasday, Wednesday in Easter week, 19th May, 1st July, and 20th October. The fair in May is called Nine Days' fair, and is held in Broad-street; the Bishop's bailiff acting as chief magistrate. The see of Hereford was originally one of the suffragans to the metropolitan see of St. Davids, and afterwards became a member of the province of Canterbury. The cathedral was founded by Milfred, in honor of Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, about the year 825; but the present structure, commenced by Bishop Robert Losing, was completed by Bishop Rainelm, chancellor to the Queen of Henry I., who died in 1115, and is recorded as the founder. The diocese contains the county of Hereford, except eleven churches and chapels belonging to the see of St. Davids, half of Shropshire, four parishes in Monmouthshire, six in Montgomeryshire, eight in Radnorshire, and twenty-one in Worcestershire, comprising a total of 313 parishes, of which 162 are impropriations. It has two archdeaconries, Hereford and Salop. To the cathedral also belong a dean, a treasurer, a chancellor, sixteen canons, twenty-four prebendaries, a chanter, and other inferior officers. The general plan of the cathedral is that of a cross, with a lesser transept towards the east, and a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary beyond it. The choir is lofty and well-proportioned. The stalls, of the date of Edward II., beautifully carved in oak, have been restored with great care under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Meyrick of Goodrich Court. From the intersection of the nave and transepts rises a square tower, which had formerly a spire of 92 feet in height, pulled down during the repairs after the lamentable fall of the west front in the year 1786, at which time the cathedral was deprived of much of its venerable appearance. The central tower, of Norman architecture, was then doomed to lose its characteristic features when battlements were added and crocketted pinnacles placed at the angles. The Library, formerly the Lady Chapel, has a very beautiful chantry on the south side, founded by Bishop Audley in 1495. The monuments within the church are very numerous, and exceedingly worthy of attention. In the south aisle is the tomb of Sir Richard Pembridge, K.G. temp. Edw. III.; and in the north aisle is that of J. Philips, author of the poem on Cider; he died in 1708, aged 32.

St. Peter's church, rebuilt about 1390, and now united with St. Owens; All Saints church, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Windsor, with the parish of St. Martin annexed; and St. Nicholas church, in the patronage of the Crown, are all that remain of the five churches contained in the city before the civil wars. Coningsby Hospital, founded by Sir Thomas Coningsby in 1614, is situated without Widemarsh Gate. The Hampton Court estate is charged with the support of this hospital, and the proprietor of that estate is the governor.

The castle walks, on the east side of the city, kept in order by the Corporation, are the admiration of every visitor; hence is a beautiful view of the principal buildings of the city, the spires of St. Peter and All Saints churches, and the Infirmary: beyond are Dynedor Hill and the woods of Rotherwas; towards the south-west the view is terminated by the Black Mountains and the more distant hills of Wales.

The Hereford and Gloucester Canal commences at this city, and crosses the Lugg below Sutton St. Michael and Sutton St. Nicholas, to West Hide, Canon Froome, and Munsley; then crosses the Leden below Bosbury, to Ledbury and Dimmington, whence it passes by Newent to Gloucester. Near the city of Hereford is a tunnel of 440 yards in length; there is also another, about the middle of its course, 1320 yards long.

This city returns two members to Parliament, a privilege it has enjoyed since 23rd Edw. I., the right of election being vested in the citizens and freemen, amounting to 1200. The present members are the Right Hon. John Viscount Eastnor, eldest son of Earl Somers, of Reigate Priory, Surrey; and Edward Bolton Clive, Esq. of Whitfield, in this county.

HOLMER, 2 miles N. from Hereford, contains, with Shelwick, to which it is united, 90 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. Huntington is a chapelry of this parish.

KENCHESTER, on the Eigne, 5 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 16 houses, and 94 inhabitants; the Magna Castra of the Romans. The form of this station inclines to a parallelogram; the area, raised above the level of the adjacent country, was surrounded by a wall, the foundations of which may be traced, although overgrown with hedges and fruit-trees. Towards the east end is a large fragment called the Chair; it is of Roman work, and supposed to have been a temple. Here, in 1669, was discovered a tessellated pavement. The Watling Street, entering this county from Shropshire near Leintwardine, proceeds by Stretford and Portway to Kenchester, and inclining to the south-west it crosses the Wye near the Weir, and passing Kingston, Dore, and Longtown, proceeds to Abergavenny, the Gobanium of the Romans.

MANSELL-GAMAGE, 8 miles W. from Hereford, contains 27 houses, and 154 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

MANSELL-LACY, 2½ miles E. from the above, contains 53 houses, and 287 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* A little higher up on the same stream is Foxley, the seat of Sir Uvedale Price, Bart. author of "Essays on the Picturesque;" the approach to it from this village is near the rivulet that flows through the valley between the Foxley and the Wormsley Hills, which rise to a considerable elevation, and are covered with fine trees, forming a kind of woody amphitheatre round the mansion, which is situated on the western declivity, commanding beautiful views over the Vale of Hereford. From the house a ride of about two miles, on the side of the eminence, conducts to the Lady Lift, which forms part of the demesne of Foxley. The views hence are very extensive, the country swelling into bold hills mantled with rich woods, or declining into luxuriant vales teeming with fertility, and animated by numerous springs; the orchards, cornfields, hop-grounds, and meadows being intermingled with gentlemen's seats and villages, and bounded by a bold range of distant mountains. Sir Uvedale Price, created a baronet 19th Dec. 1827, is descended from Judge Price and the heiress of the family of Rodd, the ancient possessors of this manor.

MONNINGTON-UPON-WYE, 8 miles W. from Hereford, contains 22 houses, and 116 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 27*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* This estate was formerly the property of a family of the same name, one of whom married a daughter of the famous Owen Glendower. This chieftain is traditionally represented to have sought refuge and to have been buried here.

MORTON-UPON-LUGG, 4 miles N. from Hereford, contains 18 houses, and 110 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.*

NORTON CANON, 9½ miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 70 houses, and 347 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

PIPE, 3 miles N. from Hereford, together with Lyde, to which it is united, contains 25 houses, and 141 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

STAUNTON-UPON-WYE, 9 miles W. from Hereford, contains 101 houses, and 514 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford.

STRETTON SUGWAS, 4 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 28 houses, and 151 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* At Sugwas, on the banks of the Wye, was a residence and chapel of the Bishops of Hereford. It was the favourite retirement of Bishop Cantilupe, and was last inhabited by Bishop Gilbert Ironside, who died in 1701. The chapel was demolished in 1792, and a dwelling-house erected on the spot.

WELLINGTON, 5½ miles N. from Hereford, and 6½ S. from Leominster, contains 145 houses, and 672 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

WORMSLEY, 8 miles N.W. from Hereford, and 3 miles S.E. from Weobly, contains 24 houses, and 131 inhabitants.
Wormsley Grange is the seat of James Lyre, Esq.

YAZOR, 8 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 32 houses, and 181 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.*

5. Huntington Hundred,

On the west side of the county, where it is bounded by Radnorshire; on the north it is bounded by Wigmore hundred; on the east by Stretford and Webtree hundreds; and on the south by Ewyas Lacy hundred.

BRILLEY, 5½ miles S. from Kington, and 5 miles N. from Hay, contains 95 houses, and 506 inhabitants. It is situated on a branch of the Wye, on the E. side of the Brilley Hills.

CLIFFORD, on the banks of the Wye, near its entrance into the county, 2½ miles N. from Hay, contains 112 houses, and 816 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 10*s.* Vowmine is a township of this parish. Clifford Castle, built by William Fitz Osborne, Earl of Hereford, became the baronial seat of the Lords Clifford. It stands on a bold eminence rising from the banks of the river. Rosamond, the fair but unfortunate mistress of Henry II., is said to have been born in this castle. In the reign of Henry I. Simon Fitz Walter founded here a cell of Cluniac monks, subordinate to the Priory at Lewes in Sussex, the revenues of which, at the Dissolution, were 65*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* annually.

EARDISLEY, 5 miles S. from Kington, contains 136 houses, and 683 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here was formerly a castle, built for the defence of the borders. Eardisley Park is the seat of Thomas Perry, Esq.

HUNTINGTON, 3 miles S.W. from Kington, on the borders of Radnorshire, contains 36 houses, and 215 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Here are the ruins of a castle, built for defence of the marches, which gave name to the hundred.

KINGTON, or Kyneton, on the river Arrow, 155 miles from London, and 19 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 360 houses, and 1980 inhabitants. Here is a manufacture of narrow cloth, an iron-foundry, nail-manufactory, and a market on Wednesday. The markets, on the Wednesdays before Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas, are very considerable for corn, cattle, and cloth. Fairs, on Wednesday before Easter, on Whitmonday, 22nd July, and 13th September. At the entrance of the town is a free grammar-school, endowed by Lady Watkins.
The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very irregular structure, having a detached tower surmounted by a spire, of a singular form. It is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. On the summit of Bradnor mountain, on the N. side of the town, are the remains of a square encampment.
There are several townships of this parish, viz. Barton, Bradnor and Rustrock, Chickward, Pembers, Oak-Lilwall, and Both-Hergests.

WHITNEY, 5 miles N.E. from Hay, contains 56 houses, and 268 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 8*s.* Whitney Court is the seat of Tomkins Dew, Esq.

WILLERSEY, about 3 miles E. from the above, is a parish containing only one house.

WINFORTON, 6 miles N.E. from Hay, contains 34 houses, and 169 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Here was a hermitage founded by a monk of Wormeley Priory, temp. Edward I. on an island of the Wye. The name Chapel Close is supposed to mark its site.

6. Radlow Hundred,

On the east side of the county, where it is bordered by Worcestershire, is bounded on the north-west by Broxash hundred; on the west by Grimsworth hundred; and on the south by Greytree hundred and Gloucestershire.

ASHPERTON, 5½ miles N.W. from Ledbury, contains 90 houses, and 398 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

AYLTON, 3 miles W. from Ledbury, contains 17 houses, and 100 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

BISHOPS FROOME, 9 miles N. from Ledbury, and 4 miles S. from Bromyard, contains 69 houses, and 298 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* The townships of Eggleton, Halmonds-Froome, Leadon and Walton, are in this parish.

BOSBURY, on the Leden, 4½ miles N. from Ledbury, contains 205 houses, and 966 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. Upleadon is united with this parish.

CANON FROOME, 4½ miles N.W. from Ledbury, is situated on the river Froome, and contains 16 houses, and 105 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

CASTLE FROOME, 7 miles N. from Ledbury, on the W. side of the Froome Hills, contains 34 houses, and 180 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

CODDINGTON, 3 miles N. from Ledbury, contains 29 houses, and 184 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chester. Between this village and Ledbury, on the Dog Hill, is Hope End, the seat of Edward Moulton Barrett, Esq., which is built in the Moorish style.

COLWALL, 3½ miles N. from Ledbury, on the river Cradley, contains 142 houses, and 782 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

CRADLEY, East and West, are united in one parish, situated 8 miles N. from Ledbury, on the river of the same name, and contain 254 houses, and 1459 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

DONNINGTON, 2 miles S. from Ledbury, on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 23 houses, and 103 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* Eastward of the village is the Vineyard Camp, the area of which is now cultivated.

EASTNOR, in a beautiful situation, 1½ mile E. from Ledbury, contains 89 houses, and 475 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. Near it is Eastnor Castle, the seat of Earl Somers, Lord Lieutenant of the county. The mansion erected by Smirke, in the style of the ancient Baronial Castle, consists of a massive central tower, and four circular turrets at the angles, connected by embattled walls, giving externally the appearance of a fortress, but uniting in the interior arrangement the grandeur of early time with the elegancies of modern refinement. The entrance hall, sixty feet long, is groined and panelled with the oak of the neighbouring woods; and the several apartments with which it communicates by ante-rooms are of corresponding size. The situation of Eastnor Castle is extremely fine, on the western side of the Malvern Hills, amidst an amphitheatre of romantic beauties, where the scene is diversified and broken by numerous swelling heights, crowned with a profusion of hanging foliage. From these wooded eminences the prospect is extensive, over plantations of fruit-trees and rich meadow lands. On the north-eastern side of the castle two rivulets unite and are formed into a lake. In the park are many remarkably large and flourishing oaks, and contiguous to the castle are plantations of very thick shrubberies. John Lord Somers, of Evesham, county Worcester, was created Earl Somers and Viscount Eastnor, 9th July 1821. In the church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, are several very handsome monuments of the Cocks family, with sculpture, by Stewart, and Scheemaker.

Two miles eastward of the seat of Earl Somers, in a glen formed by the Malvern Hills, is the site of Bransill Castle, which was of a square form with a round tower at each angle, and surrounded by a double moat. It is now wholly demolished. Two miles northward from this spot is the Herefordshire Beacon, one of the most important hill fortresses in the kingdom, situated on the summit of one of the highest ridges of the Malvern Hills, 1444 feet above the level of the sea. Its amazing belts of ramparts and trenches, its great extent and well-chosen situation, which commands the only pass through the Malvern Hills, combine to establish its British origin. The views from the summit of this majestic work, include a great extent of country, where Herefordshire assumes a very distinct character to that of the adjoining counties of Worcester and Gloucester. It appears to be composed of an immense continuation of conical and irregular hills, principally covered with fine timber; the deep shadows of its luxuriant foliage projecting over the most beautiful vales, abounding with orchards, corn-fields, and hop-grounds. The distance in the west is finely marked by the range of the Black Mountains and the hills of Radnorshire. The prospects on the east and south-east are yet more extensive, including a very large portion of Gloucestershire and Worcestershire, which appear variegated by all the charms of nature and cultivation. The Herefordshire Beacon itself is eminently conspicuous for many miles round, and forms an object of uncommon grandeur.

EVESBATCH, on the borders of Worcestershire, 9 miles N. from Ledbury, and 5 miles S. from Bromyard, contains 12 houses, and 87 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 1*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*

LEDBURY, 120 miles from London, and 14 miles E. from Hereford, is situated on a gentle declivity within a pleasant valley, formed by the Dog Hill and other eminences, one mile eastward of the river Leden, whence the town derives its name, containing 636 houses, and 3421 inhabitants. It consists chiefly of two streets crossing each other at right angles. The chief manufactories are of ropes and sacking. Here is a free school and a hospital, refounded by Queen Elizabeth. It has a market on Tuesday; and fairs, Monday before Easter, 22nd June, 2nd October, and 21st December. The Hereford and Gloucester Canal passes the town.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The Bishop of Hereford appoints two portioners or prebendaries of the over and nether Hall, who are the joint patrons of the living. The church is a large building, which has undergone many alterations at different periods. On the north side of the edifice is a very handsome portion of the deacon's lodgings, supposed to have been originally founded by John Stoke. At the east end of the north aisle is an ancient tomb with a recumbent figure of a female. In the chancel is buried John Thornton, D.D. vice-chancellor of Oxford, and master of the hospital in this town, originally founded by Hugh Foliot, Bishop of Hereford, dedicated to God and St. Katherine, for the reception of poor people and travellers. The Bishops of Hereford had a palace here with a park, which was alienated from the see in the reign of Elizabeth. Parkhold is a township of Ledbury. Underdown, the seat of R. Webb, Esq., is near the town.

About 1½ mile N.W. from Ledbury is Wall Hills, surrounded by large trees and crowned by a spacious encampment, the area of which comprehends above thirty acres, now appropriated to the growth of corn and hops. It had three entrances, one of them called the King's Gate. Many antiquities have been found in ploughing the area.

LUGWARDINE, 2 miles E. from Hereford, on the river Lugg, contains 132 houses, and 618 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 22*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

Longworth, the seat of Robert Biddulph Phillips, Esq., is about a mile south of the village. It was built by Keck, about 1787, and commands a fine view of the Malvern Hills on the east, and of the Black Mountains on the west; on the south is the village of Mordiford, embosomed in trees, with a distant view of Sufton-House. The old manor-house of Longworth or Longford, formerly the seat of the Walwyn family, is now a farm-house. It is surrounded by a moat, and contains a small domestic chapel, which is mentioned in a deed temp. Hen. VI. and is probably about that age.

LITTLE MARCLE, 2½ miles W. from Ledbury, contains 25 houses, and 168 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*

MORTON-JEFFERIES, 5 miles S.W. from Bromyard, in a detached portion of this hundred, contains 10 houses, and 64 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

MUNSLEY, 3 miles N.W. from Ledbury, on a branch of the river Leden, contains 34 houses, and 182 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Near the village is Mainstone Court, the seat of Captain Johnstone.

PIXLEY, 3 miles W. from Ledbury, contains 18 houses, and 132 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

STOKE EDITH, 8 miles W. from Ledbury, and 7 miles E. from Hereford, contains 57 houses, and 302 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, the pious daughter of King Egbert, is a rectory, value 15*l.* West Hide is a chapelry of this parish. Near the church is the mansion of Edward Foley, Esq. Stoke Edith stands on elevated ground in a park and pleasure-grounds, laid out by Repton, which display the most beautiful scenery, amidst extensive shrubberies and forest trees. The house was built in the reign of Queen Anne, and consists of a centre enriched by four Corinthian pilasters and a pediment, with lateral wings containing the offices. The hall and staircase are painted by Thornhill, and the principal rooms contain a collection of family portraits. A drive of eight miles within the park presents a great variety of the most delightful views. From one point thirteen different counties are said to be visible. The country round is most fertile, orchards, corn-fields, and rich meadows are interspersed with heights crowned with wood, and the beautiful meanderings of the Wye. It is situated 16 miles from Great Malvern in Worcestershire, of which place Mr. Foley is the principal proprietor. Stoke Edith was the principal seat of the Foley family, until Thomas, second Lord Foley, succeeded to Witley in Worcestershire, when this estate was left to his second son Edward Foley, M.P. for Worcestershire.

STRETTON GRANDSOME, 7 miles N.W. from Ledbury, contains 28 houses, and 150 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

TARRINGTON, 7 miles W. from Ledbury, and about the same distance E. from Hereford, contains 88 houses, and 500 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*

WESTON BEGGARD, 5 miles E. from Hereford, on the Froome, contains 55 houses, and 270 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

YARKHILL, 7 miles W. from Hereford, and 8 miles E. from Ledbury, contains 82 houses, and 435 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

7. Stretford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wigmore hundred; on the east by Wolphy hundred; on the south by Grimsworth hundred, and a part of Webtree hundred; and on the west by Huntington hundred.

ALMELEY, 6 miles S. from Kington, contains 141 houses, and 699 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, vaule 6*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patron age of the Bishop of Hereford. Hopleys Green and Logaston, in Wolphy hundred, are townships of this parish.

BIRLEY, 5 miles S.E. from Pembridge, contains 29 houses, and 119 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 9*s.*

DILWYN, 6 miles S.W. from Leominster, contains 199 houses, and 1026 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. Newton, one mile southward, is the seat of William Phillips, Esq., and Henwood is the seat of — Lacon Lamb, Esq.

EARDISLAND, on the Arrow, 5 miles W. from Leominster, contains 169 houses, and 791 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

KINGSLAND, 4 miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 196 houses, and 989 inhabitants; with a fair 10th October. It is a rectory, value 31*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* The very fine church, dedicated to St. Michael, has an embattled tower, a nave with side aisles, and a chancel. Kingsland was part of the great inheritance of the Mortimers. The immediate site of the battle of Mortimer's Cross, fought between the houses of York and Lancaster, on Candlemas Eve 1461, was Kingsland Field, a level though not extensive plain north of the village. Near Mortimer's Cross, in an angle of two roads, a stone with an inscription to commemorate the spot was erected by subscription in 1799.

KING'S PYON, 6 miles S. from Leominster, and 9 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 76 houses, and 376 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

KINNERSLEY, 6 miles S.E. from Kington, and 12 miles N.W. from Hereford, contains 66 houses, and 340 inhabitants, including the township of New Church in Wolphy hundred. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Kinnersley Castle is the seat of John Altham Graham Clarke, Esq.

LETTON, 8 miles S. from Kington, on the N. bank of the river Wye, is situated partly in Wolphy hundred, and contains 32 houses, and 163 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* Letton Court is the seat of Joshua Blisset, Esq.

LYONS-HALL, 3 miles S.E. from Kington, contains 166 houses, and 896 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. Here are some remains of the outer walls of a castle. In the reign of Edward I., William Lord Touchet held it, and obtained a license of free warren for this manor, together with a grant of a market and annual fair for the town, both long since disused. In the succeeding reign the castle was demolished. The estate was afterwards possessed by the Marbury family.

MONKLAND, or Monklow, on the river Arrow, 3 miles S.W. from Leominster, contains 43 houses, and 187 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. Here was a priory of Benedictines subordinate to St. Peter's Abbey at Conches in Normandy. Two miles west from the village is Burton Court, the seat of William Evans, Esq.

PEMBRIDGE, 6 miles E. from Kington, and 7 miles W. from Leominster, on the south bank of the river Arrow, contains 267 houses, and 1203 inhabitants. It was part of the estate of the Mortimers, who procured a grant of a market; and Henry I. granted a charter of liberties to the town. The market has long been disused; but there are fairs 12th May and 22d Nov., and a manufactory of woollen cloth. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 36*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford. Henry de Pembruge or Pembridge was sheriff of the county, temp. Henry III., and Sir Richard de Pembridge was made K.G. by Edward III. In this parish are the hamlets of Broxwood, Byletts, Linne, Marston, Milton, Monkbridge, Strangworth, and Weston.

SHOBDON, 8 miles N.W. from Leominster, and 7 miles N.E. from Kington, contains 103 houses, and 536 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, originally founded by Oliver de Merlylond, steward to Hugh Mortimer, about 1140, was rebuilt at the expense of Lord Viscount Bateman, Lord Lieutenant of this county, who died in 1802. Shobdon Court, his lordship's estate and residence, descended to its present proprietor, William Hanbury, Esq., of Kelmarsh, in Northamptonshire. The park is between three and four miles in extent, and includes some rich and picturesque scenery.

STRETFORD, on a branch of the river Arrow, 4 miles S.W. from Leominster, contains 8 houses, and 48 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cosmo and St. Damian, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

WEOBLEY, 147 miles from London, and 12 miles N.W. from Hereford, in the road to Kington, contains 159 houses, and 739 inhabitants. It is an ancient town, and has a market on Thursday, and fairs on Holy Thursday and three weeks after Holy Thursday. The government is committed to two constables, chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. It returns 2 members to parliament. This privilege was granted 23 Edw. I. and confirmed 16 Charles I., the right of election being vested in the inhabitants of the ancient burgage houses of 20*s.* value per annum and upwards, residing in the said houses forty days before the election, paying scot and lot, and who shall be resident in such houses at the time of the election, amounting to eighty-five. The present members are the Right Hon. Sir George Cockburn and the Right Hon. Lord William Thynne, son of the Marques of Bath. It formed part of the barony of the Lacys; from whom it descended to the Vernons, and at length became the principal lordship of the Devereux family. On the south side of the town stood a castle, which was taken from the Empress Maud by King Stephen. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St Paul, is spacious: it is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 1*s.* In the chancel are two ancient monuments; one of which has been assigned by Dr. Meyrick to Sir John Marbury and his lady Alicia, temp. Hen. VI., and the other to a period somewhat earlier, after a careful examination of the costume of the sculptured figures.

Garnstone House, the seat of Samuel Peploe, Esq., is about a mile south of Weobly, near the Foxley Hills, in a finely wooded country extending southward to the river Wye. The mansion, in the castellated style, from designs by Nash, has a front of considerable extent. Colonel Birch, who conducted the siege of Goodrich Castle in 1646, was of Garnstone, from whose family the present proprietor inherited the estate.

8. Wiebtree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Stretford and Grimsworth hundreds; on the east by Greytree and Wormelow hundreds; on the south by a small part of Monmouthshire; on the south-west by Ewias Lacy hundred, and on the west by Huntington hundred.

ABBEY DORE, on the river Dore, 12 miles S.W. from Hereford, in the Golden Vale, contains 93 houses, and 523 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.*

Here was formerly an Abbey for Cistercian monks, founded by Robert Lord of Ewyas Harold, about the reign of Stephen. Besides the valuable endowment of the founder, and considerable benefactions by other eminent persons, King John granted the monks all the land between the river Dore and Trivel-brook. King Edward I., on his accession to the throne, commissioned the Abbot of Dore to receive the oath of allegiance in his name from Llewellyn Prince of Wales. In the reign of Edward III. the Abbot of Dore, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Sir William Clayton were constituted special ministers to treat with Philip King of France. At the Dissolution the revenues of this abbey were estimated at 118*l.* per annum. The site and demesne lands were granted to John Scudamore, Esq., of Hom Lacy. The chapter-house, cloister, and other buildings belonging to the abbey, were demolished soon after its suppression, together with part of the church. John Viscount Scudamore in 1633 restored the church, and it was reconsecrated by the Bishop of St. Davids the next year. This edifice, dedicated to the Holy Trinity and St. Mary, consists of a chancel, transept, and tower, the nave being entirely destroyed. At the east end of the chancel are three windows filled with painted glass, of the Ascension, the Evangelists, and St. Peter, St. Andrew, St. James, and

St. John, with appropriate legends. Behind the altar is a chapel, containing a monument said to be that of Robert the founder. In the churchyard is a tomb erected in memory of the Rev. Matthew Gibson, rector, who printed an account of the ancient and present state of the churches of Dore, Hom Lacy, and of Hempsted near Gloucester, in 1727. He died in 1740.

ALLENSMORE, 4 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 116 houses, and 513 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5l. 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Hereford.

BACTON, 12 miles S.W. from Hereford, in the Golden Vale, contains 23 houses, and 120 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3l. 13*s.* 4*d.* In the chancel of the church is the monument of Blanche Parry, bedchamber-woman to Queen Elizabeth, with a long inscription. Under an arch the Queen is represented attended by her maid, who is kneeling and presenting a book. Her loyalty was happily blended with charitable intentions to the poor of her native parish, as appears by a codicil to her will dated 1589.

BLAKEMERE, 10 miles W. from Hereford, contains 32 houses, and 163 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3l., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

BREDWARDINE, on the banks of the Wye, 11 miles W. from Hereford, contains 67 houses, and 379 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7l. 18*s.* 1*d.* The remains of an ancient castle here are said to have furnished the materials used in the erection of the old Court-house at Moccas, about two miles distant. It gave name to the family of Thomas Bredwardine, Archbishop of Canterbury in 1349, surnamed the Profound Doctor, for his great learning. Cyn Hill or King Arthur's Tablet is about a mile south from Bredwardine.

UPPER BULLINGHAM, 2 miles S. from Hereford, contains 72 houses, and 376 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Lower Bullingham, a mile north. It is a curacy.

CALLOW, 4 miles S. from Hereford, contains 28 houses, and 139 inhabitants. It is a curacy. On the hill are the remains of two Roman encampments.

CLEHONGER, 3 miles W. from Hereford, contains 74 houses, and 339 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4l. 6*s.* 8*d.*

ST. DEVEREUX, on the river Worme, 7 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 39 houses, and 208 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Didley. It is a rectory, value 6l. 15*s.* 7*d.*

DINEDOR, 3½ miles S.E. from Hereford, contains 48 houses, and 301 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8l. 9*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the University of Oxford. On Dinedor Hill are vestiges of an encampment. The views from its summit are extremely fine. Hereford rises on the banks of the Wye; and beyond it is a beautiful vale bounded by the mountains of Wales; in the N. and N.E. are the Clee Hills, and on the E. the Malvern Hills; southward is a pleasant variegated country animated by the Wye, and on the S.W. are the Hatterel Hills or Black Mountains. Dinedor Hill is cultivated to the extreme verge of the entrenchment, the bank of which is covered with underwood. The area is a large cornfield, and several cottages are scattered on its sides. Rotherwas, the seat of Charles Bodenham, Esq., was erected in 1732. The grounds stretching towards the banks of the Wye are level and fertile, and are backed by extensive woods and Dinedor Hill. When King James I. visited the ancient mansion at Rotherwas, he dismissed his numerous followers with an expression still frequently used in this part of the country, "You know we cannot all live at Rotherwas."

DORSTONE is situated at the head of the Golden Vale, 13 miles W. from Hereford. It contains 138 houses, and 591 inhabitants. Here was formerly a castle, the origin of which does not appear to be recorded. It has fairs, 27th April, 18th May, 27th Sept., and 18th Nov., and is a vicarage, value 7l. 11*s.* 10*d.* About 1½ mile south from Dorston in the same vale is Snodhill. Some very fine woods adorn the sides of the hills, on one of these is the ruin of Snodhill Castle, to which belonged a free chapel and a park: it was the seat of the Lords Chandos. Richard Earl of Warwick held it in the reign of Henry VI. in right of his wife Anne: at his death it devolved to the Crown. Queen Elizabeth afterwards granted it to Sir Robert Dudley, K.G.

Eastward from Dorstone is a range of bold hills extending nearly 10 miles in a north-east direction, as King Arthur's Hill, Stockley Hill, and Mawbach Hill: on the summit of the former is a cromlech called King Arthur's Tablet.

DULAS, 12 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 10 houses, and 60 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

EATON-BISHOP, 4 miles W. from Hereford, contains 80 houses, and 452 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford, and derived its name as being a manor belonging to the Bishops of Hereford. Here is a very large encampment of thirty acres in extent.

EWYAS HAROLD, on a branch of the river Dore, 12 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 86 houses, and 412 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of St. Davids. On an eminence was formerly a castle with a park attached. It was the seat of Harold, son of Ralph the Anglo-Saxon Earl of Hereford, and father of Robert, founder of Dore Abbey. Here was also a priory of Black Monks, removed from Dulas, where it had been originally founded. It was a cell to St. Peter's Abbey, Gloucester, and was finally removed there in 1338.

HAYWOOD FOREST LIBERTY, 3 miles S. from Hereford, contains 9 houses, and 63 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial.

HOM LACY, on the banks of the Wye, 6 miles S.E. from Hereford, contains 70 houses, and 389 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8l.

Hom Lacy Court, the seat of Colonel Scudamore, was rebuilt by John, second Viscount Scudamore. It is of dark stone: the gardens, with the terraces and yew hedges, are a fine unaltered specimen of the style of gardening in the reign of Charles II. Part of the original mansion, built by John Scudamore, Esq., one of the Gentlemen Ushers to Henry VIII., remains in the offices. John, the first viscount of this family, is celebrated by Philips as having introduced the red-streak apple to general notice. At the death of the Duchess of Norfolk many claimants to the Scudamore estate appeared. E. F. Stanhope, Esq., who has taken the name of Scudamore, obtained half; the rest has been divided between Lieut.-Gen. Burr and Mr. Parsons, who has taken the name of Higford.

KENDER CHURCH, on the banks of the Dore, 11 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 14 houses, and 77 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

KENTCHURCH, 11 miles S.W. from Hereford, on the borders of Monmouthshire, contains 51 houses, and 311 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Kentchurch Park is the seat of John Lucy Scudamore, Esq.; it is between three and four miles in circumference, and contains some very fine timber. The mansion was erected by the late Colonel Scudamore, after designs by Nash, with the addition of a porch by Tudor of Monmouth. It stands on the site of the old house, a part of which remains. The park is admired for its wild and picturesque scenery. Grosmont Castle, in Monmouthshire, is conspicuous, bounded by the lofty range of the Black Mountains on the west, while in the east Garway Hill rises to a considerable height above the majestic woods of the park.

KINGSTONE, 6 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 89 houses, and 406 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6l. 6*s.* 8*d.*

MADLEY, 7 miles W. from Hereford, contains 191 houses, and 938 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

MOCCAS, on the banks of the Wye, 10 miles W. from Hereford, contains 35 houses, and 185 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6l. 4*s.* 4*d.* Moccas Court, the seat of Sir George Cornwall, Bart., stands in a large park finely wooded, partly on the ascent of Stock-ley Hill, the summit of which is remarkable for the extent and variety of prospect. Velters Cornwall, Esq., of Moccas, M.P. for the county, left at his decease an only daughter and heiress, married to Sir George Amyand, created baronet 4th Aug. 1764, who afterwards took the name of Cornwall.

PETERCHURCH, on the river Dore, 12 miles W. from Hereford, contains 128 houses, and 686 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital.

PRESTON-UPON-WYE, 8 miles W. from Hereford, contains 42 houses, and 272 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

THRUXTON, 6 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 12 houses, and 54 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Hereford. Whitfield, the seat of Edward B. Clive, Esq. is about a mile south from the village.

TIBERTON, 7 miles W. from Hereford, contains 27 houses, and 146 inhabitants. Tiberton Court is the seat of — Brydges, Esq.

TURNASTONE, on the river Dore, 10 miles W. from Hereford, contains 11 houses, and 60 inhabitants.

VOW CHURCH, immediately opposite to the above on the same river, contains 66 houses, and 367 inhabitants, including the townships of Monnington and Straddle.

WORMBRIDGE, 9 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 19 houses, and 95 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Worme, which rises near Allen's Moat, and falls into the Monnow, about 3 miles below Wormbridge.

9. Wigmore Hundred,

In the northern part of the county, where it is bounded by Shropshire; on the east by Wolphy hundred; on the south by Stretford and Huntington hundreds; and on the west by Radnorshire.

ASTON, 4 miles S.W. from Ludlow, in Shropshire, contains 12 houses, and 54 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

AYMESTREY, on the river Lugg, 8 miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 145 houses, and 717 inhabitants. Earls Lenthall, and Upper Ley, are townships of this parish. The church, dedicated to St. John and St. Alkmund, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. On the Black Hill, an eminence west of Aymestrey, is an encampment of a square form. The valley through which the Lugg flows is here extremely rich and picturesque. Aymestrey bridge, rocks, hanging woods, and the meadows, form a most beautiful scene. Mortimer's Cross, partly in the hundred of Stretford, is in this parish.

BRAMPTON BRYAN, on the borders of Radnorshire and the banks of the Teme, 9 miles W. from Ludlow, contains 20 houses, and 101 inhabitants. It has a fair, 22nd June. The townships of Boreford and Tedwardine are in this parish, as is also the Lordship of Stanage in Radnorshire. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 11*s.* Brampton Park, the seat of the Earl of Oxford, is nearly 6 miles in circumference, and occupies a considerable portion of an extensive eminence. In the Wilderness, near the church, are some of the largest and most flourishing trees in England. The ancient castle came into the possession of the family of its present proprietor by the marriage of Robert Harley with Margaret, daughter and coheiress of Bryan de Brampton, 24 Edw. I., and was held of the king as of the Honor of Wigmore. The Gate House, flanked by two round towers, stands about 100 yards north from the church. In the church are some monuments of the Harley family.

The townships of Buxton and Coxall, N. of Brampton Bryan, on the opposite bank of the Teme, are in Bucknill parish, Shropshire; they contain 21 houses, and 134 inhabitants.

BURRINGTON, on the Teme, 4½ miles W. from Ludlow, contains 42 houses, and 194 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

BYTON, 4 miles E. from Presteign, in Radnorshire, contains 32 houses, and 167 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DOWNTON, on the Teme, 5 miles W. from Ludlow, contains 13 houses, and 111 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Downton Castle, the seat of Thomas Andrew Knight, Esq., was erected in 1774, under the direction of the late Richard Payne Knight, Esq., author of "The Principles of Taste." It contains an excellent library; but upon the death of its late possessor, in 1824, the medals, drawings, and bronzes, were bequeathed to the British Museum. The castellated style of the house was probably designed to harmonize with the beautifully romantic scenery of the park. It stands on an eminence, whence the ground slopes to the river Teme, which, rising in the mountains of Wales, takes its course through the Vale of Brampton Bryan, beneath the Camp of Cæsar; and after passing Downton, over a rocky bed, runs to Oakley, the seat of the Honourable Robert Clive, M.P. The opposite bank of the river is clothed with woods, through which a path opens upon the most delightful scenery: near this spot is a bridge over the Teme; and about 1½ mile from the mansion, a mill adds greatly to the interesting view.

ELTON, 5 miles S.W. from Ludlow, contains 16 houses, and 93 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

KINSHAM, 3 miles E. from Presteign, contains 20 houses, and 107 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

KNILL, on the borders of Radnorshire, 4 miles from Presteign, contains 17 houses, and 79 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.* Knill Court, the residence of the late Sir Samuel Romilly, now the seat of Col. Walsham Garbett, is near the church.

LEINTHALL-STARKES, 6 miles S.W. from Ludlow, contains 29 houses, and 131 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LEINTWARDINE, 7 miles W. from Ludlow, contains 63 houses, and 346 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, which contains some painted glass in the windows, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* Adforton, Payton, Grange, Brakes, Heath, Jay, Kenton, Marlow, Walford, Letton, Newton, Whitton and Trippleton, are all townships of this parish. which contains, including these, 1277 inhabitants. The Forest of Mocktree, in this parish, now disafforested, suffered the same changes as Bringwood Chase, which is separated from it only by the river Teme.

General Sir Banaster Tarleton, of Leintwardine, was created baronet 23rd January, 1817.

LINGEN, 4 miles N.W. from Presteign, contains 56 houses, and 284 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Near the church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is a mount, the site of an ancient castle, the seat of a family of the same name. Sir Henry Lingen, in the reign of Charles I., besieged Brampton Bryan Castle, for which his estates were sequestered by Parliament; but Sir Robert Harley obtained a restitution for his widow. All this part of the county is extremely hilly, particularly towards Darvold Forest, on the east. On the northern extremity of Darvold Hill are vestiges of a small encampment. The townships of Coombe, Litton, Rod, Nash, Little Brampton, Stapleton, Frog Street, and Willey, are in the parish of Presteign, in Radnorshire. Letton is in a detached part of this county, entirely surrounded by Radnorshire.

At Stapleton, one mile north from Presteign, was a castle anciently belonging to the Mortimers, Earls of March. Stapleton Hill is a considerable eminence northward of the village.

The township of Lower Harpton is part of the parish of Old Radnor, in Radnorshire. Harpton Court is the seat of Thomas Frankland Lewis, Esq.

STANTON-UPON-ARROW, 5 miles N.E. from Kington, contains 68 houses, and 385 inhabitants. It is partly in Stretford hundred, and is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

TITLEY, 3 miles N.E. from Kington, contains 75 houses, and 304 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Titley Court is the seat of William Greenly, Esq.; and one mile west is Eywood, the principal seat of the Earl of Oxford, who possesses very considerable landed property in the N.W. part of this county. The grounds at Eywood are ornamented with some fine plantations, and display a great diversity of beautiful scenery. One mile and a half N. from Titley is Wapley Hill, the western extremity of which is crowned with an extensive encampment; the slope of the eminence is finely covered with wood, and its north-western extremity is washed by a small river which forms one of the sources of the Lugg.

WIGMORE, 8½ miles S.W. from Ludlow, in a very romantic situation, on the slope of an immense mountain of bare rock. The streets of the village are the undisturbed masses of stone. It contains 92 houses, and 429 inhabitants, which includes Limebrook township. The church stands on the very pinnacle of the hill and close to a precipice, the chasms of which are filled by large trees. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

On a hill westward from the village, irregularly intersected by ravines and covered with underwood, are the remains of Wigmore Castle, said to have been built by William Fitz Osborne, Earl of Hereford, and which afterwards became the head of the Barony of the Mortimers, Earls of March. It is reputed one of the most ancient Honors in England, and has 21 manors that owe suit to the Honor Court held here every six weeks. All the circuit of the land wherein these manors lie is called Wigmore land. The independent authority which the Mortimers possessed on the marches or borders cherished an almost unconquerable intrepidity of spirit, which, united with the influence acquired from their immense estates, enabled them more than once to disturb the peace of the kingdom; when at length the throne itself became the patrimony of their descendant Edward IV. The most perfect parts of the castle now remaining are the external walls, which are strengthened by a wet ditch round the foot of the hill; the Gate House, with a square tower on the left of the entrance, and another on the right, which is circular. Within the area, on the summit of a high artificial mount, are the walls of the Keep tower; it was of an oblong form, and there is every reason to believe it was erected in the 12th century. Lower down are castellated remains of later date. On the western side of the castle is a hill still more elevated, the site of the ancient park, now covered with wood. Wigmore Castle was granted to Sir Gelly Meyrick by Queen Elizabeth, through the favour of the Earl of Essex, and held it for a short time before his execution, when it fell to the Crown. The descendants of Sir Gelly Meyrick continued in the Vale of Wigmore until their property in Lucton and Eyton were alienated by Dr. Meyrick's grandfather. Sir Thomas Harley, of Brampton Bryan, obtained from King James I. a grant of the Honor and Castle of Wigmore, as descendants of the Mortimers, its former lords. His great-grandson, Sir Robert Harley, an eminent statesman in the reign of Queen Anne, was created Lord Harley, of Wigmore, Earl Mortimer, and Earl of Oxford, 24th May, 1711.

About one mile from Wigmore, on the north, is the site of an Abbey founded by Ralph Mortimer, and his son Hugh, previously to the year 1179, for Augustine Canons. In the Abbey Church many of the Mortimers were buried, and amongst them were five Earls of March. All the monuments are destroyed, and nothing remains of the building but the bare walls. At the Dissolution its revenues were estimated at 302*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*

10. Wolphy Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Shropshire; on the east by Worcestershire and Broxash hundred; on the south by Grimsworth hundred; and on the west by Wigmore and Stretford hundreds.

BRIMFIELD, 5 miles S. from Ludlow, and 6 miles N. from Leominster, contains 118 houses, and 532 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Here was a College of Secular Canons in the reign of Henry I., but in 1155 they resigned their lands to the Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester. The Kington and Leominster Canal crosses the Teme near the village. Brimfield Court is the seat of J. Child, Esq.

CROFT, 5 miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 22 houses, and 119 inhabitants, including the township of Newton. It is a curacy. Croft Castle, the ancient seat of the Croft family, has long been demolished. An extensive park ranges on an eminence towards the north of Croft, on which is an encampment called Croft Ambrey; the prospect from this spot is very extensive. Sir Richard Croft, of Croft Castle, was Treasurer of the King's Household, 1 Henry VII., and his great-grandson, Sir James Croft, was Comptroller of the Household to Queen Elizabeth, in which capacity he presented "Remembrances" for a reform in the Royal establishment: he died in 1591, and was buried in Westminster Abbey Church.

Sir Herbert Croft was created baronet 18th Nov. 1671, and was M.P. for Hereford in 1678.

The estate is now the property of Somerset Davis, Esq., of Wigmore Hall, about two miles distant.

DOCKLOW, ½ mile from Leominster, contains 34 houses, and 191 inhabitants, including Fencott township.

EDWIN RALPH, 2 miles N. from Bromyard, contains 29 houses, and 157 inhabitants, with Butterley. Edwin Loach, a mile northward from the village, is in a detached part of Worcestershire.

EYE, 3½ miles N. from Leominster, comprises the townships of Eye, Moreton, Ashton, and Luston, and contains 144 houses, and 678 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Kington Canal passes through the parish to Orleton, on the north. Berrington Park is the seat of Lady Rodney; this mansion was built by the Honourable Thomas Harley, alderman of London, and M.P. for this county. The eminence on the south-east is covered with fine woods.

EYTON, 2 miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 30 houses, and 125 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

FORDS BRIDGE, 3 miles S. from Leominster, contains 5 houses, and 31 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial.

HATFIELD, 5 miles E. from Leominster, contains 30 houses, and 153 inhabitants. It has fairs, 23rd April and 18th October; and is a curacy. A rivulet rises in the hills near Lockley Heath eastward of the town.

LITTLE HEREFORD, on the Teme, 3 miles W. from Tenbury, on the borders of Worcestershire, contains 82 houses, and 353 inhabitants, with Upton. It is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 4*s.*, in the patronage of the Chancellor of Hereford Cathedral.

HOPE-UNDER-DINMORE, 4½ miles S. from Leominster, contains 90 houses, and 528 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and rebuilt by the Coningsby family, consists of a nave and chancel; it is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Hereford, and contains the monument of Sir Thomas Coningsby, founder of the hospital at Hereford; he died in 1652: also the monument of Humphrey Coningsby, and Anne his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Inglefield, whose effigies, with those of their seven children, are sculptured on a slab of alabaster in the chancel. Hampton Court, the seat of Richard Arkwright, Esq., stands in an extensive park, including a circumference of not less than eight miles, embracing the most delightful prospects: the river Lugg flows on the S.W., and below the mansion is joined by a stream that meanders through the park, enlivening the views at every point, and forms a cascade by rushing over a mass of rugged rock. The house is well protected by an eminence on the N.E. covered with wood.

Hampton Court, a magnificent specimen of ancient domestic architecture, is said to have been founded by King Henry IV. and to have been constructed under his immediate auspices by Sir Rowland Lenthall, Master of the Wardrobe to that King. It is also said to have been completed with the spoils from the field of Agincourt. The mansion occupies three sides of a large court, with an immense front to the north, consisting of a central Tower or Gate House, with arms and supporters sculptured over the arch of entrance; towers of smaller dimensions, but similar in architectural character, form the extremities of this front. On the east is the chapel, the roof of framed timber, which also contains some painted glass consisting of the arms of the founder, of Lenthall and of Coningsby. George Capel Coningsby, Earl of Essex, inherited the estate and mansion from his grandmother, and sold it in 1817 to the present proprietor.

HUMBER, 4 miles E. from Leominster, contains 15 houses, and 69 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.* Risbury is a township of this parish.

KIMBOLTON, 3½ miles N.E. from Leominster, contains 94 houses, and 634 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LAYSTERS, 5 miles N.E. from Leominster, contains 39 houses, and 227 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LEOMINSTER, 137 miles from London, and 13 miles N. from Hereford, is situated on the river Lugg. It contains 777 houses, and 3651 inhabitants, and extends about a mile from N. to S.; while from E. to W. it is about half a mile in extent. It has a market on Friday, and fairs 13th Feb., Tuesday after Midlent Sunday, 2d May, 10th July, 4th Sept., and 8th Nov. The Town Hall stands on twelve oak pillars, and under it is the butter market. In this Hall are held the Quarter Sessions and Corporate meetings. The town is divided into six wards, and is governed by a high steward, viz. the Earl of Essex, a recorder, and 24 capital burgesses, who choose a bailiff and a town clerk. It has returned two members to Parliament, from 23d of Edward I., the right of election being in the bailiff, capital burgesses, and the inhabitants paying scot and lot; in number about 620: the bailiff is the returning officer, and the present members are the Right Hon. Lord Hotham, and John Ward, Esq.

The church of Leominster, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is large and ancient, with a noble tower 99 feet high. Over the altar is a picture of the Last Supper, by Rubens. There are no monuments of particular interest in the church; in the church-yard is the tomb of John Ward, grandfather of the late John Kemble and Mrs. Siddons: he died 1773.

A monastery was founded at Leominster about 660; this was succeeded by a College of Prebendaries, which was subsequently replaced by an Abbey of Nuns. The nuns were dispersed, and their estates enjoyed by laymen previously to the year 1125, when King Henry I. granted this foundation, with every thing belonging to it, to the Abbey of St. James, at Reading, to which it afterwards became a subordinate Cell of Benedictine Monks. In 1239 the priory and parish church were re-dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, by Ralph Maydenstan, Bishop of Hereford. In the year 1402 the Priory was laid under heavy contributions by Owen Glendower, who had taken possession of the town. The revenues of this foundation exceeded those of any other Cell in England. It was situated N.E. of the church, on the river Pinsley; some of the buildings are yet standing. The Priory House was repaired by Lord Coningsby for a County Gaol, with an intention of obtaining the removal of the assizes from Hereford. It was afterwards rented by the Corporation, and about 1718 was the mansion house of the town bailiff, and is now a House of Industry. An oil-mill on the Green was the corn-mill belonging to the priory; and the name of an adjoining meadow, Almbury Close, designates the site of another of the conventual buildings.

Broadward township, which includes Brierley, Eaton, Hennor, Stretford, and Wharton, and Ivington township, which includes Cholstrey, Hideash, Newtown, Stagbatch, and Wintercott, are in Leominster parish.

On the Brierley Hills is Ivington Camp, supposed to have been occupied by Owen Glendower on his retreat.

Eaton, a mile S.E. from Leominster, was the seat of the Hackluyt family, one of whom, Richard Hackluyt, published a Collection of Voyages in 1582. Cardinal Adam de Eaton, a man of great learning, who died at Rome 1397, was a native of this hamlet.

LUCTON, 5 miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 23 houses, and 181 inhabitants. Here is a school founded and endowed by ——— Pierreponte.

LUDFORD, 11 miles N. from Leominster, is chiefly in Shropshire. The entire parish contains 280 inhabitants, of which 23 houses, and 85 inhabitants, are in this county. It is situated on the Teme, over which a bridge communicates with Ludlow. It is a curacy. Ludford Park is the seat of N. L. Charlton, Esq.

MIDDLETON-ON-THE-HILL, 5 miles N.E. from Leominster, contains 59 houses, and 369 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Hereford.

ORLETON, 5½ miles N. from Leominster, contains 110 houses, and 574 inhabitants. Here is a fair, 24th April. It is a curacy. The manor of Orleton was part of the possessions of the Mortimers, and devolving to the Crown was granted by James I. to George Hopton; and afterward it became the property of the Blounts. Thomas Blount, author of "Fragmenta Antiquitatis," and of two folio volumes of collections for a history of this county, died in 1679, and is buried in the church. Adam de Orleton, Bishop of Hereford, was a native of this place.

PUDDLESTONE, 4½ miles E. from Leominster, contains 59 houses, and 316 inhabitants, including While and Brockmanton townships. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

RICHARDS CASTLE, 7½ miles N. from Leominster, is chiefly in Shropshire, and contains 490 inhabitants, of which 40 houses, and 229 inhabitants, are in this county. It is a rectory, value 15*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester.

Scarcely any vestige of the ancient castle remains.

ROCHFORD, on the river Teme, 2 miles E. from Tenbury, in a detached part of the county, having Worcestershire on the S. and Shropshire on the N., contains 50 houses, and 264 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Farlow, a chapelry, containing 67 houses, and 345 inhabitants, is also a detached part of the county, 5 miles N. from Rochford, in Stottesden parish, Shropshire.

SARNESFIELD, 10 miles S.W. from Leominster, contains 21 houses, and 102 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the University of Oxford. In the churchyard is the tomb of John Abel, the architect of the market-houses at Hereford, Leominster, Kington and Brecknock, who died at the age of 97, in 1594.

STOKE PRIOR, 2½ miles S.E. from Leominster, contains 72 houses, and 337 inhabitants. Wickton is a township of this parish.

YARPOLE, 4½ miles N.W. from Leominster, contains 132 houses, and 622 inhabitants, including Bircher township.

11. Wormelow Hundred,

In the southern part of the county, where it is bounded by Monmouthshire and Gloucestershire; on the north and west it is bounded by Webtree hundred; and on the east by Greytree hundred.

Lower Division.

BRIDSTOW, 1½ mile N.W. from Ross, contains 103 houses, and 541 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

Wilton, the ancient seat of the noble family of Grey, is between this place and Ross; the castle and Wilton bridge are fine objects from many points of view. This estate is now the property of the trustees of Guy's Hospital, London.

GANEREW, 2 miles N. from Monmouth, contains 24 houses, and 118 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

GARWAY, on the banks of the Monnow, 10 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 107 houses, and 522 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The Garway hill stretches for more than 3 miles in a N.W. direction towards Kentchurch.

GOODRICH, on the banks of the Wye, 4 miles S.W. from Ross, and 6 miles N.E. from Monmouth, contains 119 houses, and 711 inhabitants, including the townships of Glewston and Huntisham. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

Goodrich Castle, long the baronial residence of the Talbots, stands on a finely wooded promontory, and presents a remain of the period of Henry II. and of Edward I. In its general form the plan is a parallelogram, with a rounded tower at each angle, and a Keep tower in the S.W. part of the inclosed area. This part of the castle is of the greatest antiquity, and is an exact square of 29 feet. Between the West or Great Tower and the North or Ladies Tower were the state chambers. The hall was 65 feet by 28 feet in dimension; this communicated with the great chamber, whence a passage led to the state room or presence chamber: at the north angle of this room is a doorway opening upon the Ladies Tower, so called, which is situated on the brow of a high and steep precipice, so as to be the most defensible part of the castle. From the interior is a beautiful view of the adjacent country.

The Gate House was flanked by two semicircular towers of unequal dimensions, and the entrance, by means of a drawbridge now gone, was very strongly defended.

The ruins of the chapel are parallel with the entrance on the left; adjoining it is a small octagonal tower. Between the chapel and the south garrison tower, appear to have been the offices and stables.

Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Gilbert Earl of Shrewsbury, married Henry Grey, 8th Earl of Kent; and in 1706 Henry Grey, 12th Earl of Kent, was created Viscount Goodrich of Goodrich Castle, and in 1710 Duke of Kent. His descendant the Right Hon. Frederick John Robinson was created Viscount Goderich 25th April 1827.

In a fertile vale on the S. of the Castle are the remains of Flanesford Priory, founded by Richard Lord Talbot in 1347 for Black Canons of the Order of St. Augustine. After the Dissolution its revenues were granted to the Earl of Shrewsbury. In the chapel, now used as a barn, are some fine pointed windows. Goodrich Church, at a little distance from the Priory on the west, contains a curious ancient tomb, without arms or inscription, traditionally inscribed to one of the early possessors of Goodrich Castle. The chalice here has a singular connection with the history of the civil war. The Rev. Thomas Swift, grandfather of Dean Swift, and vicar of Goodrich, was remarkably zealous in support of the Royal cause; in consequence of which he was ejected from his living in March 1646, but still continued to perform his duty, privately celebrating the eucharist from this very cup, which he carried with him from house to house for that purpose. At his death in 1658 the cup was transmitted to his grandson the Dean, who returned it to the church, with the above circumstances inscribed on the bottom of the chalice.

Goodrich Court, the seat of Samuel Rush Meyrick, LL.D., stands on a precipitous eminence above the river Wye. It was built under the superintendence of Edward Blore, who has established a reputation for superior knowledge of the ancient styles of architecture. This mansion is erected in the style of the period of Edward II.; it was founded on St. George's Day 1828, and is not yet entirely completed. Much space has been devoted to the reception of the very splendid collection of ancient arms and armour, with which the public is already acquainted by means of Skelton's engraved Illustrations. The edifice is 150 feet by 120 in extent, inclosing a court independent of the offices and stables, which form another court. It is entered by a gatehouse, and on the left of the court is the hall and staircase: the windows of the hall contain arms of various branches of the family; and on the staircase is a very brilliant painted window by Willement, consisting of a whole-length well-executed portrait of Meuric ap Llewelyn, Esquire of the body to Henry VII., and other subjects disposed in three bays or divisions; the hall is hung with hunting implements, and an antique bronze lamp. The great chamber or drawing-room in the Sussex Tower has the walls very richly painted with interesting subjects judiciously selected from the early Fabliaux and Romances, copied from illuminated manuscripts of the time of Edward II. The banqueting-room, somewhat in the style of the ancient dining-halls, has an open timber roof; the windows, enriched with painted glass, display the arms and quarterings of the various possessors of Goodrich Castle. In the chapel are also windows containing St. George and St. Barbara, patrons of knighthood, by Willement. Other apartments are fitted up with reference to various periods of English History, from the time of Edward II. to Queen Anne; the more satisfactory as having been accomplished under the direction of Dr. Meyrick, whose perfect acquaintance with the usages of antiquity is generally acknowledged. The pictures are chiefly valuable from their situation, as displaying the costume, particularly military, which other objects tend to illustrate; amongst them is a fine original of the celebrated Nell Gwyn, a native of this county. Several large apartments are entirely appropriated to the collection of armour, the most magnificent ever made by a private gentleman: this subject, extremely curious to the antiquary, is here treated with reference to its history; its rise and gradual decline are clearly exemplified by the excellent arrangement of the very numerous descriptions of defensive armour, which must doubtless have been obtained at vast cost to the proprietor.

The grand armoury is 86 feet by 25 in dimension, with a roof of framed timber containing three lantern lights; along the sides of this room are arranged forty-six figures in complete armour, ten of which are mounted on barbed horses. These exhibit singularly fine specimens of the armour for the tournament, from 1458 to 1586, armour for knights and men at arms; demi-lancers' armour, of the time of Elizabeth; Cavaliers, Pikemen, and Musqueteers, of the time of Charles I. In a gallery, continued round three sides of this room, are disposed curious guns and pistols, and the more rare specimens of armour. In this collection will be found the target of Francis I., and that of the Emperor Charles V. Italian and Highland targets, Spanish bucklers, targets of embossed steel and leather, and a jousting shield of the early date of 1450. Here is also the identical helmet of Sir Richard Pembridge, K.G. in the reign of Edward III., a conical basinet of the time of Richard II., and several Italian morians. The Hastilude chamber, adjoining the armoury, contains a canopy and dorsal with attendant heralds, in front of which is the representation of a jousting match between two combatants, while five others are waiting their turn; the walls, decorated with a very curious tilting heaume of steel, and various specimens of tilting armour.

The Asiatic armoury is within the East Tower, and contains figures of a soldier of Delhi, in an attitude of homage before a Rajah; besides a variety of specimens of Turkish, Persian, and Polygars armour, chain armour and helmets from Delhi, Indian scymitars, and Tartar arms.

The South Sea room contains many of the weapons used in the Isles and on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. In different parts of the collection are to be found battle-axes, martels de fer, cross-bows, two-handed swords, with war saddles and horse armour, numerous rapiers, swords, misericordes, and stilettos. Also a very curious collection to illustrate the history of hand fire-arms.

The windows of this mansion, particularly those of the Sussex Tower, command a fine panoramic view of the country, with the reaches of the river Wye, and the town of Ross. A conduit, erected by Dr. Meyrick in Grey's-field, marks the source of the spring which supplied the ancient castle of Goodrich with water; the original water-course, which still remains, is very carefully preserved.

From Bishops Wood, two miles eastward from Goodrich, the Wye makes a reach of nearly four miles into Gloucestershire; but the space included between the limits of Herefordshire and the river, is part of Monmouthshire, in the parish of Welsh Bicknor.

HENTLAND, or Hên Llan, the old church, 4 miles N.W. from Ross, contains 108 houses, and 577 inhabitants. Llanfrother is the site of a college founded by St. Dubricius, Archbishop of Caerleon.

LLANGARRAN, 4½ miles S.W. from Ross, contains 172 houses, and 1016 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LLANROUTHALL, on the Monnow, 5 miles N. from Monmouth, contains 16 houses, and 118 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* Pembridge Castle, a mile north from this place, belonged to William Lord Cantilupe in the reign of Henry III. In Henry the Seventh's reign it was held by the Knights hospitallers of Dinmore, and afterwards by Margaret Countess of Richmond. The castle was habitable in 1676, but is now wholly demolished, together with its chapel. Tregets Castle, on the banks of the river Monnow, is one mile south from Llanrouthall.

MARSTOW, on the river Garran, 5 miles S.W. from Ross, contains 21 houses, and 132 inhabitants. It is a curacy. A considerable district in this part of Herefordshire was formerly comprehended by the name of Archenfield, the inhabitants of which possessed peculiar privileges, and was adjudged to be situated between Martinstone and Gloditha, 20 Edward I. The present deanery of that name includes the whole hundred of Wormelow, and one parish in Webtree hundred.

PETERSTOW, 3½ miles W. from Ross, in the road to Hereford, contains 46 houses, and 277 inhabitants.

TRETIRE, 5 miles W. from Ross, contains 29 houses, and 126 inhabitants; with Michael Church, a mile northward of the village, to which it is united. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* Between here and Pengethley is Geer Cop, an encampment on a hill.

WELSH NEWTON, 3½ miles N. from Monmouth, contains 46 houses, and 220 inhabitants. Pembridge Castle is in this parish.

ST. WEONARDS, 7 miles W. from Ross, and the same distance N. from Monmouth, contains 93 houses, and 642 inhabitants. Its church is dedicated to St. Weonard, a British saint. Triago, in this parish, was the seat of the Minor family.

WHITCHURCH, on the river Wye, 6½ miles S. from Ross, and 4½ miles from Monmouth, contains 155 houses, and 730 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* Near is Copped Wood Hill, whence parts of the eight counties of Hereford, Monmouth, Salop, Worcester, Gloucester, Glamorgan, Brecon, and Radnor, may be seen from one point; the diversity of scenery renders the view from this hill peculiarly interesting. The prospects on the Wye between Ravens Cliff and Symonds Yate are exceedingly striking, they gradually increase in interest as the river is descended. At Symonds Yate the Wye makes a reach to the north, inclosing Huntsham, an extensive farm opposite Whitchurch, till it approaches the New Weir, which intersects the channel of the river between Symonds Yate and the Doward Hills; Symonds Yate is regarded as one of the most beautiful and majestic scenes upon the Wye. It is a chasm between two high ranges of hills that rise almost perpendicularly from the water; the rocks on the side are mostly heavy masses, and their colour is generally brown; but here and there a pale crag starts up to a vast height above the rest, unconnected, broken and bare: large trees frequently force out their way amongst them, and many of them stand far back in the covert, where their natural dusky hue is deepened by the shadow that overhangs them, while the river loses itself in woods, which rising thick and high darken the water. The agitation of the current at the weir is increased by large fragments of rock, which have been swept down by floods from the banks. The Great Doward, an eminence on the north-west, bears on its brow King Arthur's Hall, an ancient encampment, whence the ground gently declines to the river. On the summit of the Little Doward are also vestiges of an encampment. Near St. Martin's Pool, a short reach of the Wye at this point, where the river is said to be the deepest, it leaves this county and enters Monmouthshire.

Upper Division.

ACONBURY, 4 miles S. from Hereford, contains 28 houses, and 148 inhabitants. A nunnery of the Order of St. Augustine was founded here by Margery wife of Walter de Lacy, in the reign of John. The Cliffords were considerable benefactors to this house, which at the Dissolution possessed 75*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* per annum. There are some remains yet standing, now a farm-house. On the summit of Aconbury Hill, a bold and extensive eminence, partly covered with young wood, and commanding a delightful view over the adjacent county, are the traces of a large encampment.

BALLINGHAM, on the banks of the Wye, 7 miles N. from Ross, contains 29 houses, and 127 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Sir John Scudamore of Ballingham was created a baronet, 23rd July, 1644.

The landholders on this part of the river within the liberty of Irchenfield, possess the right of fishing in the free water between Hom Lacy and Strangford, provided they expose the salmon and other fish caught, for sale, in the Hereford road, between Llanfrother and Horewithy;—a provision rarely enforced.

MUCH BIRCH, 6½ miles S. from Hereford, contains 72 houses, and 353 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LITTLE BIRCH, adjoining the above, contains 64 houses, and 310 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital.

BOULSTONE, 5½ miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 14 houses, and 75 inhabitants.

MUCH DEWCHURCH, 6 miles S. from Hereford, contains 105 houses, and 585 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

LITTLE DEWCHURCH, South of the above, contains 65 houses, and 330 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Bryngwin is the seat of J. Phillips, Esq.; and Meend Park, on the west side of Saddlebow Hill, is the seat of T. H. Symonds, Esq.; the grounds abound with rich and finely wooded scenery. Sir Richard Symonds of the Meend was created a baronet 3rd May 1774.

DEWSALL, 4½ miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 5 houses, and 33 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.*

FOY, on the banks of the Wye, 3 miles N. from Ross, contains 54 houses, and 293 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Eaton Tregoes is a township of this parish. Near Foy church is Carthage, the seat of—— ———. The Wye, between Foy and Ross, passes under Ash Woods, and is one of the points to which the attention of the tourist is particularly directed, whence the view of Ross, Penyard, &c. composes a scene of great beauty.

HAREWOOD, 5 miles N.W. from Ross, contains 15 houses, and 80 inhabitants. Harewood House is the seat of Sir Hungerford Hoskyns, Bart. The park contains some very fine timber. Sir Bennet Hoskyns, of Harewood, was created a baronet 19th December, 1676. One mile from Harewood is Armstone, the seat of George Ferguson, Esq.

KILPECK, 7 miles S.W. from Hereford, contains 46 houses, and 265 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Gloucester. Here was a castle, the head of a barony merged in that of Marmion, and also a priory of Benedictines subordinate to the Abbey of St. Peter's at Gloucester, to which it had been given by Hugh Fitz William, founder of the Kilpeck family.

KINGS CAPLE, on the banks of the Wye, 4½ miles N.W. from Ross, contains 50 houses, and 271 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Caple Trump, a fine grove of trees, is the scene of an annual festival at Whitsuntide.

LLANDINABO, 6 miles N.W. from Ross, contains 8 houses, and 52 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

LLANITHOG contains 3 houses, and 23 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial.

LLANWARNE, 7½ miles S. from Hereford, on the E. side of Scudamore Hill, contains 59 houses, and 324 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital.

ORCOP, 9 miles S. from Hereford, contains 104 houses, and 491 inhabitants.

PENCOYD, 6 miles N.W. from Ross, contains 32 houses, and 161 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

SELLACK, on the river Wye, 4 miles N.W. from Ross, contains 50 houses, and 301 inhabitants. Pengethley is the seat of Thomas Powel Symmonds, Esq.

TREVILLE is extra-parochial, and contains 15 houses, and 74 inhabitants.

TOWN HALL, MONMOUTH.

Engraved by James Bingley, 57, Charles Str.t Goswell R.d for Moules English Counties.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Breconshire and Herefordshire; on the east by Gloucestershire; on the south by the river Severn and the Bristol Channel; and on the west by Glamorganshire. In extent it is considered to be about thirty-three miles long, and twenty-six broad, being in circumference about one hundred and ten miles. The district including Monmouthshire, Glamorganshire, and the Forest of Dean, was anciently known by the name of Gwent or Went *, and afterwards of Essyllwg †, whence the Roman name Siluria. Under the Romans Caer Went became Venta Silurium, when the county was included in the province Britannia Secunda. Other Roman stations were Blestium, or Monmouth, Burrium, or Usk, Gobannium, or Abergavenny, and Isca Silurium, the head-quarters of the second legion, and seat of government for Britannia Secunda, at Caerleon. This county was not included in the Saxon heptarchy. It was formerly a part of South Wales, but was separated from Welsh jurisdiction in 1535, and has been regarded as a part of England ever since. There were abbeys at Grâce Dieu, Lantarnam, Lanthony and Tintern, and priories at Goldcliff, Kynemark, Monmouth and Usk. The principal castles in the county were at Abergavenny, Caerleon, Caldicot, Castell Glas, or Green Castle, Chepstow, Dinham, Grosmont, Lanfair, Iscoed, Langibby, Monmouth, Newport, Pencoed, Penhow, Ragland, Skenfreth, Usk, and White Castle or Landeilo. The county contains seven market-towns, one hundred and twenty-seven parishes, 13,211 inhabited houses, and 71,833 persons. It is in the province of Canterbury, and the diocese of Landaff, excepting three parishes, Welsh Bicknor, Dixton and St. Mary's, in the diocese of Hereford, and three, Cwmyoy, Lanthony, and Oldcastle, in the diocese of St. David's, and returns three members to Parliament; two for the county, who at present are Charles Henry Somerset, Lord Granville, and Sir Charles Morgan, Bart.; and one for the town of Monmouth. Nearly one-third of the county is a rich plain on the shores of the Severn, one-third consists of beautifully variegated ground, watered by considerable rivers, and the hills cultivated or wooded; and one-third assumes the mildest character of mountain, abounding with lovely valleys. The air is mild, temperate, and healthy generally, even in the lower parts of the county; and it has been remarked that the southern situations, bordering upon the sea, are less humid than the western mountainous districts, probably owing to the frequent breezes arising from the ocean, and the attractive influence of the mountains over clouds that float low in the atmosphere. Upon the hills it is bleak and cold in winter, the snow continuing here a considerable time; while in the valleys it soon melts away. Almost every necessary article of life is to be found in the different districts of this charming county, and so contiguous to each other that all parts are in general equally well supplied; the hills feed great numbers of cattle and sheep, and the vales produce plenty of corn, pulse, and grass. Coals and wood abound, and are distributed at very reasonable rates; lead and iron ores, with limestone and quarries of stone for building, &c., are also plentifully found within this luxuriant county; particularly a fine quarry a few miles from Newport. The principal rivers are the Severn, which washes the southern boundary of the county; the Usk, which rises upon the western border of Breconshire, and enters Monmouthshire at a short distance from Abergavenny, by which it runs and continues its course through the heart of the county to Usk, Caerleon, and Newport, below which it finally discharges itself into the Severn. The rivers Wye, Monnow, and Rumney are the boundaries which separate it from other counties, and the streams of less note are the Avon Llwyd, Beeg, Berden, Carn, Clcdaugh, Ebwy, Fidan, Gavenny, Grony, Honthy, Kebby Lumon, Morbesk, Mythve, Nedern, Olwy, Organ, Pill, Pool Meyric, Rhyd y Mirch, Sorwy, Tilery, Troggy, Trothy, and Ystwith. The Monmouthshire canal commences on the western side of the town of Newport, having a basin connected with the river Usk; it passes between the town and the river, and crosses the Chepstow road; thence by Malpas it pursues its route parallel to and near the river Avon, by Pontypool to Pont Newidd, being nearly eleven miles, with a rise of twelve feet in the first mile, and four hundred and thirty-five feet in the remaining ten miles. Nearly opposite to Malpas, a branch canal takes a course parallel to the river Ebwy, to a point near Crumlin Bridge, being a course of nearly eleven miles from the junction, with a rise of three hundred and fifty-eight feet, making the total length of the two canals twenty-two miles: from these there are several rail-roads to different iron-works, collieries, and lime-kilns. The Brecon canal unites with the Monmouthshire canal one mile from Pontypool; it crosses the river Avon, where by a tunnel two hundred and twenty yards in length it crosses the high land there, and passes the town of Abergavenny, towards the river Usk, and proceeds parallel with that river to Brecon, being thirty-three miles in length, with sixty-eight feet rise to Brecon. The Abergavenny canal communicates with the Brecon canal. The county of Monmouth, throughout its whole extent, is celebrated for the beauty and sublimity of its scenery; the most noted places in this county are Gold Cliff Point, Denny Island, Charston Rock, the Severn mouth and Usk mouth, with the Hatterel, Pen y Vale, and Valire Hills; Wentwood Forest and many other situations exhibit seenes of exquisite beauty. In the hundreds of Went Lloog and Caldicot sea-walls have been erected, at a vast expense, to keep off the sea at high tides and in stormy weather; some of these walls are admirably built, to the height of twelve or fourteen feet, with a gradual slope from the sea, and a spacious embankment of earth behind the stone-work.—Troy House, near Monmouth, is the seat of His Grace the Duke of Beaufort, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Abergavenny Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Herefordshire; on the east by Skenfreth, Ragland, and Usk hundreds; on the south by Went Lloog hundred; and on the west by the last and Breconshire. It is separated into the upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

ABERYSTWITH, or Blaneau Gwent, is situated on the Ebwy Fach, or little Ebwith river, which flows at the foot of the Beacon mountain, 9 miles N.W. from Pontypool. and about the same distance S.W. from Abergavenny. It contains 616 houses, and 4059 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. On the same stream, about two miles above Aberystwith, are large iron works at Nant y Glo, whence there is a rail-road to Crumlin Bridge, where it meets the Monmouthshire canal.

GOYTREY, or Coedtrev, 6 miles N. from the town of Usk, and 5 miles S. from Abergavenny, contains 108 houses, and 513 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Pant y Goytrey, lately the seat of T. Hooper, Esq., is beautifully situated on the banks of the Usk, with a view of the Skirrit and Sugar-loaf mountains. On the west of the village is the Brecon canal, which joins the Monmouthshire canal near Pontypool.

LANELLEN, or Llanellen, 3 miles S. from Abergavenny, contains 62 houses, and 293 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*; here is a bridge over the river Usk, in the road from Pontypool to Abergavenny. The manor, part of the possessions of the priory of Abergavenny, was granted to the Gunter family.

LANFOIST, 2 miles W. from Abergavenny, contains 91 houses, and 535 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Lanfoist House is the seat of —— Williams, Esq. The extension of the iron-works in this parish has much increased the population of late years. The Brecon canal passes westward of the village.

LANGATTOCK NIGH USK, so called from its situation on the river Usk, is 3½ miles S. from Abergavenny, and contains 32 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*

The Usk rises in the mountains which divide Breconshire from Carmarthenshire, flowing eastward to Brecon, whence it inclines southward to Abergavenny and the town of Usk. At its entrance into this county the valley is highly wooded and well cultivated, and is encompassed by an amphitheatre of mountains, amidst which Abergavenny is situated, at the commencement of the great plain.

LANHILETH, or Llanhyddell, on the river Ebwy, 8 miles N.W. from Pontypool, contains 76 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Ilfyd, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* A coal-mine has been opened in this parish.

LANOVER, on the river Usk, 4 miles S. from Abergavenny: the higher and lower divisions of the parish contain 368 houses, and 2145 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff, and is valued at 15*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* The extension of iron-works in the higher division of this parish, as well as at Trevethan and Lanfoist, has contributed to the increase of the population. Lanover House is the seat of B. Waddington, Esq.

LANSAINTFREAD, 4 miles S.E. from Abergavenny, contains 2 houses, and 28 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bridget, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* Lansaintfread House, the seat of Colonel Morgan, occupies an eminence commanding the valley of the Usk, bounded by lofty mountains. Thomas Ap Gwillim Ap Jenkin, eldest son of Gwillim Ap Jenkin and Wenlian, daughter of Howel Yehan, was seated at Lansaintfread in 1398. He made a great addition to his fortune by marriage with Maud, daughter and heir of Sir John Morley, of Ragland, whose possessions were large, and was succeeded by his son and heir Sir William Ap Thomas, from whom the Earls of Pembroke and Carnarvon are descended by the male, and the Duke of Beaufort and Earl of Powis by the female line. Thomas Ap Gwillim died here in 1438, and was buried in the church. An inscription to his memory was put up in the chancel in 1624.

LANVAIR KILGIDIN, 5 miles S. from Abergavenny, and 6 miles N. from Usk, contains 40 houses, and 226 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

LANVIHANGEL NIGH USK, 5 miles S. from Abergavenny, on the river Usk, contains 18 houses, and 99 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

LANWENARTH, on the borders of Brecknockshire, 3 miles N.W. from Abergavenny, contains 357 houses, and 2001 inhabitants, including both the ultra and citra divisions, the last being in the lower division of this hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* About two miles from the village, in the road to Crickhowell, a stone marks the entrance into Wales; it is inscribed on one side Monmouthshire, and on the other Brecknockshire. Collieries and iron-forges have lately been established at Carn y Derris, in this parish. Immediately on the north of Lanwenarth, is the Sugar-loaf mountain, or Pen y Vale: this elevated point, the highest in the county, is 1852 feet perpendicular above the river. The most easy way of ascending this eminence is from the east side of the Derris, one of the subordinate hills; the base of the Sugar-loaf is not more than one hundred paces from its top.

The following interesting account of an ascent in the year 1811, is by Daniel Carless Webb, the entertaining author of Excursions to various parts of Great Britain:—I began my ascent over a very steep hill, forming a part of the base upon which this mountain rears its lofty peak; then crossed a plain of about a mile in length, and finding no direct path, proceeded along the side of a ravine, to the southern end of another considerable acclivity, sustaining the summit, which appeared for some time to recede. At length, having gained the foot of the peak forming the sugar-loaf appearance of the mountain, I was surprised to find that it is only a narrow bank, at this end. I was under the necessity of climbing to gain the summit, the last rise, which at this part is the highest, calculated to be about one hundred and fifty feet. From this place issues a spring of clear water, trickling down the side of the mountain, forming a pleasant murmuring rill, but infuriated in rainy seasons, as appeared from the torn state and depth of the ravine down which it rolled. This bank is somewhat more than a hundred yards in length, and a few yards in breadth. The northern end is a pile of loose rocks, bared by the rude blast, and sternly bidding defiance to the strongest efforts of Boreas. Several loose stones have been precipitated down the steep sides of the bank, and lodged in the hill below, where they are bedded in the earth, to some depth, their extreme points only being visible. The mountain is covered with excellent pasture, to the very base of the peak, here and there encumbered with fern and heath, which the hand of industry might easily remove. Numerous sheep, of a fine breed, were grazing; and if properly enclosed and taken care of, and a due proportion of timber planted, there is no doubt but it would form good grazing land, the staple being excellent, and the southern aspect lying dry. I was well compensated for labouring up this steep by a most extensive prospect, Pen y Vale commanding a view of the counties of Radnor, Salop, Brecon, Glamorgan, Hereford, Gloucester, Somerset, and Wiltshire. Over the beautiful vale of Usk, stretching southward through a rich cultivated country, the town of Abergavenny appeared at my feet in miniature; beyond the vale of Usk, the Severn, and the Somersetshire coast. To the east is a fine view into Gloucestershire; on the west a shining line indicates a canal, on the side of the Blorenge; the northern prospect is shut in by a range of mountains, darkly closing the scene on that side.

MAMHILAD, 3 miles N.E. from Pontypool, and 5 miles N.W. from Usk, contains 45 houses, and 237 inhabitants. It is a curacy. At Mamhilad is the seat of William Morgan, Esq.

PONTYPOOL, in the parish of Trevethan, 7 miles N.W. from Usk, contains 700 houses, and 3931 inhabitants, including Trevethan, about a mile distant. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a curacy. In the church is the monument of Major John Hanbury of Pontypool, who died in 1734. The town of Pontypool is situated on the edge of a steep cliff that overhangs the Avon Llwyd, usually a small stream, but in rainy seasons swelled to a rapid torrent. It consists of a long street, running east and west, which is intersected by two smaller streets; the town derives considerable consequence from the numerous mines in its neighbourhood, which produce immense quantities of iron-ore and coal. Here is a market on Saturday, and fairs 22nd April, 5th July, and 10th October, for horses, cattle, and pedlary; the petty sessions for the upper division of the hundred are held here.

Capel Hanbury, Esq. descended from an ancient family of Worcestershire, was the earliest proprietor on record of the iron-works at Pontypool; and to his son Major Hanbury the iron trade was indebted for several material improvements. The present mode of slitting and rolling iron, and that of coating iron plates with tin, were first introduced by him; but the lackering of iron plates with colour and a brilliant varnish, called Japanning, was first practised at Pontypool, by Thomas Allgood, a native of Northamptonshire, in the reign of Charles II. For the convenience of carrying on the operations connected with the iron-works and japan manufactories, there are railroads and a canal hence to Newport, by means of which the produce and manufactured articles of the town are conveyed to various parts of the country. Two lakes or pools at Trosnant near the town are used as reservoirs to the Monmouthshire canal.

Pontypool Park is the seat of Capel Hanbury Leigh, Esq.; the house situated on the opposite bank of the river, fronting the town, the lawn skirted by large plantations on one side, and fine irregular acclivities on the other, covered with hanging groves, presents a view of a number of swelling eminences, whose soft varied lines contrast admirably with the irregular features of the surrounding country. Westward, the prospect is perfectly romantic; here the rude torrent of the Avon Llwyd rushes through its rocky channel, amidst delightful scenery, beyond which rises the bold eminence of Myndd Maen.

At Blaen Avon iron-works a large chapel, built at the expense of Messrs. Hopkins in 1805, capable of containing two thousand persons when completely filled, was consecrated on 23rd June in that year.

Lower Division.

ABERGAVENNY, 146 miles from London, and 17 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 679 houses, and 3388 inhabitants. This ancient town, the Gobanium of Antoninus's Itinerary, is situated at the mouth of the river Gavenny, which here joins the Usk. It is still surrounded, in parts, by the remains of a wall; and its castle, now a picturesque ruin, overlooks the river Usk at the southern extremity of the town. From this point, looking north-west, is a view of the valley, bounded by high mountains, with the river winding through the old bridge of fifteen arches; the ancient priory church, and other interesting objects, presenting a scenic combination not easily paralleled in the kingdom. Three principal streets of the town are formed by the roads leading to Crickhowell, Hereford, and Monmouth, and in the centre is the spacious market-place. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs are held 14th May, the first Tuesday after Trinity, and 25th September. The town is governed by a bailiff, a recorder, a common council of twenty-seven principal inhabitants, a town clerk, and other officers. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 7*d.* It was the church of a Benedictine Priory, founded by Hamelin de Balun soon after the Conquest. At the general suppression of monasteries, a grammar-school, founded by King Henry VIII., was endowed with part of the revenues of the priory, and of this the corporation are trustees. The church is nearly perfect in all its architectural detail. In the south aisle, belonging to the family of Herbert, are the monuments of Sir William Ap Thomas and of Sir Richard Herbert of Coldbrook, brother to the first Earl of Pembroke; also a monument of Richard Herbert of Ewias, and others of the Lords of Abergavenny. The castle of Abergavenny, or Bergavenny, was built by Hamelin de Balun, the first Lord of Over Went, or Wentland, after the Conquest. At his death he gave his estates to Brian, his nephew, who ended his days in the Holy Land, leaving his lands of Over Went and the castle of Bergavenny to Walter of Gloucester, who was at that time High Constable of England. Milo, the son of Walter, was created Earl of Hereford by Henry I.; and between his three daughters, coheiresses, the inheritance was afterwards divided. Berta, the second, was the wife of Sir William de Braose, and had the lordship of Brecon and the lands of Over Went, which contained the castle and seignory of Bergavenny, for her share. The lordship of Brecon being the greatest seignory, the title of Bergavenny, an ancient barony by tenure, was never used by Sir William de Braose or his descendants, who were styled Lords of Brecon only. By one of the heiresses of this family, the castle of Abergavenny was conveyed in marriage to Sir William Cantelupe, whom Henry III. created Lord Bergavenny by writ of summons to Parliament. Joan, his daughter and coheiress, married Henry Lord Hastings, and had this castle for her inheritance. On the death of Henry Lord Hastings, John, his son and heir, became entitled to the honours of his father, who being a baron of the realm before he married the heiress of Cantelupe, bore his own name of Hastings, when the title of Bergavenny once more became involved in that of another, and for five generations lay dormant in the Barony of Hastings and afterwards in the Earldom of Pembroke. John Hastings, Earl of Pembroke, being accidentally slain at a tournament at Oxford in 1391, and leaving no issue, the castle and lordship of Abergavenny passed by descent to Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin, and from him to Sir William Beauchamp, created Lord Bergavenny by writ of summons to Parliament in 1392, 16th Richard II. Richard Lord Abergavenny, his son, was created Earl of Worcester, and died in 1431, leaving a daughter, Elizabeth, his sole heiress, who married Sir Edward Nevill, youngest son of Ralph Earl of Westmoreland, and carried the title of Abergavenny to the Nevill family. But although Sir Edward Nevill was summoned to Parliament as Lord Abergavenny, jure uxoris, he was kept out of possession of the castle by an entail, made by Sir William Beauchamp, to the heirs of Thomas Earl of Warwick, his elder brother, who held the castle, which at length came into the hands of the Crown, when King Henry VII., on the petition of George Nevill, grandson of Sir Edward, was pleased to restore it to him as the rightful heir. His son Henry Nevill, Lord Abergavenny, left an only daughter, his heiress, wife of Sir Thomas Fane, who claimed the title of Baroness Abergavenny; the barony was also claimed by Edward, son of Sir Edward, a younger brother of Henry Nevill above mentioned, upon whom the castle of Abergavenny was settled. In the reign of James I. it was determined the title of Lord Abergavenny belonged to the heir male, in whose descendant the barony is now vested, but at present merged in the title of Earl, granted to George, fifteenth Lord Abergavenny, 17th May, 1784, by King George III.

The castle is now in a state of dilapidation; the mound, on which the pentagonal keep formerly stood, is in the centre of the court, environed by vestiges of the hall, kitchen, and offices. In 1172 the castle, under William de Braose, was taken by Sytsylt ap Dyfnwald, a Welsh chieftain, but shortly afterwards restored to Braose, who invited Sytsylt and his son Geoffery to conclude a treaty of amity at this place, when they were both treacherously murdered. A similar act of sanguinary treachery had been before perpetrated within the same walls by William, son of Milo Earl of Hereford. Girald Barry, usually called Giraldus Cambrensis, who wrote his Itinerary through Wales, in the reign of Henry II., relates, that in a late assault of the castle of Abergavenny, which happened in our days, two soldiers passing over a bridge to a tower, built on a mound of earth, in order to take the Welsh in the rear, penetrated with their arrows the oaken portal, which was four fingers thick; in memory of which circumstance the arrows were preserved in the gate. In 1215 the castle was taken from the forces of King John by Llewellin Prince of Wales.

The parish of Abergavenny contains the hamlets of Hardwicke and Lloyndû. Coldbrook House, the seat of John Hanbury Williams, Esq., was the property and residence of Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, K.B. and M.P. for this county, born in 1709, a statesman and poet of considerable temporary fame; he was the third son of John Hanbury, Esq., and in consequence of the will of his godfather Charles Williams, Esq., of Caerleon, assumed the name of Williams. He was the soul of a celebrated coterie, the most conspicuous members of which were Lord Hervey, Winnington, Horace Walpole Earl of Orford, Stephen Fox Earl of Ilchester, and Henry Fox Lord Holland, with whom he lived in the strictest habits of intimacy and friendship. At the same time he distinguished himself by political ballads, remarkable for vivacity, keenness of invective, and ease of versification. His "Ode to Mr. Poyntz," in honour of the Duke of Cumberland, is perhaps one of his best. Sir Charles married in 1732 Lady Frances, daughter of Thomas Earl of Coningsby, by whom, at his death in 1759, he left only two daughters, Frances, wife of the Earl of Essex, and Charlotte, who married Robert Boyle Walsingham, son of the Earl of Shannon. The estate and mansion of Coldbrook descended to his brother George, who died in 1764. when it became the property of his son John Hanbury Williams, Esq.

CWMYOYE, on the river Honthy, near the borders of Herefordshire, 8 miles N. from Abergavenny, contains 102 houses, and 511 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. The parish is separated into upper and lower divisions, and contains the townships of Bwlch and Toothog, both in Herefordshire. In the upper division of the parish is the remains of Llanthony Abbey, situated in the vale of Eywas, formed by the Hatterell Hills. Two monks made this spot a sequestered retreat, which becoming celebrated, Walter Lacy, about the year 1108, founded a Priory of Canons Regular, of the Order of St. Austin, dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Its name is derived from its situation on the banks of the Honthy, whence it was called Llan naut Honthy, since abbreviated to Llanthony. Llanthony Abbey is said to have been built on the very site of the Hermitage of St. David, the patron of Wales, where, according to Drayton,

> "He did only drink what chrystal Hodney yields,
> And fed upon the leeks he gather'd in the fields.
> In memory of whom in the revolving year,
> The Welchmen on his day that sacred herb do wear."

The same tradition is more elegantly expressed, but at greater length, in Southey's Inscription for a monument in the vale of Eywas. It also refers to the custom of wearing the leek having been derived from St. David, instigating the Britons under Cadwalladar to distinguish themselves from their enemies during a great battle, wherein they conquered the Saxons by virtue of his prayers, and that regulation. The valley has many of the circumstances that impress the idea of solitude; lofty and sterile mountains appear on almost every side. The ruins of the Abbey church present a mixture of the Anglo-Norman and pointed style of architecture, showing the different periods of its erection. It was in length two hundred and twelve feet, in breadth fifty feet, with a transept of one hundred feet in length. The greatest part of the monks removed first to the Bishop's Palace in Hereford, and afterwards, about the year 1136, to the banks of the Severn, in the neighbourhood of the city of Gloucester, which was also called Llanthony. Out of forty religious originally established here, only thirteen Canons were left, who decreasing, King Edward IV. in 1481 licensed the annexing this Priory to Llanthony, near Gloucester; but it is doubted whether this union took full effect. After the suppression, the site was granted in 1546 to Nicholas Arnold.

James Butler, Marquis of Ormond, K.G., Lord Steward of the Household to King Charles II., in consideration of his distinguished loyalty, services, and sufferings, was created a peer of England, 20th July 1660, by the titles of Earl of Brecon and Lord Butler of Llanthony. Lord Clarendon says of this noble man, "that he was the person of the greatest quality, estate, and reputation, who had frankly engaged his person and his fortune in the King's service, from the first hour of the troubles, and having thus merited as much as a subject can do from a prince, he had much more merit and esteem with the King than any other man."

LANARTH, 8 miles W. from Monmouth, and 7 miles S.E. from Abergavenny, contains 53 houses, and 310 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thelian, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 4*d., in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff. Clytha, in Ragland hundred, on the banks of the Usk, is a hamlet of this parish. Lanarth Court is the seat of John Jones, Esq.; the house was built about 1790, on the site of a more ancient mansion; and although it is situated in the vicinity of hills, of which the adjoining grounds command the most beautiful and picturesque views, it presents no other object in front but the quiet and retired vale in which it stands, with the surrounding plantations, which has often been remarked as forming one of its most peculiar attractions. This family of Jones derives its descent from the House of Herbert, being lineally descended from Henry Fitz Herbert, Chamberlain to King Henry I., the common ancestor of the Earls of Pembroke and Carnarvon. William Ap Jenkin, surnamed Herbert, had four sons, of whom the third or youngest was Lord of Tre Owen, near Monmouth, an ancient inheritance which still remains in possession of the family. His grandson David signalized his courage at the battle of Banbury in 1469, where he was slain fighting for the House of York, under the banners of the Earl of Pembroke. It was not till the reign of Henry VIII. that William John, great-grandson of David, assumed the name of Jones, which has ever since been retained by this branch of the family. Sir Philip Jones, a descendant of the last mentioned, distinguished himself by his attachment to Charles I.; he was Lieutenant-colonel of the troops raised in this county for the King, and was actively engaged at Ragland Castle, when it surrendered to the Parliamentary forces. About the year 1660, William, son of Sir Philip Jones, removed from Tre Owen to Lanarth Court, now the principal residence of the family.

Clytha House is the seat of William Jones, Esq.; the view hence is amongst the most beautiful in the county. A fine curvature of the river and valley of Usk, the parts and features of which it distinctly commands, is charmingly wooded and cultivated; the effects of water in the meanderings of the river are very striking to the improved grounds and buildings at Pant y Goitre and Lansaintfread, are pleasingly mingled with farm-houses and churches, and the general boundary of hills is varied in a style of bold sublimity.

LANGATTOCK LINGOED, 7 miles N.E. from Abergavenny, contains 42 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales.

LANTHEWY RYTHERCH, 5 miles E. from Abergavenny, in the road to Monmouth, contains 74 houses, and 317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 5*d*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales.

LANTHEWY SKIRRIT, 4 miles E. from Abergavenny, contains 19 houses, and 84 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* The village derived the affix to its name from its proximity to the Skirrit Vawr, or St. Michael's Mount, the most important object in the county, in a picturesque view. It is seen in all beautiful points or situations, and its appearance and distant effects vary indefinitely from the irregularity of its form, and the variations of lights and shadows perpetually tinging its summits. The Skirrit is fourteen hundred and ninety-eight feet above the level of the river Gavenny; a considerable cleft or chasm in its side forms a pleasing variety in the mountainous scenery of this district. It is sometimes called the Holy Mount, and had on its summit a chapel, the site of which was long after its desecration annually visited on the festival of St. Michael; the fissure in the mountain, attributed by superstition to a convulsion occasioned by the death of Christ, is probably owing to the nature of its strata, and to the operation of water-springs beneath it. Dr. Stukeley, in his Itinerarium Curiosum, published in 1724, relates a tradition that this hill was sent out of Ireland by St. Patrick, and that the earth of it has wonderful efficacy in several cases; on which account it is also believed to be fatal to venomous reptiles. The legend of Arthur having slain a giant on St. Michael's Mount in Brittany, was probably the cause of the chapel on the Skirrit having been dedicated to St. Michael. The Sugar-loaf, about four miles north-west from Lanthewy, is a regular and beautiful mountain, of superior elevation to the Skirrit, which it generally accompanies in every extensive view; its outline is smooth and soft, differing materially in character from the irregularity of the last.

* Sanderson's History of Charles I.

LANTILIO PERTHOLEY, on the river Gavenny, 2 miles N.E. from the town of Abergavenny, is situated at the base of the Skirrit Vawr, and contains 161 houses, and 726 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thelian, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff; the parish is separated into ultra and citra divisions. Hill House is the seat of Captain Moller; and Little Hill House, the seat of John Edmund, Esq.

LANVAPLEY, 5½ miles E. from Abergavenny, in the road to Monmouth, contains 22 houses, and 112 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mapley, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*

LANVETHERINE, 6 miles E. from Abergavenny, contains 41 houses, and 212 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James the Elder, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

LANVIANGEL CRUCORNEY, or Llanvihangel Crickhornel, 5 miles N. from Abergavenny, on the borders of Herefordshire, contains 66 houses, and 299 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is between the hills of Pen y vale and the Skirrit, or St. Michael's Mount. Trewyn House, near it, is the seat of —— Rosher, Esq. The hamlet of Penbiddle, in Skenfreth hundred, is in this parish; there is a railway from Lanviangel to the river Usk at Abergavenny.

OLD CASTLE, on the borders of Herefordshire, 9 miles N. from Abergavenny, contains 15 houses, and 67 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. Old Castle is remarkable as having been the residence of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, the first author, as well as the first martyr amongst our nobility. He assumed his name from this estate, and became Lord Cobham by marriage with Joane, the granddaughter and heiress of John Lord Cobham. He was a nobleman of great talents, spirit, and courage; and being disgusted with the corruptions of the church, became chief of the Lollards, and shook by his writings and example the authority of the Roman Pontiff. His bitter reproaches against the hierarchy excited persecution, and he was condemned for heresy and rebellion in 1417. Posterity have forgotten his defects in his virtues; the enthusiast is lost in the martyr, and his death is a memorable epoch in the annals of the church, the reformation of which sprung from his ashes*.

2. Caldicot Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Usk and Ragland hundreds; on the east by Gloucestershire; on the south by the Bristol Channel; and on the west by Went Lloog hundred. It is separated into upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

ST. ARVANS, 2 miles N. from Chepstow, contains 54 houses, and 289 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Beaufort. The parish extends into Ragland hundred on the north, in which is situated the hamlet of Portcassegg.

Persefield, on the east of St. Arvans, is the seat of Nathaniel Webb, Esq. and is situated on the banks of the Wye. The celebrated grounds of Persefield, high above the bed of the river, form the brink of a lofty and steep precipice towards the south-west. On the north is Wind Cliff, an immense rock, elevated as much above the grounds at Persefield, as those are above the farm at Llancot in Gloucestershire. The grounds are divided into the upper and lower lawn by the approach to the house, a modern edifice nearly rebuilt by George Smith, Esq., who became the possessor after Valentine Morris, Esq., the first who brought the beauties of the scenery into notice. In the house, which consists of a centre and wings of stone, are four pieces of Gobelin tapestry, representing the natural history of Africa, which are said to have belonged to Louis XVI. The house stands near the precipice, but fronting the lower lawn,—a beautiful ground, falling precipitately every way into a valley, which shelves down in the middle, and is scattered with groups and single trees in excellent style. The view from the house, soft, rich, and beautifully picturesque, is composed of the lawn, woods, and opposite bank of the river; the Wye near its mouth winding through meadows in a manner peculiarly graceful; the Severn, here very broad, is backed by the wooded and highly cultivated hills of Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire. The view from the upper lawn commands the cultivated hills and valleys of Monmouthshire, bounded by the Severn, and backed by the Mendip Hills, but is much inferior to that from the house. To give variety to the views from Persefield, to disclose the native grandeur which surrounds it, and to set off its most striking features to advantage, walks have been cut through the woods and on the face of the precipice, which border the grounds on the south and east. The first point of view on advancing from the bottom of the lower lawn is an alcove, whence are seen the town and bridge of Chepstow, with its castle on the very brink of a perpendicular rock washed by the Wye, and beyond it the river Severn. The grotto at the head of Persewood commands a view of the opposite rocks, truly magnificent; and the walk on the face of the precipice, facing Llancot in Gloucestershire, is carried along a ledge dug out of the rock, or carried through projecting fragments: from this point a vast inclosure of rocks and precipices, which marks the peculiar magnificence of Persefield, is seen to advantage. The view of the fields of Llancot and the lower margin of Persewood is broken by the graceful winding of the Wye; and across the isthmus, formed by the river on the Gloucestershire side, are the remains of a deep intrenchment ealled the Bulwark. From the perforated rock a path leads down to the Cold Bath, and thence to the meadow below; and from the Cold Bath upward a coach-road conducts to the top of Wind Cliff, the loftiest elevation on the Wye, where in one vast view are united the sublime and beautiful of Persefield, Llancot, the grounds of Persefield, the castle and town of Chepstow, the windings of the Wye and its conflux with the Severn; on the east, the forest of Dean; on the west, the rich marshes and picturesque mountains of South Wales, the Bristol Channel, mouth of the Avon, with ships at anchor in King Road, and vessels of different descriptions under sail, Aust Cliff, with the vale of Berkeley, backed by the wooded swells of Gloucestershire, and terminating in distant hills.

CAERWENT, 5 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 68 houses, and 394 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Crick. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Landaff. Caerwent is supposed to have been the Venta Silurium of Antoninus's Itinerary; the remains of an encampment are on an eminence greatly elevated, with the Nedern brook at its base; the foundations of the Roman wall describe a parallelogram of four hundred and fifty yards by three hundred and fifty. Copper coins of the empire are frequently found here, and near the south-western angle of the wall a tesselated pavement was discovered by Mr. Lewis of Chepstow, in 1777; the pavement is twenty-one feet six inches by eighteen feet four inches in dimension; the pieces of which it is composed are stone and terra cotta, mingled, nearly square, and the colours are blue, white, yellow, and red. A second pavement was discovered in 1793. The remains of this very considerable Roman building are extremely picturesque; in some places the ruins are mantled with ivy, and in others planted with trees.

Crick House is the seat of Major Pleydell.

CALDICOT, a mile S. from Caerwent, and 5 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 112 houses, and 498 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* Caldicot Castle, situated on low ground, about a mile from the Bristol Channel, is said to have been built by one of the Bohuns, Earls of Hereford, who were the hereditary Lords High Constables of England for nearly two hundred years; from whom the castle descended to Henry Duke of Lancaster, and on his accession as Henry IV. it was invested in the Crown. The ivy-mantled walls enclose a large court, with three entrances. The principal gatehouse is flanked by lofty square towers; on the east are the remains of the hall, comprising a range of fine windows of large dimensions. The workmanship of the walls is excellent, the courses of large and equal sized stones are truly squared and neatly joined, but there is little appearance of defence being an object with the architect.

CHEPSTOW, or Strigul, on the river Wye, 135 miles from London, and 14 miles S. from Monmouth, contains 531 houses, and 3008 inhabitants. The trade of this town is considerable in corn and other produce of the surrounding fertile country. Shipbuilding is also carried on to a great extent, and vessels of six hundred tons burden are here built for the Baltic trade. The merchants import wines from Oporto, and deals, hemp, flax, &c., from Norway and Russia; they send great quantities of timber to Portsmouth, Plymouth, Woolwich, &c.; and bark, cider, &c., to Liverpool and several ports in Ireland, having convenient quays on the banks of the Wye. Here is a market on Saturday, and fairs on Friday in Whitsun week, for horned cattle; Saturday before June 20, for wool; 1st August, Friday se'nnight after St. Luke's day, 18th October, and the last Monday in each month, for cattle. The petty sessions for the upper division of Caldicot hundred are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* An alien priory of Benedictine monks, belonging to the abbey of Cormeile in Normandy, was founded here as early as the reign of Stephen. It was scized by the Crown, but was restored by Henry IV. King Edward IV. afterwards granted it to God's House, a college in Cambridge, but the grant appears not to have taken effect. At the Dissolution it was valued at 32*l.* 4*s.* The priory was dedicated to St. Mary. In the church, the nave of the ancient priory, is a monument to the memory of Henry second Earl of Worcester, K.G., who died in 1549; and here was interred the celebrated regicide Henry Martin, who died in Chepstow Castle, where he had been confined twenty years, in 1680, æt. 79. The curious anagrammatical epitaph, written by himself, has long been removed; and the inscription by Southey for the room in which he was imprisoned, was admirably parodied in the Anti-Jacobin. At Chepstow the tide is said to rise higher than in any other part of the world, and in January 1768 to have attained the height of seventy feet; its greatest rise of late years has been fifty-six feet. Over the river Wye was formerly a wooden bridge, of prodigious height, erected on piles. A new bridge was opened in July 1816, consisting of five arches, the centre of which spans one hundred and twelve feet, the two adjoining arches seventy feet, and the outward arches fifty-four feet; the bridge is of cast iron, on stone piers, and its total length is five hundred and thirty-two feet: it was founded in 1815. In March of that year the tide rose from low-water mark to the height of fifty-one feet two inches. The rocky cliffs on each side the river, and the beautiful scenery of Persefield, afford the most delightful prospects imaginable. There is an ebbing and flowing well in the garden of a house in Bridge-street, remarkable for good water. It is perfectly dry at high tides, but returns soon after the ebb; and its increase and decrease regularly correspond with the tide, but are never affected either by wet or dry weather.

Chepstow Castle, or Castle Gwent, stands in a bold and commanding situation on a rock of considerable elevation, of which it occupies the entire summit. The lords of the castle and town were the Earls of Pembroke, of the House of Clare, the last of which was Richard Strongbow, Earl of Strigul, Chepstow, and Pembroke, who died in 1176; by his daughter and heiress Isabel the lordship was transferred to the Marshalls, and then to the family of Herbert. William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, K.G., in the reign of Edward IV. held the castle, manor, and lordship of Chepstow, &c.; he was beheaded after the battle of Banbury in 1469. From this family it descended to that of Somerset, by the marriage of Elizabeth, sole daughter and heiress of William Herbert, Earl of Huntingdon and Lord Herbert of Ragland, Chepstow, and Gower, with Sir Charles Somerset, afterwards Earl of Worcester and K.G. In the civil war in the reign of Charles I., this castle and town were garrisoned for the King, but were surrendered in 1645 to Colonel Morgan, governor of Gloucester, for the Parliament; after which it is said to have suffered materially. The magnificent ruins receive a very picturesque appearance from the spreading ivy, with which they are overrun. The area, said to have occupied five acres, consists of three courts. The gate-house at the entrance is nearly perfect, and a round tower at the south-east angle of the first court is shown as the prison of Henry Martin, the regicide, M.P. for Berkshire, and son of Sir Henry Martin, a judge of the Admiralty. The castle was probably erected by the Clares; and the stratum of Roman brick observed in the walls is very likely to have been brought from Caerwent. The chapel was very large; and the hall of great extent, said to have been paved with ornamental tiles, has served the purpose of a glass-house.

In 1645, Colonel Morgan, Governor of Gloucester, at the head of three hundred horse and four hundred foot, assisted by the men of Monmouthshire, with little difficulty made himself master of the town of Chepstow, and sent the following summons to Colonel Robert Fitz Maurice, the governor of the castle, on the 5th October of that year.

"Sir,

"I am commanded by His Excellency Sir Thomas Fairfax, to demand this castle for the use of the King and Parliament, which I require of you, and to lay down your arms, and to accept of reasonable propositions, which will be granted both to you and your soldiers, if you observe this summons; and further, you are to consider of what nation and religion you are. For if you refuse this summons, you exclude yourself from mercy, and are to expect for yourself and soldiers no better than Stinchcombe quarter *. I expect your sudden answer, and according thereunto shall rest your friend. THOMAS MORGAN."

To the summons Colonel Fitz Maurice sent this answer:—

"Sir,

"I have the same reason to keep this castle for my master, the King, as you to demand it for General Fairfax; and until my reason be convinced and my provisions decreased, I shall, notwithstanding my religion, and menaces of extirpation, continue in my resolution and in my fidelity and loyalty to my King. As to Stinchcombe quarter, know not what you mean by it, nor do depend upon your intelligence for relief, which in any indigence I assure me of, and in that assurance I rest your servant. ROBERT FITZ MAURICE."

"P.S. What quarter you give me and my soldiers I refer to the consideration of all soldiers, when I am constrained to seek for any."

Notwithstanding this resolute answer, he four days afterwards surrendered the castle upon articles, himself and the garrison becoming prisoners of war. After the defeat of the King's forces, Colonel Fitz Maurice retired to the continent, and died in Germany, about 1680.

ITTON, on Pool Meyrick, a brook which falls into the Severn at St. Pierre, 3 miles N.W. from Chepstow, contains 24 houses, and 123 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Itton Court is the seat of William Currie, Esq. Howick, near this place, is considered extra-parochial, but seems in some respects a hamlet of this parish.

LANVAIR DISCOED, or Llanvair Icoed, 6 miles W. from Chepstow, contains 39 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chapter of Landaff Cathedral. Dinham is a hamlet of this parish. Lanvair was anciently the residence of the family of Kemeys, but the ruins of the castle are now very inconsiderable. Strigul is distinct from Chepstow, although anciently confounded: some remains of Strigul Castle may still be seen on a brow of the Forest of Wentwood, two miles north-west from Lanvair, commanding the road from South Wales. It was built by Gilbert Strongbow, Earl of Ogye; and the Cambrians called it Castel Glyn y Strigul, or the castle on the river Strigul. From the time of Henry II., to whom Gwent submitted, the Royalty of Wentwood Chase was vested in the Crown, and its privileges were ascertained in the Charta Forestæ of Henry III.; but the rights of lords of manors and free tenants in times of general confusion became involved and disputable. In the assumption of the Chase of Wentwood by the House of Somerset after the Restoration, the recognition of ancient customs and privileges involved it in numerous controversies and processes of law.

* Stinchcombe was a place where the Parliament complained of Prince Rupert for putting their men to the sword.

MATHERN, on the banks of the Severn, 3 miles S. from Chepstow, contains 55 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Theodorick, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff. In the chancel is the following inscription: "Here lieth entombed the body of Theodorick, King of Morgannuck, or Glamorgan, commonly called Saint Theodorick, and accounted a martyr, because he was slain in a battle against the Saxons, being then pagans, and in defence of the Christian religion. The battle was fought at Tinterne, where he obtained a great victory. He died here, being on his way homeward, three days after the battle, having taken order with Meuric his son, who succeeded him in the kingdom, that in the same place he should happen to decease, a church should be built, and his body buried in the same;—which was accordingly performed in the year 600." Miles Sally, Bishop of Landaff, was buried here in 1516; Anthony Kitchin, Bishop of Landaff, in 1560; Hugh Jones, Bishop, in 1574; and William Blethyn, Bishop, in 1590. In the chancel is a monument of Thomas Hughes, Esq., of Moynes Court, ob. 1664. Mathern derives its name from Merther Tuderic, the martyrdom of Theodorick. Here was formerly a palace of the Bishops of Landaff, built by John de la Zouch in the reign of Henry V. It consisted of two courts; the outer court, now nearly destroyed; the gate-house of the inner court and remains of the chapel are left: it is now inhabited by a farmer.

Moynes Court, or Monks Court, the seat of John Owen, Esq., was built by Francis Godwin, Bishop of Landaff in 1601; his arms, impaled with those of the See, are sculptured over the porch. It stands in a picturesque situation, about a mile from the banks of the Severn, and commands a fine view of the river, the Bristol Channel, and King Road. In the garden walls are several slabs, with Roman inscriptions, which are given in Camden's Britannia; drawings of them having been sent to the author by Bishop Godwin, by whom they were discovered near this place.

MOUNTON, on Pool Meyrick brook, 2 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 12 houses, and 52 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

NEWCHURCH, 6 miles N.W. from Chepstow, contains 120 houses, and 562 inhabitants, in the eastern and western divisions into which it is separated. It is a curacy. The inhabitants of this parish are chiefly employed in the woods of Chepstow Park, and Earls Wood, in cutting and converting wood into charcoal.

PENTERRY, 3 miles N. from Chepstow, contains 10 houses, and 60 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Caire, in the cathedral of Landaff.

ST. PIERRE, on the banks of the Severn, 3 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 8 houses, and 81 inhabitants, including Runston. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* St. Pierre is the seat of Charles Lewis, Esq.; the house is low, but from the eminences in the park are various interesting views. In the churchyard is the monument of Urian de St. Pierre, who died in 1239. Runston Chapel, a mile northward from St. Pierre, is in ruins.

PORTSCUETT, or Porth Is Coed, 5 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 26 houses, and 168 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* About a mile southward of the village, on the verge of a cliff abruptly rising from the river Severn, are the remains of a Roman encampment, the first station in Cambria; it is nearly semicircular in form, with its longest diameter towards the water, and defended on the land side by a triple rampart and two ditches, the inner rampart about twenty feet high; a number of large stones lying near are probably the remains of works erected to strengthen it. Sudbrook or Southburgh Chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, now in ruins, stands near the sea, outside the great rampart. It is said to have belonged to an ancient mansion. At the Black Rock, about a mile west from Portscuett, is the New Passage over the Severn, which, if the wind be northerly, may be passed at any time for five hours before high water; and if the wind be southerly or westerly it may be passed for seven hours after high water. At the full and change of the moon it is high water at the New Passage at seven o'clock, and the time of high water is about fifty minutes later every day. Cromwell abolished this ferry, and it was not renewed till 1718; it belongs to the family of Lewis of St. Pierre.

SHIRE NEWTON, on Pool Meyrick brook, 4 miles W. from Chepstow, contains 138 houses, and 689 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales.

Lower Division.

BISHTON, or Bishop's Town, 5 miles E. from Newport, contains 35 houses, and 153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cadwallader, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archdeacon of Landaff. Here was formerly a palace of the Bishops of Landaff, and some remains are still to be seen of the edifice.

ST. BRIDE'S NETHER WENT, 7 miles E. from Newport, and 8 miles W. from Chepstow, contains 28 houses, and 132 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* The hamlet of Landevenny is in this parish.

CHRISTCHURCH, 2 miles E. from Newport. It is situated on a considerable eminence, commanding a most extensive and agreeable prospect, and contains 97 houses, and 557 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. In the chancel is a flat stone, with an inscription to the memory of John Colmar and Isabella his wife, who died in 1376. St. Juliens, a mansion in this parish, was the property in right of his wife, and the residence of Lord Herbert of Cherbury. Caerton ultra Pontern is a hamlet of this parish. The petty sessions for the lower division of the hundred are held here and also at Magor.

GOLD CLIFF, on the banks of the Severn, 5 miles S.E. from Newport, contains 42 houses, and 268 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. This church belonged to a priory that was founded and endowed by Robert de Chandos in 1113, who by the persuasion of King Henry I. annexed it to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, whence a prior and twelve black monks were conveyed to it. On the suppression of alien priories Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, obtained of King Henry VI. the patronage of the priory, with permission to annex it to the Abbey of St. Mary at Tewksbury, to which it was made a cell in 1442. The Cambro-Britons, offended at the measure, obliged the prior and monks of Tewksbury to quit Gold Cliff in 1445, but in the following year they returned. In the twenty-ninth year of the reign of Henry VI. Gold Cliff Priory was granted to the College at Eton, and to Tewksbury again the first year of the reign of Edward IV., but in the seventh of his reign, 1467, to Eton College, by which it has been retained. In the valuation of that college, 26 Henry VIII., 1534, it was rated at 144*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* per annum. It had the appellation of Gold Cliff from a rock nearly perpendicular, and a hundred feet high, rising abruptly in an extensive moor, which consists of limestone strata nearly horizontal and parallel, supported by a base of brown sandstone, abounding with yellow micæ. The brilliant effect of the sun on the micaceous surface is a reason for the belief in the neighbourhood that the rock contains gold, and is therefore considered as a situation of peculiar value and sanctity.

IFTON, on the banks of the Severn, 6 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 8 houses, and 50 inhabitants. It is a rectory, but the church is a ruin.

LANMARTIN, 4 miles E. from Newport, contains 30 houses, and 161 inhabitants, including Landevand hamlet. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*

LANGSTONE, 4 miles N.E. from Newport, contains 26 houses, and 125 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 1*s.* Lanbeder is a hamlet of this parish, and is situated in the road by way of the New Passage to Bristol.

LANVACHES, 9 miles E. from Newport, and 7 miles W. from Chepstow, contains 47 houses, and 247 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.*

LANVIHANGELL, NEAR ROGGIET, 8 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 9 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

LANWERN, 4 miles E. from Newport, contains 5 houses, and 27 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*d.* Lanwern House, the seat of Sir Thomas Robert Salusbury, Bart., is situated on an eminence bordering upon Caldicot Level, commanding views in all directions, which in general are too extensive and indefinite to be picturesque. It was built by Charles Vanne, Esq., M.P. for Brecon, who died in 1778: his daughter and heiress Katharine married the late Sir Robert Salusbury, Bart., descended from the Salusburys of Lleweny in Denbighshire, now the seat of Colonel Hughes, M.P. He was created baronet April 11th, 1795, and was M.P. for Monmouth: he died November 17th. 1817, æt. 61, when he was succeeded by his eldest son, the present baronet.

MAGOR, 7 miles E. from Newport, contains 77 houses, and 384 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort, K.G. Redwick is a chapelry of this parish. The petty sessions for the lower division of the hundred are held here, and also at Christchurch.

NASH, 4 miles S. from Newport, in Caldicot Level, contains 43 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of Eton College.

PENHOW, 8½ miles E. from Newport, on the road to Chepstow, contains 41 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* Penhow Castle, an ancient seat of the Seymours, stands in a bold and romantic situation; the acclivity forming the direct approach being nearly perpendicular, the view from it presents a wooded ravine, rather than a valley, with rude hills in the horizon. By the marriage of the daughter of Sir John Seymour with King Henry VIII., and becoming the mother of King Edward VI., the House of Penhow arose into competition with that of Ragland, in the influence or command of the interests and transactions of this county. Hardly any opinion can be formed of the plan of the ancient castle, but it could not have been extensive, from the size of the knoll on which it stands, unless it once occupied a part of the hill, of which the knoll is a small projection. A house has been built within the walls, and parts of the old building are repaired.

ROGGIET, on the banks of the Severn, 6 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 9 houses, and 42 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*s.* 6*d.*

UNDY, on the shores of the Severn, 7 miles S.W. from Chepstow, contains 60 houses, and 280 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff.

WITSTON, on the Severn, 6 miles S.E. from Newport, contains 14 houses, and 91 inhabitants.

WILERICK, 5 miles E. from Newport, contains 7 houses, and 47 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

3. Ragland Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Skenfreth hundred; on the east by Gloucestershire; on the south by Caldicot hundred; and on the west by Usk and Abergavenny hundreds. It is, like all the hundreds of this county, separated into upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

CHAPEL HILL, 5 miles N. from Chepstow, contains 84 houses, and 464 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Beaufort, K.G. Tintern Abbey, in this parish, one of the finest ruins in the kingdom, was founded by Walter de Clare, in 1132, for Cistercian monks, and was dedicated to St. Mary. At the Dissolution, the annual revenues were valued at 256*l.* 11*s.*, when the site was granted to Henry, second Earl of Worcester, in whose family it still remains. The nave of the Abbey church is two-hundred and thirty feet by thirty-three, and the transept is one hundred and sixty feet long. The whole is mantled with ivy in masses uncommonly large, intermixed with varieties of mosses and other plants. From a point, about half a mile lower down the river the ruins appear to great advantage, as though standing upon an eminence, the eastern window presenting itself embosomed in a dense wood, the sides being clustered with ivy, and the lower part of the building concealed by underwood; the river Wye sweeping in front, forms a fine fore-ground, whilst the varied lines of the distant hills constitute a grand and solemn back-ground. The exterior of the Abbey church is very fine in its architectural proportions, particularly on the western front, but the beauty of the interior must excite the admiration of every mind, and arrest the attention of every observer. From the western door, the eye ranges along the succession of clustered shafts, supporting the arcades of the nave, and becomes fixed on the grand eastern window, at the termination of the choir. From the length of the nave, the height of the walls, the aspiring form of the pointed arches, and the size of the east window, which closes the perspective, the first impressions are those of grandeur and sublimity. Although many of the pillars have been demolished, and some of the windows and other ornamental objects become dilapidated, yet the character of all may be traced. To the enrichments of architecture are now superadded the effects produced by time; some of the windows are obscured by large masses of ivy, others are canopied, or have the sides partially covered; while the tendrils creep along the walls, encircle the pillars, and form natural wreaths round the capitals. The numerous mosses and lichens also lend their assistance to furnish contrasting tints, which tend to give a powerful effect to the appearance of this ruin. Within the church is preserved the monument and figure of the founder's brother, Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, who died in 1148. Here also was buried Walter Earl of Pembroke, Anselm de Clare, and William Herbert Earl of Pembroke. Within half a mile of this tranquil solitary scene, which forms the most beautiful and picturesque view on the river Wye, are great iron-works, situated amongst the grand wooded hills which bound the valley of Tintern: here is made some of the best and toughest iron in the kingdom, for the purpose of making tinned plates and wire. Some is made from the red iron ore, brought from Furness, in Lancashire, which is shipped at Ulverstone, and carried up the Wye to Chepstow. The iron pigs, worked into rods, are of superior quality, in consequence of the use of charcoal.

CWMCARVAN, 3½ miles S.W. from Monmouth, contains 64 houses, and 293 inhabitants. It is a curacy. It is situated on a branch of the Trothy, a river which falls into the Wye below Monmouth.

KILGWRRWG, 5 miles S.E. from Usk, contains 26 houses, and 113 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archdeacon of Landaff.

LANDOGO, on the banks of the Wye, 7 miles S. from Monmouth, contains 131 houses, and 612 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dochoe, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Caire, in the cathedral of Landaff.

LANGOVEN, 5 miles S.W. from Monmouth, contains 21 houses, and 137 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Goven, is a curacy, in the patronage of the Chapter of Landaff.

LANISHEN, 6 miles W. from Usk, and 8 miles S. from Monmouth, contains 53 houses, and 255 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a curacy.

LANSOY, 4 miles N.E. from Usk, and 2 miles W. from Lanishen contains 32 houses, and 139 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

LANVIANGEL TOR Y MYNYDD, 6 miles W. from Usk, and 9 miles S. from Monmouth, in the road to Chepstow, contains 42 houses, and 213 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2l. 15*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Landaff.

MITCHEL TROY, on the banks of the Trothy, 1½ mile S. from Monmouth, contains 56 houses, and 305 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* Troy House, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort, K.G. Lord Lieutenant of the county, is said to have been built from designs by Inigo Jones. Its chief importance is however derived from the gardens, which are highly cultivated, and produce the most delicious fruits. The Earl of Worcester's table at Ragland, at the time he received King Charles, appears to have been supplied from the gardens at Troy, then the seat of Sir Thomas Somerset, his brother; and the excellence of the various fruits caused the King to remark, "that the Sovereign of the planets had now changed the poles, and that Wales, the outcast of England's fair garden, had fairer and riper fruits than England's bowels had on all her beds." Sir Charles Somerset, K.B., sixth son of Edward, fourth Earl of Worcester, married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Sir William Powel of Troy, and Llanpylt, and added the influence of a considerable estate to that of the House of Worcester. Amongst the pictures at Troy House is a very large and beautiful portrait of the celebrated Marquess of Worcester; he is represented in an open field, seated before a tent, with the Marchioness and an infant daughter by his side; he is in a fancy dress, with a scarf over his right shoulder. The other portraits in the principal rooms are chiefly those of the Dukes of Beaufort, since the creation of that title in the reign of Charles II. The situation of Troy House is low, but it commands a very agreeable view of the town of Monmouth, with the rivers Monnow and Wye, whose waters unite just below Troy.

Henry Somerset, third Marquess of Worcester, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire, &c., having been eminently serviceable to the King, as is expressed in the Patent, since his most happy restoration, in consideration thereof, and of his most noble descent from King Edward III. by John de Beaufort, eldest son of John of Ghent, Duke of Lancaster, by Katherine Swinford, his third wife; he was by letters patent, dated on December 2, in 1682, the thirty-fourth year of his reign, advanced to the title of Duke of Beaufort, with remainder to the heirs male of his body. By King James II. His Grace was made Lord President of Wales, Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire, &c. In 1685, he was made Colonel of the eleventh regiment of foot, then first raised, the command of which he resigned that year to his eldest surviving son, Charles Marquess of Worcester. He exerted himself against the Duke of Monmouth, and in 1688 endeavoured to secure Bristol against the adherents of the Prince of Orange, upon whose elevation to the throne, His Grace refusing to take the oaths lived in retirement till his death, which happened 21st January, 1699, in the seventieth year of his age. He was buried in the Beaufort Chapel, at Windsor, having had by Mary his wife, daughter of that valiant nobleman Arthur Lord Capel, and widow of Henry Lord Beauchamp, five sons and four daughters. Mary, his Duchess, died in 1714, and was buried at Badminton, in Gloucestershire. Charles, his second but eldest surviving son, called at first Lord Herbert, but after his father was created Duke of Beaufort styled Marquess of Worcester, was a nobleman of great parts and learning, but unhappily leaping out of his coach, to avoid the danger he was exposed to by the unruliness of the horses running down a steep hill with him, he received a violent bruise and broke his thigh-bone, of which he died, in the life-time of his father, in the thirty-eighth year of his age, 13th July, 1698. His lordship in 1683, married Rebecca, daughter of Sir Josiah Child, of Wanstead, in Essex, sister of Richard Earl Tilney, and by her had three sons and three daughters. Henry his eldest son succeeded his grandfather as second Duke of Beaufort, and on Queen Anne's visiting the University of Oxford, in 1702, and going thence to Bath, met Her Majesty not far from Cirencester, on 29th August, accompanied by great numbers of gentlemen, clergy, and freeholders, and conducted her to his seat at Badminton, where a very splendid entertainment was prepared by His Grace for Her Majesty, who was very well pleased with it, as well as Prince George of Denmark, her royal consort.

His Grace took his seat in the House of Peers, 25th October, 1705, but did not go to Court till after the change of the Ministry, in 1710, when he told her Majesty that he could then call her Queen in reality. On the 10th January, 1712, he was appointed Captain of the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners, and likewise Lord Lieutenant of Hampshire, and Warden of the New Forest, Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire, and Cities of Bristol and Gloucester, on the 29th February following, and was installed Knight of the Garter at Windsor, 4th August, 1713. His Grace was also one of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and departing this life 24th May, 1714, in the thirty-first year of his age, at Badminton, had sepulture in the church there, where a monument was erected to his memory. By his first wife Mary, only daughter of Charles Sackville, Earl of Dorset, His Grace left no surviving issue. He married in 1706, Lady Rachel, daughter and co-heiress of Wriothesley Baptist Noel, Earl of Gainsborough, by whom he had Henry, his eldest son, third Duke of Beaufort, who took his seat in the House of Peers soon after he came of age, and on 16th June, 1729, was elected High Steward of the city of Hereford. In the same year he married Frances, daughter and heiress of James Viscount Scudamore, of Hom Lacy, in Herefordshire, and the next year an Act passed in Parliament authorizing the Duke and Duchess to use the additional surname and arms of Scudamore, pursuant to a settlement made by the Duchess's father; but His Grace upon full proof obtained a divorce, 2nd March, 1744, and was enabled to marry again, but died, without taking advantage of that statute, at Bath, 24th February, 1746, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. His successor in dignity and estate, was his brother Lord Charles Noel Somerset, who in 1731 was returned one of the knights of the shire for this county, also in the succeeding Parliament in 1735 was returned M.P. for the town of Monmouth, which he represented when the honours fell to His Grace by the decease of his brother. This noble Duke, who distinguished himself in the senate, both whilst a Commoner and Peer, by a steady opposition to unconstitutional and corrupt measures, and endeared himself to mankind by his social virtues, departed this life 28th October, 1756, in the forty-seventh year of his age, and was buried at Badminton. His Grace, in 1740, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Berkeley, Esq., of Stoke Gifford, in Gloucestershire, and sister of Norbonne Berkeley Lord Botetourt, whose barony she inherited*. The Duchess died 8th April, 1799, having had issue, Henry late Duke of Beaufort, and five daughters.

Henry Somerset, fifth Duke of Beaufort, seventh Marquess, and eleventh Earl of Worcester, in 1766 married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of the Honourable Edward Boscawen, Admiral of the Blue, and 20th January, 1768, was appointed Master of the Horse to Queen Charlotte, which post he resigned 17th January, 1770. His Grace was appointed Lord Lieutenant of this county, 24th December, 1771, and was likewise Colonel of the Monmouthshire Militia. In 1786, he was elected Knight of the Garter. His Grace died 11th October, 1803, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Henry Charles, the present Duke, who succeeded his father as Colonel of the Monmouth and Brecon Militia, and in 1805 was elected Knight of the Garter. He married 16th May, 1791, Lady Charlotte Leveson Gower, daughter of the late Marquess of Stafford, by whom he has issue, Henry Marquess of Worcester, a major in the army and M.P. for Monmouth, Lord Granville Charles Henry Somerset, M.P. for Monmouthshire, &c. &c. His Grace is Earl of Glamorgan, Viscount Grosmont, Baron Herbert, Lord of Ragland, Chepstow, and Gower, as also Lord Beaufort, of Caldicot Castle, all in this county, and Constable of St. Briavell's Castle, and Warden of the Forest of Dean, in Gloucestershire.

PENALTH, on the banks of the Wye, 2 miles S.E. from Monmouth, contains 76 houses, and 464 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The river Wye, after its junction with the Monnow, is buried in the deep abyss of the valley it forms, rolling over incessant shoals, from Redbrook, through a wild district, till it passes the village of Landogo, five or six miles below Penalth.

LITTLE TINTERN, on the Wye, 4 miles N. from Chepstow, contains 65 houses, and 285 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2l. 1*s.* 5*d.*

The manner of the wire-work at Tintern is thus described by the Rev. J. Ray, M.A. F.R.S., author of the Historia Plantarum, &c. "They take little square bars called Osborn iron, wrought on purpose for this manufacture, and strain (i. e. draw) them at a furnace moved by water, into square rods, about the bigness of one's little finger or less, and bow them round. When that is done, they put them into a furnace and anneal them with a pretty strong fire for about twelve hours: after they are annealed, they lay the rods in water for a month or two (the longer the better); then the rippers take them and draw them into wire through two or three holes.

"Then they anneal them again for six hours or more, and water them the second time about a week; then they are carried to the rippers, who draw them to a two bond wire, as big as a great pack-thread. Then again they are annealed the third time, and watered about a week, as before, and are delivered to the small wire-drawers, called overhouse-men;—I suppose because they work in an upper room.

"In the mill where the rippers work, the wheel moves several engines, called barrels, hooped with iron. The barrel hath two hooks on the upper side, upon each whereof hang two links, standing across, and fastened to the two ends of the tongs, which catch hold of the wire, and draw it through the hole. The axis on which the barrel moves runs not through the centre, but is placed towards one side, viz. that on which the hooks are. Underneath is fastened to the barrel a spoke of wood, called a swingle, which is drawn back a good way by the cegs in the axis of the wheel and draws back the barrel, which falls to again by its own weight. The tongs hanging on the hooks of the barrel are by the workmen fastened on the wire, and by the force of the wheel, the hooks being drawn back, draw the wire through the holes. The wire is anointed with oil to make it run the easier; and the plate wherein the holes are, is on the outside iron, and on the inside steel. The holes are bigger on the iron side, because the wire finds more resistance from the steel, and is straightened by degrees.

"There is another mill, where the small wire is drawn, which with one wheel moves three axes, that run the length of the house, on three floors, one above another; the description whereof would be difficult to understand without a scheme, and therefore I shall omit it*.

The kind of iron used for making wire is the seftest and tonghest of all, and is made wherever iron is found, although of the worst sort. It is the first iron that runs from the mine stone when it is melting, which is reserved purely for this purpose.

Of all the iron works in England, those of the Forest of Dean are in the most repute; the ore is here found in great abundance, differing much in colour, weight, and goodness. The best, called brush ore, is of a blueish colour, very ponderous, and full of little shining specks like grains of silver, which affords the greatest quantity of iron; but being melted alone, produces a metal very short and brittle, and therefore not so fit for common use. To remedy this, the workmen make use of another sort of material, termed cinder,—the refuse of the ore after the metal has been extracted; and which being mingled with the other, in a certain quantity, gives it that excellent temper of toughness which causes this iron to be preferred. After they have provided the ore, their first work is to calcine it, which is done in kilns. These they fill up to the top with coal and ore, stratum super stratum, one layer upon another; and putting fire to the bottom, they let it burn till the coal is wasted, and then renew the kilns with fresh ore and coal in the same manner as before. This is done without fusion of the metal, and serves to consume the more drossy part of the ore, and to make it malleable; supplying the beating and washing, which are used in other metals. Hence they carry it to the furnace, which is built of brick or stone, about twenty feet square on the outside, nearly thirty feet in height within, and about eight or ten feet over at the widest, which is about the middle, the top and bottom having a conical form. Behind the furnace are fixed two pair of bellows, the noses of which meet at a little hole near the bottom; these are compressed together by certain buttons placed on the axis of a very large wheel, originally turned by water in the manner of an overshot mill. As soon as these buttons are slid off, the bellows are raised again by the counterpoise of weights, and made to play alternately, the one giving its blast while the other is rising.

At first they fill the furnace with ore and cinder, intermixed with fuel, which in these works is always of charcoal, laying them hollow at the bottom that they may more easily take fire; after they are once kindled, the materials run together into a hard cake, which is sustained by the form of the surface, and through this the metal, as it melts, trickles down into the receivers set at the bottom, where there is a passage open, by which the workmen occasionally take away the dross and let out the metal. Before the mouth of the furnace is a bed of sand, furrowed in the form the iron is to be cast. As soon as the receivers are full, they let in the metal, which is made so very fluid by the violence of the fire, that it not only runs to a considerable distance, but stands afterwards boiling for a good while. When the furnaces are once at work, they are kept constantly employed for many months together, the men never suffering the fire to slacken night or day, but still supplying the wasting of the fuel and other materials with fresh, poured in at the top. Charcoal is used altogether in this work. From these furnaces the workmen bring their sows and pigs of iron to the ferges, where it is afterwards wrought into bars.

The properties of toughness and hardness are doubtless greatly improved by the iron being wrought in wood charcoal, of which this and the neighbouring parishes afford a plentiful supply.

The river Wye here winds with inexpressible grandeur round the ivy-mantled ruins of Tintern Abbey, which is included in the parish of Chapel Hill. Sir Thomas Herbert of Tintern was created baronet 3rd July, 1660, but the title is now extinct.

TRELLECK, 5 miles S. from Monmouth, contains 21 houses, and 138 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The parish consists of the parish division, the town division, and the grange division, and contains in the whole 986 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the upper division of the hundred are held here. In the neighbourhood is a mineral spring and a tumulus. Here Gryffyd ap Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, was defeated in 1063; and this district was subjugated by Harold, afterwards King of England. Harold's stones and Cryg y Dyrn are remarkable antiquities at Trelleck.

WOLVES NEWTON, 5 miles W. from Usk, contains 40 houses, and 222 inhabitants. It is a curacy: at Cwrt y Gaer, on the west of the village, is an encampment.

Lower Division.

BETTUS NEWYDD, 3 miles N. from Usk, contains 16 houses, and 84 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chapter of Landaff Cathedral.

BRYNGWYN, 6 miles S.E. from Monmouth, and 7 miles N. from Usk, contains 52 houses, and 265 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

DINGESTOW, or Dynystow, on the banks of the Trothy, 3¾ miles S.W. from Monmouth, contains 38 houses, and 174 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of Landaff. Dingestow Court is the seat of Samuel Bosanquet, Esq. William Earl of Pembroke died in 1469, possessed of the castle and lordship of Dingatstow, in the Marches of Wales. The castle stood on the north side of the church, but no remains are left. In Welsh the place is called Llan Dingat. Richard Jones, Esq., a former proprietor of Dingestow, gave rise to the song of "Happy Dick," by which name he was familiarly called. About a mile northward of the church are the remains of Grace Dieu, or the Abbey of God's Grace, on the river Trothy. It was a small abbey, of the Cistercian order, built in 1226 by John of Monmouth, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, and was valued at the Dissolution at 26*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* per annum, when the site was granted by Henry VIII., in 1546, to Thomas Herbert and William Bretton. Park Grace Dieu, as it is now called, is extra-parochial.

LANDENNY, 3 miles N.E. from Usk, contains 89 houses, and 351 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John *, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* The fine meadows on the banks of the Olwy in this parish formed the dairy farm of the Marquess of Worcester, when he resided at Ragland. Keventilla House was the head-quarters of Sir Thomas Fairfax, during the blockade of Ragland Castle; where was held a meeting of the commissioners, who signed the treaty for its surrender; part of the building remains, with the date 1616. In the church of Landenny is a monument of Roger Oates, of Keventilla, who died in 1706, æt. 67. Trewoyan, in this parish, was formerly the seat of —— Jenkins.

PENROSE, 5 miles W. from Monmouth, and 2 miles N. from Ragland, contains 76 houses, and 385 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a curacy.

PEN Y CLAWDD, 5 miles S.W. from Monmouth, and 2 miles E. from Ragland, contains 8 houses, and 41 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

RAGLAND, 8 miles S.W. from Monmouth, and 6 miles N. from Usk, contains 125 houses, and 633 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the lower division of the hundred are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* It is a plain structure, situated in the centre of the village, with a square embattled tower at the west end. On the north side of the chancel is the Beaufort chapel, containing a monument of Edward fourth Earl of Worcester, K.G., and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Francis Hastings Earl of Huntingdon, who died in 1621, and was buried here. In the vault beneath are interred other members of this noble family. In the chancel are monuments to the memory of the family of Pytt, of Ragland.

The dilapidated remains of Ragland Castle, the seat of the Earls of Worcester, excite peculiar interest on account of the heroic gallantry with which the castle was defended in the civil war, it having the glorious distinction of being the very last place of importance that held out for the King. This castle is situated on a gradual elevation near the road to Usk, and about a mile from the village. It is said to have been founded by Sir William ap Thomas, and completed by his son William Herbert, first Earl of Pembroke, of that family, and Knight of the Garter, who was taken prisoner at the battle of Banbury, between the Yorkists and Lancastrians in 1469, and beheaded at Northampton. He was afterwards buried at Tintern Abbey. It is also said that Henry Earl of Richmond, afterwards King Henry VII., was confined in Ragland Castle, by order of Edward IV. Elizabeth, only daughter and heiress of William second Earl of Pembroke, created Earl of Huntingdon by Edward IV., married Sir Charles Somerset, Lord Chamberlain to King Henry VII., and afterwards Earl of Worcester, and Knight of the Garter, when Ragland Castle became the principal seat of the Earls of Worcester, by whom it was undoubtedly enlarged, and considerably embellished, and when in its splendour was considered one of the finest edifices in the kingdom. Edward fourth Earl of Worcester, K.G., was Master of the Horse to Queen Elizabeth and King James I. "He was," says Naunton, "a very fine gentleman, and the best horseman and tilter of the times, which were then the manlike and noble recreations of the court, and such as took up the applause of men, as well as the prayse and commendations of the ladyes." His son Henry, the first Marquess of Worcester, was a nobleman of great parts, piety, and wisdom, of a free and generous disposition, supported by an equal and flowing fortune, which was much impaired by his signal and manifest loyalty to King Charles I. in the large supplies of men and money he assisted His Majesty with, whose interest he powerfully asserted. The Marquess of Worcester, says Clarendon, was generally reputed the greatest monied man in the kingdom, and probably might not think it an unthrifty thing rather to disburse it for the King, who might be able to repay it, than to have it taken from him by the other party, which would be hardly questionable if they prevailed. He maintained Ragland Castle with a garrison of eight hundred men, from 1642 to 1646, without receiving any contribution from the country. On 19th August it was surrendered, upon very honourable articles, to Sir Thomas Fairfax, for the use of the Parliament. The Parliamentary army, during the blockade by Colonel Morgan, occupied a ridge of land half a mile eastward of the castle, and the treaty was concluded at Mr. Oates's house, at Keventilla, about two miles and a half from Ragland. After its surrender the castle was dismantled, and all the timber in the three parks that lay near the house was cut down and sold by the committees for sequestration; the offal of which (for there was no coppice wood in any of the parks), according to the subcommittees, amounted to thirty-seven thousand cords of wood. The lead that covered the castle was sold for 6000*l.*, and a great part of the timber thereof, to the citizens of Bristol, to rebuild the houses on the bridge there, which had been lately burnt. The loss to this truly noble family was computed at 100,000*l.*, besides at least as great a sum lent to His Majesty by the Marquess, and supporting the abovementioned garrison, &c. The conditions of capitulation were basely violated, and the Marquess of Worcester was taken into custody of the Black Rod, one of the Gentlemen Ushers of Parliament, in which he died in December following, and was buried at Windsor. There is extant a book, entitled "Certamen Religiosum; or a Conference concerning Religion," between King Charles I. and Henry, late Marquess of Worcester, in Ragland Castle, 1646; also the Golden Apophthegms of King Charles I., and Henry Marquess of Worcester, 1660 and 1669. The remains of Ragland Castle, which have suffered much from wanton depredation since the above period, consist of the Citadel or Yellow Tower, the walls of which are hexagonal in plan, and ten feet thick; it was encompassed by a moat and connected with the castle by a bridge. There are steps leading to the summit of the citadel, but every room is utterly destroyed. The principal Gate House of the castle is in good preservation, and forms the entrance to the stone court, in which are the remains of the hall, sixty-six feet by twenty-eight, with a fine oriel window. Here the officers of the household usually dined, at three tables: at the first table sat the steward, the comptroller, the secretary, the master of the horse, the master of the fishponds, Lord Herbert's preceptor, and such gentlemen as came to the castle under the degree of a knight, who were attended by footmen, and plentifully served with wine: at the second table in the hall, which was served from the Lord's table in the dining-room, and with other hot meats, sat the sewer, the gentlemen waiters, and pages to the number of twenty-four: at the third table sat the clerk of the kitchen, with the yeomen officers of the household, grooms of the chambers, &c. The kitchen tower, and offices connected with it, were also in the stone court. Beyond is another large court, containing the chapel, &c.: the whole space within the walls of the castle was four acres two roods and one perch, On the south front are the remains of a noble terrace, two hundred and sixty feet long.

Edward Somerset, eldest son of the Marquess of Worcester, when Lord Herbert of Chepstow, Ragland, and Gower, was created Earl of Glamorgan, by King Charles I. He also was a devoted loyalist in the service of his unfortunate master, and afterwards became the second Marquess of Worcester, and author of that very curious book the "Century of Inventions."

TREGARE, 5½ miles S.W. from Monmouth and 1½ mile N. from Ragland, contains 66 houses, and 335 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

4. Skenfreth Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Herefordshire; on the east by the same county and Gloucestershire; on the south by Ragland hundred; and on the west by Abergavenny hundred. It is separated into upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

GROSMONT, or Grysmond, on the borders of Herefordshire, 11 miles N.E. from Abergavenny, and 10 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 130 houses, and 701 inhabitants. It is governed by a mayor and burgesses; and the petty sessions for the hundred of Ewyas Lacy, in Herefordshire, are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales. In the churchyard, near the east wall of the chancel, is a monumental slab, said to cover the remains of John of Kent or Gwent, a Franciscan monk, who died in 1348, whose wonderful achievements are traditionally related in the neighbourhood; according to which, the inhabitants are indebted to him for the construction of the bridge over the Monnow, in the road to Kentchurch, in Herefordshire. It is called John of Kent's Bridge, and is said to have been built in one night. Grosmont Castle, now in ruins, stands on a hill commanding a view of a beautiful valley, watered by the Monnow, and bounded by Craig Savenny and the Garway Hill. The remains of this ancient castle occupy the summit of the eminence; its ivy-clad walls partly impending over the precipitous banks of the river, amidst a grove of wide spreading oaks, render the view exceedingly picturesque. The lordship of Grosmont was absorbed in the acquisitions of the House of Lancaster, and a court baron is held for the district called the hundred of the three castles, Grosmont, Skenfreth, and White Castle, or Castel Gwyn. The Duke of Beaufort, K.G. is receiver of the rents of the Duchy of Lancaster, in this county.

LANGUA on the Monnow, which here divides this county from Herefordshire, 11 miles N.E. from Abergavenny, contains 11 houses and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

LANTILLIO GROSSENNY, or Landeilo Cressenny, on the Trothy, 7 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 140 houses, and 710 inhabitants, including the upper and lower divisions of the parish. The church, dedicated to St. Thelian, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop, Archdeacon, and Chapter of Landaff. About a mile northward of the village is White Castle, or Castel Gwyn, the seat of Gwyn ap Gwarthfoed, before the Conquest; after whom it is supposed to have been held by Hamelin de Balun, who subdued Upper Gwent. In modern times it was in possession of the Philpot family.

Old Court was the seat of Dafydd ap Llewelyn, generally called David Gam, or Squinting David; he was descended from Einion Sais, who served in the battles of Cressy and Poictiers. The life of David Gam was disgraced by his attempt to assassinate his brother-in-law Owen Glyndwr, but his heroic behaviour at Agincourt has rendered his memory glorious. When sent to reconnoitre the French army before the battle, instead of being dispirited by their numbers, he made the memorable report, that "there were enow to be killed, enow to be taken prisoners, and enow to run away." And when King Henry was stunned by a blow from the Duke D'Allençon, Gam interposed and received the sword intended for his king.

LANVIHANGEL YSTERN LLEWERN, 6 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 28 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* It is situated partly in Ragland hundred.

SKENFRETH on the Wonnow, 6 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 84 houses, and 488 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bridget, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Skenfreth Castle, situated in the narrow valley of the Monnow, is small. Robert ap Howel, in the reign of Henry III., is said to have held the office of constable of this castle for life, with wages and fees accustomed; he was also master sergeant of the lordships of Monmouth, White Castle, Grosmont, and Skenfreth.

Lower Division.

DIXTON NEWTON, on the river Wye, 1½ mile N.E. from Monmouth, contains 105 houses, and 565 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Hadnock. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* Hadnock House, the seat of Dr. Griffin, commands a most beautiful view of the vale of the Wye.

LLANGATTOCK VIBON AVEL, 4 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 97 houses, and 514 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

MONMOUTH, situated at the confluence of the rivers Monnow and Wye, 129 miles from London, contains 769 houses, and 4164 inhabitants. It is extensive, but contains only one principal street, running east and west, in the road from Ross to Usk: there are three bridges; the Monnow bridge, with its ancient gate-house, at the west end; Tibs bridge over the Wye at the east end of the town; and another over the Trothy. The town was incorporated by King Charles I., and is governed by a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, fifteen common councilmen, and a town clerk. The assizes for the county are always held here, and also the petty sessions for the hundred of Skenfreth. The town-hall has on its front a statue of King Henry V. with an inscription under it: "Henry the Fifth, born at Monmouth August 9th, 1387." The burgesses, inhabitants of the boroughs of Newport and Usk, have a right to vote in the election of a member of Parliament for Monmouth. This privilege was conferred by Henry VIII., and the voters amount to about eight hundred. The present M.P. for the town is the Most Noble the Marquess of Worcester. The county gaol, situated at the northern side of the town, is built on Howard's plan, combining utility, strength, and comfort. Monmouth carries on a considerable trade with Bristol, by means of the Wye, importing a variety of goods necessary for the consumption of a large tract of inland country. The town was once famous for its caps, which are noticed by Fluellen, in Shakspeare's "Henry V," and highly commended by Fuller, in his "Worthies". The market on Saturday is well supplied with all sorts of provisions and corn. Fairs, Whit Tuesday, 4th September, and 22nd November, for cattle, horses, and sheep.

After the defeat of the King's army at Marston Moor, in 1644, Prince Rupert directed his attention to the Marches of Wales, and resolved to fortify Beachley, and with troops of horse to secure the isthmus between the rivers Severn and Wye; but here he was defeated by Colonel Massey. Lieutenant Colonel Kyrle afterwards negociated with Massey to deliver up the town of Monmouth, then held for the King. He had revolted from the Parliamentary army on the loss of Bristol, and was willing to purchase his peace with them at the price of this important town. Kyrle proposed to Colonel Massey to pretend a sudden return to Gloucester with his forces from Beachley, when he would come out from Monmouth as if to fall on his rear, which might then drive him back, and enter Monmouth with him.

Massey accordingly gave out the necessity of a retreat, and having marched three miles, lodged his forces in the thickets of the Forest of Dean. This intelligence soon reached the town of Monmouth, whence the Lieutenant Colonel drew out his men to follow the rear of Massey. At High Meadow House, about a mile from Colford, he was surprised by Massey, and all his horsemen were led towards Monmouth; but the town had been alarmed by a cornet, who had escaped, and the garrison stood on their guard. Kyrle advanced to the drawbridge with a hundred horse, and pretending to return with many prisoners, the officers and soldiers on guard were deceived; the bridge was let down by the consent of Colonel Holtby the governor, when the town was entered 26th September. The governor and great part of the garrison escaped, some prisoners were made, and the remainder put to the sword.

The loss of Monmouth, called the Key of South Wales, alarmed the Earl of Worcester at Ragland Castle, who requested the assistance of Prince Rupert's cavalry, which obtained some advantages over the flying parties of Massey; but did not greatly disturb his possession of Monmouth, which became a famous garrison in strong association with all the country.

The castle is supposed to have been built by John of Monmouth, who was deprived of his estate by Henry III., for his adherence to the barons. The King created his son Earl of Lancaster, and this estate became annexed to the earldom. The castle was a favourite residence of John of Ghent, who succeeded to it by marriage with Blanch, daughter of Henry of Monmouth Duke of Lancaster. Edward II. was confined in this castle when taken prisoner by his Queen Isabella in 1326. King Henry V., son of Henry of Bolingbroke, was born in the castle in 1387. The irregularities of this monarch when Prince of Wales, and his glorious military achievements in the conquest of France, have been so inimitably pourtrayed in Shakspeare's Dramas, that he still seems to live in our own age, and to be as agreeably associated with our familiar recollections as the most illustrious characters in recent history. His good-humoured dissipation and pleasantry in youth became the foil to his subsequent greatness, and were probably as much the origin of that strong admiration, with which he is still regarded, as his general talents, or the splendour of his victories, to which his personal courage so highly contributed. He died at the castle of Bois de Vincennes, near Paris, 31st of August, 1422, in the 34th year of his age *. The ancient castle now bears few vestiges of its former grandeur: the only walls left are on a hill near the market-place; they are ten feet thick. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* It is a very fine building, with a spire two hundred feet high; the ancient east end is much admired. Here is also a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, the architecture of which is curious, particularly the north doorway. Wihenoc de Monmouth, in the reign of Henry I., founded a Benedictine priory on the north side of the church. At the Suppression, in the reign of Henry VIII., it was valued at 56*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* per annum, when the site was granted soon afterwards to Richard Price: and Thomas Perry. John of Monmouth, the founder of Grace Dieu, about the year 1240, endowed a hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and the hospital of St. John, which was given by his son to the priory.

A small chamber in the remains of this ancient monastery is traditionally assigned as the library of Geoffrey of Monmouth, the famous British historian, who flourished in the reign of Henry I., and was born here, and very probably educated in the priory. The apartment bears in the ceiling and windows marks of former magnificence, but of a more modern character than the age of Geoffrey. He was made Archdeacon of Monmouth, and afterwards promoted to the Bishopric of St. Asaph in 1152. Robert Earl of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I., and Alexander Bishop of Lincoln, were his patrons: the first, a person of great eminence and authority in the kingdom, and celebrated for his learning; the last, the greatest patron of learned men of that time, and himself a scholar and statesman. Geoffrey of Monmouth's History is a vitiated translation of the History of the British Kings, written by St. Thelian, Bishop of St. Asaph, who flourished in the seventh century; it is extremely entertaining, and forms an epoch in the literature of this country, being almost the first production which introduced the species of composition called romance. In it will be found the affecting history of Lear, King of Britain, who divided his kingdom between Gonerilla and Regan, his two elder daughters, and disinherited his youngest daughter Cordelia, whence Shakspeare drew his incomparable tragedy of King Lear, but improved the pathos by making the death of Cordelia precede that of Lear, while in the original history, the aged father is restored to his kingdom, and survived by Cordelia. Milton also was indebted to Geoffrey of Monmouth for the beautiful fiction of Sabrina, in the Mask of Comus.

On the summit of Kymin Hill, on the south-east side of the town of Monmouth, a fine walk ends in a delightful plain crowned with Beaulieu Grove, a beautiful wood, through which walks are made terminating in seats, which present enchanting views of the surrounding country. On the centre of this eminence a building is erected, two stories in height, enriched with a frieze, containing medallions and devices referring to the exploits of celebrated British admirals. It commands views over Monmouthshire, Gloucestershire, and Herefordshire, and also of Somersetshire, Glamorganshire, Breconshire, Radnorshire, Shropshire, and Worcestershire, comprising an exquisite diversity of landscape.

Robert Lord Carey, son of Henry Lord Hunsdon, a near relation of Queen Elizabeth, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Monmouth, by King Charles I. in 1626; but upon the death of his son, the second Earl of Monmouth, in 1661, the title became extinct. James, son of King Charles II. by Lucy Walters, was created Duke of Monmouth in 1662; but upon the decapitation of the Duke in 1685, his honours became forfeited on account of his attainder. The title of Earl of Monmouth was granted by King William in 1689 to Charles Viscount Mordaunt, but his lordship afterwards succeeding his uncle in the Earldom of Peterborough, the dignities became coalesced.

ST. MAUGHANS, on the river Monnow, 4 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 35 houses, and 141 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ROCKFIELD, 2 miles N.W. from Monmouth, contains 40 houses, and 335 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Kenelm, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*

WELSH BICKNOR, on the river Wye, is locally situated in Herefordshire, 8 miles N.E. from Monmouth, in a detached portion of the county. It is so called to distinguish it from English Bicknor in Gloucestershire, and contains 17 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in the patronage of the Crown.

WONASTON, 2 miles S.W. from Monmouth, in the road to Usk, contains 27 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wona, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* In the church are monuments of the families of Herbert and Milborne, and in the porch is the ancient benitier, now seldom seen. Wonaston House, the property of Thomas Swinnerton, Esq., of Butterton, in Staffordshire, is pleasantly situated, commanding agreeable views of the surrounding country.

Tre Owen, on the banks of the Trothy, was built in 1627: over the porch are the arms of Herbert, with quarterings. It is a curious specimen of the domestic architecture of the period, and is now the property of John Jones, Esq., of Lanarth Court.

5. Usk Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Abergavenny hundred; on the north and east by Ragland and Caldicot hundreds; and on the south by Caldicot and Abergavenny hundreds. It is separated into upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

GWERNESNEY, 2 miles N.E. from Usk, contains 11 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

KEMEYS COMMANDER, 3½ miles N.W. from Usk, contains 15 houses, and 72 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. It was formerly the lordship of Edward Kemeys, who attended Hamelin de Balun in his conquest of Gwent. At Pont Kemeys, a new chain bridge over the Usk was opened in February 1830; the length of the suspension chains are two hundred and forty-two feet, and the length from pier to pier one hundred and fifty-two feet; its height, above the level of the water, is sixteen feet, with twenty-two feet of driving way. A new line of road is about to be made, avoiding the hills between the towns of Usk and Abergavenny, and facilitating the intercourse of the latter with Bristol; the approach to the bridge will come into the road above Pont y Goitrey House.

KEMEYS INFERIOR, or Kemeys Vach, 6 miles S. from Usk, and 5 miles N.E. from Newport, contains 18 houses, and 109 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

LANGEVIEW, one mile E. from Usk, contains 30 houses, and 173 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a curacy.

LLANGWN, 3 miles E. from Usk, contains 63 houses, and 337 inhabitants, including the higher and lower divisions of the parish, called Icha and Ucha. The church, dedicated to St. Jerome, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Llangwn, in the cathedral of Landaff. This church and manor being granted before 1183 to the abbey of Lira in Normandy, here was placed a cell of black monks, subordinate to that monastery. After the Dissolution of alien priories in 1415 this came to Shene in Surrey, and a parcel thereof was granted, 37 of Henry VIII., to John Doyley and John Scudamore.

LLANLLOWELL, 1½ mile S.E. from Usk, contains 11 houses, and 63 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*

LLANTRISSAINT, 2½ miles S.E. from Usk, contains 51 houses, and 271 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. John, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

TREDUNNOCK, 4 miles S. from Usk, contains 32 houses, and 178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

TROSTREY, 2 miles N. from Usk, contains 37 houses, and 205 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a curacy. Situated on the banks of a beautiful river, Trostrey House presents a remarkably picturesque scene. It is now the seat of Sir Samuel Brudenell Fludyer, Bart. Sir Samuel Fludyer, who was created baronet 14th November, 1759, was Lord Mayor of London in 1761, when King George III. and several of the Royal family honoured Guildhall with their presence at a most superb feast provided on the occasion. He was also M.P. for Chippenham in Wiltshire: he died in 1768.

Trostrey was formerly the seat of the ancestors of the Earl of Cadogan, and then became the seat and property of the family of Hughes, who obtained it by intermarriage with the heiress of that of Jones, of Trostrey. Major Hughes, of this place, was a distinguished loyalist, in the reign of Charles I., and his estates were confiscated by Parliament, but were afterwards restored on payment of a fine. Robert Hughes, Esq., the third in descent from the Major, opposed the interest of the Morgan family, in an election for M.P. for the county, and was soon afterwards obliged to sell this estate, when it became the property of Valentine Morris, Esq., of Persefield, who was also obliged to dispose of it. In the church is a monument, with an inscription, to the memory of Major Hughes.

USK, 142 miles from London, and 13 miles S.W. from Monmouth, contains 207 houses, and 989 inhabitants. It stands on a point of land formed by the confluence of the river Olwy with the Usk, in a situation uncommonly beautiful; the ranges of woods and hills on each side of the river are extremely fine; the boundaries and outlines of the valley, everywhere pleasing, perpetually vary as the points of view are changed. The river Usk, famous for its trout, is crossed by a bridge of five arches; and after being joined by the Avon, which supplies the town and works of Pontypool, it approaches Caerleon and Newport in its course to the Bristol Channel. The town of Usk is disposed in the form of an oblong square, the principal street forming the road to Abergavenny. The Corporation consists of a mayor or bailiff, and burgesses; and the petty sessions for the upper division of the hundred of Usk are held in the town-house. The burgesses, inhabitants of this town, have a right to vote in the election of an M.P. for the borough of Monmouth. The only manufacture carried on is that of japanned tin ware, but the inhabitants derive considerable advantage from the fairs and markets. The market is on Monday, and the fairs are on Monday after Trinity and 29th October for cattle and pedlary. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 10*s.* The building presents several features of Anglo-Norman architecture. A priory of Benedictine nuns was founded here before the year 1236; at the Dissolution it was valued at 69*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1544 to Roger Williams. Usk was formerly a town of some importance, and on a bold abrupt hill are the remains of its ancient castle, having a full command of the town and river; it is supposed to be the Burrium of the Romans; and in its vicinity are several encampments. Craig y Gaeryd, supposed to have been a Roman camp, is scarcely two miles north from Usk, on the brow of a precipice overhanging the eastern bank of the river, the site is overgrown with thickets and brambles, and the intrenchments are in many places thirty feet deep. Several tumuli are within the area, from fifteen to twenty feet high. From the small torrent Berden, near this encampment, some authors have derived the name of Burrium, as being placed at its confluence with the river Usk.

Gwehellog and Glascoed are hamlets of the parish of Usk; the last is included in the lower division of the hundred.

Lower Division.

CAERLEON, in the parish of Langattock, on the river Usk, 146 miles from London, 7 miles S. from Usk, and 20 miles S.W. from Monmouth, contains 256 houses, and 1360 inhabitants. Caerleon is said to have been the metropolis of Wales, and the third city in extent in Britain. It was an archbishop's see from the establishment of Christianity till the year 521, when the see was removed by St. David to Menevia, since called St. David's, in Pembrokeshire. It was the Isca Silurum of the Romans, and still exhibits vestiges of former magnificence. At present it is chiefly celebrated for an extensive tin work and an iron forge. Here is a market on Thursday and Saturday, well supplied with all sorts of provisions, and cattle and pig markets on the second Monday in every month. The fairs are on 1st May, 20th July, and 21st September for cattle. The church, dedicated to St. Cadoc, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of the cathedral of Landaff. South-westward of the town is a circular area, called Arthur's Round Table, said to be the site of an amphitheatre. Of the castle there are no remains.

LANBADOCK, one mile S.W. from the town of Usk, on the banks of the same river, contains 80 houses, and 369 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Madoc, is a curacy.

LANDEGVETH, 3½ miles S.W. from Usk, and about the same distance N. from Caerleon, contains 20 houses, and 126 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*

LANGIBBY, 2 miles S. from Usk, contains 81 houses, and 494 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cuby, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* The petty sessions for the lower division of Usk hundred are held here. The castle of Langibby has been a place of considerable strength and importance, but is now a ruin obscured by a wilderness. Langibby House, the seat of W. A. Williams, Esq., is said to have been built by Inigo Jones; its situation, on a knoll projecting from the mountains that bound the vale of the Usk, affords a delightful view of the valley from the town of Usk nearly to Caerleon; the river is here the immediate object, and constitutes the principal beauty. Rowland Williams, Esq., of Langibby, was distinguished by Queen Elizabeth and King James I., and received the honour of knighthood: his grandson Sir Trevor Williams was created a baronet 14th May, 1642, in consideration of his attachment and services to the interests of King Charles.

LANHENNOCK, one mile N. from Caerleon, contains 28 houses, and 145 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chapter of Landaff Cathedral.

LANTHEWY VACH, 3 miles S.W. from Usk, contains 32 houses, and 172 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of Landaff Cathedral.

LANVIHANGEL LANTARNAM, 2 miles N.W. from Caerleon, contains 111 houses, and 565 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Here was formerly an abbey of the Cistercian order, valued at the Dissolution at 71*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1534 to John Parker, and in 1553, to Thomas Carpenter and William Savage.

Sir Edward Morgan of Lantarnam was created baronet 12th May, 1642. The title is now extinct. Percy Enderbie, author of a curious genealogical work, entitled "Cambria Triumphans," dedicated to Charles II. in 1661, acknowledges his obligations to the library at Lantarnam, the seat of his wife's brother, Sir Edward Morgan.

LANVIHANGEL PONT Y MOILE, 5 miles W. from Usk, and 2 miles E. from Pontypool, contains 26 houses, and 158 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy.

LLANVRECHRA, 2 miles N. from Caerleon, contains 195 houses, and 973 inhabitants, including the upper and lower divisions of the parish. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archdeacon and Chapter of Landaff Cathedral.

MONKS WOOD, 2 miles N.W. from Usk, contains 32 houses, and 156 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial, and is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Beaufort.

PANTEAGUE, 4 miles S.W. from Usk, and 3 miles S.E. from Pontypool, contains 273 houses, and 1478 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* The petty sessions for the lower division of Usk hundred are held here, and also at Langibby. The establishment of iron and tin works in this parish has caused a great increase of population.

6. Wentlloog Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Breconshire; on the east by Abergavenny hundred; on the south by the Bristol Channel; and on the west by Glamorganshire in Wales. It is separated, like the other hundreds of this county, into upper and lower divisions.

Upper Division.

BASSALEG, or Basselech, on the river Ebwy, 2½ miles W. from Newport, contains 271 houses, and 1329 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Duffrin, Rogerstone, and Graig,—the last situated in the lower division of this hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Basil, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Landaff. A priory of black monks, which was a cell to Glastonbury Abbey, was founded here, but seems to have gone to decay long before the general Dissolution of religious houses.

BETTWS, 2 miles N.W. from Newport, contains 19 houses, and 76 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a curacy.

ST. BRIDE WENTLLOOG, 4½ miles S. from Newport, contains 30 houses, and 193 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Landaff.

COED KERNEW, 4 miles S.W. from Newport, contains 22 houses, and 128 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Landaff.

About a mile north of the village is Tredegar Park, the beautiful seat of Sir Charles Gould Morgan, Bart., M.P. for the county. This extensive domain, finely overspread with timber, is situated near the road from Newport to Cardiff. The mansion was originally erected in the reign of Charles II., and contains a collection of family portraits and other choice pictures: amongst the portraits is a very fine full-length of Sir John Maynard, Sergeant-at-Law. The oak room, which is forty-two feet by twenty-seven in dimension, is said to have been floored with planks cut from a single tree. The pleasure-grounds are diversified with variegated features, and covered with plantations of oak, beech, and chestnut. The rivers Ebwy and Sorwy, rising in the mountainous tract on the north-west of this estate, after uniting their streams, pass through the extensive and well-wooded park, and enter the marshes below Tredegar park, to join the Usk at its mouth. In "Iter Carolinum," printed amongst "Somers's Tracts," it is stated that King Charles I. slept at Tredegar, Sir William Morgan's, on 17th July 1645; and that he arrived at Sir Philip Morgan's, Ruperra in Glamorganshire, 25th July, and remained there till the 29th in the same year. The family of Morgan was descended from the ancient princes of South Wales, and was as much distinguished for hospitality as antiquity: it almost constantly furnished representatives for this county in Parliament. The present baronet was first returned M.P. for Monmouthshire in 1796. The Right Hon. Sir Charles Gould, LL.D., Judge Advocate General, and Judge Martial of the Forces, was created baronet 30th October, 1792: he married Jane, daughter of Thomas Morgan, Esq., of Ruperra in Glamorganshire, and sole heiress of John Morgan, Esq., of Tredegar, when Sir Charles, in pursuance of the will of the late John Morgan, Esq., obtained the Royal license to assume the name and arms of Morgan. He was M.P. for Breconshire. He died in 1806, and was succeeded by his son, the present proprietor of Tredegar. The possessions of this family cover a vast tract in the three counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, and Brecon, besides extensive estates in other parts of England.

HENTLIS, or Henllys, 3 miles N.W. from Newport, contains 34 houses, and 209 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

MALPAS, one mile N.W. from Newport, contains 39 houses, and 169 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. It was formerly the chapel belonging to a religious house at this place, and is built of unhewn stone, with Anglo-Norman enrichments. A cell of Cluniac monks, subordinate to the priory of Montacute in Somersetshire, was at a very early period established at Malpas, and was probably the grant of lands at Caerleon, made by Winebald de Balun, in the reign of Henry I., to Montacute. At the general Dissolution of monasteries it was valued at 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and granted with Montacute, by Edward VI. in 1547, to Sir William Herbert. The Herberts in former times were spread all over this county, and possessed several of the best estates and mansions in it; but notwithstanding the immense possessions of this family, it is very singular that there is not one land-owner of 50*l.* a year of the name of Herbert to be found now in the county, although it must be allowed that the family of Jones of Lanarth are of an elder branch of that of the Earls of Pembroke *. Malpas House is the seat of Lieut. Duncan Macgregor.

MARSHFIELD, 5 miles S.W. from Newport, contains 120 houses, and 483 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol.

ST. MELLONS, on the borders of Glamorganshire, 7 miles S.W. from Newport, and 5½ miles N.E. from Cardiff, contains 113 houses, and 551 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon and Chapter of Landaff Cathedral.

MICHAELSTONE VEDOW, or Llanvihangel Vedw, on the banks of the Rumney, 6 miles S.W. from Newport, and 6 miles from Caerphilly in Glamorganshire, contains 35 houses, and 197 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*

NEWPORT, or Castel Newyd, in the parish of St. Woollos, 148 miles from London, 23 miles S.W. from Monmouth, and 15 miles W. from Chepstow, contains 177 houses, and 951 inhabitants. The name of this town, which is situated on the banks of the Usk, about four miles from its mouth, was originally conferred as a distinction from Caerleon, the older port, about three miles higher up on the same river. The Corporation consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, a town clerk, recorder, and other officers. The petty sessions for the hundred of Wentlloog are held here and also at Bassaleg. The burgesses, inhabitants of this town, have a right to vote in the election of an M P. for the borough of Monmouth. A bridge of five arches was constructed in the year 1800, by David Edwards, son of William Edwards of Eglewysilan near Caerphilly, the celebrated architect of Pont y Prydd over the Taff, Usk Bridge, &c. The span of the centre arch of Newport Bridge is seventy feet, of the next two the span is sixty-two feet, and the external arches span fifty-five feet; its total cost was 10,165*l.* The erection of this bridge, in the room of the old narrow wooden structure, the platform of which rose with the tide, not always safe, was an improvement highly creditable to the liberality of this county in facilitating the intercourse with Wales. The river Usk has here a very rapid and high tide, extremely favourable for an extensive trade; and by the construction of the Monmouthshire canal, coals of a superior quality have been obtained, which has led to the erection of extensive iron-works. An increase of population in the town has been attributed to the erection of cottages and other buildings at Pillgwenlly, and other places within the parish, where the inhabitants are chiefly employed in shipping coal, iron, &c., and bringing the same from the coal and iron works on the hills, as halliers. Here is a market on Saturday, and fairs on Holy Thursday, Whit Thursday, 15th August, and 6th November, for cattle; and on the third Monday in the month for cattle and sheep. Newport is a hamlet of the parish of St. Woollos; and the church, dedicated to that saint, or as it is sometimes called St. Gunleus, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The present edifice stands on a hill on the western side of the town, and was erected in the reign of Henry III. On the west front is a statue of that King, who is said to have built the tower as a token of gratitude for the loyalty of the inhabitants. Its situation is so lofty as to serve the purpose of a sea-mark. From the top of the tower is an extensive and pleasing view, embracing a considerable part of Monmouthshire and of the Glamorganshire extremity of South Wales, the Bristol Channel to a great extent, the two Holmes, and the hills of Somersetshire on the opposite side of the Channel. Newport Castle was erected by Robert Earl of Gloucester, natural son of King Henry I., celebrated for his valour in the service of the Empress Maud, and appears to have been built for defense of the ford over the Usk. Two remaining towers overhanging the river are still in good preservation. Near this town, in 1173, Owen ap Caradoc, son of Jorwerth ap Owen ap Caradoc, Prince of Wales, whilst proceeding unarmed to meet Henry II., under the faith of a safe conduct granted to him for that purpose, was treacherously murdered by a detachment from the garrison of Newport Castle. The Monmouthshire canal commences at this town, having a basin connected with the river Usk; it is crossed by the road to Chepstow, and is continued by Malpas and Little

* Williams's Monmouthshire, Appendix, p. 11.

Kemeys to Pontypool in one direction; and by Risca to Crumlin Bridge over the river Ebwy in another direction. From Pontnewynydd, near Pontypool, is a rail-road to Blaen Avon Furnace, and from Crumlin Bridge is a rail-road to Aberbegg; whence are two others to Nant y Glo, to Beaufort iron-works, and Sorwy Furnace. About a mile from the town of Newport, on the road to Cardiff, is Tredegar House, the seat of Sir Charles Gould Morgan, Bart., M.P., situated amidst umbrageous plantations, with an ornamental sheet of water extending to the verge of the park.

PETERSTONE, on the Bristol Channel, 6½ miles S.W. from Newport, and about the same distance N.E. from Cardiff in Glamorganshire, contains 23 houses, and 122 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. Here is a Pill or harbour for small craft.

RISCA, on the river Ebwy, 5½ miles N.W. from Newport, contains 100 houses, and 358 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Vicar of Bassaleg. The Monmouthshire canal passes the village, and very extensive iron-works are carried on in the neighbourhood. An immense tumulus on the high mountain near here is called Tom Barlam.

RUMNEY, on the river of the same name which separates this county from Glamorganshire, 8 miles S.W. from Newport, and 4½ N.E. from Cardiff, contains 45 houses, and 255 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The river Rumney falls into the Bristol Channel about two miles below the village, it is here crossed by a bridge.

Lower Division.

BEDWAS, on the river Rumney and borders of Glamorganshire, 11 miles N.W. from Newport, and about one mile from Caerphilly, contains 106 houses, and 570 inhabitants, including the upper and lower divisions of the parish. The church, dedicated to St. Barrog, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Van, a hamlet locally situated in Glamorganshire, is in this parish. Van House is said to have been built by Inigo Jones.

BEDWELTY, or Bydwellty, 10 miles W. from Pontypool, contains 1016 houses, and 6382 inhabitants, including the populous divisions of Ishlawreoed, Mamhole, and Ushlawreoed. The church, dedicated to St. Sannan, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Landaff. There are very extensive coal and iron works in the neighbourhood. One mile and a half westward of Bedwelty church, which is on an eminence, is Aber Bargord Bridge, over the Rumney river. The craggy summits of the hills of this district are finely contrasted with cultivated and wooded valleys.

This part of Monmouthshire westward of the river Usk, or Wentlloog, is not uncommonly considered as Glamorganshire by the inhabitants of the eastern part of the county. After its separation from Wales, when Robert Fitz Hamon * and his Normans dispossessed Jestin ap Gwrgan, Prince of Glamorgan, of his country, the appellation of Morganwg became limited to the district that lies between the rivers Usk and Neath; which included all Wentlloog and Blaneau Gwent.

MACHEN, 6 miles W. from Newport, and 5 miles E. from Caerphilly in Glamorganshire, contains 196 houses, and 1032 inhabitants, including the upper and lower divisions of the parish. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* Half a mile westward of the village is a bridge over the river Rumney, which divides this county from Glamorganshire in South Wales. Near it is Machen Place, pleasantly situated.

MYNYDD YSLWYN, 9½ miles N.W. from Newport, and 8 miles S.W. from Pontypool, contains 514 houses, and 3186 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Clawrplwyf and Penmain. The church, dedicated to St. Tyder, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Landaff.

See! Oxford lifts her Head sublime,
Majestic in the Moss of Time;
Nor wants there Graecia's better Part,
Mid the proud Piles of ancient Art,
Nor decent Doric to dispence
New Charms 'mid old Magnificence;
And here and there soft Corinth weaves
Her dædal Coronet of Leaves.

OXFORDSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire; on the west by Gloucestershire; on the south by Berkshire; and on the east by Buckinghamshire. The extreme length of the county is fifty miles, its greatest breadth thirty-eight miles, and its circumference one hundred and thirty miles. It was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, inhabited by the Dobuni, and during the Saxon Heptarchy formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia. The Akeman Street, a Roman military way, enters this county near Alchester; and Dorchester is built on the site of the station Durocornovium. Oxfordshire contains one city and university, and had formerly abbeys at Dorchester, Ensham, Oseney, and Thame; priories at Bicester, Brightwell, Burford, and Minster Lovell; as well as nunneries at Godstow and Goring. It is in the province of Canterbury, and diocese of Oxford, excepting seven parishes in that of Lincoln. There are in this county twelve market-towns, and 280 parishes, containing in 1821, at the last census, 25,594 houses, and 136,971 inhabitants. It returns nine members to Parliament; viz. two for Oxford, two for the University, two for Woodstock, one for Banbury, and two for the county, which at present is represented by William Henry Ashurst, Esq., of Waterstock, and John Fane, Esq., of Wormsley. The air is considered as salubrious as that of any other county in England, and the soil, naturally dry, is entirely exempt from bogs, fens, and stagnant waters, being in general fertile both in grass and corn. The northern division is chiefly strong deep land, partly arable and partly pasture; the south-western includes the Royal Forest of Whichwood, a great part of which is woodland. On the banks of the Thames the soil is chiefly pasture. The Chiltern Hills form a wide tract of chalk, mixed with a small portion of loam and clay, but very full of flints: much of this is covered with beech wood; besides the Chiltern, there are not any hills in this county of considerable height: gentle eminences vary the landscape without obstructing tillage; on the grass farms much cheese is made, of a good quality, though in general thin; the cows are chiefly of the old Gloucestershire kind, and Southdown sheep are preferred; many boars are also fed for the purpose of making brawn, a considerable article of trade at Oxford and other parts. The chief manufactures in this county are those of blankets at Witney, worsted plush at Banbury and Bloxham, of gloves and polished steel at Woodstock, and of malt at Henley; the employment of females in the neighbourhood of Thame is lace-making, and in the northern part of the county spinning wool. The produce is that which is common to the midland counties; also artificial grasses, particularly sainfoin. The hills yield ochre, pipe-clay, and other earths; as well as lime-stone, free-stone, and rag-stone. The rivers are the Bure, the Cherwell, the Evenlode, the Glyme, the Isis, the Ray, the Thame, the Thames, and the Windrush. The Bure is a branch of the Ray, which it joins near Bicester. The Cherwell rises in Northamptonshire, and passing Banbury discharges itself into the Isis below Oxford. The Evenlode rises in a detached part of Worcestershire, which adjoins this county, and passing Blenheim falls into the Isis near Cassington. The Glyme falls into the Evenlode. The Isis rises in the northern angle of Wiltshire, and enters this county near Lechlade, where it becomes navigable; after passing Ensham, it receives the Evenlode, and unites with the Cherwell below the city of Oxford: flowing southward it passes Abingdon, and below Dorchester is joined by the Thame, whence their united streams form the river Thames. The Thame rises near Tring in Hertfordshire, and flowing through the Vale of Aylesbury, enters Oxfordshire near Thame, and taking almost a south-westerly direction to Dorchester, unites with the Isis. The Windrush, rising amongst the Cotswold Hills in Gloucestershire, enters this county near Burford, and passing Witney falls into the Isis at New-Bridge about eight miles below that town. The Oxford Canal commences at Longford in Warwickshire, enters this county near Claydon, passes Banbury, Alderbury, Somerton, Heyford Warine, Heyford Purcell, Shipton-on-Cherwell, Begbrook, and Wolvercott, and joins the Isis at Oxford.

The most memorable of the military transactions in this county were the battle between the English and the Danes in the year 914, at Hook Norton, in which the former were entirely defeated; the battle of Banbury between the Yorkists and Lancastrians in 1469, in which Edward IV. was made prisoner by the Earl of Warwick; and the skirmish at Chalgrove-field, 15th August 1642, which is rendered memorable by the death of the patriot Hampden. The magnificent seat and park of Blenheim was the grant of the British Parliament to the great Duke of Marlborough, on account of his signal victory over the French at Blenheim in Germany; and Shirburne Castle is the seat of the Earl of Macclesfield, Lord-Lieutenant of the county. Broughton Castle is a remarkable structure; and the remains of the ancient mansions at Stanton Harcourt, and Minster Lovel, are particularly interesting.

1. Bampton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Chadlington hundred; on the east by Wootton hundred; on the south by Berkshire; and on the west by Gloucestershire.

ALVESCOT, 5 miles S.E. from Burford, contains 65 houses, and 357 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

ASTHALL, 3 miles S.E. from Burford, contains with Ashall Leigh, to which it is united, 67 houses, and 365 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. The Akeman Street crossed the river Windrush near Asthall bridge, and Asthall barrow is the most considerable tumulus on the Akeman.

BAMPTON-IN-THE-BUSH, 6½ miles S.E. from Burford, and 71 from London, is situated on a branch of the river Isis, and contains 285 houses, and 1460 inhabitants. It is said to have been a town of some importance before the Conquest; and has a market on Wednesday, noted for fellmongers' wares, no town in England having such a trade for leather jackets, gloves, &c. A fair is held here 26th August. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, divided between three portionists, each valued at 10*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, who are presented by the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. It is a large and handsome cruciform building, with a fine Norman tower in the centre surmounted by a lofty spire. In it is an organ placed there by private subscription. Not far westward from the church are the remains of the Castle, no part of which appears to be older than the reign of Edward II., when Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, had a licence to embattle his mansion at Bampton, in 1314; in the ceiling of the principal chamber is the badge of Henry VII. The township of Weald is included in the above statement of the population. There are also the hamlets of Aston and Cote, and part of the hamlet of Brighthampton or Brittendon, Chimney, and the chapelry of Shifford, in this parish. The free grammar-school at Bampton was founded in the reign of Charles II. by Robert Veysey, of Chimney.

BLACK-BOURTON, 5 miles S.E. from Burford, in the road from Farringdon to Worcester, contains 45 houses, and 336 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 45*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. It contains monuments of the Hungerfords.

BRIZE-NORTON, 3¼ miles S.E. from Burford, contains 96 houses, and 528 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Brize, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford.

BROADWELL, 5½ miles S. from Burford, contains 49 houses, and 226 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* The hamlet of Filkins and Holwell Chapelry are in this parish. Broadwell-Grove House is the seat of William Hervey, Esq. It is surrounded by rich woodland scenery, an opening in which affords a fine prospect over the Berkshire and Wiltshire hills. Filkin's Hall is the seat of E. F. Colston, Esq.

BROUGHTON POGGS, 5½ miles S.W. from Burford, contains 24 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* Broughton Hall is the seat of Sir William Burnaby, Bart.

BURFORD, 18 miles N.W. from Oxford, and 76 from London, contains 290 houses, and 1409 inhabitants. It is situated on an ascent near the river Windrush, and had a charter from King Henry II., granting it all the customs of the townsmen of Oxford: although it has lost most of them, it still retains the appearance of a corporation, being governed by two bailiffs and other officers. The chief manufacture consists of duffels and rugs, and the inhabitants derive great advantage from its large corn-market on Saturday. The fairs are on the last Saturday in April, 5th July, and 25th Sept. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 31*l.* 13*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The edifice is cruciform, and has a Norman tower in the centre surmounted by a fine and lofty spire. In the church is a very fine monument erected to the memory of Sir Lawrence Tanfield, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, who died 30th April, 1625; several ancient tombs without inscriptions; a monument for one of the family of Harman, 1569; and many for that of Bartholomew. The font is hexagonal, with a sculptured representation of the crucifixion, &c. Here is a free grammar-school, founded by Simon Wisdome in 1571. The inhabitants of Burford celebrate yearly on Midsummer Eve a festival, in which they bear about the figure of a dragon, an ancient custom, said to have commenced in honour of a battle fought at Battle-edge, in which Cuthred King of the West-Saxons defeated Ethelbald King of the Mercians, and threw off his yoke. The banner of the last bore a golden dragon for a device. Upton and Signet are hamlets of this parish. Burford Priory, the seat of W. John Lenthall, Esq., contains several curious pictures; amongst them the famous one of the More family, another of the Lenthall family, portraits of Oliver Cromwell, Sir Kenelm Digby, the Earl of Pembroke as Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Holland, King Charles, &c.

CLANFIELD, 7 miles S E. from Burford, and 2 miles S.W. from Bampton, contains 109 houses, and 490 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*

DUCKLINGTON, in a very beautiful situation 2 miles S. from Witney, contains 72 houses, and 373 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. It is large, and stands on a hill at the southern extremity of the village; the architecture of the building is a mixture of the Norman and early pointed style. On the north side of the church is a large chapel, built about the reign of Edward III., the east and west windows of which contain particularly delicate ornamental tracery.

Hardwicke is a hamlet of this parish. The chapel stands within Cokethorpe Park, the seat of Walter Strickland, Esq.

KELMSCOTT, 9 miles S.W. from Burford, contains 29 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a curacy.

KENCOTT, 5 miles S. from Burford, contains 40 houses, and 174 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

Shilton is in a detached part of Berkshire, partly in this hundred; and Langford is chiefly in Berkshire; but the township of Grafton and the hamlet of Radcutt are in this hundred. Radcutt bridge over the Isis is of great antiquity.

STANDLAKE, 5 miles S.E. from Witney, contains 113 houses, and 643 inhabitants, including part of the hamlet of Brighthampton, or Brittenton, which is in the parish. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. Cokethorpe Park, the seat of Walter Strickland, Esq., is extremely well wooded, with a portion of lawn and pasture grounds; and though exhibiting none of the bolder features of Nature, nor commanding any very extensive views except in the direction of Oxford, presents a calm and interesting scene. The mansion was built by Sir Simon Harcourt, afterwards Lord Harcourt and Lord Chancellor in the reign of Anne. The Queen presented His Lordship with the carved oak decorations of the dining-room, and visited the chancellor at this seat after the house was finished.

Cokethorpe Park was sold in 1755 to Maximilian Western, Esq., whose daughter and heiress married Walter, brother of Sir William Strickland, Bart., of Boynton in Yorkshire. Eastward of the mansion is a large extent of fertile meadows, through which the river Windrush meanders, and about four miles hence falls into the Isis near New Bridge in the road to Abingdon. Upon this river Mr. Strickland has an extensive fishery: his woods are well stocked with pheasants; and game of every description abounds on his manors.

WESTWELL, 2¾ miles S.W. from Burford, on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 31 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford.

WITNEY, situated on the river Windrush, 11 miles from Oxford, and 66 from London, contains 533 houses, and 2827 inhabitants. It consists chiefly of two streets disposed on the sides of the road from Burford to Woodstock. Witney has long been noted for its manufacture of blankets; but since the introduction of machinery, blankets have been made at a woollen mill near Bridgend in Glamorganshire, whence they are sent to Witney for sale. The river Windrush is supposed to possess some abstergent qualities, which contribute to the whiteness and softness of the excellent and indeed unrivalled blankets manufactured here. It is likewise celebrated for its trout and cray-fish, which are plentiful and of the finest quality.

The Hall is an ancient building, in which the affairs of the incorporated Company of blanket-weavers are transacted. The market on Thursday is well attended by the neighbouring farmers, who sell large quantities of grain by sample. Fairs are held on Thursday in Easter week, 5th April, 29th June, 2nd August, and 23rd Nov. The grammar-school was founded in 1663 by Henry Box, a native of this town.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory and vicarage; the rectory value 47*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, the vicarage value 9*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* It is in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The historians, who relate the deliverance of Alwin Bishop of Winchester from the charge of adultery with Queen Emma, the mother of Edward the Confessor, by her walking unhurt over nine red-hot ploughshares, state that the Bishop gave the manor of Witney, with eight others, to his cathedral, in commemoration of that event. Witney was afterwards granted by Henry de Blois, brother of King Stephen and Bishop of Winchester, to his newly founded hospital of St. Cross at Winchester. The church, one of the finest in the county, is situated at the southern extremity of the High Street. It is a large and handsome structure, built in form of a cross, with a tower in the centre, whence rises a lofty spire, the proportions of which are rather substantial than elegant. The northern entrance, a descent of several steps, is by a circular-headed doorway, over which is a vacant canopied niche; and similar niches occur in various divisions of the north side. The spacious chancel contains a piscina and remains of the stone stalls used by the priests and deacons during the celebration of mass. On the floor is a marble slab inlaid with brass, in memory of Richard Ayshcombe of Lyford, ob. 1606. At the end of the north transept are two recumbent figures in stone without inscription. A chapel on the north side is the burial-place of the Wenman family. The ceiling of this chapel is of carved wood painted and abundantly interspersed with gilt stars.

Dr. Thomas Jackson, the ornament of the University of Oxford, was appointed Rector of Witney in 1638. "He was a person," says Anthony Wood, in Athen. Oxon., "furnished with all learned languages, arts, and sciences, especially metaphysics, which he looked upon as a necessary handmaid to divinity."

The hamlets of Crawley, Curbridge, Hailey, and Lew, are in this parish. In allusion to the proximity of these villages the natives repeat the following verse:

> Hailey, Crawley, Curbridge and Cogges,
> Witney spinners, and Ducklington dogs.

YELFORD, 4 miles S. from Witney, contains 2 houses, and 16 inhabitants. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin, and is a rectory, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*

2. Banbury Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire, which last bounds it on the east. On the south and west it is bounded by Bloxham hundred. A detached portion of this hundred is situated on the south-west, and is nearly environed by Bloxham hundred: another detached portion is surrounded by Chadlington and Wootton hundreds.

BANBURY, 23 miles N.W. from Oxford, and 75 from London, contains 651 houses, and 3396 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Cherwell, and consists of several good streets, disposed on the roads leading to Warwick, Southam, Daventry, Brackley, Oxford, and Chipping Norton. The Oxford and Coventry Canal, which passes this town, is a source of much advantage to the inhabitants, who have no staple manufacture, but derive a great portion of their support from the trade in cheese, which finds a ready sale in the weekly market held on Thursday,—the best in the county. The fairs are on Thursday after 17th Jan., the first Thursday in Lent, second Thursday before Easter, Ascension Day, Thursday in Trinity week, Old Lammas Day, Thursday after the 1st Oct., Old St. Luke's Day, and second Thursday before Christmas.

Banbury received its first charter of incorporation from Queen Mary, and is governed by a Mayor, High Steward, and Recorder, the last office held by the Marquess of Bute, six capital burgesses, thirty assistants, a town clerk, and two serjeants-at-mace. The privilege of returning one member to Parliament is vested in the Corporation, consisting of nineteen. The present member is the Hon. Arthur Charles Legge, brother of the Earl of Dartmouth. Here was formerly a castle of great strength, which sustained two severe sieges, in 1642 and 1644, during the civil war; but only a wall at present remains. The church, rebuilt about thirty years ago, in an age not remarkable for taste, is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a vicarage, value 22*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The vicarage-house is of the Tudor age.

Neithrop is a large hamlet of this parish, about a quarter of a mile distant from the town. William Lord Knollys, of Grey's Court, Treasurer of the Household to Queen Elizabeth, was created by Charles I. Earl of Banbury in 1626. Calthorpe House is the seat of Thomas Cobb, Esq. It includes within the premises part of a hospital, dedicated to St. John, consisting of a large barn and other ancient buildings. In the house is a collection of portraits of its former possessors, and arms in the windows connected with the history of the estate.

CHARLBURY, partly in Chadlington hundred, is 7 miles N.W. from Woodstock, and contains 266 houses, and 1348 inhabitants, who are employed chiefly in leather-dressing and the manufacture of gloves. It has a market on Friday, and fairs on 1st Jan., second Friday in Lent, second Friday after 12th May, and 10th Oct. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. Fawler, Finstock, East and West Chadlington, and Chilson, are hamlets of this parish.

In the chancel of the church at Charlbury are monuments of the Jenkinson family. Sir Robert Jenkinson of Walcot was created baronet 18th May, 1661, when he was M.P. for the county of Oxford, which he continued to represent till his death in 1677. The seventh baronet of this family was created Earl of Liverpool, &c.; but their ancient seat at Walcot has fallen to decay, a part only being tenable by a farmer.

CLATTERCOTT, a house 6 miles N. from Banbury, is extra-parochial, and belongs to the Cartwright family. It was formerly a religious house dedicated to St. Leonard, and about the time of its suppression consisted of a prior and four canons, being endowed with revenues amounting to 34*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* per annum. It was granted 36th of Henry VIII. to Sir William Petre, one of the Commissioners under Cromwell the visitor-general of monastic houses. Part of the old monastic building yet remains.

CROPREDY, 4½ miles N.E. from Banbury, contains 117 houses, and 548 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. It contains monuments of the families of Danvers, Loveday, Gostelow, and Taylor.

At Cropredy Bridge over the Cherwell, an indecisive action took place between the King and Sir William Waller, on 30th June, 1644, in which Sir William Boteler and Sir William Clarke, two loyal Kentish knights, were slain. The hamlets of Great and Little Bourton, Prescott, and the chapelries of Mollington, Claydon, and Wardington, are all in this parish, which is partly in Bloxham hundred, and extends into Warwickshire. Wardington Chapelry includes the hamlets of Williamscott, or Willscot, and Coton.

SWALCLIFFE, or Swacliffe, 6 miles S.W. from Banbury, contains 63 houses, and 356 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The chapelries of Epwell and East Shutford, and the township of West Shutford, are in this parish, which is partly in Bloxham hundred, consisting of the hamlets of Sibford Ferris and Sibford Gower. Plush-weaving has lately been established at West Shutford. Shutford Manor-house was built in the reign of James I. by one of the Fiennes' family.

3. Binfield Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Ewelme and Pirton hundreds; on the east by Buckinghamshire and Berkshire, which last forms its boundary on the south; and on the west it is bounded by Langtree hundred.

BIX, or Bix Brand, 4 miles N.W. from Henley, contains 80 houses, and 383 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory united with Bix Gibwen, value 9*l.* 15*s.* In the east window are some Scriptural subjects represented in painted glass.

CAVERSHAM, 7 miles S.W. from Henley, and 2 miles from Reading, contains 239 houses, and 1317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. This was part of the original endowment of Nutley Abbey in Buckinghamshire in 1162; and became a cell to that monastery, which was enriched by the offerings made here, wherein was a favourite relic; no less than the angel with one wing, which brought to Caversham the spear-head that pierced Christ when on the cross*! The road from Henley to Reading commands one of the finest views in this county: the banks of the Thames present a constant succession of delightful objects. Caversham Park, the seat of Colonel Marsack, was built by William Earl of Cadogan, general of the forces under King William III., who particularly distinguished himself at the battle of the Boyne, and in the reign of Queen Anne at the battles of Blenheim and Ramillies. By George I. he was created Earl of Cadogan, Viscount Caversham, and Baron of Oakley, 8th May, 1718. The park contains about 500 acres, and the pleasure-grounds about 25 acres, with a canal. The terrace on the south front is terminated by a temple of the Tuscan order, whence walks lead to the plantations and Wilderness. The tract, remarkable for its beauty of scenery, possesses both hill and dale, with a luxuriant valley in the centre, and the eminences adorned with full-grown timber. The mansion has been much improved by Colonel Marsack; a Corinthian portico has been added to the south front. Being situated on an eminence, it commands an extensive view of Berkshire and the adjacent counties, the town of Reading, Cæsar's Camp, and the hills of Windsor Forest in the distance.

Caversham-Lodge, the ancient seat, was situated nearer to the river Thames than the present structure. It was honoured by a visit from Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I., on her progress to Bath, and in the next reign was the temporary residence of the children of Charles I. On the 15th July 1647, the Earl of Northumberland had an order to accompany the children to visit His Majesty, who earnestly desired to see them. Great numbers of people in their way to meet the king flocked to see them, and strewed the road with green boughs and herbs. His Majesty was quartered at Caversham, and his children remained with him two days.

HARPSDEN, 2 miles S. from Henley, contains 41 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of All Souls College Oxford. The hamlets of Lower and Over Bolney are in this parish. Harpsden Court is the seat of T. Hall, Esq., and Bolney Court, of J. Jackson, Esq.

HENLEY-UPON-THAMES, 24 miles S.E. from Oxford, and 35 from London, contains 696 houses, and 3509 inhabitants. The town consists of two principal streets, one in the road from London to Oxford, and the other in the road from Reading to Marlow. Here is an elegant bridge of five arches over the Thames; the key-stones of the centre arch, representing heads of Thame and Isis, were sculptured by the Hon. Mrs. Damer. The bridges over the Thames exceed in extent and magnificence not only those over the Seine, but any river of Europe; and amongst the provincial bridges, that at Henley may be praised for its superior lightness and construction. This is a corporate town, governed by a high steward, who is the Earl of Macclesfield, a recorder, mayor, 10 aldermen, and 16 burgesses: a considerable trade is carried on in malt, flour, and beech-wood; upwards of 30,000 quarters of malt are annually made here. The grammar-school was founded by King James I.; and the blue-coat-school by Dame Elizabeth Periam; there is also a green-coat-school; and an almshouse founded by Longland, Bishop of Lincoln.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* It stands near the bridge, and has an embattled tower with pinnacles at the angles. The east window contains the arms of France and England quarterly, within the garter; various other shields are disposed in the different windows; against the north wall is a monument to the memory of Dame Elizabeth Periam, the wife, first of Robert Doyley, next of Henry Neville, and lastly of William Periam. She died 3rd May 1621. Over the south door is a monument to William Hayward of Shrewsbury, architect, after whose design the bridge over the Thames in this town was erected. He died before it was begun in 1782. The armorial distinction of Henley-upon-Thames was a lion rampant, as appears by a seal attached to a deed dated 1306. But the Corporation seal in 1624 was the letter H, surmounted by the Royal Badge, of the rays of the sun issuing from a cloud, crowned, with this legend: SIGILLVM · VILLÆ · DE · HENLEY. With this badge also the money coined at Henley was stamped.

The country round Henley is beautifully diversified by lofty wooded hills and lower grounds declining to the Thames. The woods of Fawley-Court adorn the opposite banks of the river: the steep face of Henley-Hill appears on the east, through the chalky face of which the road is cut; at its base houses are intermixed with woody scenery, and towards the south is Park-Place, with all its variety of decoration.

ROTHERFIELD GREYS, 2½ miles S.W. from Henley, in a very beautiful situation, contains 162 houses, and 717 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Oxford. Greys-Court, a venerable mansion, the seat of Lord Le De Spenser, was formerly the residence of the Barons Grey of Rotherfield, and passed from that family to the Lovels. In the chancel of the church is the monument of Robert Lord Grey, who died in 1387; and on the north side is a burial chapel of the Knollys family.

ROTHERFIELD PEPPARD, 4 miles S.W. from Henley, contains 77 houses, and 401 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford.

SHIPLAKE, 3 miles S. from Henley, contains 101 houses, and 528 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. It has been repaired under the superintendence of the vicar, the Rev. E. A. Howman, and contains some ancient painted glass re-arranged by Willement. The Rev. James Granger, author of the Biographical History of England, 4 vols. in 1769, was vicar of Shiplake, and died here while administering the sacrament, 5th April 1776. The liberties of Eye and Dunsden, part of Sonning parish in Berkshire, are in this hundred.

4. Bloxham Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Warwickshire; on the east by Banbury hundred and Northamptonshire; on the south by Wootton hundred; and on the west by part of Dorchester hundred and Warwickshire. It displays a greater variety of pleasing scenery than most other parts of this county.

ADDERBURY, on Sorbrook, a branch of the Cherwell, 3 miles S. from Banbury, contains 196 houses, and 924 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The chancel was built by William of Wykeham, who granted the vicarage in 1385 to his recent foundation. The old parsonage house retains much of its original character. Henry Wilmot, Esq. was created Lord Wilmot of Adderbury, by King Charles I., 29th July 1644; and by Charles II., Earl of Rochester, 13th December 1652: he was the father of the witty but profligate Earl. The small remaining part of the residence of the Earl of Rochester is at the east end of the village. The old manor-house was built by one of the Bustard family, with whom Sir Thomas Pope was connected by marriage. In the south transept of the church are some curious monuments of this family. Sir Thomas Cobb of Adderbury was created a baronet 9th December 1662. Sir George Cobb, Bart., was the last of the family who resided here: he died in 1762. There is a monument in the chancel to the Cobbs. The township of West Adderbury, the chapelries of Barford St. John, and Bodicott, and the hamlet of Milton, are all in this parish.

ALKERTON, 5 miles N.W. from Banbury, contains 31 houses, and 158 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* It has some remarkable sculpture in the external courses, of figures of acolytes censing, which are worthy of notice.

BLOXHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Banbury, and 21 miles N. from Oxford, contains 296 houses, and 1300 inhabitants. It is situated on a brook which falls into the Cherwell. The very interesting church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. It was built probably as early as the reign of Stephen, but affords examples in architecture of the style of various periods. Cardinal Wolsey, it is said, repaired and beautified it, adding to it the spire, and also to have erected a stone cross near the east end. The tower and spire of this church, for design and construction, are superior to any in the county; and with the doorway of the tower form two of the most beautiful plates in Mr. Skelton's elegant work on the antiquities of this county. It is 195 feet to the top of the spire, and the whole of the structure is remarkable for its fine proportion, and an object of peculiar admiration to the architectural antiquary. The sculpture, which forms the singular decoration of the western entrance, alludes to the Last Judgment, the Deity being represented above the point of the arch, seated under a canopy. Angels are sounding trumpets to awaken the dead, who appear to rise, and in supplicating posture to await their sentence. Widely extended jaws on one side allude to the entrance into hell; and above are the cross and crown of glory,—emblems of redemption.

A considerable portion of the manor of Bloxham belongs to Lord Say and Sele, called Bloxham Fiennes; another part is named Bloxham Beauchamp. Pike-Hall Manor, with the parsonage, formerly belonged to the monastery at Godstow, and was granted by King Edward VI. to Eton College. The chapelry of Milcombe is in this parish.

BROUGHTON, 3 miles S.W. from Banbury, contains 46 houses, and 226 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 16*s.* The chancel contains numerous memorials of the Fiennes family; and in the aisle is a monument of Thomas de Broughton. Broughton Castle, the seat of Lord Say and Sele, is moated, and was formerly a place of great strength.

The approach to the castle is highly picturesque, over a stone bridge through an ancient gate-house tower. The greater part of the building, within the court on the north front, was erected by the Fiennes family in 1544. The south front is covered with ivy, which lends its sombre hue to promote the effect; while the forms of the edifice, disclosed in various parts, combine to produce a very pleasing scene. The hall, 55 feet in length by 26 feet 9 inches in width, has a pendent ceiling; eastward of the hall is a more ancient passage, staircase, chambers, &c. Contiguous to the dining-room and drawing-room, which are westward of the hall, is a gallery, extending along the north front about 90 feet in length; the windows contain the arms and quarterings of the possessors of the castle, and their connections. Some of the apartments opening upon this gallery are also richly ornamented in their ceilings, chimney-pieces, &c.; and other specimens of painted glass are likewise here remaining. The most ancient part, built by the Broughtons, is at the east end. The embattled walls and turrets which surrounded it have been removed, but some buildings on the edge of the moat, coeval with the original structure, remain. As Oxfordshire cannot boast of many castellated remains of any magnitude, Broughton Castle is not only valuable on account of its local interest, but as having been long the abode of characters conspicuous in English History. North Newington is a hamlet of this parish.

DRAYTON, 2 miles N.W. from Banbury, contains 39 houses, and 185 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* Few parts of this county afford more delightful views than are to be met with in this neighbourhood, being nearly contiguous to the beautiful woods of Wroxton Abbey.

HANWELL, 3 miles N.W. from Banbury, contains 59 houses, and 286 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 16*s.* There are numerous memorials of the Cope family in the chancel. Sir Anthony Cope of Hanwell was created a baronet 29th June 1611. Only one tower of Hanwell Castle, the ancient seat of this family, remains, converted to a farm-house; it is supposed to have been erected by William Cope, Esq. cofferer to King Henry VII., who purchased this estate of the Greviles. It was originally quadrangular, with a frontage of 109 feet.

HORLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Banbury, contains 68 houses, and 317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Etheldreda, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Hornton is a chapelry annexed to this parish.

TADMARTON, 4 miles S.W. from Banbury, contains 80 houses, and 401 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 11*s.* Little Tadmarton is a hamlet of this parish: on the heath is a Danish encampment called the Castle.

WIGGINTON, 6 miles S.W. from Banbury, contains 55 houses, and 291 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford. It presents several peculiarities in its construction and details. In 1824 some Roman remains of great interest were discovered within a short distance from the church.

WROXTON, 3 miles N.W. from Banbury, contains 116 houses, and 578 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. Wroxton Abbey, the seat of the Earl of Guildford, was built in 1618, by Sir William Pope afterwards Earl of Downe, nephew of Sir Thomas Pope, founder of Trinity College Oxford, on the site of a priory founded by Michael Belet, about 1230, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, for a prior and six canons of the Order of St. Augustine: some arches and other remains of this building are incorporated in the present structure.

The hall, 45 feet by 24 feet 9 inches, has a curious screen and gallery at the lower end, leading to some of the chambers on the upper story. The library and chapel, as well as the dining-room, are exceedingly interesting as specimens of the ancient domestic style of building. In the church is a fine monument of Sir William Pope, and others to the memory of members of the family of North. Balscot is a hamlet of this parish; where also are some interesting specimens of domestic architecture.

5. Bullington Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Ploughley hundred; on the east by part of Buckinghamshire; on the south by Dorchester and Ewelme hundreds; and on the west by Wootton hundred and Berkshire.

ALDBURY, 3 miles N.W. from Tetsworth, contains 6 houses, and 38 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Teddington is a hamlet of this parish.

AMBROSDEN, or Amersden, 2 miles S.E. from Bicester, and 13 from Oxford, contains 31 houses, and 180 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 17*s.*, and was built about the time of King Edward I. Dr. White Kennet, vicar of this parish, and afterwards Bishop of Peterborough, published the History of Ambrosden, Burcester, &c. 1695. 4to. Sir Edward Turner of Ambrosden was created baronet 24th Aug. 1733. The chapelries of Arncott and Blackthorn are both in this parish.

MARSH BALDON, 5 miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 65 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Here was buried John Bridges, Bishop of Oxford, who died 26th March 1618. The manor-house is the seat of Sir Henry Willoughby, Bart.; it is situated on a knoll, with about 400 acres of ground laid out as a ferme ornée.

TOOT BALDON, adjoining the above, contains 42 houses, and 258 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage.

BECKLEY, 4½ miles N.E. from Oxford, contains 71 houses, and 396 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford. It is situated upon an eminence on the south side of Otmoor, whence is an uninterrupted prospect. Studley chapelry and Horton are in this parish. Studley Priory originally founded about 1184 by Bernard de St. Walery, for nuns of the Benedictine Order, was dedicated to the Virgin Mary; after its suppression 27th Henry VIII., it was granted to John Croke, Esq. 26th Feb. 1539. The mansion, now the seat of Sir Alexander Croke, of the Blount family, was probably built by Sir John Croke, the judge, grandson of the grantee, about 1587. Over the porch is inscribed ΘΕΟΣ · FEARE · THIS ·

GLORIOVS · AND · FEARFVL · NAME · THE · LORD · THY · GOD · HONOR · THE · KING. The initials E · R, with the Tudor rose, crowned, between them, four shields with the arms of Croke impaling Cave, Unton, Blount, and Bennet, and the dates 1587 and 1622, with the motto VIRTVTIS · AMORE · The kitchen, offices, and south-east wing appear to be parts of the original priory: the domestic chapel was erected by Sir George Croke in 1639.

ST. CLEMENTS, separated only by the river Cherwell from Oxford, includes part of Magdalen Bridge, within its boundaries, and contains 116 houses, and 770 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown. A branch of one of the principal Roman ways runs through this parish over Headington-Hill, which passed the Cherwell near Holywell Church.

COWLEY, or Temple Cowley, 2 miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 88 houses, and 472 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. The Knights Templars preceptory was afterwards removed to Sandford, but on the north side of Cowley Marsh are the remains of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, supposed to have been founded by Henry I., when he built Beaumont-Palace. It was granted by Edward III. to Oriel College, as a retirement for the scholars in times of pestilence.

CUDDESDEN, 6 miles S.E. from Oxford, on an elevated ridge of ground connected with Shotover Hill, contains 49 houses, and 267 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. It is cruciform in plan, and its antiquity is amply attested by the Norman architecture of the western doorway. Cuddesden Palace, the residence of the Bishops of Oxford, was originally built by Bishop Bancroft, in 1635, at an expense of 3500*l.*, in addition to large contributions of timber, which were given to him by King Charles I. from the Royal forest of Shotover. He died here in 1640, and was buried in the chancel of the church. The palace was as short-lived as the founder, and was burnt down in 1644 by Colonel William Legge, governor of Oxford, lest it might be made a garrison by the Parliament. It was rebuilt in 1679 by Bishop Fell. Bishop Moss, who died in 1811, left the new furniture of the principal rooms as an heir-loom to the see. In the church are monuments to Bishops Moss and Jackson. The chapelry of Wheatley and the hamlets of Chippinghurst and Denton are all in this parish.

ELSFIELD, 3 miles N.E. from Oxford, in a beautiful situation on the summit of a hill, contains 33 houses, and 188 inhabitants. The church, built about 1273, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* It contains several memorials of the Pudsey family, formerly lords of the manor. Sir George Pudsey, recorder of Oxford in 1685, was the last who resided here.

FOREST HILL, on an eminence 4 miles E. of Oxford, contains 29 houses, and 157 inhabitants. The church, a very simple structure, was dedicated in 1273 to St. Nicholas; it is a curacy. In the chancel are several monuments of the Heywood family.

GARSINGTON, 4½ miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 117 houses, and 595 inhabitants. It stands on the summit and declivity of a range of high ground, which abuts on the south side of Shotover Hill, and has beautiful and extensive prospects over the adjacent country. The church, on a commanding eminence, is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a rectory, value 14*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* In the chancel are monuments of some of the Wickham family.

HEADINGTON, 2 miles E. from Oxford, contains 201 houses, and 1087 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, consists of a nave, with a south aisle, and a chancel. The tower at the west end of the south aisle was rebuilt in 1679. In the churchyard is a very handsome cross. Here was a Royal residence in Ethelred's reign, but in the 25th of Henry II. it was granted to Thomas Basset.

HOLTON, 6½ miles E. from Oxford, contains 47 houses, and 260 inhabitants. The church, a very picturesque building, is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The parish register records the marriage of General Ireton to one of the daughters of Oliver Cromwell, in 1646. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Holton Park, the seat of Elisha Biscoe, Esq., is a modern stone edifice, commanding a delightful prospect over the surrounding country, which abounds in hills.

HORSEPATH, on the south side of Shotover Hill, 4 miles E. from Oxford, contains 52 houses, and 264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of Magdalen College Oxford. In the east window are the arms of William of Waynfleet, Bishop of Winchester, founder of the College; and in another window is a Taberder of Queen's College, holding a boar's head on the point of a spear: other windows contain representations of subjects connected with Scripture history.

IFLEY, 2 miles S. from Oxford, contains 108 houses, and 527 inhabitants. The church, one of the most beautiful specimens of Anglo-Norman architecture in the kingdom, is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Oxford. The edifice, of small dimensions, consists of a nave and chancel, separated by a massive square tower. The western entrance, charged with ornamental enrichment, is exceedingly elegant, and, as well as the southern doorway, must be familiar to every one, from the numerous engravings that have been published of the subjects: above the west door was originally a circular window, which has been altered to a pointed window, apparently about the 15th century; other windows on the sides were altered about the same time. One of the most curious objects of the interior is the font, evidently constructed to be used for total immersion. In the windows are some very curious specimens of painted glass, and in the churchyard is the fragment of a cross, also a yew-tree of enormous girth. This village is delightfully situated on a gentle declivity, skirted on its western slope by the river Thames. The city of Oxford is a most beautiful object from this sequestered spot, rising from the valley environed by its classical groves. Hockmoor is a hamlet of this parish.

LITTLEMOOR. This liberty extends into the parish of St. Mary the Virgin, in the city of Oxford, and contains 77 houses, and 354 inhabitants. Here was formerly a priory of Benedictine nuns, founded in the reign of Henry II., and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas. On its suppression in 1524, it was granted to Cardinal Wolsey, towards his new foundation in Oxford, and afterwards became part of Henry VIIIth's endowment of Christchurch College. Some of the buildings called the Minchery are yet standing.

MARSTON, 2 miles N. from Oxford, contains 47 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* In the chancel are several memorials of the Croke family; their ancient seat is yet remaining; it was made use of, in May 1646, in the treaty for the surrender of Oxford.

NUNEHAM COURTENAY, 6 miles S. from Oxford, contains 58 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was erected in 1764, after a design by Athenian Stuart. It is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of Earl Harcourt, whose mansion stands in a noble park, containing 1200 acres, being 6½ miles in circumference. It is finely varied with wood and forest scenery; thick woods form the general boundary, all the openings in which have the contrasted charms of distance, grandeur, and beauty. An ancient conduit, removed from the city of Oxford, stands on an eminence by the side of the river, at the verge of the park, and is thus inscribed: "This building, called Carfax, erected for a conduit at Oxford, by Otho Nicholson, in the year of our Lord 1590, and taken down in the year 1787 to enlarge the High Street, was presented by the University to George Simon, Earl Harcourt, who caused it to be placed here." Near this curious building, on the bank of the river, is a very rural cottage, built for the accommodation of the numerous parties of pleasure that visit Nuneham by water, particularly from Oxford, during the summer months. The mansion was erected by the first Earl Harcourt, after a design by Ledbeater, but was subsequently enlarged under the direction of Brown, who also superintended the disposition of the grounds and the plantations. The hall is Doric, and contains the statues of Mercury, Venus, Apollo, and Flora,—casts from the antique. The principal apartments are adorned with a very fine collection of pictures. The gardens contain about thirty-eight acres, very tastefully disposed, the inlets of the park giving an artificial extent to their beauties. The flower-garden may be considered as unrivalled; it has no visible connection with the general range of pleasure-grounds, but is approached by a Doric gateway, inscribed "Si l'Auteur de la Nature est grand dans les grandes choses, il est très grand dans les petites." The park and gardens are entirely secluded by a thick belt of choice trees and flowery shrubs, within an exterior boundary of wide-spreading elms.

PIDDINGTON, 5 miles S.E. from Bicester, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, contains 58 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, the right of presentation to which is vested in the inhabitants.

SANFORD, or Sandford, 3 miles S. from Oxford, contains 39 houses, and 193 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy. A preceptory of the Knights Templars was removed from Cowley about the reign of Richard I. It was the residence of a preceptor and brethren, who had under their management the estates in Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Wiltshire, &c., belonging to that Order. After the Dissolution it was granted to Edward Powell. A very singularly sculptured stone found here, representing the Assumption of the Virgin, is placed in the chancel for preservation.

SHOTOVER, 3 miles E. from Oxford, formerly a Royal forest, is extra-parochial. It contains 17 houses, and 85 inhabitants. Shotover Hill, 599 feet above the level of the sea, now despoiled of its foliage, contains some valuable earths and other productions interesting to the geologist. Shotover House is the seat of George Shutz, Esq.

STANTON ST. JOHN'S, 5 miles N.E. from Oxford, contains 92 houses, and 468 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The rectory-house, an ancient building, is on the south side of the churchyard. Woodperry House, the seat of the Rev. John Wilson, is about a mile N.W.

STOW-WOOD, 4 miles N.E. from Oxford, contains 5 houses, and 26 inhabitants.

WATERPERRY, on the banks of the Thame, 7 miles E. from Oxford, contains 25 houses, and 242 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In it are some fine brasses to individuals of the Curzon family, and a figure of a knight about the period of Edward II. Sir Thomas Curzon of Waterperry was created baronet April 30, 1661. Waterperry House is now the seat of Joseph Warren Henley, Esq.

WOOD EATON, 4 miles N. from Oxford, contains 14 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Anthony Wood, the Oxford antiquary, speaking of the bells of this church, termed them the Wood Eaton flageolets, on account of the melody of their sound. The Manor-house is the seat of John Weyland, Esq.

6. Chadlington Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Warwickshire; on the east by Wootton hundred; on the south by Bampton hundred; and on the west by Gloucestershire.

ASCOT-UNDER-WHICHWOOD, 5 miles N.E. from Burford, and the same distance S. from Chipping Norton, contains 79 houses, and 409 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy. It is situated on the banks of the Evenlode, near the borders of Whichwood Forest. Bruern liberty, 2 miles W. from Ascot, is extra-parochial, and contains 5 houses, and 64 inhabitants. It is the site of an abbey in the forest, founded in 1147, by Nicholas Basset for Cistercian monks. In the reign of James I., the estate was granted to Sir Antony Cope, who built a mansion here, which was accidentally destroyed by fire. Sir Jonathan Cope of Bruern was created baronet March 1, 1714.

CHADLINGTON, 3 miles S. from Chipping Norton, which gives name to the hundred, is in Charlbury parish, Banbury hundred. It has a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary. West Chadlington and Chilson are also in Charlbury parish.

CHASTLETON, 4 miles W. from Chipping Norton, on the left of the road leading to Morton-in-Marsh, contains 42 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* It is rather a curious edifice, having a tower over the south porch; on the floor are some heraldical tiles. Chastleton House, the seat of Arthur Jones, Esq., was built by his ancestor in the reign of James I., descended from Rhys ap Tydyr, of South Wales. The hall is adorned with a carved screen of oak and numerous family portraits; there are some excellent specimens of tapestry in the principal rooms, which, together with the arms carved upon the chimney-pieces, contribute to keep up the character of the building: a gallery, 72 feet long, is at the upper part of the house, the ceiling of which is enriched with the ornamental plastering peculiar to the period in which the house was built.

CHIPPING NORTON, situated on the brow of a steep hill, 19 miles N.W. from Oxford, and 75 from London, contains 426 houses, and 2266 inhabitants. Its name implies a Saxon market-town, and now consists principally of one broad street, in which the houses are extremely well built, chiefly of a soft species of free-stone. It is governed by two bailiffs and 12 burgesses, who are empowered to hold a Court; and has a market on Wednesday, and fairs March 7th, May 6th, July 18th, September 4th, October 3rd, and November 8th. The manufactures consist of harrateens, horsecloths, and tilts. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. It stands on a declivity, on the north-west side of the town: the most remarkable features of this building are the sexangular porch on the south side, and its two north aisles, somewhat uncommon. The monuments of Thomas Richards, ob. 1579, and of Richard Croft, ob. 1502, are curious; but the first is now concealed by the pews of the church. Not far from the church is the grammar-school, founded by King Edward VI. A monastery formerly stood near the entrance of the town from Woodstock, the history of which rests in obscurity. Several portions of the building are to be found to which the dwelling-houses have been attached; the most curious of these remains is in the High Street, between the two principal inns. About a mile north of the town is the hamlet of Cold Norton, or Over Norton: here William Fitz Alan, in the reign of Henry II., founded a priory of canons regular of St. Augustine; after the Dissolution, the estate was granted to Brazennose College, by Bishop Smith the founder. Its site was probably at Chapel House, now a large inn on the Birmingham road, about a mile from Chipping Norton, where was anciently a chapel frequented by pilgrims.

CHURCHILL, 3 miles S.W. from Chipping Norton, contains 123 houses, and 665 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown; the edifice has been very recently rebuilt. In the south aisle of the old church was the burial-place of the Lords of Sarsden.

CORNWELL, 4 miles W. from Chipping Norton, contains 13 houses, and 97 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Cornwell House is the seat of F. Penystone, Esq.

ENSTONE, 15 miles from Oxford, on the road to Chipping Norton, contains 48 houses, and 254 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Kenelm, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*: the manor formerly belonged to Winchcombe Abbey, in Gloucestershire; and there is an ancient granary remaining, which, according to a Latin inscription upon it, was founded in 1382, by Walter Winforton, Abbot of Winchcombe, at the petition of Robert Mason, bailiff of this place. The hamlets of Clevelcy, Neat Enstone, Gagingwell, Lidstone and Radford, are all in this parish.

FIFIELD, 4 miles N.W. from Burford, contains 32 houses, and 136 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the patronage of the Chancellor of the Church of Salisbury.

FULBROOK, 1 mile N. from Burford, derives its name from a stream running through it, and contains 78 houses, and 351 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

HOOK NORTON, 5 miles N.E. from Chipping Norton, contains 232 houses, and 1072 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Oxford. It is an interesting edifice, and contains a great portion of the ancient rood-loft, between the nave and chancel, and a highly curious font of the twelfth century. In the north aisle is a mural monument for John Croker, ob. 1568. Hook Norton was the baronial seat of the D'Orleys, High Constables of England during the Norman dynasty; and in the reign of Henry III. the manor was held by Ela, Countess of Warwick, by the Sergeanty of carving before the King, and to have the carving-knife for a fee.

Hook Norton Barrow is supposed to be Saxon. Southrope is a township of this parish.

IDBURY, on the banks of the Evenlode, 4½ miles N.W. from Burford, and on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 32 houses, and 136 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chancellor of the Church of Salisbury. Captain David Logan of Idbury wrote "A Treatise of Honour and Nobility, &c." which is usually attached to "Guillim's Display of Heraldry," published by Blome in 1679. Bald and Foxcott are hamlets of this parish. And near the road to Stow-in-the-Wold is a large circular barrow, supposed to be Danish.

KINGHAM, 4 miles S.W. from Chipping Norton, on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 86 houses, and 464 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

MINSTER LOVELL, on the banks of the Windrush, 3 miles W. from Witney, on the road to Cheltenham, contains 57 houses, and 326 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Kenelm, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 7½*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. It was given by Maud, wife of William Lovel, in the reign of John, to the abbey of St. Mary de Ivry in Normandy, and became a cell of that monastery. It was dissolved 2nd of Henry V.; and by Henry VI. the rent and reversion was granted to Eton College. Part of the ancient baronial mansion of the Lords Lovell still remains near the church, which is commonly called the Priory. In the church is a monument of one of the family, who is represented in armour, apparently that of Edward the Fourth's reign.

NORTH MOOR, or More St. Denis, in a detached part of this hundred, 6 miles W. from Oxford, on the banks of the Isis, contains 61 houses, and 366 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a curacy, in the presentation of St. John's College Oxford. It contains two ancient monuments of the De La More family. The parsonage-house, built in 1558, is extremely picturesque; and half a mile north-west from the church is Minchins, the ancient residence of the Warcupp family. The village of North Moor stands on the verge of an extensive tract of moor-land; and near it is Moreton, about half a mile below New Bridge over the Isis.

GREAT ROLLRIGHT, 2½ miles N. from Chipping Norton, contains 79 houses, and 419 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Brasennose College Oxford. The rectory-house was built in 1674.

LITTLE ROLLRIGHT, 2 miles W. from the above, contains 5 houses, and 28 inhabitants; is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The tower of the church was built by William Brown, Esq., lord of the manor, in 1617. The Rollright Stones, half a mile north of the village, called by Bede the second wonder of Britain, are exceedingly interesting from their acknowledged antiquity. These stones form a circle thirty-five yards in diameter, and are of various heights, the highest above seven feet, the rest not more than five feet from the ground, and seem to have been the materials of either a British temple or a trophy. They are most probably not sepulchral; for some years ago its area, which is without a tumulus, was examined to a considerable depth by digging, and no marks of inhumation appeared. There were no foundations of a central altar to indicate a temple. Had they been intended for a mausoleum, they would have been accompanied with barrows; unless the five detached stones, about two furlongs eastward, point out a collateral interment of some of the independent chiefs among the slain; and a similar commemoration of the principal commander was designed by an insulated stone, nine feet high, about eighty yards to the north. A plantation of trees in the centre renders it difficult to see at one view their relative form and distribution.

SALFORD, 1¾ mile W. from Chipping Norton, contains 56 houses, and 293 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

SARSDEN, 3 miles S. from Chipping Norton, contains 17 houses, and 128 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* Sir William Walter, of Sarsden, was created baronet 16th August 1641. The estate is now the property of James Haughton Langston, Esq.; and considerable alterations have been judiciously made both in the mansion and grounds, by which it has been greatly improved.

SHIPTON-UNDER-WHICHWOOD, 4 miles N. from Burford, in the road to Chipping Norton, contains 73 houses, and 441 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Shipton in Salisbury Cathedral. It is said to have been founded by a lady of the Warwick family, and their badge of the bear and ragged staff occurs on various parts of the building. The chancel window, once filled with stained glass, was built by Richard Fox in 1548. At the time of the Domesday survey the King had a mural mansion here, the site of which is at Langley, on the borders of the forest: the queen's garden and the park-close remain, whence is an extensive and beautiful prospect. It was occasionally inhabited by the Royal Family till the reign of Charles I., who often removed here from Woodstock. Shipton Court is the seat of Sir John Chandos Reade, Bart. From the style of the architecture it is supposed to have been erected, in the reign of James I. Before it, is a court inclosed with a wall, entered by iron gates, having in front a very fine avenue of limes and walnut-trees, which is continued for a considerable distance beyond the road leading to the house. The estate is well wooded: it was purchased in 1663 of Rowland Lacy, by Sir Compton Reade, Bart., of Barton Court, Berkshire, which mansion was destroyed during the Civil War. In Shipton church are several monuments, to the memory of the ancestors of this ancient family. Langley, Leafield, Lyneham, Milton, and Ramsdon, are chapelries of this parish. At Lyneham is a Danish barrow: other rude works of the same people are to be found in this neighbourhood. Whichwood Forest, or Wychwood, was enlarged by King John, and inclosed with a fence; and it was in this forest that King Edward IV., while hunting, chanced to meet with Elizabeth, the widow of Sir John Grey, and was so captivated with her beauty, that he broke off an intended match with the daughter of the Duke of Savoy, and made her his queen. Lord Churchill, the present Ranger of the Forest, resides at the Lodge in Whichwood Park.

SPELSBURY, 4 miles S.E. from Chipping Norton, contains 109 houses, and 610 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Christchurch College Oxford. It was nearly rebuilt about 1772, when the original character of the building was entirely destroyed. It is the burial-place of the noble family of the Lees of Ditchley, and of the Pickering family, one of whom founded an almshouse in the village. Spelsbury parish includes the hamlets of Dean, Ditchley, Fullwell, and Teston. Ditchley Park, the seat of Viscount Dillon, is large and well timbered: it is situated in a fine open country, five miles from Blenheim. The mansion was built by Gibbs, the architect of the Radcliffe Library Oxford, and exhibits a considerable extent of front; but it is in the interior where the architect has been most successful in the display of his abilities. The hall, a cube of thirty-six feet, is profusely ornamented with carving and gilding; the ceiling, painted by Kent, represents the Mythology, and in the enriched compartments of the walls are designs from Virgil; above which are a series of busts of ancient and modern poets: over the chimney-piece is a portrait of Henry Lee, second Earl of Lichfield, by Ackerman. The whole suite of the principal rooms is richly adorned; the family and other pictures preserved here are of the first class. The gardens are disposed with much taste: the sloping bank, covered with wood hanging to the serpentine lake, with the rotunda on a rising ground amongst the trees, form a very beautiful landscape.

SWERFORD, 5 miles N.E. from Chipping Norton, contains 76 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, and contains monuments of the Brideoake and Travell families. On the north of the village is Castle Hill, upon which is the appearance of an encampment.

SWINBROOK, 2 miles E. from Burford, contains 33 houses, and 208 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chancellor of Salisbury. The tower at the west end has been recently erected; but the church is worthy the attention of the antiquary on account of its architectural decoration. A highly enriched portion of the rood-loft remains, and the east window contains a quantity of ancient painted glass; but the heraldic charges are nearly obliterated in the numerous shields. Stalls with carved seats are preserved in the chancel, which is the burial-place of the family of Fettyplace, of whom very rich and curious brasses exist in the pavement, and two monuments, remarkable for their singularity of design, erected in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The mansion at Swinbrook, the seat of this family for at least four centuries, has been pulled down. The estate became the property of Charles Fettyplace, Esq., of South Lawn Lodge, in the forest of Whichwood, who died in 1805; after which it was purchased by Lord Redesdale, its present possessor. There is a free-school, founded in 1716.

TAYNTON, 2 miles N.W. from Burford, on the borders of Gloucestershire, contains 71 houses, and 324 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The neighbourhood is deficient in wood, but exhibits a beautiful diversity of hill and dale, interspersed with the meanderings of the Windrush. About a mile north-east from the village is an eminence, whence it is said that ten market-towns may be distinctly seen on a clear day.

7. Dorchester Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Bullington hundred; on the east by Ewelme hundred; and on the south and west by Berkshire.

BURCOTT, on the banks of the Isis, 7 miles S. from Oxford, containing 32 houses, and 145 inhabitants, although a parish, has no church. The river was made navigable hence to Oxford by Act of Parliament in 1624.

CHISELHAMPTON, 6 miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 21 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. Sir John D'Oyley, of Chiselhampton, was created baronet 7th July 1666. This estate, now the property of Charles Peers, Esq., contains one of the largest elm-trees in the county.

CLIFTON HAMPDEN, 1 mile W. from Burcott, contains 62 houses, and 277 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. It is a very humble edifice, standing on an eminence, at the foot of which the Isis flows.

CULHAM, on the Isis, 2 miles S. from Abingdon, and 8 from Oxford, contains 80 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. It contains memorials of the families of Bury, Cary, Reston, &c. The manor-house, formerly belonging to the Abbots of Abingdon, must have been of considerable size before great part of it was pulled down. One room is now called the Abbot's Chamber; there also remain some curious windows, the openings of which are cruciform, like those in ancient castles, having been constructed for the purpose of shooting arrows through, the archer being protected by the narrowness of the aperture. Culham Bridge was built in the reign of Henry V. by the townsmen of Abingdon, when Sir Peter Besils gave the stones from his quarries at Besils Leigh and Sandford. In 1430 an Act of Parliament made the bridge a free passage. In the house of the late John Phillips, Esq., in this village, is a collection of painted glass, pictures, &c.

DORCHESTER, which gives name to the hundred, is situated on the river Thame, 9 miles S.E. from Oxford, and contains 168 houses, and 854 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is now a curacy. This town was anciently a place of great importance, having been an episcopal see of unusual magnitude from the time of St. Birinus until the latter part of the eleventh century, when it was removed to Lincoln by St. Remigius. The present parochial church is incorporated with that of the suppressed priory, which was founded by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1140, and is one of the most interesting conventual buildings in the county, containing many beautiful specimens of ancient art in sculpture, painted glass, &c. It is large; and consists of a tower at the west end, two aisles of equal length, a chapel on the north side, and a chancel. The tower appears to have been erected subsequently to the church. The chapel on the north side of the church is a chief object of interest for its architecture. It has five finely proportioned windows, smaller than those in the other parts of the church, with tracery of different design in each. The chancel, a magnificent example of the chaste and elegant style of pointed architecture prevalent in the reign of Edward III., has suffered irreparable injury by the destruction of the original roof. The mullions of the north window are disposed in a representation of the root of Jesse:—vide Isaiah, chap. ii. verse 1. Under the south window are four stalls of rich workmanship; beneath the canopies are lights containing, in painted glass, the administration of the sacraments. The east window, beautiful in its form and in the dispositions of its mullions, also contains painted glass, which produces an admirable effect. The font, of lead, is of very remote antiquity, and exceedingly curious; it stands on a pedestal of stone of a circular form, enriched with an arcade in bas relief. Beneath each arch, eleven in number, is a sitting figure, bearing allusion probably to the history of St. Birinus. The general style of the architecture of this church is elegant, there being scarcely an arch, window, or doorway, that is not an example of beautiful proportion and judicious ornament. In Britton's Architectural Antiquities, and Skelton's Antiquities of Oxfordshire, are several engravings illustrative of this very interesting edifice. The old picturesque bridge over the river Thame, built in the reign of Edward III., was demolished in 1815, and a new bridge, designed by Sands, was opened in July of that year. It crosses the river a little above the site of the old one, with a spacious centre arch, and a causeway continued nearly a quarter of a mile, rendered necessary by the inundation of the meadows in the winter season. The Thame, about a mile below this bridge, falls into the Isis, and their united waters form the Thames. A fair is held in the town on Easter Tuesday. At Dyke Hills is a Roman entrenchment, perhaps thrown up to command the passage of the two rivers.

DRAYTON, on the river Thame, 2 miles above Dorchester, and 8 miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 56 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford.

STADHAMPTON, 7 miles S.E. from Oxford, on the banks of the Thame, contains 59 houses, and 254 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

SOUTH STOKE is situated in a detached part of this hundred, 7 miles S. from Dorchester, on the banks of the Thames, and is surrounded by Langtree hundred. It contains, together with the liberty of Woodcote, to which it is united, 148 houses, and 739 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. The edifice is circular at the east end,—a mark of its great antiquity.

8. Ewelme Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Thame hundred; on the east by Pirton hundred; on the south by Binfield and Langtree hundreds; and on the west by the river Thames and Berkshire.

BENSINGTON, or Benson, 2 miles N. from Wallingford in Berkshire, contains 216 houses, and 959 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. Medlers Bank is said to be the site of a Roman road from Alchester, which crossed the Thames here. Crowmarsh-Battle and Fifield are hamlets of this parish. At Bensington is the seat of Mrs. Harrington.

BERWICKE SALOME, or Berwick Salham, 2 miles N. from the above, contains 30 houses, and 174 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

BRIGHTWELL BALDWIN, 5 miles N.E. from Wallingford, contains 58 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 16*s.* In the chancel are several fine brasses, the floor retains its painted tiles, and the windows contain stained glass. In the north aisle is the burial-place of the Stone family. Brightwell House, the seat of Lowndes Stone, Esq., a modern edifice, is situated a little distance from the church, and is surrounded by much-admired scenery. Brightwell Grove is the seat of W. F. Stone, Esq. Cadwell is a tithing of this parish.

CHALGROVE, 7 miles S.W. from Thame, and about 5 miles N. from Wallingford, contains 105 houses, and 538 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is situated in an open space on the south side of the village. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christchurch Oxford. A branch of the river Thame flows through the village, giving it a very picturesque appearance. The battle of Chalgrove-field was fought on the 18th of June 1643, between Prince Rupert and the Parliament forces. John Hampden the patriot received a mortal wound in the shoulder, and died on the 24th. Rafford Liberty is in this parish.

CUXHAM, 4 miles S. from Tetsworth, contains 36 houses, and 182 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Merton College Oxford.

EASINGTON, 3½ miles S.W. from Tetsworth, contains 4 houses, and 25 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

EWELME, which gives name to the hundred, is 4½ miles S.E. from Dorchester, about a mile north of the road to Henley, contains 114 houses, and 573 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, annexed to the Regius professorship of Divinity in the University of Oxford. It was built by William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, about the middle of the 15th century, and is an exceedingly interesting edifice, having a nave, two side aisles, and a chancel, with a chapel at the east end of the south aisle, containing two very remarkable enriched monuments of Alice, Duchess of Suffolk, ob. 1475, and Thomas Chaucer, ob. 1434. But little now remains of the mansion built by John, Duke of Suffolk, about 1424; the lower court, it appears, was constructed of brick and timber, and the chief part of the house of brick and stone. The hall, says Leland, hath great bars of iron overthwart it, instead of cross-beams. A part of the offices is still inhabited. Ewelme Park is the seat of Henry Saunders, Esq. The diversity of hill and dale in the neighbourhood, renders its situation one of the most beautiful in the county.

GREAT HASELY, 3 miles W. from Tetsworth, contains 94 houses, and 475 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 30*l.*, annexed to the deanery of Windsor. Leland the antiquary was rector of this parish, which includes the township of Little Hasely. Hasely House is the seat of — Blackall, Esq.

Rycot, or Reicote, Park, the Earl of Abingdon's, 2 miles north-east, although in this parish, is locally situated in the hundred of Thame. The mansion, now destroyed, was built by John Lord Williams of Thame, and his arms appeared on the portal of the grand front. It well deserved the eulogium of Camden, ædes elegantes. Queen Elizabeth honoured this house with a short residence, and the apartment in which the Queen lodged was ever after distinguished by the name of Queen Elizabeth's Chamber. In 1625 the King took up his abode some time at Rycot, whence a proclamation issued, for removing the receipts of His Majesty's Exchequer to Richmond, dated at Rycot, July 31st. The chapel stands a short distance south-west from the site of the house, and is supposed to have been built about the time of Henry VI., but its architectural character, in some parts, denotes an earlier period as the time of its erection.

NETTLEBED, situated on an eminence 5 miles N.W. from Henley, contains 103 houses, and 545 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy.

NEWINGTON, 10 miles S.E. from Oxford, contains 5 houses, and 47 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, united with Berrick Prior, Brightwell Prior, Brockhampton, and Holcomb.

NUFFIELD, 7 miles N.W. from Henley, contains 39 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Here was formerly a monastery, founded before the reign of Edward III.

SWINCOMBE, 8 miles N.W. from Henley, contains 61 houses, and 345 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WARBOROUGH, 1 mile E. from Dorchester, on the banks of the Thames, contains 128 houses, and 684 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, in the presentation of Corpus Christi College Oxford. It contains a leaden font, cast in the rude style of an early period.

WARPSGROVE contains 5 houses, and 27 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

9. Langtree Hundred,

In the Chiltern district, is bounded on the north by Ewelme hundred; on the east by Binfield hundred; and on the south and west by the river Thames and Berkshire.

CHECKENDON, in a very secluded situation, 5 miles S.E. from Wallingford, contains 51 houses, and 295 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* It is a fine specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture, with a circular east end. In the chancel are brasses to the memory of John Rede, ob. 1404, and Cecilia his wife, ob. 1428, and one to Walter the son of William Beauchamp.

CROWMARSH GIFFORD, ½ mile E. from Wallingford in Berkshire, contains 42 houses, and 230 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 6*s.* It is of Anglo-Norman architecture.

GORING is situated on the banks of the Thames 6 miles S. from Wallingford, and contains 149 houses, and 867 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy. It is of Anglo-Norman architecture, and rather singular in its construction. Here was a priory of nuns, of the order of St. Augustine, the site of which after the Dissolution, was granted to Sir Thomas Pope, founder of Trinity College Oxford.

IPSDEN, 3 miles S.E. from Wallingford, in an open part of the country, contains 100 houses, and 583 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The liberty of Stoke Row is included in this parish.

MAPLE DURHAM, 3 miles N.W. from Reading on the banks of the Thames, contains 103 houses, and 508 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Eton College. In the south aisle of the church is the burial-place of the Blounts, containing several memorials of individuals of that ancient family; and in the chancel is a mural monument of — Lister, Master of the Court of Wards, founder of an almshouse at Maple Durham. The venerable mansion of Michael Blount, Esq., in a very beautiful situation, commanding a fine view of the river, has fortunately escaped the innovations that have so generally disfigured the Tudor houses. It is at present in the possession of a gentleman of taste, who has lately repaired the whole with a careful attention to the original character of its architecture. Many of the apartments are enriched with the ornamental plastered ceilings so common in the age in which it was built. It contains an extensive collection of pictures, amongst which are some of considerable interest and merit, particular a very fine portrait of Sir Michael Blount, lieutenant of the Tower, who built this house in 1581, and his three sons, in the rich costume of Elizabeth's day, as young "gallants"; besides numerous other family portraits in good preservation. In the hall is a curious assemblage of stags' and rein-deer horns, as well as those of Asiatic and African goats. In the library are three volumes of original letters of Pope to Martha and Theresa Blount, which are referred to in Bowles's Life of the poet.

MONGEWELL, on the banks of the Thames, about a mile below Wallingford, contains 27 houses, and 142 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. Mongewell House was long the seat of the Hon. Shute Barrington, Bishop of Durham; the grounds are extensive, and the prospects pleasing.

NEWNHAM MURREN, 1 mile S. from Wallingford, between Crowmarsh Gifford and Mongewell, contains 45 houses, and 260 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

NORTH STOKE is situated on the Thames 3 miles below Wallingford, and contains 33 houses, and 203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. This estate at the Norman survey was held by Milo Crespin, whose chief baronial seat was at Wallingford. It afterwards became the property of the Bassets, and from them passed to the family of Moels. Roger de Moels, 18th Edward I., obtained free-warren for his estate here. It was at this time called Stoke Moels; and South Stoke, a mile below it, was then called Abbots Stoke: between the two is Mouls-ford, on the opposite side of the river.

WHITCHURCH, on the banks of the Thames, opposite to Pangbourn in Berkshire, 6 miles W. from Reading, contains 129 houses, and 647 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It contains several memorials of the Lybbe family. One mile and a half eastward of the village is Hardwicke House, the venerable residence of Philip Lybbe Powis, Esq.; and on the north, Combe Lodge, the seat of S. Gardiner, Esq., on the Thames amidst beautiful plantations.

10. Lewknor Hundred

Is bounded on the north, east, and south by Buckinghamshire; and on the west by Thame and Pirton hundreds.

ADWELL, 1½ mile S.E. from Tetsworth, contains 7 houses, and 44 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* In it are monuments of the Newell family. Some Scriptural subjects in painted glass ornament the windows. Adwell Cop is the site of a barrow.

ASTON ROWANT, 3 miles S.E. from Tetsworth, contains 162 houses, and 870 inhabitants, including the liberties of Chalford and Kingston Blount. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown, and contains some ancient brasses. Near a branch of the Ikeneild Street, in Kingston Field, some Roman antiquities were found at the bottom of Colebrook in 1692. Aston House is the seat of T. P. Wickham, Esq.

BRITWELL SALOME, or Brightwell Salham, 5 miles S. from Tetsworth, contains 31 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Britwell House is the seat of James Weld, Esq.

CHINNOR, 4 miles E. from Tetsworth, and the same distance S.E. from Thame, contains 164 houses, and 865 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* The Roman Ikeneild Street entered the county here, and crossed the Thames at Goring. Henton is a liberty of this parish.

CROWELL, 1 mile S.W. from the above, contains 29 houses, and 159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

EMMINGTON, 3 miles S.E. from Thame, contains 13 houses, and 77 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Sir Henry Ashhurst, of Emmington, was created baronet 21st July, 1688.

LEWKNOR, which gives name to the hundred, is 3 miles S.E. from Tetsworth, contains 135 houses, and 691 inhabitants, including Postcombe, Uphill, and Ashampstead, chapelries of this parish. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College Oxford. In the north aisle is the burial-place of the Joddrells. Lewknor House is the seat of Paul Joddrell, Esq.

SYDENHAM, 2½ miles E. from Tetsworth, contains 69 houses, and 367 inhabitants.

STOKENCHURCH, situated upon one of the highest points of the Chiltern Hills, 6 miles S.E. from Tetsworth, and 36 miles from London, in the road to Oxford, contains 193 houses, and 1102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, contains the monument of Bartholomew Tipping, founder of the free-school at Stokenchurch. A fair is held here 10th July for horses and pedlary, and a manufacture of chairs has lately been established. Wormsley, the seat of John Fane, Esq., M.P. for Oxfordshire, is partly in Lewknor parish. It contains several fine portraits of the Scrope family, of whom the Fanes inherited this estate.

11. Pirton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Thame hundred; on the east by Lewknor hundred; on the south by Binfield hundred; and on the west by Ewelme hundred.

PISHILL, in the Chiltern district, 5½ miles N. from Henley, contains 28 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, a very humble structure, has attached to it a chapel, which belongs to the Stonor family. Stonor Park, the seat of Thomas Stonor, Esq., contains a considerable portion of beech woodland; the mast produced by this, together with the thyme and other fragrant herbs abounding in the pasture, imparts a peculiar flavor to the venison, which is much celebrated. The mansion was erected in the reign of Elizabeth or James I., and a view of it in its original state is preserved in the hall. By comparing this with the building as it now appears, considerable alteration will be found to have taken place. The hall preserves its ancient character, and contains some beautiful old painted glass windows. Over the chimney-piece is a full-length portrait of Mary, sister and coheiress of Edward Lord Vaux, of Harrowden, who married Sir George Simeon, of Brightwell in this county, from whom the Stonors are lineally descended. At the extremity of the mansion is a chapel, built by Sir John Stonor, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Edward III., who endowed it with an estate of two or three hundred acres immediately adjoining the house. After its suppression this was granted to St. George's Chapel Windsor; but has been regained by the family by an exchange of land with the Chapter. Over the altar in the chapel is a painted window by Egginton, representing the Salvator Mundi, after Carlo Dolce.

PIRTON, or Pyriton, 4 miles S. from Tetsworth, and 1 mile N. from Watlington, contains 118 houses, and 622 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Assendon, Clare, Golder, and Standhill, and the liberty of Christmas Common. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. The manor-house was the residence of the patriot Hampden, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Symeon of Pirton. At Assendon, Sir Francis Stonor in the reign of James I. founded and endowed an almshouse.

SHIRBURN, about a mile N.E. from the above, contains 63 houses, and 332 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Macclesfield. Shirburn Castle, the seat of the Earl of Macclesfield, is embattled, and moated round entirely, so as only to be approached by drawbridges, the water flowing up to the walls on all sides. In 1377, the 51st of Edward III., Warine de Lisle had permission to build a castle at Shirburn, where his ancestor Warine de Lisle in 1336 had a charter of free-warren, with leave to inclose one hundred acres of woodland for a park. The castle was afterwards in the possession of the families of Quatremain, Fowler, and Chamberlayne. The castle and manor of Shirburn were purchased by Thomas Parker, who was created Lord Macclesfield 10th March 1716, afterwards Lord Chancellor. He was on the 5th Nov. 1721 advanced to the titles of Viscount Parker of Ewelme and Earl of Macclesfield. His son George, the second Earl, distinguished himself by the part he took in respect to the alteration of the style in 1750; and published his "Remarks on the Solar and Lunar Years, the Cycle of Nineteen Years," &c. The old hall of the castle is appropriated as an armoury, and is hung with suits of defensive armour of ancient date, &c. There are two capacious libraries, and some very excellent pictures. Amongst the portraits is that of Earl Macclesfield the Lord Chancellor, and a fine original of Queen Catherine Parr, who is represented standing behind a highly enriched vacant chair, with her hand on the back of it. Her dress is black, richly ornamented with jewellery; her fingers loaded with rings, and holding a handkerchief edged with very deep lace. Shirburn Castle was honoured with a visit by Queen Charlotte and the princesses in the summer of 1808. The park contains about sixty acres.

STOKE TALMAGE, 2 miles S. from Tetsworth, contains 24 houses, and 140 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*

WATLINGTON is situated on the Chiltern Hills, 5 miles S. from Tetsworth, and contains 295 houses, and 1479 inhabitants. It is a large irregularly built town, with a curious market-house in the centre, at the junction of four ways, Carfax, which was built in 1644 by Thomas Stonor, Esq., who also founded a grammar-school. Here is a market on Saturday, and fairs 5th April and 10th October. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* Greenfield liberty and the hamlet of Warmscomb are in this parish.

King Edward III. granted the manor of Watlington to Sir Nicholas De la Beche, who in 1338 obtained a license to castellate his house. It stood near the east end of the church, where indications of the moat which surrounded it may yet be traced. The manorial rights are now held by numerous individuals, and the Courts Leet and Baron are held in the school-room. Watlington Park, the seat of Col. Tilson, contains about 300 acres, in which all the various features of the Chiltern inequalities are blended; the woods contain some of the finest beech-trees in the county.

SOUTH WESTON, 3 miles S. from Tetsworth, contains 22 houses, and 108 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Oxford.

WHEATFIELD, 1 mile N. from the above, contains 17 houses, and 79 inhabitants. It is a rectory. Sir William Tipping of Wheatfield was created baronet 24th March, 1698. Wheatfield House is the seat of —— Spencer, Esq.

12. Ploughley Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Northamptonshire; on the east by Buckinghamshire, in which county two detached portions of this hundred are locally situated. On the south it is bounded by Bullington hundred; and on the west by Wootton hundred.

ARDLEY, in a fine shooting country, 4 miles N.W. from Bicester, contains 33 houses, and 191 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. Westward of the church are remains of an ancient castle.

BICESTER, 12 miles N.E. from Oxford, and 54 from London, contains 568 houses, and 2644 inhabitants. A small part of it is in Caversfield, a detached parish of Buckinghamshire, surrounded by Ploughley hundred. It is divided into the two districts of King's End and Market End, and consists chiefly of one irregular street, extending about a mile and a half in length, with two others branching from it, called Crockwell and Water-lane. The Market Hill, a small square, contains the shambles and the town-hall. The market is on Friday; and the fairs on Friday in Easter week, Whit Monday, the first Friday in June, August 5, October 10, and Dec. 17. There is no manufacture of importance now carried on, although some of the inhabitants have been employed in the lace trade; and the plaiting of straw has lately been introduced. The church, dedicated to St. Edburgh, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* The priory of Bicester was founded by Gilbert Basset, in 1182, for a prior and eleven canons of the order of St. Augustine, in imitation of Christ and his eleven disciples, and was dedicated to St. Edburgh, supposed to have been a holy virgin of Aylesbury, who, together with her sister Editha, having taken the veil, were reputed saints. Its revenue at the Suppression was valued at 167*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* per annum. The actual site is not known, but it was granted to Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, brother-in-law to Henry VIII., and is now the property of the family of Turner of Ambrosden. The seat of John Coker, Esq., at King's End, anciently the manor of Nuns' Place, was originally erected in 1682, but has been partly rebuilt within these twenty years. It has considerable pleasure-grounds attached.

BLECHINGDON, 3 miles E. from Woodstock, contains 119 houses, and 570 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Oxford. Blechingdon Park is the seat of A. Annesley, Esq.

BUCKNELL, 2 miles N.W. from Bicester, contains 42 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford.

CHARLTON-UPON-OTMOOR, 4 miles S. from Bicester, contains 61 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Oxford. In it are remains of the rood-loft, which separated the nave from the chancel, erected about the reign of Henry VI., which is the richest specimen of the kind in this county. On Otmoor considerable Roman remains are continually found. Fencot and Murcott are hamlets of this parish.

CHESTERTON, 2 miles S.W. from Bicester, contains 77 houses, and 392 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. Little Chesterton, one mile south, is annexed to it.

COTTESFORD, 5 miles N. from Bicester, contains 27 houses, and 140 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. Cottesford Farm, an ancient house belonging to William Farmer, Esq., is interesting on account of its architectural characte, and appears to have formerly been appropriated to some religious institution.

FINMORE, 7 miles N.E. from Bicester, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, contains 69 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Bacon's House, an old farm house, is perhaps the remains of the manor-house, it belongs to the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. Boycutt, about 2 miles north-east from Finmore, although locally situated in Buckinghamshire, is in this county and is extra-parochial, part of it is included in the spacious gardens of Stow, and belonged to the priory of Luffield, which was just beyond the limits of the Duke of Buckingham's park.

FRINGFORD, 4 miles N. from Bicester, contains 62 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford.

FRITWELL, 5 miles N.W. from Bicester, contains 95 houses, and 476 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Olave, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*: there remains considerable portions of the highly decorated rood-loft. The manor house, a fine specimen of domestic architecture of the reign of James I., is the seat of W. Wake, Esq. In the church is a large pew enriched with beautiful carving of the same date.

GODDINGTON, in a sequestered situation on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 5 miles N.E. from Bicester, contains 20 houses, and 110 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford. It was rebuilt in 1792.

HAMPTON GAY, on the Cherwell, 3 miles E. from Woodstock, contains 17 houses, and 86 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy. The chapel, used as the parish church, was rebuilt in 1767 by the Rev. Thomas Hinde, who at his decease, December 23, 1768, left yearly for ever 20*l.* unto a minister of the Church of England as by law established, to be appointed by the possessor of Hampton manor, who is now the Rev. William Wilson. The very fine old manor-house was probably erected in the reign of Elizabeth.

HAMPTON POYLE, a mile below the above, on the same river, and 7 miles from Oxford, contains 29 houses, and 153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Oxford. Gosford Bridge, over the Cherwell, is a mile below the village, on which account it was anciently called Hampton-at-Bridge.

HARDWICKE, 5 miles N. from Bicester, contains 17 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.*, and contains some fine ancient painted glass in the windows. The manor belongs to the family of Fermor, who reside in the old mansion at Tusmore, and were ancestors of the Earl of Pomfret. Of this family also was Arabella Fermor, the heroine of Pope's "Rape of the Lock."

HETHE, 1 mile E. from the above, contains 63 houses, and 350 inhabitants.

LOWER HEYFORD, or Heyford Purcell, on the Cherwell, 6 miles W. from Bicester, contains 98 houses, and 495 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford.

HEYFORD WARINE, or Upper Heyford, on the same river, 1 mile N. from the above, contains 62 houses, and 257 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. Warine Fitz Gerald, son of Warine, Chamberlain and Treasurer to Henry II., was lord of the manor, whence the name was derived. Near the manor-house, formerly the residence of the Myrry family, is a fine old barn, about 120 feet long, and 24 feet wide, supposed to have been built in the time of William of Wykeham, or shortly after.

ISLIP, or Gyslepe, the site of a palace erected by King Ethelred, in which his youngest son Edward the Confessor was born. It is 5 miles N. from Oxford, contains 141 houses, and 655 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The chancel was rebuilt by Dr. South in 1680. At the reparation of the church in 1824, some ancient paintings on the plaster were discovered in the south aisle, executed about 1360, and representing the Nativity. John Islip, Abbot of Westminster, was born here, Dr. Robert South, who was Prebendary of Westminster and Rector of Islip, built and endowed a free-school here in 1710.

KIRTLINGTON, 4 miles N.E, from Woodstock, contains 133 houses, and 697 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. In the east window is some fine painted glass, brought from the chapel of Wickham, near Banbury, consisting of numerous shields of arms belonging to the former owners of Wickham. Kirtlington Park is the seat of Sir George Dashwood, Bart., C.B. Sir Robert Dashwood of Northbrooke was created baronet 16th May 1684.

LILLINGSTONE LOVELL, locally situated in Buckinghamshire 15 miles N.E. from Bicester, and about 5 miles from Buckingham, contains 32 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is situated on an eminence commanding a fine view.

MIDDLETON STONEY, 3½ miles W. from Bicester, contains 65 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. It stands within the bounds of Middleton Park, the seat of the Earl of Jersey, Lord Chamberlain to King William IV. The manor-house was repaired and enlarged by William, third Earl of Jersey, at a great expense, and had not been long completed when it was accidentally destroyed by fire in 1753. The modern mansion originally consisted of a centre and two wings, but has been considerably enlarged by the present noble owner; on the east front is an Ionic portico.

The pleasure-grounds, together with the gardens and conservatory, which is connected with the house by a corridor, were all disposed under the superintendance of the present Countess. Many of the cottages in the village are also built from designs furnished by her ladyship, who has not overlooked the advantages accruing to each from a small garden. Near the east end of the church are traces of an ancient castle which belonged to the Camviles.

MIXBURY, 8 miles N. from Bicester, and about 6 miles from Buckingham, contains 74 houses, and 336 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Some remains of Beaumont, a square Norman fortification, originally moated, are yet existing on the north side of the church.

NEWTON PURCELL, 6 miles N.E. from Bicester, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, contains 27 houses, and 143 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* It was repaired in 1813 at the sole expense of John Harrison, Esq. of Shelswell, the patron of the living.

NOKE, 5 miles N. from Oxford, contains 30 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* Here are some curious monuments of the Bradshawes. Joan Bradshawe, ob. 1598, built the chapel.

ODDINGTON-UPON-OTMOOR, 6 miles S.W. from Bicester, contains 36 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Oxford. Sir Robert Gait, in the reign of Stephen, built upon Otmoor an abbey for Cistercian monks, which being exposed to inundations was afterwards removed to Thame. Roman remains are found in almost every direction in this parish, particularly near the parsonage-house, recently erected by the Rev. Philip Searle, and on Brismere, extending from Oddington northward to Charlton.

SHELSWELL, 6 miles N.E. from Bicester, contains 4 houses, and 51 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Ebbe, is desecrated; it adjoins Newton Purcell. Shelswell House is the seat of John Harrison, Esq.

SOMERTON, 7 miles N.W. from Bicester, and 3 miles from Deddington, contains 71 houses, and 400 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* It is situated on the Cherwell, in a valley of considerable extent, which the river fertilizes at the same time that it adds to its beauty. There is a view of the beautiful church of Deddington, of the park-like grounds of C. O. Bowles, Esq., and the village of North Aston on the opposite side of the river. The manor-house, formerly the residence of the Fermors, is entirely destroyed, except a window of the hall. It now belongs to the Earl of Jersey; the Countess of Jersey has founded here a school for female children.

SOULDERN, 4 miles E. from Deddington, contains 110 houses, and 491 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. It formerly belonged to Eynsham Abbey, and is a curious ancient structure, but the chancel has been rebuilt.

STOKE LYNE, 4 miles N. from Bicester, contains 52 houses, and 303 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 37*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* In the chancel are monuments of the Holt family, descended from Robert Holt, and Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Lyne, lord of the manor. He died in 1582. Bainton and Fewcott are hamlets of this parish.

STRATTON AUDLEY, 3 miles N.E. from Bicester, contains 61 houses, and 342 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christchurch College Oxford. It is supposed to derive its name of Stratton from its situation on a Roman road. In the church is a monument to the memory of The Right Hon. Admiral Sir John Borlase Warren, G.C.B., Bart. who died 27th Feb. 1822.

WENDLEBURY, 3 miles S.W. from Bicester, contains 39 houses, and 200 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch College Oxford. The ancient tower remains, but the body of the church was rebuilt in 1761. Alchester, a Roman military station of the Dobuni, was situated in Wendlebury-field.

> In Oxfordshire by Graven Hill wood

> Allectus' walls are brought full low;
> Where once they stood, now corn doth grow.—Old MS.

WESTON-ON-THE-GREEN, 4 miles S.W. from Bicester, contains 85 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 28*l.* It is a Grecian edifice, erected in 1743 by Norreys Bertie, Esq. at his sole expense.

13. Thame Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Buckinghamshire; on the east by Lewknor hundred; on the south by Pirton and Ewelme hundreds; and on the west by Bullington hundred.

GREAT MILTON, 4 miles W. from Tetsworth, contains 106 houses, and 593 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the presentation of a prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral. The house, in which the ancestors of Milton the poet resided, is still standing; it is of stone with gable-ended fronts, and mullioned windows: in the parlour are the arms of Wilkinson in painted glass. Dr. John Wilkinson, tutor to Henry Prince of Wales, was buried at Milton in 1649. The house was afterwards the residence of Thurloe, secretary to Oliver Cromwell, and was often visited by the Protector himself during the recesses of Parliament. At Ascott, a hamlet of this parish, was a seat of the Dormers, burnt down in 1662.

LITTLE MILTON, one mile W. from the above, contains 90 houses, and 442 inhabitants. Chapel green marks the site of its chapel, which is entirely destroyed.

TETSWORTH, 12 miles S.E. from Oxford, and 42 from London, contains 105 houses, and 409 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Attington, one mile E., is extra-parochial.

THAME, on the river of that name, 13 miles E. from Oxford, and 45 from London, contains 479 houses, and 2479 inhabitants. It consists of three principal streets formed by the roads to Aylesbury, Oxford, and High Wycombe, which unite in a spacious market-place, in which the market is held on Tuesday: there are fairs on Easter Tuesday and Old Michaelmas Day. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* The free grammar-school, founded by Lord Williams of Thame in 1558, is near the church; it is a very fine specimen of the architecture of that period.

Thame Park, the seat of Miss Wickham, is about a mile S.E. from the town; very considerable portions of the Abbey, removed from Oddington, adjoin the mansion. The tower at the east end contains a chamber, ornamented with carved shields of the arms of former possessors of the estate: built about the reign of Henry VIII. In a gallery is preserved a small collection of armour and arms, and the drawing-room contains numerous family pictures, several of which possess considerable merit as works of art: near the house is an ancient chapel, used as a burial-place of the family. The Park is extensive, and laid out by the celebrated Launcelot Browne.

WATERSTOCK, 4½ miles W. from Thame, contains 26 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.* The manor-house is the seat of William Henry Ashurst, Esq., M.P. for the county. In the old house, pulled down in 1695, were many arms in painted glass; amongst them, that of William Waynfleet, Bishop of Winchester, probably put up in memory of a visit he paid to Waterstock.

14. Wootton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Bloxham hundred; on the east by Ploughley and Bullington hundreds; on the south by the river Thames and Berkshire; and on the west by Bampton and Chadlington hundreds.

NORTH ASTON, 2 miles S.E. from Deddington, contains 59 houses, and 296 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* Near the church is Aston House, the seat of C. O. Bowles, Esq.

STEEPLE ASTON, 2 miles S. from the above, contains 87 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Brazennose College Oxford. Middle Aston is a township of this parish: all these places have their name from being situated on the east side of the valley of the Cherwell, a very fertile district.

GREAT BARFORD, 2 miles W. from Deddington, contains 66 houses, and 339 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 5*s.*

STEEPLE BARTON, 5 miles N. from Woodstock, contains 103 houses, and 404 inhabitants, including the townships of Middle Barton and Segswell Barton. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The manor-house, the property of Mr. Willan, is a fine specimen of Tudor architecture. It was built by John Dormer about 1524; but over a door leading to the house and stables was inscribed THINKE·AND·THANKE·ANN· 1570. In the year 1679 Ralph Sheldon, Esq. made considerable alterations in the house. In the upper part are several rooms of large dimensions; one is about 92 feet long, ornamented with fresco paintings, representing allegorical subjects.

BEGBROOKE, 2½ miles S.E. from Woodstock, and 5½ miles N. from Oxford, contains 20 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory.

BLADON, 1½ mile N.W. from the above, contains 72 houses, and 380 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, it was rebuilt by the Duke of Marlborough, in 1804. Hensington is a hamlet of the parish.

CASSINGTON, on the banks of the Isis, 5 miles N.W. from Oxford, contains 62 houses, and 341 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of Christchurch College Oxford. It was built by Geoffrey Clinton, Chamberlain to King Henry II., and consecrated in 1155 by Robert Chesney, Bishop of Lincoln; much of the original building remains. A very curious ancient paten is used in the communion service. Worton, a hamlet of this parish, is about half a mile westward from the church.

COGGES, on the eastern bank of the Windrush, half a mile from Witney, contains 86 houses, and 452 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, in the patronage of Eton College. It is the mother church of Witney, and is supposed to have been built by one of the Greys of Rotherfield. Here was an alien Priory, subordinate to the Abbey of the Holy Trinity at Feschamp in Normandy, which was dissolved in 1414. Sir William Pope, Bart., of Wilcote, afterwards Earl of Downe, erected a large manor-house on the ruins of the Priory, in the reign of James I.; part of it was standing in 1792. Cogges was the head of the barony of Arsic, which family were descended from the Anglo-Saxon Earls of Oxford, and flourished in this lordship for several generations. In the reign of Henry III. the barony went to the heirs general. On the south side of the church is a ground called the Castle-yard, where foundations are often dug up. Wilcote is a township of this parish. It is 3½ miles northward.

LONG COMBE, on the verge of Blenheim Park, 3 miles W. from Woodstock, contains 93 houses, and 564 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Lincoln College Oxford, and has a stone pulpit. The rectorial manor-house is also curious.

DEDDINGTON, 10 miles N. from Woodstock, and 69 from London, contains 274 houses, and 1404 inhabitants. The town is governed by a bailiff, who is chosen annually; here is a market on Tuesday, and fairs August 21, Saturday after October 10, and November 22. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St Paul, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Clifton and Hempton are townships of the parish.

DUNS TEW, 2 miles S. from Deddington, contains 78 houses, and 460 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

ENSHAM, or Eynesham, on the Isis, 5½ miles N.W. from Oxford, contains 316 houses, and 1705 inhabitants. A Benedictine Abbey was built and endowed by Ailmer, Earl of Cornwall in 1005, in honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, St. Benedict, and All Saints, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was valued at 441*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* per annum; the foundations of the building may yet be traced. The parish church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 14*s.* It is delightfully situated amidst meadows, and called in a charter of King Ethelred, locus celebris.

GLYMPTON, on the river Glyme, 3½ miles N.W. from Woodstock, contains 21 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 16*s.*

HANDBOROUGH, 5 miles E. from Witney, contains 183 houses, and 885 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 6*s.* in the presentation of St. John's College Oxford. The north door-way of the church is enriched with sculpture, representing the patron saint; the font also is curious, and here are considerable remains of the rood-loft, highly decorated with carving in wood. The manor, in the reign of Edward II., was held by the service of keeping the gate of the park of Woodstock, called the Woodgate, for the space of 40 days in the year, in time of war. Long Handborough, in the road to Woodstock, is north of this village.

HAYTHROP, or Heythrop, 2½ miles E. from Chipping Norton, and 8 miles N.W. from Woodstock, contains 22 houses, and 136 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Dunthrop. The church is an ancient building of small dimensions. Haythrop House, the seat of the Earl of Shrewsbury, was erected by Archer in 1705, for Charles Duke of Shrewsbury, afterwards Lord Chamberlain to Queen Anne and George I. It is approached by an avenue two miles in length, and is seated in a beautiful park, amidst an agreeable diversity of scenery, wood, water, hill, and vale. The north front of the mansion is of the Corinthian order, the centre building connected with the wings by an open screen. A chapel has been erected at a short distance from the mansion, for the use of the family and the tenantry who are of the Roman Catholic religion. It is of the early pointed style of architecture, and the tower has a very picturesque appearance from many situations in the park, as well as from the road to Chipping Norton.

KIDDINGTON, 3 miles S.E. from Enstone, contains 46 houses, and 252 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Kiddington House is the seat of Charles Mostyn, Esq. In the garden is the celebrated font in which Edward the Confessor was baptized.

KIDLINGTON, on the Cherwell, 4 miles S.E. from Woodstock, contains 183 houses, and 938 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, in the presentation of Exeter College Oxford. It is a spacious and handsome building, worthy the notice of the antiquary, and there is a Hospital, built by Sir William Moreton in 1671. The townships of Gosford and Water Eaton, and the hamlets of Thrup, are in this parish.

NORTH LEIGH, 3 miles N.E. from Witney, contains 115 houses, and 592 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 2*s.* in the patronage of the Crown. In Wilcote Chapel, on the north side of the chancel, are two very finely sculptured figures of a knight and a lady of the period of Henry IV. There is painted glass in the windows, referring to the family of Wilcote. The Akeman Street runs along the northern boundary of the parish; and about half a mile south of it, the remains of an extensive Roman villa were discovered in 1813, by the Rev. Walter Brown, in a field long known by the name of the Roman Piece. The situation of this villa was well chosen; the little valley of the Evenlode in which it stood, and the scenery around it, are remarkably beautiful. A wood, in the form of an amphitheatre, covers the western bank of the river during its course through the valley, and on the eastern bank is a level meadow, varying in breadth, but running into pleasing irregularity of ground, till the prospect is terminated by a ridge, on which, in front of the villa, stands the village of Long Combe, and beyond it the woods of Blenheim.—South Leigh, 3 miles distant from the above, contains 51 houses, and 316 inhabitants. The lordship formerly belonged to the Harcourt family, whose arms were in the church, and in the windows of the manor-house. It is a chapelry of Stanton Harcourt, two miles south.

SOUTH NEWINGTON, 4 miles W. from Deddington, in the road from Banbury to Chipping Norton, contains 87 houses, and 428 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Exeter College Oxford.

ROUSHAM, on the Cherwell, 5 miles N.E. from Woodstock, contains 28 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Rousham Park, the seat of Lady Cotterell, was originally erected by the Dormers, about the reign of James I.; but subsequent additions have been made in a corrupted style of architecture, by which it is much deteriorated. The Cotterell family succeeded to the estate in 1741, when they assumed the name of Cotterell Dormer.

SANDFORD, 7 miles N. from Woodstock, contains 97 houses, and 489 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* Grove Ash and Ledwell are hamlets of this parish.

SHIPTON UPON CHERWELL, 2 miles E. from Woodstock, contains 25 houses, and 147 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

STANTON HARCOURT, 6 miles W. from Oxford, contains 93 houses, and 606 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The mansion of the Harcourts was desecrated about 1770. It contained a great hall, a great and little parlour, and the Queen's Chamber, so called from Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia having lodged in it during a visit. The domestic chapel and the kitchen remain, together with a small part of the house, now inhabited by a farmer. None of the family have lived here since the death of Sir Philip Harcourt, in 1688. Pope passed two summers at Stanton Harcourt, and was occasionally visited by Gay, from the neighbouring seat of Lord Harcourt, at Cokethorpe. In the chamber over the chapel was a piece of red stained glass, now preserved at Nuneham Courtenay, inscribed, In the year 1718, Alexander Pope finished here the fifth volume of Homer. A large square moated house on the left of the road, at the entrance to the village from Ensham, formerly belonged to the Huntingdon family. In it are preserved several family pictures, some armour, and other relics of considerable interest. The Devil's Coits, three monumental stones, are a short distance from the village.

STONESFIELD, 4 miles W. from Woodstock, contains 96 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* Considerable Roman remains have been found here.

TACKLEY, 3 miles N.E. from Woodstock, contains 90 houses, and 478 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford.

GREAT TEW, 3 miles N. from Enstone, contains 88 houses, and 531 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Tew Park is the seat of G. F. Stratton, Esq.

LITTLE TEW, one mile S. from the above, contains 44 houses, and 229 inhabitants. The church is ruined.

WOODSTOCK, 8 miles N.W. from the city of Oxford, and 62 miles from London, on a fine and healthy eminence, contains 246 houses, and 1455 inhabitants. The town is situated on the river Glyme, a branch of the Isis, and consists of several streets, the principal of which is formed by the high road from Oxford to Chipping Norton. The magistracy of the Corporation is vested in a high steward, who is the Duke of Marlborough, a mayor, recorder, town-clerk, 4 aldermen, and 16 common-councilmen. The arms of the Corporation are, gules, a woodstock or, in chief three stags' heads cabossed argent, all within a border of the last, charged with eight oak-leaves vert. The borough returns two members to parliament—the Marquess of Blandford, and Lord Ashley, the right of election being vested in the mayor, aldermen, and freemen, who at present amount to about 400. The trade of the town consists chiefly in gloves and cutlery. The market-house was erected in 1766, from a design by Chambers. It has a market on Tuesday, with fairs on the 5th April, Tuesday in Whitsun-week, 2nd August, 2nd October, Tuesday after 1st November, and 17th December. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a curacy.

At Woodstock was a Royal palace of the Anglo-Saxon monarchs. Henry I. made the park, and Rous, the historian, tells us that this was the first park in England; in point of natural beauty and elegant embellishments it still maintains priority. Henry VII. built much here, and on the front of the principal gate was his name, with an English rhyme importing that he was the founder. A room in the Gate-house called Queen Elizabeth's Chamber, had a carved roof of Irish oak, painted blue and gold. Rosamond's Bower was a chamber on the S.W. side of the palace. In 1622 remains of this bower were to be seen.

Blenheim House, the seat of the Duke of Marlborough, a noble monument of national munificence, was erected from the designs of Sir John Vanbrugh. It is situated about half a mile from the town of Woodstock, and about 8 miles from the University of Oxford. To perpetuate the memory of the military services of the illustrious John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, the royal manor of Woodstock, with the demesne, comprising the hundred of Wootton, was granted by Queen Anne to him and his heirs for ever, to be held by grand serjeanty; the terms of which tenure are, that annually the Duke, or his successors in the title, shall present to the Queen, or her heirs, at the Castle of Windsor, a standard of France, on August the 2nd, which by the change of style now falls on the 13th, being the anniversary of the day on which the battle of Hochstet was fought, near the village of Blenheim, on the banks of the Danube, in 1704, where a most glorious and complete victory was obtained over the French and Bavarians. This grant was confirmed by Act of Parliament, passed on the 14th March, 1705; and half a million of money was voted by the House of Commons for the completion of the palace, which took place in 1715. The general plan of the house consists of a grand centre edifice, connected by colonnades to two wings, which on the principal front form the three sides of a great court, inclosed by iron palisades; the whole building being in extreme length 850 feet, and covering seven acres of ground. The usual approach to this magnificent residence is by the Triumphal Gate at Woodstock; and the scene presented, on entering the park from this gate, is one of striking grandeur. Sir John Vanbrugh has been accused, and perhaps not unjustly, of caprice in his architectural designs: but his genius was seldom employed upon a scale sufficiently extensive to display his vast powers. Blenheim afforded that opportunity; and in this, his best work, he has succeeded in producing an architectural effect every way worthy of the object upon which he was employed. Modern critics have pronounced a decision upon its merits in direct contradiction to the censures of his contemporaries. The approach from the Ditchley Gate to the grand front is by an extensive avenue more than two miles in length. The garden front presents almost the same superb display of architectural grandeur with the carriage front. It extends 348 feet, in five grand divisions; and opens to a beautiful lawn, backed by scenery of the most appropriate description, where Nature has been embellished with the utmost success. Near the eastern angle of the house is a commodious observatory, erected by the late Duke, and furnished with astronomical apparatus by Ramsden. Another corresponding observatory is at the western angle. The contrivance, uniformity, and grand effect of the whole official part of the arrangement, is the most admired portion of the interior of the building; the stairs are many and ample; in short, the communications from and to every point are ready, free, and unembarrassed. The high lodge is seated upon an eminence which gradually slopes to the water; and Rosamond's Well is situated in the side of the hill. The bridge over the lake consists of one vast semicircular arch in the centre, 101 feet in diameter, springing from massive piers, besides two small arches: the abutments are curved and rusticated, and the line of parapet horizontal. The effect of this noble design is peculiarly appropriate and grand. Immediately in front of the house is the column of Victory, 130 feet high, crowned by a colossal statue of the Duke of Marlborough.

WOOLVERCOTT, 2 miles N. from Oxford, contains 84 houses, and 493 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of Merton College Oxford. In a chapel on the north side is a monument to the memory of David Waller, Esq., lord of this manor, and one of the Grooms of the Bedchamber to King Charles II. There is sufficient remaining of Godstow nunnery to mark its site. It was founded for nuns of the Benedictine order by Lady Edith, of Winchester, after the death of her husband Sir William Lancelyn. John of St. John gave the site of the abbey, which she erected at her own charge. The church was dedicated in 1131 by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, to the honour of the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist. King Stephen and his Queen Maud, with their son Eustace, were present at the laying of the first stone; and each contributed to the expense of the building. Many of the prelates and nobility were also present at this ceremony, all of whom gave money towards finishing the structure, and many of them lands or yearly revenues afterwards. Fair Rosamond, so called for her surpassing beauty, was a resident in this religious house. She was the daughter of Lord Clifford, of Clifford Castle in Herefordshire; by whom King Henry II. had two sons, William Longspee, Earl of Salisbury, and Geoffrey Plantagenet, Archbishop of York and Lord Chancellor. She resided at Woodstock, and at her death was buried under a monument in the choir of Godstow church, before the high altar, whence it was removed by order of St. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, and afterwards buried in the Nuns' Chapter House. Binsey, on the western bank of the Isis, half a mile south from Godstow, is a distinct parish within the liberty of Oxford. Medley adjoins it on the south.

WOOTTON, 2 miles N. from Woodstock, on the banks of the Glyme, contains 205 houses, and 1084 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. Here is a school, founded and endowed by the Rev. Charles Perrot, in 1787. A manufacture of gloves is carried on at Wootton. Hordley, the residence of Richard Smallbones, Esq., is an ancient edifice worthy of notice. The estate formerly belonged to the Gregory family, of whom it was purchased by the late Duke of Marlborough.

NETHER WORTON, 10 miles N. from Woodstock, on the Severbrook, contains 14 houses, and 96 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy. Over Worton, one mile S. from the above, contains 10 houses, and 56 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

YARNTON, or Yarrington, 4½ miles N. from Oxford, contains 54 houses, and 273 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* The manor-house, built by Sir Thomas Spenser in 1612, is now occupied by a farmer. The church tower and the Spenser aisle or chapel were also built by Sir Thomas Spenser. The last forms one of the numerous illustrations of Skelton's Antiquities of Oxfordshire.

THE CITY AND UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.—Oxford Circuit.

Is locally situated in Wootton Hundred, fifty-four miles west from London by way of High Wycombe, and fifty-eight by way of Henley. The city occupies a gentle eminence, near the junction of the rivers Isis and Cherwell, and, including the suburbs, is more than a mile in length from east to west, nearly the same from north to south, and about three miles in circumference. It contains 2,431 houses, and 16,364 inhabitants. The general views of Oxford, in every direction, are singularly interesting: from the north, the venerable buildings are displayed in such a remarkably picturesque group as to seem disposed entirely for effect. The eastern prospect is equally magnificent, the architectural beauties of Oxford surpassing those of any city in Great Britain; it is satisfactory also to learn from so able a critic as Mr. Dallaway, that it will find few rivals, even on the continent. The south-western view of the city is considered one of the best, as affording a more distinct arrangement of the various interesting edifices without their intercepting each other, a defect rather observable in most of the other views of Oxford. Under the classical name of Isis the river Thames here flows through a valley, expanded into a spacious amphitheatre, bounded by gentle eminences, in the very centre of which the city of Oxford appears rising behind the thick shade of venerable groves. The Isis divides itself into various small channels, which reuniting, it is crossed on the south side of the city by the Folly Bridge, in the road to Abingdon, after which it glides through Christchurch meadows, where a wide walk, bounded by lofty elms, is formed upon its banks. The Isis is here joined by the Cherwell, which passes on the eastern side of Oxford, through Magdalen Bridge, the two streams almost insulating the city. Oxford was formerly surrounded by a wall, with towers at about one hundred and fifty feet distance from each other, and included an oblong space of about two miles in circumference. Magdalen College, with the eastern and northern suburbs, including the parishes of Holywell, Magdalen and St. Giles, with Baliol, Trinity, St. John's and Wadham Colleges, are beyond the walls. Some part of the old walls is said to be yet remaining, as a boundary to Merton College and to New College. Of the ancient gates of the city, the East Gate, formerly in the High-street, near Long Wall, was the chief; the North Gate, or Bocardo, was long used as a prison, and was memorable for the Bishops' Room, in which Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley were confined, previously to their execution in front of Baliol College; the South Gate of the city was in Fish-street, near Christchurch College; Little Gate in Blackfriars Road, near St. Ebbe's Church; and the West Gate, on the south side of the Castle. Agreeably to an Act of Parliament for improving the streets of the city, the old gates were all taken down about 1771.

The Corporation of Oxford consists of a mayor, high steward, a recorder, four aldermen, eight assistants, two bailiffs, and those who have served that office, two chamberlains, and those who have served that office, twenty-four common-councilmen, a town clerk, and a solicitor. The Corporation of Oxford claim, by virtue of their charter, to serve at the Coronation of the King, in the office of the butlery, with the citizens of London, and to have for their fee three maple cups. This duty was probably assigned to the city of Oxford by Henry I.; it is acknowledged in the charter of Henry II., and confirmed in that of Henry III. The arms of the city, as represented in the heraldic visitation 1634, are: Argent, in chief an ox gules, in base barry wavy argent and azure, the shield encircled with a ribbon azure, charged with roses and fleurs de lis, alternately, or: the ribbon edged with the last. Crest, a demi-lion rampant gardant or, semee of fleurs de lis azure, regally crowned of the first, and holding a Tudor rose. Supporters, dexter, an elephant ermines, armed or, eared, collared, and lined argent, sinister a beaver proper, ducally collared and lined or. Motto: FORTIS · EST · VERITAS. The magistracy of the city is subject to the chancellor or vice-chancellor of the University in all affairs of moment, and an oath is annually administered to the magistrates and sheriffs to maintain the privileges of the University. No person, unless matriculated, is allowed to keep an open shop in the city except he be a freeman, and freedom can only be gained by birth, by apprenticeship, or by purchase. The city of Oxford sends two members to Parliament, a privilege granted to it 23 Edward I., when the right of election was vested in the Corporation and freemen, who at present amount to about fifteen hundred; the mayor and bailiffs are the returning officers. The present members are John Haughton Langston, Esq., and William Hughes Hughes, Esq. The assizes and petty sessions are always held here, and the markets on Wednesday and Saturday are kept in a general market-house on the north side of the High-street, designed by Gwynn; one of the most convenient and airy in the kingdom. The fairs are on 3rd May, Monday after St. Giles's day, and Thursday before Michaelmas-day. The city of Oxford with its suburbs consists of thirteen parishes, which with the exceptions of St. Giles's and St. John's were consolidated by Act of Parliament in 1771.

ST. ALDATE'S CHURCH, or St. Old's, near Fish-street, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Pembroke College, to which it was granted by King Charles I. in 1636. The edifice contains a nave with its aisles, and a chancel, the whole about 100 feet in length. At the west end is a tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. It is of antiquity beyond the reach of satisfactory investigation, and is said to have been originally founded about 1004. The parish includes the tithing of Grampound, locally situated in Hormer hundred, Berkshire.

ALL SAINTS CHURCH, situated in the High-street, is a curacy, in the patronage of Lincoln College. The old church of Allhallows, as it was formerly frequently called, fell down from decay in 1699, when the present building, one of the principal churches in Oxford, was erected in 1708, from designs by Dr. Henry Aldrich, the accomplished Dean of Christchurch; it has often and justly been praised by critics in architecture. Being constructed of perishable stone, many of the projecting parts have lost their sharpness, and the admirable details have been impaired: by this, however, its pictorial effect is increased, the mouldering stone blending more happily with the venerable structures by which it is surrounded. The order is Corinthian; and the entablature, which is remarkably bold, is carried completely round the building, and is supported by coupled columns, a mode purely Italian; the columns are not fluted, and the frieze is perfectly plain. All its grandeur of appearance is therefore derived from the breadth and justness of its proportions. It is surmounted by an attic and balustrade; a very fine tower at the west end supports a beautiful peristyle of Corinthian columns, above which is an obelisk termination. In this feature of our churches the greatest architects have failed; and it is no small praise, for Mr. Dallaway, one of the ablest critics, to have remarked that the spire of All-Saints has fewer objections than almost all those of Wren, Hawksmoor, or Gibbs. The church contains a nave with its lateral aisles, and a chancel, and measures in length withinside seventy-two feet by forty-two feet in width; the height is fifty feet: the armorial distinctions of the various benefactors to the building are displayed upon the ceiling. In the chancel are seats for the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, it being their collegiate chapel, and to which it was annexed at the foundation of the college.

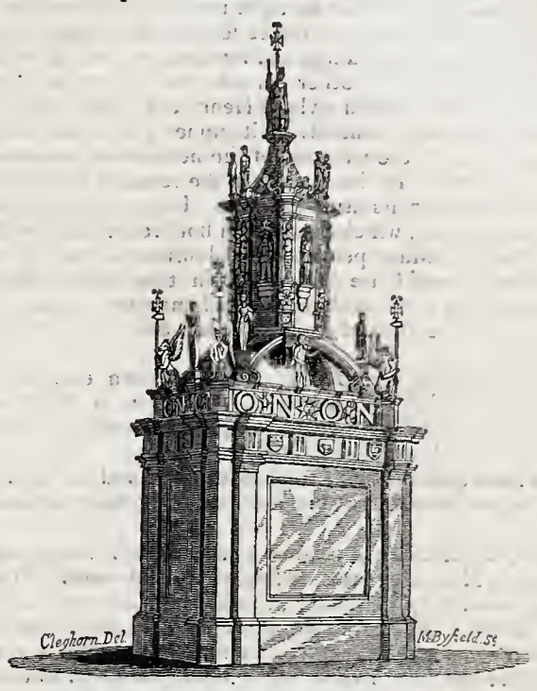
ST. EBBE'S CHURCH, in St. Ebbe's-street, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is a modern edifice, opened for divine service Feb. 9, 1817, and was erected, from designs by Fisher, in the pointed style of architecture, corresponding with the tower of the old church, which has been preserved. A curious Norman doorway in very good taste has been adapted to the vestry of the new church, which was saved from destruction at the instigation of John Ireland, Esq. This church formerly belonged to the abbey of Ensham, and was dedicated to St. Ebbe, daughter of Ethelfrid King of Northumberland, who became abbess of Coldingham, and died in the year 683.

ST. GILES'S CHURCH, in a street of the same name, on the road to Woodstock, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College. It is a very ancient structure, which may be inferred from its numerous lancet-shaped windows, and is well proportioned, being one hundred feet long by fifty in breadth. A dissenting chapel is built at Summer Town in this parish.

HOLYWELL CHURCH, in a street of the same name, at the north-eastern extremity of the city, is a curacy. The church was dedicated to the Holy Cross, and the parish is named from an ancient well near the church. The embattled tower was erected about the year 1464, but the church is more ancient: it is about seventy feet long, and consists of a nave and chancel, on the south side of which is a small chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST CHURCH, or Merton College Chapel, is a curacy; the church being used as the college chapel, the service is performed by the chaplains. It originally belonged to Reading Abbey, the monks of which gave it to Walter de Merton in 1265. About the end of the fourteenth century the church was taken down, and the present edifice built on its site in 1424, from designs by William Rede, Bishop of Chichester, formerly Fellow of Merton College, the most able architect of his age. The tower was built by Thomas Rodeborne, Warden of Merton College and Bishop of St. David's. The great east window of this church, is perhaps the most perfect instance, in that manner, of spreading the mullions now in existence with so rich an effect. The whole elevation of the northern transept toward the street, with the window and niches, presents a very beautiful architectural composition. The external pannelling of the tower and the pinnacles are of a later æra than the chapel, and were probably added by Bishop Rodeborne to that originally rising upon the arcade of the transept. The corbels on the north side of the church exhibit sculpture of better design and execution than any of the same kind in Oxford*. The interior of the church was repaired by Evans in 1823, when the oak screens of Grecian design were very properly removed. The side windows of the church are filled with ancient glass, exquisitely beautiful and perfect; and in the east window, six compartments contain the principal events in the life of Christ, executed in stained glass by W. Price in 1700. The altar-piece is a painting of the Crucifixion by Tintoret; and the chancel is hung with tapestry representing the history of Ahasuerus and Esther. On the north side of the altar is a large mural monument to the memory of Sir Thomas Bodley, the munificent founder of the library that bears his name: near it is the monument of Bishop Earle, the author of "Microcosmography;" and upon the south side of the altar is a memorial of Sir Henry Savile, tutor to Queen Elizabeth, and Warden of Merton College from 1585 to 1621. He was founder of the Professorships of Geometry and Astronomy, and was buried at Eton. Near the last is the tomb of Alexander Fisher, a liberal benefactor to the college, who died in 1671. In the ante-chapel is a mural monument to Anthony Wood, the well known and justly celebrated Oxford antiquary; he died Nov. 28, 1695, æt. 64.



ST. MARY'S CHURCH, situated in the High-street, of which it is one of the principal ornaments, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Oriel College, to which it was granted by King Edward II. In the reign of Henry VII. this church was found to be in such a ruinous state that the University in congregation appointed Stephen Browne to be their proctor, to intercede with the bishops and other spiritual and wealthy persons for money to rebuild it; which appeal produced liberal contributions, and the present building was erected in 1498. The church consists of a nave with its aisles, a tower crowned with a spire on the north side, and a large chancel, its entire length being about two hundred and fifty feet, and its breadth about fifty; the height of the roof is seventy feet, the whole of light and elegant architecture. The south porch, in the High-street, is a remarkable and singular specimen of the use of columns with twisted shafts, and was built in 1637, at the expense of Morgan Owen, D.D., chaplain to Archbishop Laud, then chancellor of the university, from a design by Nicholas Stone, senior, one of the pupils of Inigo Jones. The application of the twisted column was evidently derived from the high altar of St. Peter's at Rome, in the enrichment of which they had been used by Michael Angelo. The columns of this porch are of the Corinthian order, and over the entablature is introduced a statue of St. Mary the Virgin, to whom the church is dedicated, bearing the infant Christ. Soon after it was completed this statue was defaced, and the circumstance of its erection was actually made one of the articles of impeachment against Archbishop Laud, viz.: "That he did oblige the said Dr. Morgan Owen to build it, permitted him as chancellor of the university, and connived at all, when 'twas finished." The spire of St. Mary's church, one of the most striking objects in every distant view of the university, rises from a tower situated on the north side of the edifice, between the nave and the chancel. From the basement of the tower to the vane is 180 feet, the exact altitude of the spire alone at Salisbury. The comparison of such a noble specimen of this description of architectural decoration with that of St. Mary's, will not prove favourable to the last. Here the beautiful proportions and elegant symmetry of the spire are almost lost in the exuberance of the clustered ornaments at its base. The tower of the church is square and plain, consisting of two stories, the upper containing six bells, and having one large pointed window or opening on each side. The outer angles of the tower are supported by buttresses which, above the enriched parapet, are crowned with turrets of very elegant workmanship, showing canopied niches and statues on the outward face, and terminating in small pinnacles. There are also openings at the base of the spire, crowned with tabernacles enriched with crockets and finials. From this rich cluster the octagonal spire rises, with perfect plainness, to the vane. The nave of the church is divided from the aisles by clusters of light pillars supporting a pointed arcade, above which are the windows of the Clere story. The ceiling is lofty, and particularly simple in its decoration. In 1828 great alteration was made in the interior of this church, under the direction of Plowman, a young architect, who died before it was re-opened for divine service. All the monuments were then removed from the beautiful columns of the nave. The vice-chancellors' and doctors' seats were reconstructed upon a tasteful model derived from the ancient stalls of collegiate churches. St. Mary's being the University church, sermons are preached here in turn every Sunday morning and afternoon during Term; and upon the 10th of February, Dies Scholastica, the mayor, bailiffs, and burghers of the city used formerly to make an offering of a silver penny each, as an atonement for the murder of some scholars, which took place in an affray as early as the reign of Edward III. This ceremony continued to be performed till the year 1825. In the upper compartments of the east window is some painted glass, the rest are plain. On the north side of the chancel is the Common Law School, where the Vinerian professor reads his lectures.

ST. MARY MAGDALEN'S CHURCH, situated near Baliol College, between the Corn-market and St. Giles's-street, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch. A church on this site is said to have been originally built by the permission of St. Frideswide; but it is obvious, from the irregularity of the present edifice, that it has been erected at various periods, and experienced successive alterations. Robert D'Oiley, the founder of Oseney Abbey, granted this church and its endowments to his new monastery, and at the dissolution of Oseney Abbey it was given to Christchurch College. The church contains four parallel aisles, a chancel at the east end, and a square embattled tower at the west end: the northern and southern aisles were chantries, the former said to have been built by Devorgilla, foundress of Baliol College, in 1290, for the use of that society, who had then no chapel within the walls. The southern aisle is considered to have been founded by Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1194, and to have been intended for a chapel to the neighbouring palace of Beaumont: it was, however, rebuilt in 1337, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The style of the architecture is pure, with a due proportion of enrichment; three mullioned windows are placed between buttresses, adorned by canopied niches, and the walls are surmounted by an open-worked parapet, which produces a pleasing effect. The tower, built in the reign of Henry VIII., is substantial, and contains five bells. The font in this church is highly enriched; it rises from a comparatively small base, and expands in an octagonal form, covered with bold tracery, above which is a fillet sculptured with foliage and small quatrefoil compartments, each containing a shield. This parish is the largest in the city.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, commonly called Carfax, (Quatre vois,) from its situation at the meeting of the four main streets of the city. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is a modern edifice, erected by Harris and Plowman, and opened for divine service in 1822. There is much good sense in the following appeal made previously to the demolition of the old church in 1819: "The venerable buildings which adorn this highly favoured spot are dear to Englishmen, and every old gray stone has its value in the eye of the painter, the antiquary, and the poet. I am not aware, says the author, of the circumstances which call for the removal of this church: there may be a necessity; but I should say, that if it can in any way be repaired, even although such a reparation should amount to the sum proposed for the erection of the new one, that measure should be adopted. The degree of veneration arising from the antiquity of a sacred edifice is valuable in every mind; and when we consider the beauties which characterize every church in Oxford, I should hope few Englishmen would desire even the humblest to be removed." The ancient tower remains, but only a small portion of its upper part can be seen over the lofty church, which was built by general subscription and parochial rates. The University as a body, and most of the Colleges, contributed liberally. The Corporation of the city subscribed 600*l.*, and nearly all its members subscribed individually. The following remarks upon the edifice raised under such auspicious circumstances were made by a gentleman eminent for taste as well as ability in his profession as an architect: "The church in point of style is very defective, the divisions are marked by buttresses of peculiar formation, copied with some deviations from the old eastern buttresses built early in the thirteenth century: all the windows are copied from the pattern of the old east window, and belong to the style of the fifteenth century. The architect has ingeniously adapted a compartment of the principal east window for his side-windows, despising altogether the characteristic proportions of arches, whose age must, it seems, be determined by the tracery they contain. The church does not stand well on its foundations; the basement moulding, which should have reposed on the ground, agreeably to the style of the thirteenth century, is raised to the sill of the windows, making the church appear as if it were elevated upon stilts. In point of execution much praise is due to the architect; where he trusted to his own skill and invention, he has failed of producing character and effect; but where he copied antiquity, he proved bold and correct, as in the windows, which are excellently carved. It is directed that certain parts of our Church Service shall be performed in the chancel, but this church is without a chancel."—The very handsome font is retained in its original and proper position. St. Martin's is the city church, where the mayor and Corporation attend divine service.

Carfax Conduit (of which a representation is here given,) formerly stood in the centre of the four streets, and was supplied with water from a reservoir on South Hinksey Hill. This singularly curious building was erected in 1610, and is enriched on each of its four sides with numerous statues of the Cardinal Virtues, the Worthies of the World, Apollo and the Muses, &c. It was presented to the Earl of Harcourt in 1771, who in very good taste reconstructed it at Nuneham. Although it was an improvement to remove it from this situation in the High-street, there could have been no real necessity for the Corporation suffering this highly ornamental structure to be carried out of the city, when a situation so extremely appropriate presented itself as the centre of the Quadrangle at Christchurch College, where there actually is a fountain supplied from the same source. This act almost amounts to a wanton spoliation of the city *.

ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH, in the north-western part of the city, is a curacy, in the patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College. The church formerly belonged to the canons of St. Frideswide, and contains a nave and two aisles, with a chancel, the windows of which are large. The embattled tower is very ancient.

ST. PETER LE BAILEY CHURCH is situated at the west end of the city, near Castle-street. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. This church was erected in 1740. Its entire length is about seventy feet, and the width thirty-eight. A gallery was erected in 1753, at the expense of Daniel Flexney.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH IN THE EAST, situated near Queen's College, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Merton College. It is considered to be one of the oldest churches

* A celebrated statue of Queen Elizabeth has just been saved from sale, by the churchwardens of St. Dunstan's, London, by the interference of Mr. Gosling. It had been presented by Sir Francis Gosling on the demolition of Ludgate, where the statue formerly stood. Other instances of want of taste in corporate bodies might readily be produced.

in the kingdom, and to have been founded by St. Grymbald in the ninth century. By William the Conqueror it was granted to Robert D'Oiley; but having returned by escheat to the Crown, it was granted by Henry III. to Merton College. St. Peter's was formerly the University church, and the afternoon sermon is still preached here during the whole of Lent. The vaulted crypt underneath the chancel is scarcely inferior to that at Canterbury; it is thirty-six feet long, and twenty feet ten inches wide, being divided into three aisles, each of which is terminated at its western extremity by an arched doorway. The roof is supported by eight massive pillars. The chancel also is particularly worthy of notice for two beautiful windows enriched with chevron mouldings, and for the very curious intersecting ribs of the ceiling. The other parts of the church have evidently been rebuilt in the pointed style of Henry the Fifth's reign. A large window on the south contains in its upper part some old painted glass, and in one of the windows of the north side is a curious symbol of the Trinity. In the porch are the remains of a benetier, or vessel for holy water, its usual position. Here is also part of a very curious ancient font, which contains in bold relief the figures of the twelve Apostles. Many persons of local distinction and of eminence in the literary world are buried within this church, and in the churchyard is the tomb of the celebrated antiquary Thomas Hearne, M.A.: he died the 10th of June 1735, æt. 55.

ST. THOMAS'S CHURCH, at the western extremity of the city, southward of the Witney road, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christchurch College. It was originally founded by the canons of Oseney in 1141, and has lately been repaired. The church consists of a nave and chancel, and is about one hundred feet in length, with an embattled tower at the west end, containing six bells.

THE CATHEDRAL, originally the church belonging to St. Frideswide's Monastery, was dedicated to that saint. The greater part was rebuilt by Guimonde, the first regular prior of the monastery, about 1130, in the reign of Henry I.; and about 1188 the relics of that saint were removed from their situation in the church to one more suitable to their importance; at which solemnity the King, bishops, and nobles being present, divers miracles were wrought, which caused the fame of the saint to spread far and near. The account of the miracles, written by Prior Philip, is yet extant amongst the Digby Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library. A custom also formerly prevailed for the chancellor and scholars of the University, in the middle of Lent and on Ascension Day, to go in procession and offer oblations on her shrine. Cardinal College was chiefly built on the site of the priory of St. Frideswide, which had previously been surrendered by Prior Burton, who retired to Oseney Abbey, and was made abbot in 1531. In March 1525, Cardinal Wolsey laid the first stone of the magnificent institution now known as Christchurch College, the ceremony being solemnized by a sermon from Longland, Bishop of Lincoln. The church was adorned by Wolsey with a fine roof; but part of the edifice was taken down in order to afford space for the erection of the choir. This College continued till the fall of Wolsey, when, solicitous for its prosperity, he entreated the King that he would suffer it to remain; and in 1532 the society was refounded under the title of King Henry the Eighth's College; but in 1545 the charter was surrendered to the King, who dismissed the dean and canons with yearly pensions. The King then translated the episcopal see from Oseney, where it had been originally established in 1542, to this cathedral. The diocese of Oxford constituted a part of the diocese of Lincoln, till Henry VIII. erected it into a bishopric, and endowed it out of the estates of the dissolved monasteries of Abingdon and Oseney, assigning at the same time the church of the abbey of Oseney as the cathedral of this see. The diocese contains the county of Oxford, one hundred and ninety-five parishes, of which eighty-eight are impropriated. Arms of the Bishop of Oxford: Sable, a fess argent, in chief three demi-ladies couped at the breast and dueally crowned, and in base an ox passing a ford proper. To the cathedral belong also a dean, a chancellor, an archdeacon, a treasurer, eight canons, and other inferior officers. The see is valued in the King's books at 354*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, and is computed to be worth annually 2,800*l.*

The cathedral church, an interesting edifice, consists of a nave with its aisles, north and south transepts, a choir, and two chapels north of the choir, the Dean's chapel, and the Divinity chapel. The nave is seventy-four feet in length by fifty-four in breadth, including the aisles, and is forty-one feet high. The transept is one hundred and two feet long. Four monuments of early date are in this church: one under the great window of the north transept to James Zouch, ob. 1503; the device of an inkhorn and pencase is on the sides of this tomb. The other tombs are between the pillars dividing the Divinity chapel from the north aisle: those of Sir Henry de Bathe, ob. 1252; Prior Guimonde, ob. 1149; Lady Elizabeth, wife of Lord Montacute, ob. 1353. There is also an altar-tomb of stone, surmounted by a succession of canopied niches, &c. of wood, with a small oratory, said to be the shrine of St. Frideswide. The carved wood-work is evidently of a later style of workmanship than the tomb, which appears to have had the effigies of a man and woman inlaid in brass. A monument of Bishop King, ob. 1557, originally placed in the choir, has been removed to a situation beneath one of the windows in the south aisle. The monument of Robert Burton, author of the Anatomy of Melancholy, who died 1639, was erected by his brother, the Leicestershire antiquary. There are also several monuments of eminent persons, who died in Oxford when King Charles held his court at Christchurch, and a statue of Dr. Cyril Jackson by Chantrey.

Most of the beautiful windows of the cathedral were destroyed in 1651. Those remaining, and others executed since that time, are, the Story of Jonah, in the south aisle; the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and Christ disputing with the Doctors, in the east window of the Divinity chapel, by Van Linge, in 1634. In the east window is the Nativity, after Sir James Thornhill, by Price; in the north aisle, St. Peter conducted out of Prison by the Angel, by Isaac Oliver, in 1700. The great west window contains some ancient painted glass, representing St. Frideswide, St. Catharine, and other saints. In the great window of the north transept is the Murder of St. Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, in very old glass. Other windows contain a variety of armorial designs, the collection and gift of Alderman Fletcher to the church. One window has a curious portrait of Bishop King, and a view of Oseney Abbey.

The Chapter-house is evidently of subsequent date to the cathedral, and is said to have been erected in the reign of Henry II. It was probably raised by Prior Philip, as the finishing part of the sacred edifice, and opens upon the east cloister. The style of the architecture is that of the early pointed. This peculiarly interesting room is now divided into two parts, and some of the windows are closed up, and the walls covered with portraits of Henry VI., VII., and VIII., Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Cardinal Wolsey, Archbishop Dolben, Archbishop Secker, Dean Fell, Dean Aldrich, Dr. Busby, Dr. Friend, W. Bromley, Speaker of the House of Commons, Frederic Duke of Saxony, &c.

OSENEY ABBEY, when the bishopric of Oxford was first erected, was situated in the parish of St. Thomas, in the suburbs of the city. It was founded in 1129 by Robert D'Oiley, constable to King Henry I., for canons regular of St. Augustine, and was dedicated to St. Mary. The abbey was rebuilt in 1247, the monks having raised a considerable sum of money by the proclamation of forty days indulgence and forgiveness of sins to all who contributed, made by the Pope's legate. Within the Gate-house, which was on the north side of the abbey, was a spacious quadrangle, chiefly of free-stone, and situated at the west end of the church; under this end of the church was also a spacious cloister, decked with a boarded roof, having the arms of benefactors thereon, with rebuses and allusions referring to those persons, especially the abbots, who contributed towards the building, and through this cloister was the refectory*. Arms of the abbey: Or, two bends azure, surmounted by a crozier in bend sinister of the first. The crozier is said to have been introduced after Oseney became an episcopal see.

At the Dissolution its yearly revenue amounted to 755*l.* 18s. 6*d.* Upon the erection of the new bishoprics by King Henry VIII. the church of this abbey was made a cathedral, and the Chapter of the Bishop of Oxfordshire consisted of a dean and six prebendaries, and his palace was at Gloucester Hall.

Rewley Abbey, or North Oseney, was also situated in the parish of St. Thomas in the western suburbs of the city. It was founded in 1280, by Edmund Earl of Cornwall, agreeably to the will of his father Richard, King of the Romans, (whence the name Roy lieu is derived,) for an abbot and fifteen monks of the Cistercian order, and was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary. Its revenue at the Suppression was valued at 174*l.* 3*s.* per annum. It was granted by Henry VIII. to the Dean and Canons of Christchurch College. The seal of the abbey bears the arms of the founder with this inscription: SIGILL· COMVNE · ABBATIS · ET · CONVENT · DE · REGALI · LOCO.—more than a hundred years ago, when Hearne surveyed the abbey. A gatehouse, bearing the arms of the founder, and a brewhouse, which appeared to him to have been the chapter-house, were the most remarkable of the remains; and he takes occasion to regret the demolition of a chapel built by Ela, Countess of Warwick.

About half a mile eastward of the city is the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, probably founded by Henry I. when he built the palace at Beaumont. Being a Royal foundation, King Edward III. gave it in 1328 to Oriel College, who were to maintain therein a chaplain and eight brothers.

There was also an Hospital, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and houses of Austin, black, and gray, and white friars. Just without the west gate, near the castle, King Henry III. placed a convent of bon hommes, or friars of the sack; and on the south side of the street, without the east gate, Edmund Earl of Cornwall founded a house and chapel for Trinitarian friars of the redemption of captives in 1291.

THE CASTLE was built by Robert D'Oiley, in 1071, and was probably intended to overawe the neighbouring country, which had manifested considerable opposition to William the Conqueror. The Empress Maud was besieged by Stephen in this Castle in 1142 for three months. The river being frozen over, and the ground covered with snow, she, accompanied by three knights dressed all in white, passed the warders unobserved, crossed the river, and walked on foot to Abingdon; thence she took horse, and arrived safely at Wallingford, where she was joined by her son Henry, and her half-brother the brave Earl of Gloucester. The day after her escape Oxford Castle surrendered to Stephen. The castle was restored and strengthened in the early part of the reign of King Edward III.: one solitary tower only remains of the ancient building; on its site a commodious county gaol has been erected, which for strength and convenience is not surpassed in the kingdom. The boundary wall encloses about three acres of ground; in the centre of the area is the keeper's house, and the visiting magistrates' committee-room; a wing of the gaoler's house is attached to the old tower of the castle, in the basement of which is the cell for refractory prisoners. It was completed under the direction of Moneypenny, the architect of Winchester and Leicester gaols, and of the house of correction at Exeter. The assize held in Oxford Castle in 1577 is called from its fatal consequences the Black Assize. The lord chief baron, the sheriff, several justices of the peace, and about 300 persons died within forty hours, of an infectious fever.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

THE opinion which ascribes the foundation of the University of Oxford to Alfred, if it cannot be maintained as a truth, contains no intrinsic marks of error. Ingulfus, abbot of Croyland, in the earliest authentic passage that can be adduced to this point, declares that he was sent from Westminster to the school at Oxford, where he learnt Aristotle, and the two first books of Tully's Rhetoric. Since a school for dialectics and rhetoric subsisted at Oxford, a town of but middling size, and not the seat of a bishop, its foundation may naturally be referred to one of our kings; and none who had reigned after Alfred appears likely to have manifested such zeal for learning. However, it is evident that the school of Oxford was frequented under Edward the Confessor. Then follows an interval of above a century without contemporary evidence of its continuance. But in the reign of Stephen, Vacarius read lectures here upon civil law; and it is reasonable to suppose that a foreigner would not have chosen this city, if he had not found a seminary of learning already established. It was probably inconsiderable, and might have been interrupted during some part of the preceding century. In the reign of Henry II., or at least of Richard I., Oxford became a very flourishing university, and in the year 1201 contained 3,000 scholars. The earliest charters were granted by John *.

The University of Oxford is a corporate body; styled the chancellor, masters and scholars of the University of Oxford, who form two distinct assemblies; the house of Congregation, and the house of Convocation. The chancellor is elected by the votes of all members of convocation; the office is now held by Lord Grenville: he is not required to attend the meetings of the university except at his installation, and in case of Royal visits. The vice-chancellor is always the head of a college, and is nominated by the chancellor, and approved by convocation; he is the highest resident officer of the university. The high steward, the Earl of Eldon, is appointed by the chancellor and approved by convocation. The proctors are two Masters of Arts, of at least four years standing, chosen annually out of the several colleges in turn. They each nominate two proctors, two Masters of Arts of any college or hall, to be their respective deputies. The public orator is chosen by convocation, and retains the office for life. The University sends two members to Parliament, a privilege granted by James I., when the elective right was conferred on the doctors and actual masters, amounting to about four hundred and fifty; the present members are T. G. B. Estcourt, Esq., and Sir R. Inglis, Bart.

Every college is governed by a dean, rector, provost, warden, president, master or principal. The heads of halls are called principals. The head of a college is chosen by the fellows, excepting in the instance of Christchurch, the Dean of which is nominated by the Crown, and Worcester College, where the provost is appointed by the chancellor of the university. The qualification for fellowships vary in almost every college; in some it is confined to the natives of particular counties, or the fellows are elected from the scholars; in others the kindred of the founder are preferred. The fellows, in conjunction with the head of the college, are in all cases the directors of internal regulation, and managers of the property and estates of the society. From this body the church preferment, which is attached to every college, is distributed according to seniority, as a vacancy occurs. Other members of the several colleges in the university are scholars, consisting of noblemen, gentlemen commoners, commoners, and students of Christchurch, chaplains, Bible-clerks, exhibitioners, who receive support during their residence at college: many of the London trading companies have exhibitions in their presentation, and servitors. There are also tutors who direct the studies of the junior members and prepare them for the public examinations, and bursars or treasurers. In the colleges that have choirs, there are singing-clerks, choristers and organists amongst the members. The college servants are the butler, the manciple, or steward, the cook, and the porter.

* Hallam's View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages.

Every member of the university must be matriculated, and for this purpose he appears before the vice-chancellor and describes his rank in life, subscribes to the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, takes the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and swears to observe all the statutes, privileges and customs of the university.

There are four terms in the year: viz. Michaelmas term, from 10th Oct. to 17th Dec.; Hilary term, from 14th Jan. to the day before Palm Sunday; Easter term begins on the tenth day after Easter Sunday, and ends on the day before Whit Sunday; and Trinity term, which begins on the Wednesday after Whit Sunday and ends on the Saturday after the Act, which is always on the first Tuesday in July. The degrees taken in the university are in Arts, Law, Divinity, Medicine and Music. For a Bachelor of Arts, a residence of sixteen terms is necessary, and previously to admission to this degree it is necessary to undergo responsions and a public examination. The examinations take place in the schools twice a year, and no one can be examined who has not previously responded before the masters of the schools. A Bachelor is entitled to his degree of Master of Arts, twelve terms after taking his first degree, without any further examination. One term of intermediate residence, comprising twenty-one days, is all that is requisite. A student in Civil Law undergoes the same examination as that for Bachelor of Arts, and the number of terms to be kept for the degree of Bachelor of Civil Law is twenty-eight, reduced by dispensation to seventeen. A Bachelor in Divinity receives his degree seven years from the time of his regency, which is taken out the first act after his Master's degree; a Doctor in Divinity four years after his degree of Bachelor in Divinity; a Doctor of Civil Law five years from his Bachelor's degree; a Bachelor in Medicine one year from his regency; a Doctor in Medicine three years after his degree of Bachelor. For the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music the candidates prepare a composition, which being approved of by the Professor of Music, is performed in the Music-school before the Vice-chancellor and other officers of the university.

MERTON COLLEGE. Founded in 1264.

This college was originally founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and was removed to Oxford in 1274, by Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester, Lord Chancellor of England. William Rede, Bishop of Chichester was a benefactor in 1376, and also built a library in the College, said to be the first which was erected in this university, and to which he gave books. John Willyot, D.D., Chancellor of Exeter, gave exhibitions in 1380, for the maintenance of twelve portionistæ, called postmasters, who were afterwards increased to fourteen by John Chambers, Fellow of Eton and Canon of Windsor in the reign of James I., who directed that his two additional exhibitioners should be elected from Eton College. In 1727, Henry Jackson, M.A. of this college founded four scholarships. The foundation consists of a warden, twenty-four fellows, fourteen postmasters, four scholars, two chaplains, and two clerks. Visitor, the Archbishop of Canterbury. Arms of Merton College: Or, three chevrons per pale, the first azure and gules, the second gules and azure, the third as the first.

This college is pleasantly situated in the south-eastern part of the city, and contains three courts, the inner or principal of which is 110 feet by 100. The gate-house was erected by Thomas Rodeborne, Bishop of St. David's and Warden of the College, in 1416. The sculpture over the entrance refers to the history of St. John the Baptist, and is a relic of the old church: the statues in canopied niches on the sides are those of the founder and King Henry III. The first or outer quadrangle of this college is one of the most attractive in the university, as it contains, with other fine specimens of architecture, the east end of St. John's church, the college chapel. The buildings on the north side, except the gate-house, were erected in 1589: considerable alterations have, however, been made on this front. The hall on the south side of this quadrangle was built in the early part of the fifteenth century, and repaired in 1540, as appears by a date on the panelling at the upper end. The garden quadrangle was built at the expense of the society, in 1610. The terrace in the garden, formed on the city wall, commands a remarkably pleasing prospect over the meadows on the banks of the Cherwell.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE. Founded in 1280.

This college, said to have been founded in 872 by Alfred the Great, was restored by William of Durham, Archbishop of Rouen, who died in 1249, and bequeathed to the university in trust, three hundred and ten marks to purchase annual rents for the use of ten or more masters. In 1280, a body of statutes was framed, and from this period the college dates its legal establishment. The chief benefactors were King Henry IV., Walter Skirlaw Bishop of Durham, Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland, Robert Dudley Earl of Leicester, Sir Simon Bennet, Bart., Rev. Charles Greenwood, Dr. John Radcliffe, and Dr. John Browne. The foundation consists of a master, twelve fellows, seventeen scholars and exhibitioners.

Two of the fellowships were founded by William of Durham for that county; three for the dioceses of York and Durham by Henry IV., at the request of Walter Skirlaw, Bishop of Durham; three for the dioceses of Durham, Carlisle, and York, by the Earl of Northumberland, in 1442; and four for any part of England, except the dioceses of Durham, Carlisle, and York, by Sir Simon Bennet, in 1631. The scholarships and exhibitions were given by different benefactors. Visitor, the King. Arms of University College: Azure a cross patonce between four martlets, or.

This college is situated on the south side of the High Street. It is a spacious and uniform structure, with a front more than 260 feet in length. The old college was erected by numerous contributions about the beginning of the reign of Henry VI., and adorned with a gate-house in the reign of Henry VIII. Upon the pavement of the High-street being raised, the college was gradually rebuilt, the west side in 1634, westward of the old buildings, and the front next the street in 1638. The east side of the college, where stood the old refectory, was rebuilt in 1675. The new hall on the south side of the quadrangle, begun in 1640, was completed about 1657, and the library was finished in 1669. The chapel, the fourth place in which the society have celebrated service, was built in 1665. The chapel and hall on the south side of the great quadrangle were altered under the direction of Dr. Griffith, late master of University College. Above the principal gate is a statue of Queen Anne, and upon the inner side a statue of James II., the last presented to the college by Obadiah Walker, master of the college in his reign; it is remarkable, as only two statues of this king are supposed to exist in England, the other at Whitehall. Above the other gate on the exterior is a statue of Queen Mary, daughter of James II., and on the side within the court, a statue of Dr. John Radcliffe.

The windows of the chapel contain painted glass by Abraham Van Linge in 1641, executed in the Dutch style. The eastern window, presented by Dr. Radcliffe, in 1687, is by Henry Giles, of York, the colours of which are greatly faded: the screen is enriched by carving by Gibbons, of excellent workmanship. In the common room is a bust of King Alfred by Wilton. In the ante-chapel, in the south aisle is a monument by Flaxman to the memory of Sir William Jones, who died at Bengal 27th April 1794, æt. 48: it contains a group of two figures, Justice with her balance, and a Brahmin holding a volume of Sanscrit; both admirably executed.

BALIOL COLLEGE. Founded in 1282.

John Baliol of Barnard Castle in Durham, in the reign of Henry III., made provision, dependent on his own will, and life, for the maintenance of certain scholars at Oxford, and on his death-bed in 1269, expressed an ardent desire that his benefaction might not die with him. The society was incorporated and established in 1282 by virtue of statutes granted under the seal of his widow, the Lady Devorgille, daughter of Alan, Lord of Galloway in Scotland. The revenues of the college were soon augmented by the munificence of succeeding benefactors, and particularly by that of Sir William Felton and Sir Philip Somervyle. The foundation now consists of a master, twelve fellows, and fourteen scholars. Of these nine fellows and ten scholars are on the old foundation. One fellowship and two scholarships having been afterwards added by Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Periam, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and two fellowships and two scholarships by Peter Blundell, to be elected from the grammar-school which he had founded at Tiverton. This college has also a considerable number of exhibitions, amongst which are four founded in 1666 by John Warner, Bishop of Rochester, for natives of Scotland; with a particular view to supply the cause of episcopacy in that country: they are endowed with 20*l.* per annum each, charged on the manor of Swayton in Lincolnshire. These exhibitions are now generally held by four of the exhibitioners of John Snell, who within a few years after the Revolution having the same object in view with Bishop Warner, founded ten other exhibitions here for natives of Scotland; the stipends of the last, in consequence of the increased value of Mr. Snell's estate, are now very liberal. The master and fellows of this college by their statutes have the privilege of electing their own visitor; a privilege possessed by no other college or hall in either of the two universities. The present visitor is the Archbishop of Canterbury. Arms: Gules, an orle argent.

Baliol College is in Broad-street, and presents a front of dissimilar styles of architecture; the gate-house was erected in the reign of Henry VII., as well as the portion of the front westward of the tower, while the eastern portion of the front and quadrangle has been rebuilt in the modern style. The quadrangle is 120 feet by 80. On the western side is a beautiful oriel window belonging to the master's room. The hall, on this side of the court, was originally built in the reign of Henry VI., and contained the arms of many of the benefactors, but the interior has been modernized, and the only arms in it are those of the college: it contains portraits of John Parsons, D.D. Bishop of Peterborough, the late master; Shute Barrington, Bishop of Durham, the late visitor of the college; Dr. Prosser, Archdeacon of Durham; Dolben, Archbishop of York; Dr. Matthew Baillie, and Wycliffe the reformer, master of this college. The north side of the quadrangle is occupied by the library and chapel. The library was originally built in two parts, the lower or west part in 1427 by Dr. Thomas Chace, and the upper or east part in 1477 by Robert Abdy, both masters of the college. The interior has been gothicized by Wyatt. It contains a collection of manuscripts, some of them illuminated, many early printed English Bibles, and several very curious volumes of tracts, besides a good collection of books on general literature. In Antony Wood's time it was esteemed one of the best collegiate libraries in the university. Under the library is the common room. The chapel began in 1521, was finished some time before 1529. The east window contains the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension in glowing colours, the gift of Dr. Lawrence Stubbs in 1529. A window on the north side, painted by Van Linge, in 1637, represents Philip and the Eunuch; one on the south side, by the same artist, shows Hezekiah's sickness and recovery. The other windows contain a variety of scriptural subjects, saints, and armorial bearings. In the chapel are monuments to John Evet, Esq., and Thomas Gwillim, Esq., and to Dr. John Parsons, Bishop of Peterborough, who died in 1819.

EXETER COLLEGE. Founded in 1314.

Walter Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter, founded this college, which was originally called Stapledon Hall. The bishop removed his scholars here from Hart Hall, procuring a more convenient building for them, and appointing a rector and twelve fellows. Of these thirteen, he directed that eight should be elected from the archdeaconries of Exeter, Totness, and Barnstaple; four from the archdeaconries of Cornwall, and that one should be appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. There have since been several liberal benefactors; amongst the most considerable was Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter, who in 1404 added two fellowships for the diocese of Salisbury, and obtained leave to give the college its present name. Sir William Petre, Secretary of State in 1566, added eight fellowships for Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Oxfordshire, Essex, and any other county in England in which he or his heirs should have lands or possessions, which counties at present are Norfolk, Suffolk, and Surrey. Sir William Petre procured also a charter and a new body of statutes, following those of Trinity College. King Charles I. in 1636 added one fellowship for the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, the candidates for which are nominated by the Dean and Jurats of Jersey. Mrs. Shiers, who died in 1700, left certain rents out of which two fellowships were founded for the counties of Hertford and Surrey, to which the rector and five senior fellows alone elect. This foundation now consists of a rector and twenty-five fellows, besides whom there are the following exhibitioners: One elected by the rector and fellows, with preference to the kin of Symes the founder, and three to a native of Somersetshire or Dorsetshire. One appointed by the rector, usually the Bible clerk. One appointed by the archdeacon of Nottingham and master of Retford hospital, from the archdeaconries of Nottingham and Lincoln alternately. Three superannuated members of Eton College appointed by the provost and fellows of Eton. Two from Exeter school, nominated alternately by the Dean and chapter and chamber of Exeter. Two from Truro school, nominated by the trustees, and one from Exeter school, elected by Sir T. Acland, the rector of the college, the mayor of Exeter, and the master of Exeter school. Visitor, the Bishop of Exeter. Arms of the college: Argent two bends wavy, within a border gules charged with twelve pair of keys indorsed and interlaced in the rings, or.

This college is situated in Lincoln College Lane, its front is 220 feet in length, having in the centre a gate-house of Grecian architecture, bearing the founder's arms, opening upon a spacious quadrangle containing the hall, the chapel, the rector's lodgings, and the chambers of the fellows and scholars. The hall was built by Sir John Acland in 1620, it contains a whole length portrait of the founder, painted and presented in 1789 by Mr. Peters, R.A., an old portrait of the same person, others of Charles I., Sir John Periam, Sir John Acland, Luke Milbourne, M.A., Archbishops Marsh and Secker, Mrs. Shiers, Bishop Hall, Sir William Petre, the Earl of Macclesfield, Lord Ducie, William Noy, Attorney General to Charles I., Dr. Shortrudge, Dr. Hakewill, Dr. Coneybeare, Dr. Webber, Dr. Bray, Dr. Stinton, and Dr. Richards. The chapel was built in 1624 by Dr. George Hakewill, afterwards rector, whose arms are upon the ceiling and the screens. It consists of two aisles; the windows, eight in number, all bear this inscription: DOMVS · MEA · DOMVS · ORATIONIS. The rector's lodgings were new fronted in 1798. The library was rebuilt in 1778, after a design by the Rev. William Crowe, the public orator; it is of the Ionic order, and contains a portrait of the Rev. Joseph Sanford, B.D., Fellow of Baliol College, who contributed largely to it. Here are most of the Aldine classics, and a fine copy of the Voyages of De Bry. The garden is pleasantly laid out, and although in a central part of the city, is open to the east, where a terrace commands a view of some of the principal buildings of the university.

ORIEL COLEGE. Founded in 1325.

King Edward II., on the suggestion of Adam de Brome his almoner, founded this college for a provost and ten fellows. The number of fellows has been since increased by various benefactions. Four for the counties of Somerset, Dorset, Wilts, and Devon, were added by John Frank, Master of the Rolls, in the reign of Henry VI. One by John Carpenter, Bishop of Worcester, about 1476; one by William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, 1507; and two by Richard Dudley, Chancellor of the church of Salisbury, 1529. Queen Anne annexed a prebend of Rochester to the provostship for ever. The foundation now consists of a provost, eighteen fellows, and fifteen exhibitioners. Visitor, the Lord Chancellor. Arms of Oriel College: Gules, three lions passant gardant or, within a border invecked argent.

Oriel College is situated in St. Mary's Hall Lane, and consists of one quadrangle; on the north side of which is the provost's lodgings, on the east the hall and the entrance to the chapel: on the south and west sides of the court are the chambers of the fellows and students. These sides were rebuilt about 1620. In 1637 the north and east sides were rebuilt in their present form, and the chapel was completed in 1642. Robinson's Building, on the east side of the garden, was finished in 1719; and the building opposite, named after its founder Carter, was completed in 1730. Opposite to the gate-house, bearing the arms of Charles I., is the porch of the hall, ascended by steps; over the porch are statues of the Virgin Mary, and of Kings Edward II. and III., in canopied niches. The hall is forty-seven feet six inches long, by twenty-five feet wide and thirty-two feet high, and was repaired in 1826. It contains the following portraits: Edward II. on his throne, by Hudson; Queen Anne, by Dahl; the Duke of Beaufort, by Soldi; and Bishop Butler. In one of the windows are the arms of Pierrepoint, Duke of Kingston. There are two very curious ancient cups belonging to this hall: one given by the founder, Edward II., is decorated with the letter E in allusion to his name; the other is the gift of John Carpenter, Bishop of Worcester, 1476. It bears on the verge of the basin on which it stands:

TV · RATIONE · BIBAS · NON · QVOD · PETIT · ATRA · VOLVPTAS ·
SIC · CARO · CASTRA · DATVR · LIS · LINGVÆ · SVPPEDITATVR.

On 15th June, 1826, this society celebrated the five-hundredth anniversary from its foundation by a splendid fête.

The chapel, fifty-two feet by twenty feet six inches, was repaired in 1818. The east window contains the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, by Peckitt, in 1767. In the ante-chapel is a monument of Henry Edmunds, D.C.L., ob. 1746, and of Dr. George Carter, by Westmacott, in 1811. On the north side of the Garden Court, between Robinson's and Carter's Buildings, is the library, built after a design by Wyatt, in 1788, which is justly considered one of the best examples of the Ionic order in Oxford. Why it should not have been conformable to the other buildings is the only question that naturally arises; the more particularly as the ancient style admits of the greatest variety of structure and decoration. To the books originally belonging to this library a valuable collection was added by Lord Leigh. A room adjoining the gallery contains some rich panelling from New College Chapel. Under the library is the common room, which contains portraits of Dr. Eveleigh, by Hoppner, and Dr. Coplestone, by Phillips. In the inner common room is a picture by Vasari, representing a group of Italian authors: Guido, Calvacanti, Dante, Boccacio, Petrarch, Politian, and M. Ficinus; presented by James Clutterbuck Smith, Esq. In 1818 an addition was made to this college by the erection of a stone building at the south end.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE. Founded in 1340.

This munificent establishment originated in the piety and liberality of Robert Egglesfield, Rector of Brough, in Westmoreland, and Confessor to Philippa, Queen of Edward III. It is evident that in forming the foundation of this college he was greatly assisted by the Queen, from whom it was called Queen's College. The King also manifested his desire to promote the noble work by several benefactions which he made to the college or Hall of his Queen, as he was pleased to style it. Thus, by the united benevolence of King Edward III., Queen Philippa, and Robert Egglesfield, the plan which doubtless originated with the last, was matured, and a charter was, on 18th January, 1340, granted by the King to constitute a collegiate hall. To this hall the founder appointed a provost and twelve fellows, natives of Cumberland and Westmorland. Eight fellowships, four scholarships, and four exhibitions, confined to the province of Canterbury, have been since founded, in pursuance of the will of John Michel, of Richmond, in Surrey, who bequeathed lands in Kent and Berkshire for that purpose. The following exhibitions have been added by other benefactors: six of 45*l.* per annum, for the counties of Lancaster, Chester, and Wilts; five of 45*l.* per annum, for natives of any counties, coming from certain schools in Yorkshire, Westmorland, and Cumberland; two of 20*l.* per annum, for natives of Hampshire; four of 10*l.* per annum, for natives of Wiltshire and Gloucestershire; two of 25*l.* per annum, founded by Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, for the sons of clergymen of the diocese of Carlisle, educated at the schools of Carlisle and St. Bees, and a few others, of small value, belonging to probationary scholars. The old foundation consists of a provost, sixteen fellows, two chaplains, eight tabarders, so called from the tabard or short gown they formerly wore, with twelve probationary scholars and two clerks. Visitor, the Archbishop of York. Arms of Queen's College: Or, three eagles displayed gules. The seal of the new foundation bears an eagle regardant with wings expanded, and the dexter claw resting on a shield charged with three leopards heads and a chief embattled ermine, inscribed The Common Seal of Michels Visitors, Queen's College, Oxon.

The southern front of this college adds greatly to the fine effect of the High-street; and is principally admired as contributing to the pleasing variety of style, which is so conspicuous in the architecture of the buildings of this university. It was erected from designs by Hawksmoor, and was completed in 1759. Over the entrance in the centre of this front is a statue of Queen Caroline, under a cupola, supported by light columns, Her Majesty having contributed in 1733 1000*l.* towards the erection of the southern quadrangle, which is one hundred and forty feet by one hundred and thirty. The statues surmounting the pediments are emblematical of the sciences. The northern side of this court contains the chapel and hall. The chapel is one hundred feet by thirty, of the Corinthian order; the windows were all painted by Van Linge, in 1635, with the exception of four more ancient; the window over the altar by Price in 1717, represents the Nativity, the colours of which have greatly faded; the altar-piece is a copy by Mengs, of La Notte, Corregio's celebrated picture in the Dresden Gallery. The ceiling, painted by Sir James Thornhill, represents the Ascension.

The hall, sixty feet by thirty, is of the Doric order; the windows, of painted glass, contain portraits, arms and other devices; the portraits that adorn the walls are those of the founder, King Charles I. and his Queen, Queen Philippa and Queen Anne, Queen Caroline and Queen Charlotte, Edward the Black Prince and Henry V., Dr. Lancaster, Dr. Smith, Dr. Halton, and Bishop Barlow, John Michel, Esq., Sir Joseph Williamson, Lady Elizabeth Hastings, Addison, Tickell, Cartwright, Bishop of Chester, and Gibson, Bishop of London. In the gallery at the west end of the hall are the portraits of six queens, given to the college by George Clarke, D.C.L. Here are also the portraits of Edward III., Henry V., John Michel, Esq., Dr. Fothergill, Isaac Fuller, painted by himself, and others.

The drinking-horn of this college is remarkable, both for its antiquity and beauty, and is said to have been presented to the Society by Queen Philippa. Its peculiar elegance of form is increased by the rich silver gilt mounting, with the word Waggeni inscribed three times on each hoop; it holds two quarts.

Amongst other singular customs in this college, is that of calling the students to dinner and supper every day by the sound of a trumpet; and another, that of serving a boar's head on Christmas-day, ushered in very solemnly with the following old monkish carol.

The Boar's-head in hand bear I,
Bedeck'd with bays and rosemary;
And I pray you, my masters, be merry,
Quot estis in convivio.
Caput Apri deferro
Reddens laudes Domino.

The Boar's-head, as I understand,
Is the rarest dish in all this land,
Which thus bedeck'd with a gay garland
Let us servire cantico.
Caput Apri deferro
Reddens laudes Domino.

Our steward hath provided this
In honour of the King of Bliss;
Which on this day to be served is In Reginensis Atrio.
Caput Apri deferro
Reddens laudes Domino.

The Library, a noble room one hundred and twenty-three feet by thirty, contains a large orrery, given to the college in 1763; a cast of the Florentine boar, and two ancient portraits on glass of Henry V. and Cardinal Beaufort; there are also portraits of Charles I., Queen Charlotte, Dr. Crakanthorp, and Dr. Lancaster. In 1778, the west wing of the southern quadrangle was destroyed by an accidental fire. Toward the repairs Queen Charlotte presented 1000*l.* A custom of this college of giving to the fellows a needle and thread every new year's day, as a memorial of their founder, is merely by a rebus on his name, Aquille a needle and Fil a thread.

NEW COLLEGE. Founded in 1386.

William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, obtained the King's license to found this college in 1379, and on 5th March 1380 the foundation was laid. The building was finished in six years, and on 14th April 1386, the society made their public entrance into it with much solemnity. The body of statutes which the bishop gave to his college was a work upon which he bestowed much time and constant attention; it is considered as the best model which the founders of colleges in succeeding times had to follow, and which indeed most of them have either copied or closely imitated. The society consists of a warden, seventy fellows and scholars, ten chaplains, an organist, three clerks, a sexton, and sixteen choristers. The fellows and scholars are elected from the college at Winchester, founded by William of Wykeham whilst he was engaged in building

New College. An election is held annually at Winchester by the wardens of both colleges, two fellows of this College, the subwarden and head-master of Winchester College, to supply the vacancies which may happen in the course of the ensuing year at New College. The founder's kindred are actual fellows on their first admission, the others are scholars till the expiration of two years. The members on the foundation of this college have the privilege of being examined for degrees in their own society, and not in the public schools. Visitor, the Bishop of Winchester. Arms of the College: Argent, two chevrons sable, between three roses gules, seeded or, barbed vert, with the motto MANNERS · MAKYTH · MAN.

This college is situated in New College Lane, eastward of All Souls' College, and, as completed by the founder, consisted of a quadrangle, the north side of which contained the chapel and hall, the east side the library, and the south and west lodgings, besides cloisters, a tower, and gardens, being an edifice for extent and grandeur before unknown in the university. The elevation has all that dignity which results from proportion and harmony of parts, and had even a more noble aspect before the quadrangle was altered in 1675. On the south and west sides of the court there were originally only two stories, the usual height of all the old colleges. By the addition of a third story the building appears too high for the area of the quadrangle; and the gate-house tower, as well as the chapel and hall, of fine proportions, have lost their original elevation above the other buildings. The garden court, built after the manner of Versailles, but with an embattled parapet to correspond with the other parts of the building, is terminated by an iron pallisade and gates, said to have been brought from Canons, the once splendid seat of the Duke of Chandos.

The Hall on the northern side of the quadrangle is seventy-eight feet by thirty-five, and was forty feet in height before the modern ceiling diminished its beautiful proportions. The room is said to have been panelled at the expense of Archbishop Warham. The windows are adorned with the arms and devices of the founder and benefactors, and of eminent members of the college. Over the screen is a picture of the Shepherds at the Nativity of Christ, after Caracci, presented to the college by the Earl of Radnor. On the panelling at the upper end are the arms of the founder impaling the see of Winchester, &c.; over these are portraits of the founder, Archbishop Chicheley and William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester; there are also portraits of Lake and Kenn, Bishops of Bath and Wells, of Bisse, Bishop of Hereford, of Dr. Lowth, Bishop of London, and of Trimnell, Bishop of Winchester.

The Library on the eastern side of the quadrangle consists of two rooms seventy feet long and twenty-two broad, the interior modernized by Wyatt. The chapel of this college is one of those objects which are more particularly presented to the notice of strangers in visiting the university. The choir is one hundred feet long, thirty-five feet wide, and sixty-five feet high, approached by an ante-chapel eighty feet in length. The altar-piece, restored by Wyatt in 1793, consists of fifty niches disposed in four courses over the whole east end of the chapel, and ornamented with tabernacle work of the purest character. Immediately over the altar are five compartments of marble sculpture in alto relievo, by Westmacott, representing the Salutation, the Nativity, the Descent from the Cross, the Resurrection, and the Ascension. The painted windows are of four different æras; the windows of the ante-chapel, with the exception of the great one, are the oldest and the best, consisting of figures of patriarchs, prophets, saints, &c. The great west window contains the Nativity, with the four Cardinal and three Christian Virtues by Jervas, from designs by Sir Joshua Reynolds in 1777. The windows on the southern side of the chapel are Flemish, and contain figures of saints; those on the north side were executed by Peckett in 1765, from designs by Rebecca, representing patriarchs and prophets, Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Twelve Apostles. One of the most curious objects in this chapel is the crozier of William of Wykeham the founder, which is nearly seven feet high, of silver, gilt and enamelled. Many eminent members and several wardens of the college are interred in the ante-chapel, but most of the members are buried in the cloisters. These form the earliest example of such a collegiate appendage in the university, and the only instance excepting at Magdalen College; they enclose an area of one hundred and thirty feet by eighty-five, which was consecrated as a burial-place for the college 19th October 1400. In 1643 these cloisters were made a depôt for the King's warlike stores. In 1802 all the monuments were repaired, and since that time the spot has been more carefully preserved. The garden has also been much improved, and now presents striking views of the venerable buildings in its vicinity; in the south-eastern part is a spacious lawn near the old city wall, which is still in perfect repair, and the lawn or bowling-green is terminated by an Ionic temple, the columns of which are said to have been brought from Canons in Middlesex.

LINCOLN COLLEGE. Founded in 1427.

Richard Flemmyng, Bishop of Lincoln, founded this college in the above year, for a rector and seven fellows. But in 1479, Thomas Scot, better known by his surname Rotherham, Bishop of London, and afterwards Archbishop of York, became so considerable a benefactor as to entitle him to the denomination of second founder; he not only contributed largely towards the buildings, but he also increased the number of fellows from seven to twelve. He formed a new body of statutes for the society, in which after noticing that although Oxford was in the diocese of Lincoln, no college had yet made provision for natives of that district, he enjoined that the rector should be of the diocese of Lincoln or York, and that the fellows, with the exception of one from Wells, should also be of the same dioceses, with a preference as to those from the diocese of York to be given to natives of the parish of Rotherham. Scholarships and exhibitions have been since given by different benefactors. The foundation consists of a rector, twelve fellows, eight scholars, twelve exhibitioners, and a Bible clerk. Visitor, the Bishop of Lincoln. Arms of the college: Barry of six argent and azure, in chief three lozenges gules. Flemmyng, impaling vert, three stags trippant argent, attired or. Scot, over all, on a pale argent, the arms of the see of Lincoln, mitred proper.

This college, situated in Lincoln College Lane, in the space between All Saints church and Exeter College, preserves more than most of the collegiate edifices its original character. It consists of two quadrangles. The northern, eighty feet square, contains the hall, the library, the rector's lodgings, and the common room. The hall on the eastern side of the court, built in 1436, was repaired and panelled in 1701, chiefly by Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, whose arms are upon the screen. It contains portraits of the two founders, Sir Nath. Lloyd, Lord Keeper Williams, Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, Dr. Isham, Dr. Marshall, Dean of Gloucester, Dr. Hickes, Dr. Hutchins, Paul Hood, Rector, Judge Dolben, and Dr. Tatham. There are also several busts in the hall.

The Library on the northern side of the court was re-modelled in 1739, at the expense of Sir Nath. Lloyd, and contains portraits of the two founders, and of Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, Rector, and one of the greatest benefactors of this society. Under the library is the common room. The rector's lodgings on the southern side of the great quadrangle were built at the expense of Thomas Beckington, Bishop of Bath and Wells; upon the walls appears his rebus, a beacon upon a large cask or tun.

The inner court forms a square of seventy feet. The chapel, situated on the southern side was erected in 1631, at the expense of Dr. Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, and afterwards Archbishop of York. It is sixty-two feet by twenty-six; the ceiling, which is of cedar, contains the arms of the founders and principal benefactors. The screen, also of cedar, is finely carved. The windows, which are entirely of ancient painted glass, are very remarkable for the superior brilliancy of the colours; they are said to have been brought from Italy by Archbishop Williams in 1629, and are perhaps the finest in the university. In the eastern window are six compartments, representing subjects from the Old and New Testament: 1. The Creation of Man, and the Nativity of Christ. 2. The Israelites passing the Red Sea, and Baptism of Jesus Christ. 3. The Passover, and Institution of the Lord's Supper. 4. The Brazen Serpent in the Wilderness, and Christ on the Cross. 5. Jonah delivered from the Whale's belly, and the Resurrection. 6. Elijah in the Fiery Chariot, and the Ascension. The four windows on the northern side of the chapel contain the Twelve Prophets, and the four windows on the southern side the Twelve Apostles.

ALL SOULS' COLLEGE. Founded in 1438.

Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury, advancing in years, while he employed the chief part of his time in promoting the interest of his province, conceived the plan of founding a college, which he lived to accomplish on a very magnificent scale. Like his predecessor Wykeham, he had amassed considerable wealth, and determined to expend it in facilitating the purposes of education. The foundation stone was laid with great solemnity 10th Feb. 1437. John Druell, Archdeacon of Exeter, and Roger Keyes, both afterwards fellows of the college, were the architects; the charter was obtained of the King in 1438, and confirmed by the Pope in the following year. In the charter King Henry VI. assumed the title of founder, at the archbishop's solicitation, who appears to have paid him this compliment to secure his patronage for the institution, while the full exercise of legislative authority was reserved to Archbishop Chichele, as co-founder. According to the charter, the society was to consist of a warden and twenty fellows, with power in the warden to increase their number to forty, and to be called the Warden and College of the Souls of all the faithful deceased; an obligation being imposed on the society to pray for the good estate of Henry VI. and the archbishop, during their lives, and for their souls after their decease: also for the souls of Henry V. and the Duke of Clarence, together with those of all the dukes, earls, barons, knights, esquires, and other subjects of the Crown of England, who had fallen in the war with France, and for the souls of all the faithful deceased. After the appointment of the fellows already noticed, the archbishop ordained that they should be born in lawful wedlock, in the province of Canterbury, with a preference to the next of kin descended from his brothers Robert and William Chichele. To the society were also added chaplains, clerks, and choristers, who appear to have been included in the foundation, although they are not mentioned in the charter. The aged founder often inspected the buildings as they proceeded, and the chapel was consecrated early in 1442, but the whole college was not finished till the latter end of 1444.

A genealogical account of the families derived from Thomas Chichele, of Higham Ferrers, Northamptonshire, all whose descendants are entitled to fellowships by virtue of their consanguinity to Archbishop Chichele, the founder, was published by Benjamin Buckler, D.D., Vicar of Cumner, in Berkshire, in 1765. He also assisted his friend and contemporary, Judge Blackstone, in his researches respecting the right of fellowship; the College having shown great reluctance in admitting the claim of consanguinity. The society at present consists of a warden, forty fellows, two chaplains, and six clerks. Visitor, the Archbishop of Canterbury. Arms of the college: Or, a chevron between three cinquefoils gules.

This college is situated in the High-street, westward of Queen's College, and consists chiefly of two courts. The old quadrangle, in which is the warden's lodgings, towards the High-street, is one hundred and twenty-four feet by seventy-two, and contains a curious dial, designed by Sir Christopher Wren. The new or grand quadrangle, behind the former, erected by Hawkmoor, is one hundred and seventy-two feet by one hundred and fifty-five, and contains the library on the north, the chapel and hall on the south, the cloister on the west, and the common room and towers on the east. The hall, a very fine room, contains a large picture of the Finding of the Law, by Sir James Thornhill, and portraits of the founder and King Henry VI., of Archbishop Sheldon, Archbishop Vernon, Viscount Tracey, Dr. Isham, the Hon. and Rev. Edward Legge, D.C.L., Bishop of Oxford, Colonel Codrington, founder of the library, Bishops Jeremy Taylor, Tanner, and North, Lord Chancellors Northington and Talbot, Chief Justice Willis, Sir William Blackstone, Sir Christopher Wren, Young the poet, Linacre, Sydenham, Sir Nathaniel Lloyd, Sir John Newbolt, Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Winchester, the Hon. Charles Stewart, D.D., Bishop of Quebec, Reginald Heber, D.D., Bishop of Calcutta, Richard Vaughan, Esq., the Hon. and Rev. Richard Trevor, D.C.L., Bishop of Durham, and other eminent fellows of the college. On the 14th January a custom is observed of keeping the Mallard night, when a merry old song, "The swopping swopping mallard," is always sung. The buttery and kitchen, adjoining the hall, were built at the same time with the hall. In the buttery is a bust of Giles Bennet, Manciple, and another of Hawksmoor, architect; here is also a very curious ancient saltseller of silver-gilt, supported by an armed figure, given to the college by a descendant of the Chichele family. The library is one hundred and ninety-eight feet in length, by thirty-two feet six inches in breadth; a gallery is carried round three sides of the room, and over the cases are twenty-four busts in bronze of some of the most eminent fellows of the college, cast by Sir H. Cheere. In the centre is a planetarium, kept in motion by machinery, and a statue of Colonel Christopher Codrington, governor of the Leeward Islands, by Sir Henry Cheere. The ante-library, and other rooms at the south end, contain painted glass in the windows, supposed to be coeval with the foundation of the college; amongst the subjects are figures of bishops, saints, and fathers of the Church, Henry VI., Archbishop Chichele, Alfred and Athelstan, John of Ghent, &c. A tripod in the vestibule was found at Corinth.

The chapel on the southern side of the quadrangle is about seventy feet by thirty, with an ante-chapel of the same dimensions, separated by a screen, constructed by Sir Christopher Wren. Over the altar is the "Noli me tangere," by Raphael Mengs. Above it is the Assumption of the Founder, a fresco painting, by Sir James Thornhill. The ceiling also, which is divided into compartments, is by the same master. The windows are painted in chiaro oscuro, by Lovegrove, of Marlow, except the west window, where some beautiful old fragments are mixed with gaudy patterns, by Eginton. Beneath the western window is a marble statue of Sir William Blackstone, by Bacon.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE. Founded in 1457.

The buildings of St. John the Baptist's Hospital were granted to William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, the founder, but these being too small for the reception of the society, he resolved to enlarge them; and the valuable see which he possessed, with his own personal fortune, enabled him to carry his plans into execution. The foundation stone of the new college was laid by the President Tybard, in the presence of Robert Toly, Bishop of St. David's, 5th May, 1474, and it was completed about 1481. The founder appointed a president, forty fellows, thirty demies (scholars so called on account of their originally being entitled to half commons only), a schoolmaster, an usher, four chaplains, an organist, eight clerks, sixteen choristers, two porters, and other servants. The livings in the gift of the president and fellows are very numerous and valuable; and, in addition to the members on the foundation, there are several gentlemen commoners. Visitor, the Bishop of Winchester. Arms of the college: Lozengy ermine and sable, on a chief of the last three lilies slipped or.

This large college is more beautifully situated than any other in the university, it stands at the eastern extremity of the city, its outer side being terminated by a branch of the river Cherwell, which is crossed by Magdalen bridge at the entrance of the High-street. In point of extent, this college is surpassed only by Christchurch. The style of architecture, although inferior to that of Merton, is the most perfect of the age in which it was built. In plan, the college admits of three quadrangles or courts, the principal one being cloistered and surrounded by double sets of apartments, which give it an unusual character of loftiness and great magnificence. The extreme length of the college from north to south is five hundred and seventy feet, and from east to west three hundred and thirty feet. The entrance to the first court is by a modern Doric porch, but near the president's lodgings is the old gate-house, one of the most beautiful features of the college. The arms and devices of the founder, gracefully disposed, are the only ornaments of the archway, and the angles of the tower are strengthened by double buttresses, which terminate in slender pinnacles springing from the battlements. Above the gate are two stories, having on the front four niches, two on each side of the oriel window, containing statues of Waynflete and St. Mary Magdalen, of King Henry III. and St. John the Baptist, of good sculpture and in fine preservation. In the south-western angle of this court is a stone pulpit, whence, on the festival of St. John, a sermon was annually delivered,—a custom long discontinued. In plan the pulpit is nearly triangular, and the roof is enriched with an expanded rose radiated and mixed with the lily, admirably carved and entirely perfect.

The chapel in plan resembles the Roman letter T, the ante-chapel being a transverse aisled building of very considerable dimensions; but both this chapel and that of New College, similar in plan, are destitute of altar windows. Here the space is supplied by an altar-piece, the Judgement Day, by Fuller. Under this is a very fine picture of Christ bearing the Cross, by Moralez, a Spanish artist. The painted glass in the windows is only worthy of observation from the bad effect produced by the glare of colour. The principal window, representing the Last Judgement, was originally painted by Christopher Schwartz, and has been restored by Eginton.

A flight of steps, opened by a deeply receding arch to the cloisters, leads by double doorways to the hall, which is a grand and well proportioned room, having an oriel window on the north side near the high pace. Its extreme length, including the gallery and screen, is seventy-three feet, and width thirty feet six inches, the passage under the screen being eight feet wide. Nearly the whole of the painted glass in the hall, removed from the great room in the gate-house, had been contributed by Dr. Humphrey in 1566. It consists of arms and inscriptions in honour of the founder and other celebrated characters belonging to the college; amongst whom are Cardinals Pole and Wolsey, Archbishop Lee, Bishops Stokesley, Longland, Vesey, Oglethorpe, Downham, Bentham, Harley, Parkhurst, Mayew, Cotes, &c. The ancient arms, enwreathed with the garter, or an inscribed scroll, preserve their original brilliancy of colouring, and are disposed in the upper compartments of the windows; but the spaces beneath are occupied by tasteless productions of inferior artists. In the middle of the room is a large reading-desk, in form of an eagle with expanded wings. The screen at the lower end of the hall is carved and richly ornamented, and part of the panelling is said to have been brought from Reading Abbey; it bears a figure of King Henry VIII., various devices, and the date 1541. The abbey became one of the Royal palaces, after its dissolution, and he certainly visited it in that year. In this hall is a fine picture of St. Mary Magdalen by Guercino, and portraits of the founder, Prince Rupert, Henry Prince of Wales, Archbishop Boulter, William Freeman, D.C.L., Dr. Edward Butler, Sir Edmund Isham, Dr. Henry Hammond, Bishop Smalbroke, Bishop Fox, Bishop Warner, and Bishop Hough, Dr. Sacheverell, a fellow of this college, and a portrait of Addison;—the last doubtful.

The library, like the chapel, exhibits scarcely a trace of its original character. The open timber-framed roof has been succeeded by a low blank ceiling, and the room although of considerable extent is gloomy.

On the southern side of the chaplain's court rises a very magnificent tower, a bold and striking feature of the college, and little inferior to any in the kingdom for beautiful proportion, admirable simplicity, and picturesque effect. It was founded 9th August, 1492, by Dr. Richard Mayew, the president, and it was finished in 1498. It is situated near the eastern extremity of the south front in the High-street, and is the first grand object that meets the eye in the entrance to the University from the London road. This tower, an ancient feature in English architecture, is one hundred and forty-five feet high, and consists of four stories unequally proportioned. At every angle is an octangular turret, slender, and of equal size, excepting that towards the north-west, which incloses the staircase. The basement is plain, and the second and third stories have only a small window in three sides of each. The principal story, more lofty than the rest, exhibits in each side two beautiful windows, separated by a slender shaft, having in the upper part a figure enshrined in a handsome niche, and terminating in pinnacles less lofty and smaller than those on the angles whose shafts are panelled, but all crocketed. An elegant frieze between cornices, ornamented with sculptures, and crowned with a parapet and battlements, both perforated, completes the design*.

The great quadrangle, with its fine cloister, is formed by the chapel, hall and library, the ancient part of the president's lodgings, and the chambers of the fellows and demies. The kitchen is very ancient. This quadrangle was begun by the founder in 1473, and the south cloister was added after his death in 1490. The figures surmounting some of the side buttresses are curious, but as works of art have little merit. They are believed to have been put up in 1509, and the irregularity of the pedestals proves they were not originally contemplated. No satisfactory explanation has yet been given of the intention of these figures, some of which are heraldrical. The gate-house buttresses have angels bearing the founder's arms, and, beginning from the south-west corner, the first are a lion and pelican, probably intended to represent the King and the Church. These are under the window of the president's ancient lodgings. On the other side of the gateway are a schoolmaster, lawyer, physician, and divine, emblems of the degrees in arts, law, divinity, and medicine. These are ranged outside the library. Near them is a dunce with cap and bells, perhaps the scholar plucked. On the north side of the quadrangle are three figures, representing David's conquest over the Lion and Goliah: the next is a river-horse: the figure immediately following it represents Sobriety: and the remaining figures are Gluttony, Drunkenness, the Lucanthropos, the hyæna, panther, griffin, Anger, a dog, dragon, and deer, the mantechora, the boxers, and the lamia. The greater part of this quadrangle has very recently been rebuilt, without much deviation from its original appearance.

The new building, on the north of the great quadrangle, was founded in 1733, and was erected after a design of Edward Holdsworth, M.A. Of this building, part of a plan for rebuilding the college, it is very justly said in the observations before quoted, that "regarded as a specimen of architecture it possesses little merit, and as a retreat for the muses none."

The walks on the banks of the Cherwell belonging to this college are kept in excellent order, and command a variety of interesting objects. Addison's Walk is beautifully secluded. The grove, supposed to have been formed in the reign of Elizabeth, contains some of the largest elms in Oxford. It is mentioned by Pope as "Maudlin's learned Grove." About fifty head of deer augment its interest and beauty.

Magdalen Hall, anciently on the north side of the college, comprised the original foundation of the grammar-school. The chief part of the inner court was destroyed by an accidental fire in 1820. and in the same year it was re-founded on the site of Hertford College.

BRAZEN-NOSE COLLEGE. Founded in 1509.

This college was founded by the joint benefactions of William Smith, Bishop of Lincoln, and Sir Richard Sutton, of Prestbury in Cheshire, in that year, for a principal and twelve fellows, natives of the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry; those of the counties of Lancaster and Chester, and particularly in the parishes of Prescot and Prestbury, to be preferred. If it should happen that none of the said counties be eligible, the society to elect from the diocese of Lincoln; or if none there be found fit, from the University of Oxford. Eight fellowships have been since added; two by the will of John Williamson, Rector of St. George's, Canterbury, in 1522, which are confined to his kindred, or of John Port, of Chester; one by John Elton, als Baker, Canon of Salisbury, in 1528, with preference to his kindred and to the dioceses of Hereford and Worcester, in defect of which from the diocese of Salisbury; one by William Porter Clerk, in 1531, for the county or diocese of Hereford, or in defect of a person so qualified, for any diocese adjacent to Oxford; one in 1538 by Edward Darbie, Archdeacon of Stow, in Lincolnshire, for a graduate born in the archdeaconry, or if there be no such person, one born in the counties of Leicester, Northampton, or Oxford; one in 1538, by William Clyfton, Subdean of York, for a priest and graduate of Yorkshire or Lincolnshire alternately, or of the county of Nottingham, or University of Oxford; one in 1549, by Brian Higden, Dean of York, for Yorkshire and Lincolnshire alternately; one in 1586, by Joyce Frankland, of London, widow, for her own kindred, especially of the kindred of Trapps and Saxies, or in defect of such for any county in England. Scholarships and exhibitions have been since added at different times by various benefactors, the chief of whom are John Claymond, D.D., President of Corpus Christi College, John Lord Mordaunt, Alexander Nowel, Dean of St. Paul's, Samuel Radcliffe, D.D. and Principal of the college, Sarah Duchess Dowager of Somerset, Thomas Yate, D.D., Principal of the college, William Hulme, Esq., of Kearsley in Lancashire, William Grimbaldson, M.D., and the Most Noble George, Marquess of Buckingham. The present foundation consists of a principal and twenty fellows; there are also thirty-two scholarships and fifteen exhibitions. Visitor, the Bishop of Lincoln. Arms of the college: Argent, a chevron sable between three roses gules. Smith, impaling quarterly first and fourth, argent, a chevron between three horns stringed sable, second and third a chevron between three cross crosslets sable. Sutton, over all, on a pale argent the arms of the see of Lincoln, mitred proper.

This college, situated on the western side of Radcliffe Square, received its title from the circumstance of its standing on the ground formerly occupied by Brazen-nose Hall. The gate-house merits particular notice on account of the exceeding purity of the style and elegance of the enrichments. The building of the quadrangle was commenced in 1509, but the attic story was added about the reign of James I. In this centre of the court is a cast, called Cain and Abel, given by Dr. Clarke of All Souls. The hall has a fine bay window at the upper end, lately filled with painted glass; over the entrance are two very ancient busts of Alfred and John Scotus Erigina, the former discovered when the foundation of the college was made. Here are also portraits of the founders, King Alfred, Dean

*See "Observations on the Original Architecture of St. Mary Magdalen College, Oxford." 8vo. 1823, which contains a severe criticism on the innovations recently attempted, as well as many excellent remarks on the absurdities that have been committed in the improvement of several colleges.

Nowel, Radcliffe, Yate, Yarborough, by Romney, Cleaver, Bishop of St. Asaph, by Hoppner, Hodson, by Phillips, all principals of the college; portraits of Sarah Duchess of Somerset, Mrs. Joyce Frankland, Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, John Lord Mordaunt, Dr. Latham, and the late Marquess of Buckingham,—the two last by Jackson,—and of Burton, the author of the Anatomy of Melancholy. The lesser quadrangle of the college contains the library and chapel. The Library, rebuilt in 1780, contains a fine bust of the Right Honourable Lord Grenville, Chancellor of the University, by Nollekens. The chapel, completed in 1666, has been lately repaired; the east window, representing Christ and the Four Evangelists, after Mortimer, was executed by Pearson, in 1776. In the ante-chapel are monuments of Dr. Shippen, of Bishop Cleaver, by Bacon, of Dr. Hodson, by Manning, and of the Rev. H. Cholmondeley, Dean of Chester, by Chantrey.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE. Founded in 1516.

This college was founded by Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester and Lord Privy Seal; his design originally was to found a college for a warden and a certain number of monks and secular scholars, belonging to the priory of St. Swithin, Winchester; and the buildings for this purpose were advancing under the direction of William Vertue, mason, and Humphrey Cook, carpenter and master of the works, when the judicious advice of Hugh Oldham, Bishop of Exeter, induced the munificent founder to enlarge his plan to one of more usefulness and durability. The statutes are dated 13th February 1527, and according to them the society was to consist of a president, twenty fellows, twenty scholars, two chaplains, two clerks, and two choristers. But what conferred an almost immediate superiority of reputation on this society, was the appointment of two lectures for Greek and Latin, which obtained the praise and admiration of Erasmus and other learned men who were endeavouring to introduce a knowledge of the classics, as an essential branch of academical study. The fellows are elected from the scholars, and the last from the following dioceses and counties; five from the diocese of Winchester, of which three are to be of the county of Southampton, and two of Surrey; one from the diocese of Durham, two from the diocese of Bath and Wells, two from the diocese of Exeter, two from Lincolnshire, two from Gloucestershire, one from Wiltshire, two from Kent, one from Lancashire, one from Bedfordshire, one from Oxfordshire. To this number there have since been added four exhibitioners. Visitor, the Bishop of Winchester. Arms of the college: Azure, a pelican in her nest or, vulning her breast gules. Fox, impaling sable, a chevron or, between three owls argent, on a chief of the second, as many roses gules. Oldham, over all, on a pale argent, the arms of the see of Winchester, within the garter, and mitred all proper.

The college is situated on the western side of Oriel College. The house, erected in 1516, is enriched with a very fine bay window and three canopied niches. The quadrangle is one hundred and one feet by eighty, having in the centre a curious cylindrical dial, construeted in 1605, by Charles Turnbull, M.A., one of the fellows. On the south side of the quadrangle is a statue of the founder. The library on the same side is in its ancient state, and contains a remarkably fine collection of curious printed books and manuscripts.

The hall on the eastern side of the quadrangle is fifty feet by twenty-five in dimension; the carved work is much admired. It contains portraits of Lord Tenterden and of Thomas Burgess, Bishop of Salisbury, both scholars of this college. In 1814, when the Allied Sovereigns visited this University, the King of Prussia resided in the lodgings of the president. Here is preserved a very curious cup of silver gilt, and enamelled; it bears the initials of the founder, and the pelican his badge frequently repeated: here also is his crozier of silver, gilt, about six feet in height, and other articles of great rarity. The chapel, built by the founder, was repaired in 1676: the altar-piece is the Adoration by Rubens. The Fellows' Building was erected in 1706, on the site of the old cloisters; it is one hundred and nineteen feet in front, much admired for its chaste style of architecture; the front, of the Ionic order, is opposite to Christchurch Walk.

CHRISTCHURCH COLLEGE. Founded in 1546.

This society, founded originally by Cardinal Wolsey, Archbishop of York, on the site of the priory of St. Frideswide, was to have consisted of a dean, sub-dean, one hundred canons, ten public readers, thirteen chaplains, an organist, twelve clerks, and sixteen choristers. This imperfect foundation continued only from 1525 to 1529, when before its completion, the cardinal having fallen into disgrace was not permitted to finish an undertaking which reflects the brightest lustre upon his prosperity. King Henry VIII. seized upon and suspended the foundation, which he re-established in 1532, under the name of Henry the Eighth's College, for one dean and twelve canons. This was suppressed in 1545, and in the year following the episcopal see was removed from Oseney, and the church of St. Frideswide was constituted a cathedral by the name of Christchurch, for the maintenance of a dean, eight canons, eight chaplains, an organist, and eight clerks, together with sixty students and forty grammar scholars, a schoolmaster and usher. In the year 1561, Queen Elizabeth converted the forty grammar-boys into academical students, ordaining at the same time that the vacancies should be supplied from Westminster School. Thus one hundred scholars were established, to which one more was added in 1663, by William Thurstone, Esq. Visitor, the King. Arms of the college: Sable, on a cross engrailed argent, a lion passant gules, between four leopards' heads azure. On a chief or, a rose gules between two Cornish choughs, the shield surmounted by a cardinal's hat.

The principal front of Christchurch College, in Fish-street, is about four hundred feet in extent. Wolsey having left the very rich and elegant gate-house tower unfinished, it was completed by Sir Christopher Wren in 1682. This great architect certainly had not sufficiently studied the style of architecture with which it should have corresponded; but it gives a sort of ponderous dignity to the building, and produces a pleasing effect in the distant views of the University. The arms of benefactors are upon the groined ceiling of the arch of entrance; and over it is hung the great Tom, one of the largest bells in England, weighing seventeen thousand pounds; it is inscribed MAGNVS · THOMAS · CLVSIVS · OXONIENSIS · RENATVS · APR · 8 · 1680. Every night at ten minutes past nine it tolls one hundred and one times (the number of students), at which time the gates of most of the colleges are shut. The great quadrangle is nearly an exact square of about two hundred and sixty-three feet; it contains the hall, the lodgings of the dean, and five of the canons. In the centre of the court is a fountain, supplied with water from the spring at Hinksey. In 1638, the society designed to reduce the whole college to uniformity, but the Civil War prevented its completion, which did not take place till some years after the Restoration, and many alterations were then made without taste. The cloister in the great quadrangle being removed, the area was sunk several feet, and a terrace raised round the whole. The parapet of the building was then surrounded with balusters in the Italian style, by no means corresponding with the architecture of Wolsey, an open battlement being originally part of the plan, as seen in the old view and place, by Ralph Aggas*. In the north-east corner of the quadrangle is a statue of Bishop Fell, and over the entrance to the hall one of Cardinal Wolsey by Francis Bird. The hall, built by the founder, strikes every eye by the grandeur of its proportions and the propriety of ornament. It is one hundred and fifteen feet by forty; the lofty and highly enriched timber roof, and the beautiful oriel window at the upper end, excite general admiration, but the louvre has been very injudiciously removed from the roof. A fine collection of portraits forms an appropriate decoration to the hall. On the south side are Archbishop Potter, Dr. Friend, Bishop Trevor, by Hudson, Bishop Barrington, by Romney, Bishop Benson, Right Honourable George Grenville, Dr. Stratford, Bishop Trelawny, Archbishop Drummond, by Hudson, Right Honourable Sir J. Skynner, by Gainsborough, Bishop Carey, Archbishop Wake, the Earl of Orrery, Archbishop Robinson, by Reynolds, Lord Colchester, by Northcote, Archbishop Vernon, by Hoppner. Over the above on the same side are portraits of Bishops Godwin, Howson, Hickman, Westfayling, Heton, and Este, Archbishops Peers and Matthew, and Bishop Sanderson, by Riley; at the upper end of the hall is a bust of George IV. by Chantrey, and portraits of King Henry VIII., Cardinal Wolsey, Queen Elizabeth, Bishop Ellis, Bishop Corbet, by Vandyck, Bishop King, by Jansen, Bishop Fell, Bishop Duppa, Bishop Morley, Bishop Smallridge, Dr. Cyril Jackson, Dean of Christchurch, by Owen, Archbishop Boulter, Bishop Bradshaw, Bishop Bagot, by Hoppner, Dr. Aldrich, by Kneller, Archbishop Markham, by Reynolds, Bishop Atterbury, Bishop Conybeare, Bishop King, and Dr. Fell, Dean of Christchurch: on the north side of the hall are portraits of Lord Grenville, Chancellor of the University, by Owen, Right Honourable

* Dallaway.

George Canning, by Lawrence, Bishop Compton, Lord Bexley, by Owen, Bishop Goodenough, by Northcote, Doctors Fell, Dolben and Allestre, after Lely, Bishop Moss, Lord Mendip, by Gainsborough, Archbishop Dolben, Mr. Devisme, Bishop Clavering, Lord Auckland, by Lawrence, Bishop Hooper, Archbishop Blackburn, Bishop Moreton, Bishop King, Sir J. Dolben, Bart., and Sir J. E. Dolben, Bart.; above these are portraits of Bishops Smith, James, Wood, Griffith, Ravis, Gastrell, and Bancroft, Mr. Sergeant Skinner, A. Alsop, B.D. and Dr. Burton, Archdeacon Sprat, and Bishop Godwin; at the lower end of the hall are portraits of Archbishop Cox, Viscount Dorchester, by Vandyck, the Duke of Portland, by Romney, the Earl of Arlington, by Lely, Archbishop Gilbert, Sir Archibald Macdonald, by Romney, Bishop Smallwell, by Romney, David Earl of Mansfield, by Romney, William Earl of Mansfield, by Martin, Edward Earl of Oxford, by Kneller, Archbishop Stone, by Ramsey, Sir G. Dolben, Bart., Bishop Tanner, Dr. Busby, by Riley, Archbishop Moore, Archbishop Agar, Earl of Normanton, by Romney, Locke, Archbishop Cleaver, by Romney, Sir W. Dolben, Bart., Bishop Randolph, by Owen, Dr. Nicholl, by Reynolds, Dr. Frewin, Bishop Jackson, by Owen, Dr. Friend, by Dhall: the portraits of Dr. Coleridge, Bishop of Barbadoes, and of Dr. James, Bishop of Calcutta, have lately been presented to the society. Very near the hall is the kitchen, said to be the first part of the college which was completed, and retaining its original appearance. It contains the large gridiron, supported by four wheels. The common room under the hall contains portraits of Drs. Busby, Friend, Meoll, and Frewing, of Henry VII., Archbishop Markham, and Dean Aldrich. In the court near this part of the quadrangle is the grammar-school, where the choristers and other boys are educated; opposite to it is the anatomical theatre. Christchurch meadow is bounded on the east by the Cherwell, on the south by the Isis, on the west by a branch of the same river, and on the north by the wide walk.

The Peckwater Quadrangle derives its name from an ancient hall, which stood on the south-west corner of the present court; the property of Richard Peckwater. It was rebuilt after designs by Dr. Aldrich, in 1705, excepting the southern side, on which is the library commenced in 1716, after designs by Dr. Clarke, but was not completed until 1761. In the lower rooms of this building are the pictures, busts, &c., presented by General Guise to the college in 1765. Here are busts of General Guise, by Bacon, of Kings George I. and II. by Rysbrach, of George III. by Bacon, Dr. Friend, by Rysbrach, Archbishop Markham, by Bacon, Jun., Archbishop Robinson, by Bacon, Archbishop Boulter, Dr. Frewin, by Roubilliac, Dr. Busby, by Rysbrach, and Bishop Trevor, by Bacon. Amongst the pictures which are by the old masters is a portrait of General Guise, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and some curious paintings of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, lately presented to this society by the Hon. W. T. H. F. Strangways. The upper room contains the library; on the staircase is a statue of Locke, by Roubilliac. Canterbury Quadrangle is on the site of Canterbury Hall, granted to the college by Henry VIII. In 1775, the north and east sides were rebuilt by Wyatt, and the south side in 1783. The gateway of this court, by Wyatt in 1778, of the Doric order, is much admired for its graceful simplicity. The cathedral of the diocese is also the chapel of this college, and has been described.

TRINITY COLLEGE. Founded in 1554.

Sir Thomas Pope, of Tyttenhanger in Hertfordshire, founded this college for a president, twelve fellows, and twelve scholars, directing that the scholars who succeed to the fellowships be chosen from his manors; but if no candidates appear on the day of election, Trinity Monday, they shall be supplied from any county in England, providing that no more than two persons of the same county be fellows at the same time, except Oxfordshire, of which county five are allowed: the scholars are superannuated after nine years. There are also four exhibitions. The first given by Richard Blount of London, a descendant of the founder: the second was granted to the college by Frederic Tylney, in 1720: the third, or Unton pension, by Thomas Unton of Drayton, Shropshire, in 1693: the fourth by the Rev. Edward Cobden, D.D., Archdeacon of London, in 1764, for the superannuated scholars of Winchester School, has been augmented by the warden and fellows of that school. Visitor of the college, the Bishop of Winchester. Arms: Per pale, or and azure, on a chevron, between three griffins' heads erased, four fleurs de lis, all counterchanged.

This college, situated in the northern suburbs of the city, is enclosed by an iron palisade. In front are the chapel, hall, library, and lodgings of the president. The chapel was built principally at the expense of Dr. Bathurst, from designs by Sir Christopher Wren, and is one of the earliest specimens of Grecian architecture in Oxford; it was consecrated 11th April, 1694. The choir is seventy-five feet by thirty in dimension, and was repaired in 1828. The screen and altar-piece, of cedar, are enriched by the carving of Gibbons; and the ceiling, painted by Berchet, represents the Ascension. Sir Thomas Pope's monument was erected before 1567, by Elizabeth, his third wife, and formerly stood in the old chapel; the effigies of Sir Thomas Pope and his lady are of alabaster. Amongst the plate belonging to this chapel is an exquisitely engraved silver chalice, which belonged to St. Alban's Abbey. The original hall of this college was demolished in 1618, and the present refectory built on its site. It was repaired in 1772, and contains portraits of the founder after Holbein, Dr. Bathurst, by Sonman, and Dr. Kettell. There are also portraits of Lord North, Archbishop Sheldon, Lady Elizabeth Powlet, third wife of the founder, Pope, Earl of Downe, the Earl of Chatham, Warton, the poet laureat, Mr. Rands, Dr. Carne, and the Rev. William Derham. On St. Swithin's Day, 15th July 1556, the founder visited his college, accompanied by the Bishops of Winchester and Ely, and other eminent personages, who were entertained sumptuously in the hall; the whole expenses of which were paid by Sir Thomas Pope to the bursar on the same day. It also appears, that during his lifetime he paid all the University expenses of degrees, regencies, and determinations for the fellows and scholars. He also continued to send various articles of rich furniture for the chapel and hall, together with a quantity of valuable plate; and made considerable addition to the endowment for obits or dirges, to be sung and celebrated yearly as festivals in his college. The library is the most ancient part of the college, and has lately been repaired; the windows contain painted glass, removed from the old chapel, in good preservation: here are busts of Bennet Langton, and Dr. Lee, and a tablet in memory of Warton, by Flaxman. The original library of Durham College, on the site of which Trinity College now stands, was founded by Richard Aungerville, of Bury St. Edmunds, Bishop of Durham, about 1330, which he furnished with the best collection of books that was then in England, and wrote a treatise called "Philo-Biblon," containing rules for its management, printed at Oxford in 1599, 4to. The gardens at Trinity College are extensive; they are divided by a palisade, and are open to the public.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE. Founded in 1557.

This college was dedicated to God, the Virgin Mary, and St. John the Baptist, by Sir Thomas White, Alderman and merchant-tailor of London. It consists of a president, fifty fellows, two chaplains, an organist, five singing men, six choristers, and two sextons. All the fellows, excepting six of the founder's kindred, two from Coventry, two from Bristol, two from Reading, and one from Tunbridge schools, are elected from Merchant Tailors' School in London. Visitor of the college, the Bishop of Winchester. Arms: Gules, on a border sable eight estoiles or, on a canton ermine, a lion rampant of the second. An annulet of the third, for difference.

The front of St. John's College, towards St. Giles's-street, together with the principal part of the first court, was originally St. Bernard's College of Cistercian Monks, founded in 1437 by Archbishop Chichele. The statue of St. Bernard, in a niche in the second story of the gate-house, yet remains. The front and southern side of the court are the oldest parts of the structure, the hall not having been built till 1502, nor the chapel till 1530. The eastern side of the first court, built in 1597, is partly occupied by the president's lodgings. The outer library, which forms the south side of the second quadrangle, was erected about the same time. The east, north, and west sides of the inner quadrangle were built at the expense of Archbishop Laud, after a design by Inigo Jones. The foundation was laid in 1631, and the whole completed in 1635. The arcades of the east and west sides are supported by columns of Blechingdon marble; and in the central compartment of each of these sides is the statue of Charles I. and his Queen Henrietta Maria, by Fanelli. Besides the two quadrangles, there are other buildings on the north-east, as the common room, &c. The kitchen, and the chambers over it, was built in 1613, by Thomas Clark, the cook of the college.

The chapel on the northern side of the first quadrangle was repaired by the founder, and again altered in 1678. Beneath the altar are deposited the remains of Sir Thomas White and Archbishops Laud and Juxon; and in the inner chapel is a monument of Dr. Bailie, formerly president of the college.

The hall contains portraits of the founder, Archbishops Laud and Juxon, Bishop Buckeridge, Dr. Rawlinson, Sir William Paddy, Bishop Meaux, Captain Henry Hudson, after whom Hudson's Bay was named, Dr. Holmes and his wife, Sir John Nicoll, D.C.L., by Owen, Dr. Scott, Sir James Eyre, Dr. Woodroffe, Edward Waple, Dr. Gibbons, and of King George III. by Ramsay.

The library is on the southern side of the second quadrangle: over the entrance of the first room is a bust of Charles I.; the large window at the upper end of the room is enriched with the arms of the Merchant Tailors' Company, and various benefactors of the college, with inscriptions under them; and in a window near it, is the arms of the Archbishopric of Canterbury: here is also a fine portrait of Archbishop Laud, by Vandyck. In the inner library are portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte, by Ramsay, a bronze bust of Archbishop Laud, and a picture of St. John the Baptist, by Guercino. In a chamber attached to the common room of this society is a portrait of Dr. Marlow, by Phillips.

The gardens of this college may be considered the best specimen of modern gardening in Oxford, and present a great contrast to the formal taste which preceded the present style: the buildings of Trinity College bound the southern walks.

JESUS COLLEGE. Founded in 1571.

The principal instrument in the foundation of this college was Hugh Price, LL.D., Treasurer of St. David's, who petitioned Queen Elizabeth that she would be graciously pleased to found a college in Oxford, on which he might bestow his estate for the maintenance of certain scholars of Wales. The Queen granted a charter in 1571, and gave a religious house called Whitehall for the site, together with timber from the Royal forests of Shotover and Stowe. Dr. Price left lands for the maintenance of a principal, eight fellows, and eight scholars. It has been since increased by other benefactors, amongst whom was King Charles I., who in 1636 gave lands and tenements in trust to the University, for the maintenance of a fellow, born in the Isle of Jersey or Guernsey. The foundation at present consists of a principal, nineteen fellows, eighteen scholars, and several exhibitioners. The Earls of Pembroke are hereditary visitors of this college. Arms: Azure, three stags trippant argent.

This college, which is situated opposite to Exeter College, consists of two quadrangles; the first, built about 1625, ninety feet by seventy, contains the chapel on the north side, and the hall on the west. The inner quadrangle, one hundred feet by ninety, was chiefly built by Sir Leoline Jenkins in 1676.

The chapel, consecrated in 1621, was enlarged in 1636; the altar-piece is St. Michael, after Guido. Here are monuments of Sir Eubule Thelwall, Dr. Mansell, Sir Leoline Jenkins, Bishop Lloyd, Dr. Jonathan Edwards, Dr. William Jones, and Dr. Hoare, and of Dr. Henry Maurice.

The hall, erected in 1617, was repaired in 1818. It contains portraits of Queen Elizabeth, King Charles I. by Vandyck, King Charles II., Sir Eubule Thelwall, when a child, with his mother, Sir Leoline Jenkins, Bishop Westfaling, Bishop Thomas, Bishop Wynne, Dr. Pardo, Edward Meyrick, who left his whole estate to this college in 1713, and of John Nash, architect. The society possesses a silver gilt bowl, that will contain ten gallons, the gift of Sir Watkin Williams Wynne, in 1732; the ladle which accompanies this bowl will hold half a pint. The library, erected in 1677, contains a very curious selection of books and manuscripts; amongst the latter are those of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, the Llyfe Goch, &c. In the bursary is a good portrait of Queen Elizabeth.

WADHAM COLLEGE. Founded in 1613.

Nicholas Wadham, Esq. of Edge and Merefield, in Somersetshire, designed the foundation of this college, but did not live to carry it into execution; he bequeathed the management of it to his wife Dorothy, the daughter of Sir William Petre, Secretary of State, a great benefactor to the University. The King's license, bearing date 20th December, 1611, empowered Mrs. Wadham to found a college, consisting of a warden, sixteen fellows, and thirty scholars, graduate or not graduate, or more or less, as the statutes might prescribe. The Act of Parliament for the confirmation of Wadham College was passed on 16th August, 1612. The statutes of the foundress thus confirmed, specified the college to be for a warden, fifteen fellows, fifteen scholars, two chaplains, two clerks, with college servants. The warden was to be a native of Great Britain, Master of Arts, at least, and be incapacitated from holding his situation either if he married or was promoted to a bishopric; but the condition respecting marriage was annulled by Act of Parliament, July 1806. The fellows after completing eighteen years from the expiration of their regency are to resign their fellowships. The scholars, from whom the fellows are to be chosen, are to be three of the county of Somerset, three of Essex, and the rest of any other county in Great Britain. Dr. Wills, warden, who died in 1806, was a most munificent benefactor to the college, whom he appointed his residuary legatee. Visitor, the Bishop of Bath and Wells. Arms of the college: Gules, a chevron between three roses argent, barbed vert, Wadham, impaling gules a bend or, between two escallop shells argent, Petre.

The site of Wadham College, formerly the magnificent priory of Austin Friars, is in the northern suburbs of the city, near the parks. The entrance to the quadrangle, one hundred and thirty feet square, is by a gate-house, in a room of which building the meetings which preceded the foundation of the Royal Society were held till 1659, under the then warden Dr. John Wilkins, afterwards Bishop of Chester. The hall and chapel are on the east side of the courts. Opposite the gate-house is a porch, embellished with statues of James I., Nicholas Wadham and his lady; between the latter is an inscription, reciting various particulars respecting the foundation. The hall, eighty-two feet by thirty-five, has a raftered roof thirty-seven feet in height. In the west window are the arms and badges of King James I., and the arms of the principal benefactors to the college, in brilliant stained glass, beautifully and skilfully executed by Willement; in the oriel window are the arms of eminent persons educated at Wadham College; and in the side windows of the hall are the arms of the present fellows, also by Willement, the whole very tastefully arranged. In the hall are portraits of Nicholas and Dorothy Wadham, Sir John Strangways, John Goodridge, Lord Lovelace, Lord Camden, Admiral Blake, Sir Christopher Wren, Dr. Wilkins, Creech the poet, Lord Wyndham, Bishop Spratt, Dr. Trapp, J. Harris, author of Hermes, Arthur Onslow, King William III., King George I., Dr. Bisse, Dr. Hody, Bishop Wright, Bishop Smith, Bishop Blandford, Bishop Ironside, Dunster, Bishop Baker, Bishop Lisle, Dr. Wills, by Hoppner, Bishop Parsons, Dr. Tournay the present warden, and Dr. Lushington. In the common room, between the chapel and the hall, is a portrait of Dr. Wilkins, Bishop of Chester, who founded the Royal Society, and of Alice George, said to be one hundred and twenty years of age. The library, fifty-five feet by thirty, contains two small portraits of the founder and his lady. The chapel contains a fine east window, representing subjects from the Old and New Testament, by Bernard Van Linge; in the north windows are the Prophets, and in the south Jesus Christ and his Apostles. In the chancel is a monument of Sir John Portman, Bart., ob. 1624. In the cloisters is a portrait of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, the arms of Archbishop Lloyd, and of Montagu Bishop of Bath and Wells, in beautiful stained glass. The garden of the college is on the north side of the chapel, and beyond are the parks, fine open walks, kept up by the University.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE. Founded in 1620.

This college, originally Broadgate Hall, was founded by Thomas Tesdale, of Glympton, in Oxfordshire, and Richard Wightwick, B.D, Rector of Ilsley, in Berkshire. The foundation now consists of a master, fourteen fellows, and twenty-six scholars and exhibitioners. It obtained its name from the Earl of Pembroke, Chancellor of the University at that time. Visitor, the Chancellor of the University. Arms: Per pale azure and gules, three lions rampant argent, a chief per pale or and argent, charged on the dexter side with a rose gules, and on the sinister with a thistle vert.

This college is situated near St. Aldate's church, and consists of two small courts. It has lately been new-fronted in the ancient style. The hall, in the north-west angle of the quadrangle, has been enlarged. In the oriel window and the side windows are the arms of the founders and benefactors, by Eginton; the arms of Lord Grenville, the Chancellor of the University, occupy one compartment. The hall contains the portraits of the founders, of King Charles I., Francis Rous, Provost of Eton 1643, George Townsend 1647, Sir John Bennet, K.B, 1672, Bishop Morley 1678, Bishop Hall, Queen Anne, Simon Earl Harcourt, Dr. Sloeock 1749, Rev. James Phipps 1749, Mrs. Phipps, and Dr. Smith. At the upper end of the room is a bust of Dr. Johnson, by Baeon. The library is over the hall. The chapel, of the Ionic order, has the Resurrection, after Rubens, by Cranke, over the altar. In the master's lodgings are portraits of Archbishop Newcome, by Hamilton, Bishop Hall, and Dr. Johnson, by Reynolds.

WORCESTER COLLEGE. Founded in 1714.

This college, originally Gloucester Hall, was founded by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart., of Bentley, in Worcestershire, for a provost, six fellows, and six scholars. It has since received considerable endowments. James Finney, D.D. left by will in 1727 provision for two fellowships and two scholarships, for natives of Staffordshire. George Clarke, LL.D. left in 1734 the endowment of six fellowships and three scholarships, with a preference to the orphans of clergymen: and Sarah, daughter of Byrom Eaton, D.D., left in 1731 the foundation of seven fellowships and five scholarships, the candidates for which must be sons of clergymen of the Church of England. There are likewise two exhibitions, left by Lady Holford, in aid of exhibitions from the Charter House, and one by Mr. Kay for a native of Yorkshire. The foundation at present consists of a provost, twenty-one fellows, sixteen scholars, and three exhibitioners. Visitors, the Bishops of Oxford and Worcester, and the Vice Chancellor of the University. Arms of Worcester College: Or, two chevrons gules, between six martlets sable.

This college stands near the river and canal, at the western extremity of the city. The east front of the principal buildings, completed in 1759, comprises the hall, library, and chapel. The hall, sixty feet by thirty, contains a whole length portrait of Sir Thomas Cookes the founder, by Kneller, and portraits of Dr. Clarke, Dr. Eaton and his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Eaton, Lady Holford, and Dr. Blechynden, the first provost of the college. The chapel is of the same dimensions with the hall: it has little ornament except the ceiling, which is stuccoed in compartments of various figures. The altar-piece is a fine old painting of a magdalen. The library, a very noble room, is built upon a cloister, forming the east side of the inner court. It is one hundred and twenty feet in length, and is rich in architectural books and manuscripts. Amongst these are Inigo Jones's Palladio, with his own notes in Italian, his designs for Whitehall Palace, and several of his architectural drawings. Here also is a whole length portrait of the founder of the college, by Pine of Bath. In the common room is a portrait of Dr. Clarke, and another of Anthony Cooper, sixty years a servant of this college, by Leeming.

There are five halls in the University which are not endowed with estates as colleges are, although some of them have exhibitions for the maintenance of students. The principals receive annual rents for chambers, and the students live at their own expense. The Chancellor of the University is visitor of the halls, and has the disposal of the headships of all, excepting that of St. Edmund Hall, which is in the appointment of the provost and fellows of Queen's College. These societies, not being incorporated, have never obtained any grants of arms.

ALBAN HALL derived its name from Robert de St. Alban, who granted the tenement to the nuns of Littlemore in 1230. At the Dissolution it was given by Henry VIII. to Dr. George Owen, fellow of Merton College, and was finally transferred to the warden and fellows of that society. The front of the hall was built by Benedict Barnham, alderman of London: it adjoins Merton College on the east.

ST. EDMUND HALL, in Queen's College Lane, was purchased by William Denyse, Provost of Queen's College, and was by him bequeathed to the society in 1557. By an Act of Congregation, confirmed by the chancellor, the perpetual right of nominating the principal is vested in the college. The chapel and library, which is over the ante-chapel, were built by Stephen Penton, B.D., principal. The chapel is dedicated to St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, was canonized by Pope Innocent IV., and consecrated 7th April, 1682. Thomas Heame, M.A., the antiquary, studied in this hall.

ST. MARY HALL was formerly the rectory-house of St. Mary's Church, till the foundation of Oriel College, when the church, with all its appurtenances, being granted to the provost and fellows by King Edward II., it was made a habitation for students in 1333. This hall, which is situated a short distance northward from the college, forms a quadrangle, containing the principal's lodgings on the north, the hall and chapel on the south, and apartments for the students on the east and west. The hall contains some very fine portraits: Sir Thomas More, Charles Lord Boyle, Dr. Wilson the friend of Wilks, Dr. John Hudson 1752, Dr. William King the celebrated tory, by Worlidge, Gibbs the architect, Dr. Thomas Nowell, Dr. Rathbone and Dr. Phineas Pett, by Owen; the last has been engraved at the expense of the society,

NEW INN HALL was granted by William of Wykeham to the warden and fellows of New College in 1391. It is situated on the west side of the North Bailey, and has not had any students for many years. In the Civil War this hall was used by the King as a mint, to which the plate of the colleges was sent to be melted down and coined.

ST. MARY MAGDALEN HALL originally adjoined Magdalen College, but was transferred by Act of Parliament in 1820 to the site formerly occupied by Hertford College. The front and the buildings on the north-east, including the library, were erected from designs by Garbett, of Winchester. The society took possession of the new hall in June, 1822. In the dining-hall is a portrait of Tyndale, the translator of the Testament.

The other public buildings of the University are the public library, the schools, the theatre, museum, printing-house, physic garden, &c.

THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY was founded on the remains of that established by Humphry Duke of Gloucester, by Sir Thomas Bodley, in 1595. For the government of it he drew up the statutes, which were confirmed in convocation, and are preserved in his own hand-writing in the archives of the library. By these statutes the vice-chancellor, proctors, and the regius professors of divinity, law, medicine, Hebrew, and Greek, are appointed curators. The librarian is elected by convocation, and the office must be filled up within three days after it becomes vacant, unless the vacancy takes place in the long vacation, when three weeks are allowed. The library was originally contained in three large rooms, the plan of which was the form of the Roman letter H; to these have been added several others. Below the library is the auctarium, appropriated in 1788 to choice manuscripts and early printed books. In the library are busts of Sir Thomas Bodley and Charles I., and portraits of the founder, James, Rousse, Barlow, Lockey, Hyde, Hudson, and Bowles, all librarians; of Sir Kenelm Digby, Grotius, Erasmus, Selden, Archbishop Usher, Hicks, Wanley, Lye, Bishop Atterbury, Lord Crewe, Dean Nowell, Dean Aldrich, Junius, by Vandyck, Chaucer, Gower, the Earl of Surrey, Sir Thomas Wyatt, Sir Thomas More, &c.

THE DIVINITY SCHOOLS is a quadranglar building eastward of the Bodleian Library, three sides of the upper story forming the picture-gallery. The gate-house of this square displays each of the five orders of architecture, from the Tuscan to the Composite. This tower is the repository of the public acts and instruments of the University: the keeper of these archives is elected by convocation. There are three masters of the divinity schools, which belong to the University, and are used for examinations of candidates for degrees.

THE PICTURE GALLERY contains numerous portraits, landscapes, and pictorial subjects, regularly numbered, as well as models of ancient buildings, chiefly by Fouquet. The roof of the gallery is now undergoing reparation by Smirke: an iron roof will be substituted.

THE RADCLIFFE INFIRMARY, situated beyond St. Giles's church in the Woodstock road, is a commodious stone building erected after a design by Leadbeater. This valuable institution arose out of the united beneficence of the trustees of Dr. Radcliffe's will, and the worthy Thomas Rowney, Esq., M.P. for the city of Oxford, who gave upwards of five acres of land in 1758. It was opened for the reception of patients in 1770, and is supported by annual subscriptions and other donations.

THE ARUNDELIAN MARBLES are on the north side of the square of the divinity schools, as are also the antique marbles, given to the university by the executors of Selden. In the Moral Philosophy School are contained the statues, busts, &c., presented by the Countess of Pomfret in 1755. The inscribed marbles consisting of two hundred and fifty pieces were chiefly collected in the Levant. The Parian Chronicle, one of the most curious and interesting marbles now to be found in any museum, was purchased in Anatolia. Selden decyphered some of these inscribed marbles, which are considered to be the most genuine collection in Europe. To the Arundelian marbles additions were made by Sir George Wheeler and Mr. Dawkins, both learned travellers in the Levant, and the whole have been illustrated in the "Marmora Oxoniensia," by Dr. Chandler, printed at the Clarendon Press, in 1763.

THE SHELDONIAN THEATRE, one of the principal buildings of Oxford, was erected at the expense of Archbishop Sheldon, from designs by Sir Christopher Wren. It was founded in 1664, and completed in five years, when it was formally opened 9th July, 1669. Public meetings of the University are held in it for the annual commemoration of benefactors, and the recitation of prize compositions; occasionally for conferring degrees on distinguished personages; and sometimes concerts are performed here. The care of the building is entrusted to two curators, appointed by convocation.

The southern front of the theatre is disposed in two stories enriched with half columns and pilasters of the Corinthian order: over the entrance are the arms of Archbishop Sheldon the founder, and in niches at the extremities are statues of the Archbishop and the Duke of Ormond, by Cheere: within are portraits of the founder, George IV., by Lawrence, Emperor of Russia and King of Prussia, by Gerard, James Duke of Ormond, Sir Christopher Wren and Lord Crewe.

THE ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM, westward of the Theatre, founded by Elias Ashmole, Windsor Herald in 1679, was completed in 1682, from a design by Sir Christopher Wren: the collection is rich in manuscripts connected with heraldry, English genealogy, and antiquities; and a geological collection said to be one of the best in the kingdom. The keeper of the museum is appointed by the visitors, who are the Vice Chancellor, the Dean of Christchurch, the principal of Brazen-nose College, the Regius Professor of Medicine, and the two Proctors of the University.

THE CLARENDON PRINTING OFFICE was erected in 1711, from the profits of the sale of Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, from designs by Vanburgh. Over the entrance on the southern front is a fine statue of Lord Clarendon, placed there in 1721. Besides the rooms appropriated to the printing business, there is a handsome apartment where the heads of houses hold their meetings, and where the affairs relative to the Oxford press are conducted by a board of delegates.

THE UNIVERSITY PRINTING OFFICE was erected in 1826, from designs by Robertson. It is situated about a quarter of a mile northward of Worcester College. The front of the building, two hundred and fifty-two feet in extent, consists of a centre and two wings, united by a decorated wall of the height of one story. It is of the Corinthian order, heavy and ungraceful. The space inclosed is of very great extent, but the southern side only is finished, and contains a room two hundred feet in length, occupied by printing presses employed on bibles, testaments, and prayer-books only. Over this room are two stories containing apartments for compositors, for drying and gathering. The building on the northern side is said to be intended for printing classical and other works.

THE RADCLIFFE LIBRARY, founded in 1737, was completed in 1794. Over the door of entrance to the library from the stair-case is a portrait of the founder by Knelter, and within the library over the entrance, is a statue of Dr. Radcliffe, by Rysbrach. In the area, are two candelabra, composed of marble fragments, after the antique by Piranesi, with casts of the most celebrated of the antique statues, and marble busts of Apollo, Æsculapius, Galen, Hippocrates, Aristotle and Pliny, by Nastri, of Florence. In this library is also deposited the entire collection of the Corsi marbles; and over one of the entrances to the gallery is a bust of Gibbs, the architect, who bequeathed all his books and drawings to the library. It contains, besides, some oriental manuscripts, and is appropriated by the trustees to the reception of books in medicine and natural history. The librarian must be at least of the degree of Master of Arts, and is appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Chancellor of the University, the Bishops of London and Winchester, the two principal Secretaries of State, the two chief Justices and the Master of the Rolls, or the major part of them. On 14th June, 1814, a magnificent dinner was provided by the University in this library for his Majesty George IV., then Prince Regent, the Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, the Duke of York, the Duchess of Oldenburgh, many other royal personages, great officers of state, nobility, &c., to the number of nearly two hundred.

THE PHYSIC GARDEN, nearly opposite Magdalen College, is entered by a gateway said to have been designed by Inigo Jones. This Botanical Garden was founded by the munificence of the Earl of Danby, K.G. in 1632; and in 1728, D. W. Sherard bequeathed to the University his library and very valuable herbarium, and 3000*l.* for the endowment of a Professorship of Botany. Before this institution professors were appointed by the University; but the Sherardian Professorship is in the gift of the College of Physicians; and in 1793 a Regius Professorship was established.

The ground purchased for the site of the garden being first considerably raised to prevent its being overflowed by the river Cherwell, the walls were erected at the expense of about 5000*l.* The entrance into the garden is on the north side under a very stately gate, upon the front of which is inscribed GLORIÆ · DEI · OPT · MAX · HONORI · CAROLI · REGIS · IN · VSVM · ACAD · ET · REI · PUB · HENRICUS · COMES · DANBY · D.D · MDCXXXII. For the maintenance of the garden and of a gardener, the noble founder left by will in 1640 the impropriate rectory of Kirkdale in Yorkshire, which was afterwards settled for the same purpose by his brother and heir Sir John Danvers.

THE OBSERVATORY was founded in 1772, and was originally designed by H. Keene, but altered by Wyatt. It was erected out of funds bequeathed by Dr. Radcliffe, by the trustees to his will, and comprises a dwelling-house for the observer, apartments for observation, for an assistant observer, and for lectures; and is amply supplied with astronomical instruments.

SHROPSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Cheshire, and a detached part of Flintshire; on the east by Staffordshire; on the south by Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and part of Radnorshire; and on the west by Denbighshire and Montgomeryshire. The greatest length is nearly fifty miles, being forty miles in breadth, and one hundred and sixty miles in circumference. Shrewsbury, called by the Britons Pengwerne, was the capital of the principality of Powis, and the present county was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, inhabited by the Cornavii and Ordovices. The ancient British and Roman road Watling Street crosses the county; and the Roman stations were Bravinium at Rushbury, Mediolanum at Drayton in Hales, Rutupium at Rowton or near Wem, Sariconium at Bury Hill, Uriconium at Wroxeter, and Usacona at Red Hill. During the Saxon Heptarchy Shropshire formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia; Offa's Dyke and Watt's Dyke are earthworks of this period. This county contains one county-town, 17 market-towns, 170 parishes, 38,663 inhabited houses, and 206,153 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and in the dioceses of Hereford, Lichfield & Coventry, St. Asaph, and a detached part, Hales Owen, &c. in that of Worcester. There were formerly abbeys at Buildwas, Hales Owen, Haughmond, Lilleshall, Wenlock, Shrewsbury, and White Abbey near Alberbury; also priories at Bromfield, Chirbury, White Ladies near Boscobel, and Woodhouse near Cleobury Mortimer. The castles of its earlier lords were at Acton Burnell, Alberbury, Bridgnorth, Cause, Clun, Hopton, Ludlow, Middle Castle, Moreton Corbett, Oswestry, Red Castle, Shrewsbury, Sibdon, Stoke, Wattlesborough, and Whittington. Shropshire returns twelve members to Parliament, viz. two for Shrewsbury, two for Wenlock, two for Bridgnorth, two for Ludlow, two for Bishop's Castle, and two, Sir Rowland Hill, Bart., of Hawkestone, and John Cressett Pelham, Esq., of the Castle at Shrewsbury, for the county. By an Act of Parliament, passed in the 27th of Henry VIII. 1535, the marches or intermediate border lands between England and Wales were divided into new counties, or annexed to old counties; by this Act Shropshire was augmented. Few counties are possessed of a greater variety of soil, or are more diversified in appearance. It is divided into nearly two equal parts by the river Severn: its southern portion assumes the mountainous character of Montgomeryshire and Denbighshire, whilst the northern division approaches more nearly to a level, agreeably relieved by a few single hills and romantic valleys finely wooded. The meadows on the banks of the Severn are extremely fertile, being frequently enriched by the overflowing of that river. The whole county is in general well cultivated, yielding great quantities of grain; its southern border, producing excellent hops, is agreeably varied with fine healthy orchards. The breed of cows and sheep deserves particular notice, the former giving large quantities of rich milk, and the latter some of the finest fleeces in the kingdom. The mineral productions of the county are a vast abundance of coal, iron and lead, quarries of freestone and limestone, and pits of pipe-clay. The rivers are Bellbrook, Borebrook, Bow, Camalet, Ceriog, Clive, Clun, Coalbrook, Corve, Dee, Elfbrook, Ketley, Ledwich, Marbrook, Meolebrook, Mordabrook, Morles, Oney, Perry, Quenny, Rea, Roden, Severn, Shelbrook, Stradbrook, Teme, Tern, Vyrney, Warfe, and Warren. The Severn enters the great plain of Shropshire below Welsh Pool, and making a considerable reach abruptly to the south-east, almost encircles the town of Shrewsbury; and after passing Coalbrook Dale flows southward to Bridgnorth, Bewdley and Worcester. Below Coalbrook Dale it forms an enchanting object in two great reaches, descending to the town of Bridgnorth, built on a high cliff. The Tern rises in the northern part of the county, and at the village, which derives its name from it, receives the waters of the Strine from Newport, and winding southward unites with the Roden, and falls into the Severn near Brompton Ferry. The Roden rises also in the northern part of the county, and flowing southward joins the Tern near Walcot. The canals passing through Shropshire are those of Donnington Wood, Dudley Extension, Ellesmere, Ketley, Kington, Leominster, Montgomeryshire, Shrewsbury, Shropshire, and the Marquess of Stafford's Canal. Walcot Park, near Bishop's Castle, is the seat of the Earl of Powis, who has lately resigned the office of Lord Lieutenant of the county, now held by his eldest son Viscount Clive, who resides at Powis Castle near Welsh Pool.

1. North Bradford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cheshire, and a detached part of Flintshire; on the east by Staffordshire; on the south by South Bradford hundred; and on the west by Shrewsbury liberty, and Pimhill hundred. It is also separated into Drayton division and Whitchurch division.

Drayton Division.

ADDERLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Drayton, contains 59 houses, and 378 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 6*s.* Corbet d'Avenant, Esq., of Adderley, assumed the name of Corbet in 1783, and was created baronet 10th June, 1786; he died 31st March, 1823, sine prole, and left Adderley Hall to Richard, second son of Sir Andrew Corbet, Bart., of Acton Reynald. Shavington or Shenton Hall, about a mile and a half west from Adderley, is the seat of Earl Kilmory. The estate was purchased by Sir Robert Needham in 1506; he was sheriff of the county 32 Henry VIII., and direct ancestor of the present earl.

CHESWARDINE, 4½ miles S.W. from Drayton, on the borders of Staffordshire, contains 155 houses, and 938 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The castle here was the residence of the Strange family, to whom it was granted by Henry II.

CHILDS ERCALL, 7 miles N.W. from Newport, contains 74 houses, and 389 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy.

DRAYTON IN HALES, or Great Drayton, on the borders of Staffordshire, is partly situated in that county, 19 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, and 154 miles from London; contains 747 houses, and 3700 inhabitants. It is on the river Tern, and was the Roman station Mediolanum. Here is a market on Wednesday, and fairs on Wednesday before Palm Sunday, 19th September, and 24th October. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* The parish is in four divisions, viz. the Church Quarter, containing Great and Little Drayton, the last about a mile distant on the road to Shrewsbury; the North Quarter, containing the hamlets of Belton, Ridgewardine and Tunstall; the South Quarter, containing the hamlets of Longslow, Sutton and Woodseves; and Tirley Quarter, situated in Staffordshire, containing the hamlets of Almington, Blore, Hales and Tirley. Each quarter has a separate overseer, accountable to the acting overseer of Great Drayton. The petty sessions for Drayton division of the county are held here.

On Blore Heath in Staffordshire, about a mile from Drayton, 23rd September, 1459, was fought a desperate battle between the Houses of York and Lancaster, in which Lord Audley, the commander of Henry the Sixth's forces, was slain. A stone commemorating the spot where Lord Audley fell, stands, near a brook, in a field adjoining the road to Newcastle.

HINSTOCK, 6 miles N.W. from Newport, contains 128 houses, and 671 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 16*s.*

HODNET, 6 miles S.W. from Drayton, and 13 miles N.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 302 houses, and 1795 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of R. Heber, Esq. It is an edifice of considerable antiquity, consisting of a body and south aisle, with an octagonal tower at the west end, and contains monuments of Vernon, Heber, and Hill of Hawkestone. In the reign of Edward I. William de Hodnet held this manor by the tenure of stewardship of the castle of Montgomery, to defend the outworks with his family and servants. Sir Henry Vernon, of Hodnet, was created baronet 22nd July, 1660. Henrietta, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Vernon, died in 1752, and bequeathed the estate to her cousin Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Heber, Esq., of Marton Hall in Yorkshire, in whose family it still remains. The Rev. Reginald Heber, late Bishop of Calcutta, a clergyman of splendid abilities, was rector here. The chapelry of Weston and Wixhill under Red Castle is in this parish. Hawkestone Park, the seat of Sir Rowland Hill, Bart., M.P. for the county, about two miles westward from Hodnet, is a singularly beautiful domain. The mansion stands on the slope of a romantic eminence near the road from Shrewsbury to Whitchurch, and was erected in the reign of George I., but the wings, connected with the building by a colonnade, were afterwards added. The saloon, in the centre of the house, a lofty and well proportioned room, contains a large picture of the Siege of Namur in 1695; the five principal persons in this picture are portraits, viz. King William III., the Elector of Bavaria, John Duke of Marlborough, Count Cohorn, and Richard Hill, at that time paymaster of the army. There are also in the saloon portraits of King William and Queen Mary, Sir Thomas Hanmer, Speaker of the House of Commons, General Lumley, and Admiral Churchill. In the north wing are the chapel and library. The ceiling of the chapel is painted with a representation of Truth appealing to Time, emblematical of the Reformation. The pleasure-grounds at Hawkestone have long been the admiration of numerous visitors: on the highest point of a beautiful terrace is a column, one hundred feet high, bearing a statue of Sir Rowland Hill, the first Protestant Lord Mayor of London. The scenery includes a combination of bold and craggy rocks, hill and dale, with extensive tracts of woodland, enlivened by a sheet of water nearly two miles long. Many of the prospects are rendered more striking by the mode in which they are attained; passages have been cut through rocks, and from the subterranean darkness a powerful contrast is at once effected. The ruins of Red Castle, connected with the history of the family in the civil war, are situated on the summit of a lofty hill, covered on all sides by large trees and thick underwood. The Bury Walls, an encampment of quadrangular form, on an eminence near Hawkestone, are supposed to be Roman.

MORETON SAY, 4 miles W. from Drayton, contains 138 houses, and 762 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

NORTON IN HALES, on the borders of Staffordshire, 4 miles N. from Drayton, contains 44 houses, and 241 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

The townships of Woore, Bearston, Dorrington and Gravenhanger in this hundred are all in the parish of Mucklestone in Staffordshire.

STOKE UPON TERN, 6 miles S. from Drayton, contains 95 houses, and 541 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* In this parish are included the townships of Eaton, Ollerton and Westanswick.

Whitchurch Division.

IGHTFIELD, 4 miles S.E. from Whitchurch, contains 26 houses, and 261 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

LEE BROCKHURST, 2½ miles S.E. from Wem, on the banks of the Roden, contains 27 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

MORETON CORBET, 7 miles N.E. from Shrewsbury, on the banks of the Roden, contains 40 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* The parish includes the township of Preston Brockhurst. The old Tudor mansion of the Corbets stands upon a plain on the south side of the church. It has been deserted for Acton Reynald, but great care is taken to preserve the walls of the curious edifice. The family of Corbet have been seated in this county from the time of the Conquest, when Roger Corbet held immense possessions here under the Earl of Shrewsbury, comprising the manors of Huelbeck, Hundeslet, Actun, Ternely and Prestern. Robert, his brother, held of the same earl the manors of Ulestan, Ratlinghope, Branton, Udecote, Langedunin, Weymore, Rorenton, Middleton and Meredon. From the above Roger the descent of Sir Andrew Corbet, Bart. is twenty-two generations. Sir Vincent Corbet of Moreton was created baronet in 1641. His widow Sarah, daughter of Sir Robert Monson, was created Viscountess Corbet and Linchlade in 1679. Moreton afterwards became the property of Richard Corbet, Esq., of Shawbury Park, whose descendant Sir Andrew Corbet was created baronet 24th September 1808. Acton Reynald, the present seat of the family, is about two miles west from Moreton, and was built in 1601, but enlarged by the present baronet. It stands on an eminence commanding an extensive and agreeable view of the surrounding country. The house exhibits the characteristic style of the period in which it is said to have been originally erected, consisting of a series of gables and large mullioned windows, surmounted by clustered chimney shafts.

PREES, 5½ miles S. from Whitchurch, contains 234 houses, and 1525 inhabitants, including the township of Steel. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Dr. James Fleetwood, the loyal vicar of Prees, in the reign of Charles I., fled to the army, and did such good service for the King at the battle of Edgehill, that he was made Bishop of Worcester after the Restoration. The chapelry of Calverhall, which includes the hamlets of Williston and Millenheath; the township of Sandford, which includes Daleston, Fauls, and Mickley; and the chapelry of Whixhall, are all in this parish. Sandford Hall is the seat of Thomas Sandford, Esq.; of the same family was Francis Sandford, author of the "Genealogical History of the Kings of England."

SHAWBURY, 7 miles N.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 60 houses, and 339 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* Shawbury Park is the property of Sir Andrew Corbet, Bart. Edgebolton township, which is in this parish, includes Muckleston and Great Witchford. Little Witchford and Besford are also in this parish.

STANTON UPON HINE HEATH, 5 miles S.E. from Wem, is separated from Moreton Corbet by the river Roden, and contains 46 houses, and 273 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* It is a Norman edifice, with a large square embattled tower at the west end of later date. One of the north windows contains a few curious subjects in stained glass, viz, the Holy Trinity, the Annunciation, a mitred abbot or bishop, and the head of a saint; the whole inscribed, Willm. Heigh. Vicari. John Boydell, Alderman of London, was born at Stanton, and visited the village a short time before his death in 1804. He was a very liberal encourager of the arts, and projected the Shakspeare Gallery, with a view to promote a taste for painting and engraving. It is satisfactory to record that he derived great benefit from the effect of his exertions. The townships of Booley, Harcourt, High Hatton, and Moston are in this parish.

WEM, situated near the source of the river Roden, 10 miles N. from Shrewsbury, and 163 from London, contains 332 houses, and 1555 inhabitants, and consists of a large open street, with smaller ones branching from it. The roads from Newport to Ellesmere, and from Shrewsbury to Whitchurch, lead through it. Here is a free-school, founded and endowed by the loyal Sir Thomas Adams, Bart., born here in 1586, and Lord Mayor of London in 1641. The market is on Thursday; and fairs, 6th May, Holy Thursday, 29th June, and 22nd November. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* The manor of Wem fell to the Crown, on the attainder of Philip Earl of Arundel, in the reign of Elizabeth, and James II. conferred it upon Judge Jefferys, whom he created Lord Jefferys of Wem in 1685. On the death of his son John second Lord Jefferys, in 1703, the title became extinct. Wem parish is extensive, and contains the townships of Aston, Cotton, Horton, Lacon, Lowe and Ditches, Northwood, Soulton, Tilley and Wolverley, and the chapelries of Edstaston and Newtown. At Edstaston is a branch of the Ellesmere Canal. At Wem is the seat of Major Dickin, and near it is Loo Hall, the seat of Mrs. Elks.

WHITCHURCH, or Blanc-Minster, on the borders of Cheshire, 19 miles N. from Shrewsbury, and 163 miles from London, contains 1071 houses, and 5376 inhabitants, including the townships of Alkington, Great and Little Ash, Black Park, Broughall, Dodington, Edgeby, Hinton, Hollhurst and Chimnell, and Tilstock. Wirswall township, part of this parish, is in Cheshire. The town of Whitchurch is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of an eminence, having on its summit the church, which commands an extensive view over the surrounding country. The market is on Friday; and the fairs Whit Monday, and October 28th. By the Ellesmere Canal, a branch of which comes up to the town, a communication is opened with Shrewsbury and Chester. Races are held in the vicinity of the town, and the petty sessions for Whitchurch division are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Alkmond, is a rectory, value 44*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

2. South Bradford Hundred

Is bounded by North Bradford hundred on the north; by Staffordshire and Brimstree hundred on the east; by Condover hundred and Wenlock liberty on the south; and by Shrewsbury liberty on the east. It is separated also into Newport and Wellington divisions.

Newport Division.

GREAT BOLAS, on the river Tern, 6 miles W. from Newport, contains 33 houses, and 274 inhabitants, including the township of Meeson. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

CHETWYND, on the borders of Staffordshire, 1½ mile north from Newport, contains 91 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* Chetwynd Park is the seat of T. Borough, Esq.

EDGMOND, 2 miles W. from Newport, contains 188 houses, and 1048 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 46*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* The townships of Cherrington and Chetwynd Aston, and the chapelries of Church Aston and Tibberton, are all in this parish. Cherrington Brook falls into the Tern, near Great Bolas.

KINNERSLEY, 4 miles W. from Newport, contains 48 houses, and 253 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

LILLESHALL, 2 miles S. from Newport, contains 519 houses, and 3143 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* Richard Beaumeys, Dean of St. Alkmonds, Shrewsbury, to which church this estate belonged, about 1145 surrendered it up, with the consent of Pope Eugenius and King Stephen, to canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, who in the woods here built an abbey to the honour of the Blessed Virgin. On account of the situation of this monastery on the Watling Street, the monks are said to have been impoverished by the continual influx of travellers and guests. By the liberal benefactions of the founder and other pious persons, it was, before the Dissolution, endowed with lands of the yearly value of 327*l.* 10*s.*, and was granted, 35 Henry VIII., to James Leveson, in which family it remained till Frances, daughter and heiress of Sir John Leveson of Lilleshall, married Sir Thomas Gower, Bart., ancestor of the Marquess of Stafford, K.G., its present possessor. Catherine, daughter of Alice, Duchess Dudley, widow of Sir Richard Leveson, K.B., of Trentham, a great benefactor to this town, was buried at Lilleshall in 1673. There are some remains of the abbey church, of Anglo-Norman architecture, in a sequestered situation, partly surrounded with wood; the boundary walls of the precinct may be traced to a considerable distance beyond the ruins of the church, which are extensive. The building was cruciform, and had probably two towers, one at the east and one at the west end; some of the tracery of the large east window remains. The western doorway is a deeply recessed arch, and the southern entrance is highly enriched. The walls of the refectory form part of a farm-house, the farm-yard being the area of the cloister, attached to the south side of the church. The stalls of the choir were at the time of the Dissolution removed to the collegiate church of Wolverhampton, where part of them now remain. Lilleshall is the seat and residence of Earl Gower, who has lately erected a mansion in the Tudor style of architecture from designs by Sir Jeffery Wyattville, R.A. The Donnington Wood Canal extends from the Iron Works here to Pave Lane.

LONGDON UPON TERN, 7 miles E. from Shrewsbury, contains 14 houses, and 95 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The Shrewsbury Canal passes over the valley of the Tern near this village, for a distance of sixty-two yards, in an aqueduct of cast iron, the bolts and nuts only being of wrought iron; an experiment here first tried.

LONGFORD, 1 mile W. from Newport, contains 39 houses, and 234 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

NEWPORT, situated on the river Strine, 17 miles E. from Shrewsbury, and 142 from London, contains 478 houses, and 2343 inhabitants. The town has been much improved by the trade caused by the Donnington Wood Canal, which joins that of Shrewsbury and Shropshire, the whole line abounding with mines of iron and coal. Here is a market on Saturday; and fairs on the eve of Palm Sunday, 28th May, 27th July, 25th September, and 10th December. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Crown. It was formerly collegiate. Sir Thomas Draper in 1441 had license from King Henry VI. to found here a college, consisting of a warden and four secular canons. The side aisles of this building have been rebuilt in a debased style, utterly destructive of its architectural character. The free-school is well endowed by the beneficence of William Adams, haberdasher of London; it has a library, with houses for the master and usher, to each of which an acre of ground is attached. Two almshouses were also founded by the same person, who gave likewise 500*l.* towards the erection of a town house: the petty sessions for Newport division are held here.

The hamlet of Woodcote, 2½ miles S. from Newport, is in the parish of Sheriff Hales in Staffordshire.

Wellington Division.

ATCHAM, or Attingham, on the banks of the Severn, 4 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 86 houses, and 489 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Longner Hall is the seat of Robert Burton, Esq. William Burton, an antiquary of the 17th century, was the son of William Burton, Esq. of Atcham; he wrote "A Commentary on Antoninus's Itinerary or Journey of the Roman Empire, so far as it concerneth Britain;" which procured him from his contemporaries the character of the best topographer since the time of Camden. It was published after his death, at London 1658, in folio. Attingham Hall, the seat of Lord Berwick, is a noble edifice, designed by Stuart, consisting of a centre adorned with a portico of the composite order, and two wings connected with the main building by corridors. In the picture-gallery, erected by the present nobleman, is a curious model of Mount Vesuvius, upon a large scale, made of the materials of the mountain by the late tasteful traveller Dr. Clarke: it is considered to be superior in accuracy of outline and justness of proportion to any model ever produced. The situation of this mansion is peculiarly fine, the river Tern gliding in front and uniting itself with the Severn within view. The park and pleasure-grounds were improved by Repton, who cut a new channel for the river Tern, the banks of which are adorned by the most beautiful plantations. The span of the arch of the new Tern bridge is one hundred feet. The paternal name of the branch of the Hill family of Attingham was Harwood. Thomas Hill, Esq., of Tern Hall, as this seat was originally called, assumed the name of Hill in right of his mother Margaret, daughter of Rowland Hill, Esq. of Hawkestone; he was M.P. for Shrewsbury, and married Susanna Maria, daughter and heiress of William Noel, Esq., Judge of the Common Pleas: his son Noel Hill, Esq., M.P. for Shropshire, was created Lord Berwick of Attingham, 19th May, 1784.

BUILDWAS, on the banks of the Severn, 3 miles N. from Wenlock, contains 52 houses, and 240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy. An elegant iron bridge here crosses the Severn, erected on the principle of the celebrated bridge at Schaffhausen in Switzerland, the outer ribs rising to the top of the parapet, and being connected with the lower ones by means of dove-tailed king-posts. The arch spans 130 feet, and rises 24 feet. It was erected in 1796, from a design by Thomas Telford. Roger de Clinton, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, founded a Cistercian abbey here, in honour of St. Mary and St. Chad, in 1135. Twelve monks at the time of its suppression were endowed with 129*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, when the site, with all the lands belonging to the monastery in Shropshire, Staffordshire and Derbyshire, were granted to Edward Grey, Lord Powis, who married Anne, daughter of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk. The abbey church is a cruciform building, having in the centre a massive tower. The magnificent remains of ivy-mantled walls, pillars, and arches, present a fine contrast to the lively verdure which surrounds them, backed by richly wooded banks. It is situated amidst a tract of meadows, little elevated above the banks of the Severn, which glides almost close beneath the walls, environed on the north, south and east by gentle eminences, generally covered with wood, which bound the narrow fertile vale, and in some parts approach the precinct. A more delightful and characteristic spot for conventual retirement, combining seclusion with comfort, and healthfulness with picturesque beauty, can scarcely be imagined. The chapter-house, nearly entire, is 41 feet by 31, of Anglo-Norman architecture, coeval with the rest of the venerable ruin. It has a groined roof springing from two slender pillars on each side, which divide it into three aisles. The Severn after passing the abbey sinks at once into Coalbrook Dale. West Coppice near Buildwas is the residence of Miss Smitheman.

GREAT DAWLEY, 4 miles W. from Shiffnall, contains 996 houses, and 5147 inhabitants, including the townships of Little Dawley and Malins Lee. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy.

EATON CONSTANTINE, 8 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, and 4 miles N. from Wenlock, contains 54 houses, and 251 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

HIGH ERCALL, or Ercall Magna, 5 miles N.W. from Wellington, contains 341 houses, and 1952 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* High Ercall was the seat of Sir Richard Newport, whom King Charles I. created Lord Newport of High Ercall, 14th October, 1642: his son, Francis, Lord Newport, was Comptroller and Treasurer of the Household to Charles II., and was created Earl of Bradford, a title derived from the name of the hundred, by William III., 11th May, 1694.

EYTON UPON THE WILD MOORS, 2 miles N. from Wellington, contains 74 houses, and 390 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

LEIGHTON, 3 miles N. from Wenlock, and 9 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 75 houses, and 375 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry.

PRESTON UPON THE WILD MOORS, 3 miles N.E. from Wellington, contains 50 houses, and 209 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 3*l.* Near the village is the Shrewsbury Canal.

RODDINGTON, which derives its name from its situation on the Roden, 4 miles N.W. from Wellington, contains 88 houses, and 445 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Shrewsbury Canal crosses the river Roden at this village.

STIRCHLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Shiffnall, and 1 mile N. from Madeley, contains 38 houses, and 172 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*

UFFINGTON, 2 miles E. from Shrewsbury, contains 25 houses, and 139 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy.

GREAT UPTON, 4 miles E. from Shrewsbury, contains 101 houses, and 667 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 12*l.*

Haughmond demesne is extra-parochial: the abbey here was founded in 1100 for canons regular of St. Augustine, by William Fitz Alan of Clun, and dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist. At the Dissolution the revenues amounted to 294*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* The remains of Haughmond Abbey are very interesting, standing on a rising ground backed by immense woods, and commanding a most rich and extensive view over the great plain of Shrewsbury, including the town and the ornamental grounds of Sundorne Castle, within which they are situated. Of the abbey church the nave only remains, but the chapter-house is entire. Southward of the chapter-house are the remains of the refectory, and beyond it a large hall, on the north side of which is a curious fire-place: this apartment communicates with another about the same size, which appears to have been formerly divided into two, and above was evidently an upper story; this range of building is supposed to have been the abbot's lodgings. In the chapter-house are two monumental stones, with inscriptions on the edges, which have been assigned to John Fitz Alan, great grandson of the founder, who died in 1270, and Isabel his wife, daughter of Roger Mortimer of Wigmore.

Sundorne Castle, the seat of Mrs. Corbet, is a very large and handsome mansion, adorned with battlements and turrets; the entrance porch opens to a hall 50 feet long, with a staircase of carved oak. The dining parlour, 40 feet by 28, has an enriched ceiling, and contains several family portraits. The drawing-room contains a remarkably fine antique statue of Venus; and amongst the pictures is the original design for the altar-piece at Antwerp, by Rubens, and the Holy Family, by Raphael, a duplicate of his celebrated picture. In the library is an oriel window, containing some very fine ancient stained glass. This apartment opens upon a cloister leading to the domestic chapel. Within the grounds is Haughmond Hill, where Earl Douglas was taken prisoner on his flight from the Battle of Shrewsbury in 1403, his horse falling when descending the hill: the surrounding country is very fertile, and remarkably well cultivated. The Shrewsbury Canal about two miles westward of this village enters a tunnel nine hundred and seventy yards in length, and passes under Haughmond Hill to Pimley, crossing the valley in an aqueduct and embankment.

UPTON WATERS, 6 miles N. from Wellington, contains 31 houses, and 165 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* It is situated on the river Tern, whence the addition of Waters to the name.

WELLINGTON, 12 miles E. from Shrewsbury, and 142 from London, contains 1700 houses, and 8390 inhabitants. It consists of several irregular streets, and has a market on Thursday, and fairs, 29th March, 22nd June, and 17th November. The town is governed by two bailiffs; and the petty sessions for Wellington division are held here. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 5*s.*: it is a modern structure. King Charles I. on his way to Shrewsbury, on the 20th September 1642, passed through this town; and having mustered his forces he here issued a proclamation, and made a solemn protest to defend the established religion, govern by law, and preserve the liberty of the subject. The neighbourhood of Wellington abounds with mines of coal and iron, and quarries of limestone; the furnaces for smelting the ore are wrought by steam-engines, some of the largest engines in England. The manufactures consist of nails and other hardware.

At Watling Street are remains of the finest and most extensive Roman road in the kingdom, the Via ducta ad Guethelingas, from Sandwich to Carnarvon, which enters this county at Boninghall. Near Watling Street, on the south side, is the Wrekin, which rises 1090 feet above the Severn, and presents a sublime object in the landscape. From its summit is a most interesting panoramic view of dales and woods, beautifully interspersed with cultivated grounds, and skirted with a bold outline of hills. Here are traces of a British camp, consisting of two trenches and two ramparts, one considerably elevated above the other. The lower or outward trench is more than a mile in circumference: both are entered by a narrow opening, guarded by a mound of earth on each side. Its situation is bleak, only calculated to suit the hardihood of an ancient Briton, and might afford protection to 20,000 men. One mile westward of Wellington is Orleton, an ancient structure, the seat of William Cludder, Esq.: it was formerly inclosed with walls and surrounded by a moat, but is now encircled by a noble lawn stocked with venerable oaks.

At Admaston, 1½ mile N.W. from Wellington, are two mineral springs, one similar in property to that of Tunbridge, and the other resembling the Harrogate Spa.

WITHINGTON, 6 miles E. from Shrewsbury, contains 36 houses, and 179 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The Shrewsbury Canal passes this village to Roddington, where it crosses the river Roden.

WOMBRIDGE, 3 miles E. from Wellington, contains 361 houses, and 1860 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Leonard, is a curacy. A priory of canons regular of St. Augustine was founded here in the reign of Henry I. by William Fitz Alan of Clun. The revenues at the Dissolution were valued at 72*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and the site of the monastery was granted to James Leveson in 1539. Southward of the village are immense coal-pits.

At Ketley, a mile westward, are very capital iron-works. A canal, which is private property, commences at Oaken Gates, and proceeds to the iron-works, being 1½ mile in length, with a fall of 67 feet. This is very ingeniously managed by a small lock of one foot lift, and an inclined plane of 66 feet perpendicular height, the laden boats drawing up the empty ones; without this contrivance there must have been seven or eight locks, with an immense loss of water, which is so valuable here, that the water employed in the single lock is pumped from a well into the higher level by a steam-engine. The principal use of this canal is to convey coal, iron-stone, and other raw materials to the Ketley iron-works.

WROCKWARDINE, 2 miles W. from Wellington, contains 422 houses, and 2240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WROXETER, on the banks of the Severn, 6 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 112 houses, and 659 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 8*s.* Wroxeter was the Uriconium of the Romans, built to defend the passage of the Severn, the river being more easily fordable here than in any other place. Wrekin Cester, whence its modern appellation is derived, was the Anglo-Saxon name of this ancient town upon the Watling Street. Here is a fragment of Roman wall nearly eighty feet in length, and above twenty feet high; and Roman coins are often ploughed up, chiefly of the lower empire, called here dinders, perhaps a corruption of denarii. Several urns have been discovered three or four feet below the surface of the earth, together with tessellated pavements and sepulchral stones; two of the latter are preserved in the library of the Free School at Shrewsbury, and another is placed against the vicarage house. An account of the Roman Baths here is printed in the 9th vol. of the Archæologia. At Eyton in this parish, Edward Lord Herbert of Chirbury was born in 1583. Part of the ancient mansion of the Newports is still remaining.

3. Brimstree Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by Staffordshire; on the south by Stottesden hundred; and on the west by South Bradford hundred and Wenlock liberty. It is locally separated into the Hales Owen and Shiffnall divisions.

Hales Owen Division.

CLAVERLEY, 5 miles E. from Bridgnorth, contains 254 houses, and 1305 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. It is an interesting edifice, probably built by one of the deans of Bridgnorth in the reign of Richard II. A chapel on the south, belonging to the Gatacre family, is supposed to have been added about thirty years afterwards, in the same style of architecture. A chapel on the north side, built by the Spicer family, descended through the Brooks and Astleys to its present proprietor, Thomas Astley Crowther, Esq. The old church was repaired with great taste in 1819. Facing the southern entrance into the churchyard is an ancient stone cross on a graduated base; the shaft is plain, but is surmounted by canopies and niches. Gatacre Hall, an ancient stone edifice, and the most interesting structure in this part of the county, was pulled down by the late Edward Gatacre, who erected on its site a plain brick mansion, now the residence of Colonel Gatacre. Chicknell, in this parish, is the seat of Edward Taylor, Esq.

HALES OWEN, 3 miles S. from Dudley, and 117 from London, is partly in Worcestershire, being situated 13 miles from the borders of this county, in a detached portion of this hundred, inclosed by Worcestershire and Staffordshire. It contains 1472 houses, and 8187 inhabitants, and is an ancient town, governed by two bailiffs, a constable, &c., and has a market on Monday, and fairs on Easter Monday, and Whit Monday. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* It is a spacious and venerable structure, consisting of a nave with its lateral aisles, a central tower surmounted by a spire, and a large chancel. The entrance at the western end, as well as that upon the south, is by an Anglo-Norman arch. A great portion of the building is evidently of very early structure; the pillars, of the simplest form, support arches without mouldings,—a proof of antiquity. The font is undoubtedly very ancient, being of sufficient magnitude for immersion,—a form of baptism which prevailed until the Reformation. It is elevated on a broad basement; upon this, in the centre, is a circular pedestal, and four short thick columns supporting the basin itself, which is octagonal; the sides ornamented with figures boldly sculptured, now much mutilated. In the chancel is a mural monument to the memory of the poet Shenstone, who died 11th February 1763, æt. 48. He was interred in the churchyard, where a slab covers his remains, and whence is a very fine view of the Leasowes, raised to celebrity by his taste, and where he long resided. In the town is a free grammar-school, endowed with lands to the amount of 250*l.*, the mastership of which is in the gift of twenty feoffees, and must be held by a graduate of one of the universities. King John, in 1214, gave the manor and advowson of the church to Peter de Rupibus, Bishop of Winchester, for the endowment of an abbey for canons of the Præmonstratensian Order, which seems to have been completed at the charge of the Crown, although the bishops of Winchester had the patronage. It was possessed, at the Dissolution, of yearly revenues to the amount of 337*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, when the site and most of the lands were granted to Sir John Dudley. The remains are situated about half a mile south of the town. The church when entire must have been a stately edifice.

The chancel was paved with painted tiles, many of which are preserved at the abbey-house, a part of the abbot's residence, now inhabited by a farmer. The arms of the abbey were azure, a chevron argent, between three fleurs de lis or; and the chapter seal, in the reign of Henry IV., bore a representation of the Blessed Virgin, in a sitting posture, with the infant Christ on her knee. St. Kenelm's Chapel, on the south-east side of Clent Hill in this parish, was erected on the spot where that saint's body was found; he was the only son of Kenulf, King of Mercia. The tower is elegant, and was erected about the reign of Henry III. The Dudley Extension Canal, on the east side of the town, at Combes Wood, near here, enters Lapal tunnel, nearly two miles in length, and shortly after joins the Worcester and Birmingham Canal. The Leasowes, the seat of John Atwood, Esq., was the birth-place of William Shenstone in 1714, and is indebted for much of its classical elegance to the enlightened taste of the poet, who spent the latter part of his life in the embellishment of his favourite retirement. Landscape gardening was then not known in England; and the Leasowes, under his direction, presented the first model in the improved mode of laying out grounds now universally adopted. The disposition of the various walks, rustic seats, and peculiar situations, affords numberless picturesque and beautiful views over the surrounding country, which is extremely diversified and romantic. In many parts are to be found numerous inscriptions from the elegant pen of the poet, either applicable to the situation, or tributes of respect to some friend, amongst which an ornamented urn, inscribed to the memory of Miss Dolman, stands at the end of the Lover's Walk. About the year 1775 Edward Home, Esq. purchased the Leasowes, and erected the present house, which is adapted to the native simplicity of the spot. He was sheriff of this county in 1780.

WORFIELD, 3¼ miles N.E. from Bridgnorth, on the Worf river, contains 315 houses, and 1582 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 15*s.* Burcott, Alscote, Winscote, Oldington and Rowley, are all in this parish.

Shiffnall Division.

ALBRIGHTON, 6 miles S.E. from Shiffnall, on the borders of Staffordshire, in a flat situation, but surrounded by a beautiful and rich country, contains 198 houses, and 968 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 10*s.*, in the alternate gift of the Haberdashers' Company and Christ's Hospital, London. It is an ancient edifice, and contains a monument to Sir John Talbot of 1555, with his effigies, and that of his lady Frances, daughter of John Giffard of Chillington.

BONINGALE, or Boninghall, 7 miles S.E. from Shiffnall, contains 30 houses, and 160 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Neach Hall is the seat of —— Bishton, Esq.; and Hatton, of G. Plowden, Esq. Boningale is upon the Watling Street, now the Parliamentary and mail-coach road to Holyhead, which enters the county at this point near the Summer-house: it has been reconstructed, and through Cosford brook dingle, two miles distant, has been much improved.

DONINGTON, 5 miles S.E. from Shiffnall, contains 67 houses, and 330 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Boscobel, adjoining this parish, is extra-parochial, having belonged to a priory of Cistercian Nuns or White Ladies, about three-quarters of a mile distant. Part of the church of the monastery, an Anglo-Norman edifice, with the gate-house, still remain in a beautifully sequestered situation. Boscobel House, originally a lodge for a forester, with accommodations for a hunting party, is one of those half-timbered picturesque buildings common in this county, and is celebrated as the asylum of Charles II., after his defeat at Worcester in 1651. The King left Worcester at six o'clock in the afternoon of the 3rd of September, and without halting travelled about twenty-six miles in company with fifty or sixty of his friends. To provide for his safety, he thought it best to separate himself from his companions, and left them without communicating his intentions to any one. By the Earl of Derby's directions he came to Boscobel, then inhabited by Thomas Penderell, a farmer. To him Charles intrusted himself. The man had dignity of sentiment much above his condition; and although death was denounced against all who concealed the King, and a great reward promised to any one who should betray him, he professed and maintained unshaken fidelity. Penderell took the assistance of his four brothers, equally honourable with himself, and having clothed the King in a garb like their own, they led him into the neighbouring wood, put a bill into his hand, and employed themselves in cutting faggots. In the nights he lay upon straw in the house, and fed on such fare as it afforded. For a better concealment he mounted upon an oak, where he sheltered himself amongst the leaves and branches for twenty-four hours. He saw several soldiers pass by, all of them intent in search of the King, and some expressing, in his hearing, their earnest wishes of seizing him. The Royal Oak, which has been ever since regarded with veneration, stands near the middle of a large field adjoining the garden; the present tree, a very fine one, is said to have originated from an acorn of the old oak. It is inclosed by a wall, rebuilt in 1787 by Basil and Jane Fitz Herbert, according to a Latin inscription on a brass plate affixed to it. In the middle of a large field, between Boscobel and White Ladies' Priory, on a mount, is a clump of ash-trees, whence is an extensive prospect of the Wrekin, the river Severn, and the Welsh Mountains. The whole estate is the property of Thomas Fitz Herbert, Esq., of Swinnerton in Staffordshire. Humphreyston, in this parish, a large half-timbered edifice, is moated; in 1559 it was occupied by William Humphreyston, Esq., and was latterly the property of the Colemore family.

KEMBERTON, 3 miles S.W. from Shiffnall, contains 48 houses, and 260 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*

RYTON, 4 miles S. from Shiffnall on Cosford brook, at its junction with the Worf, contains 35 houses, and 131 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*

SHIFFNALL, on the river Worf, 18 miles E. from Shrewsbury, and 135 from London, contains 290 houses, and 1463 inhabitants. The town consists principally of a street, formed by the road from Wolverhampton to Shrewsbury. It has a market on Friday, and fairs August 5th and November 22nd. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Hatton and Woodside townships, and the chapelry of Prior's Leigh, with Oakengale, are all in this parish. At Prior's Leigh and Knowles' Bank very considerable variations in the road to Holyhead were made under the direction of Parliamentary commissioners. Aston Hall is the seat of J. Moultrie, Esq.

STOCKTON, on the Severn, 4½ miles N. from Bridgnorth, contains 79 houses, and 500 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Thomas Whitmore, Esq. of Apley Park. Apley, situated in the south of Stockton, extending along the banks of the river, was anciently the inheritance of the Charltons. Alan de Charlton in 1317 obtained a charter of free warren in his demesne, and procured a licence from King Edward II. to castellate his house here. The lordship, together with the parish of Stockton and the advowson of the church, came into possession of the family of Whitmore in the latter end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, or beginning of James I., by purchase. Sir Thomas Whitmore of Apley was created baronet 28th June 1641. The mansion, built in the pointed style of architecture on the site of the old Hall House, is of fine white Grinshill stone, with polygonal turrets at the angles, and a groined porch of three arches at the entrance on the eastern front. The southern front has in the centre a lofty square tower, and on the north is the domestic chapel; the house is very large, and is inclosed by a dwarf wall entered by iron gates. The grounds are adorned by woods of great extent and beauty; and the river Severn, which bounds the park, forms a conspicuous and interesting object in the views. The terrace at Apley, above a mile in length, is one of the most remarkable spots in the kingdom, rising with hanging woods to a great height above the river, and wide enough for six carriages to pass abreast; having on one side a prospect of the course of the Severn for miles, as it emerges from Coalbrook Dale down to Bridgenorth Bridge on the south; the Wrekin, ten miles distant, bounding the view westward. Ewdness is the seat of John Barnfield, Esq.

SUTTON MADDOCK, 6 miles N. from Bridgnorth, and about the same distance S. from Shiffnall, contains 78 houses, and 417 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*

TONG, 4 miles S.E. from Shiffnall, contains 100 houses, and 536 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is now a curacy. It was built by Dame Isabel, relict of Sir Fulk Pembridge, in 1411, who founded a college for a warden, four chaplains, and two clerks, and endowed it with lands. The site of this college, with most of the estates belonging to the same, was granted in 1547 to Sir Richard Manners. The church contains monuments of the families of Pembridge, Vernon, Stanley, Harries, Pierrepoint, Middleton, Mazarune, and an elegant monument to G. Durant, Esq. by Westmacott. A chantry, erected by Sir Henry Vernon, has a pendant stone roof. Tong Castle, the seat of George Durant, Esq., was rebuilt by the late General Durant, descended from a family seated at Barcheston, Warwickshire, in the reign of Edward IV., the senior branch of which is now seated at Chateau Veregni near Caen in Normandy. The castle stands in a fine, level, well-wooded country, watered by a winding river, which flows through the grounds and passes close to the castle on the northern side. On the east is the carriage front, 180 feet in extent, built of reddish coloured stone, in what may be called the castellated style, but without any pretensions to architectural taste or propriety. In front of the castle are two brass cannon, bearing the arms of Spain, taken from the wreck of a vessel that formed part of the celebrated Spanish Armada. In the house is a very splendid collection of pictures by the old masters.

4. Chirbury Hundred,

On the western side of the county, is bounded on the north and east by Ford hundred; and on the south and west by Montgomeryshire.

CHIRBURY, 8 miles N.W. from Bishop's Castle, and 3 miles E. from Montgomery, contains 259 houses, and 1442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Shrewsbury. It belonged to a priory of regular canons of St. Augustin, originally founded at Snede by Robert de Boulers, but was removed here before the 11th of Henry III., and had lands value 87*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* per annum. At the Dissolution the site was granted to Edward Hopton. The western tower and nave of the original church remain. Sir Edward Herbert, K.B., one of the greatest ornaments of the learned peerage, was by Charles I. created Lord Herbert of Chirbury 7th May 1629. His "Life and Reign of Henry VIII.," published after his death in 1649, is much esteemed. This title becoming extinct in 1691, was revived in the person of Henry Herbert, his relative, created Lord Herbert of Chirbury by William III. in 1694, which also proved extinct in 1738. Henry Arthur, Earl Powis, in 1749 was created Lord Herbert of Chirbury; a title which once more became extinct in 1801, and was revived in his descendant, the present Earl of Powis, who, in addition to his other titles, is Lord Herbert of Chirbury, so created 12th May, 1804. About a mile west from Chirbury is Offa's Dyke, commonly called the Devil's Ditch. Near it is Marrington Hall, the seat of Mrs. Davis.

SHELVE, or Sheve, 7½ miles N. from Bishop's Castle, contains 9 houses, and 55 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

WORTHEN, 9 miles N.E. from Montgomery, and 6 miles from Chirbury, contains 108 houses, and 708 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The parish is divided into four quarters, and is partly in Montgomeryshire. Worthen quarter includes Brockton, Aston-Rogers, Aston Pigott, and Nether Heath. Bing Weston quarter includes Beachfield, Walton, and Rewin's Farm. Bromblow quarter is said to have been the birth-place of Sir Thomas Bromley, Chancellor in the reign of Elizabeth. Upper Heath quarter is on the borders of Huckstow Forest.

The township of Brompton, with Riston, is in the parish of Church Stoke, Montgomeryshire; and the township of Mucklewick, also in this hundred, is in the parish of Hyssington in Montgomeryshire.

5. Condover Hundred,

In the centre of the county, is bounded on the north by Shrewsbury liberty; on the east by South Bradford hundred and Winlock liberty; on the south by Munslow hundred; and on the east by Ford hundred.

ACTON BURNELL, 8 miles S. from Shrewsbury, and 7 miles N.W. from Wenlock, contains 45 houses, and 230 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.* Acton Burnell is celebrated for the remains of an ancient castle, founded by Robert Burnell, bishop of Bath and Wells, a man of eminent abilities, first Treasurer, and afterwards Chancellor of England, who was much employed by King Edward I. in Welsh affairs. He died at Berwick in 1292, and was buried in the cathedral at Wells. The castle is a quadrangular building, with a square tower at each corner. The hall, in which King Edward I. held his Parliament in 1283, was 183 feet long by 41 broad, but the gable ends only remain. The Statutum de Mercatoribus enacted here is from that circumstance, better known as the Statute of Acton Burnell. The successor of the bishop, at the castle, was Sir Edward Burnell, son of Philip Burnell and Maud daughter of Richard Earl of Arundel. He served in many actions in Scotland under Edward I., and always appeared in great splendour, attended by a chariot decked with banners of his arms. He had summons to Parliament from the fifth to the eighth year of Edward the Second's reign, and died in 1315. In 1346 the castle came into possession of Nicholas Lord Burnell, who died in 1382, and is buried in the church under an altar tomb, inlaid with his effigy in brass. In the reign of Henry VI. the Lovell family were in possession of this estate, which was forfeited by Francis Lord Lovell, in consequence of his adherence to King Richard III. Henry VII. being seated on the throne, granted Acton Burnell, together with other estates in this county, to Jasper Tudor, Earl of Bedford; after whose death it reverted to the Crown, and Henry VIII. granted it to Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey, distinguished for his valor at the battle of Flodden. Sir Humphrey Lee of Langley, in this parish, was created a baronet 3rd May 1620. Acton Burnell Park is now the seat of Sir Edward Joseph Smythe, Bart., whose family have been seated here from the time of Charles II., when Sir Edward Smythe of Eshe in Durham, created baronet 23rd February 1660, married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Lee, Bart. of Langley. The mansion, on a verdant lawn, bordered by shrubbery, presents a handsome elevation of fine white stone, having a noble Ionic portico, under which is the carriage entrance. Behind the house is the deer-park, on a finely wooded eminence, affording one of the most beautiful prospects in the county. The chapelry of Ruckley and Langley is in this parish.

BERRINGTON, 5 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 85 houses, and 657 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, in the patronage of the University of Cambridge, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* Berrington is the seat of the Hon. and Rev. R. Hill. Eaton Mascot is a township of Berrington; the family of Mascot possessed property in various parts of this county, but were resident here at an early period. One of the family was a benefactor to Haughmond Abbey, and granted two-thirds of the tythes of his whole demesne of Eaton to that monastery, which at the dissolution of religious houses was purchased by Sir Christopher Hatton, and is now in consequence, an impropriate part of the parochial tythes, in lay hands. The estate of Eaton Mascot about two centuries ago came into the possession of the Owens, in whose family it continued for several generations. To the ancient mansion, the present owner of Eaton, Richard Williams, Esq., has made large additions. It is seated upon rising ground, and commands a view bounded by the Wrekin, Lincoln Hill near Coalbrook Dale, Wenlock Edge, Acton Burnell, Frodesley, the Caer Caradoc, and Lawley Hill; with the range of the Long Mount, near Church Stretton, and other striking features. The pleasure ground is laid out with taste, its parterres containing a collection of the choicest shrubs and flowers.

CONDOVER, 5 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 274 houses, and 1378 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 14*s.* Condover Park, the seat of Edward W. Smythe Owen, Esq., on the south side of the town, has been long in the possession of the Owen family. The manor was originally held of the King, by the tenure of finding two foot-soldiers to fight against the Welsh for the defence of the marches. The ancient and very curious Elizabethan mansion occupies three sides of a quadrangle, and displays a grand character in its architectural ornaments: the centre compartment of the building is enriched with an oriel window and Ionic doorway; in the parapet is a clock. The house was built by Thomas Owen, Justice of the Common Pleas, who died in 1598, and was buried on the south side of the choir of Westminster Abbey. In the church of Condover are several handsome monuments of the Owen family; one for Roger Owen, Esq., sculptured by Roubillac, is particularly fine. The house contains a fine collection of pictures, made by the late Nicholas Owen Smythe Owen, Esq., who also greatly improved the grounds. Lyth Hill is about a mile north-west from Condover.

COUND, or Cund, 8 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 75 houses, and 504 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 33*l.* It is ancient and handsome. The font is of considerable antiquity, and is sculptured with foliage and roses in circles; the lower part is quite plain. In the church is a monument to Dr. Edward Cressett, Bishop of Llandaff, ob. 13th February, 1755. Cound Hall is the seat of John Cressett Pelham, Esq., M.P. for the county. The chapelry of Cressage is in this parish. Here was born Thomas Lodge, Lord Mayor of London in 1562. Sir George Harnage of Belleswardine was created a baronet 27th July 1821; and Sir William Fowler of Harnage Grange was created baronet 1st Nov. 1704.

FRODESLEY, 7 miles S. from Shrewsbury, and about the same distance W. from Wenlock, contains 26 houses, and 179 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mark, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 14*s.*

HARLEY, 2 miles N.W. from Wenlock, contains 47 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* Harley was the birth-place of Silas Taylor, an able antiquary, author of the "History of Gavel Kind," 1663.

KENLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Wenlock, contains 63 houses, and 321 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LEE BOTWOOD, 10 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 28 houses, and 204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. On the E. is Lawley Hill, a fine sheep pasture with a conical summit.

LONGNOR, in a valley bounded by lofty hills on every side, 8 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 47 houses, and 222 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

PITCHFORD, 7 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 45 houses, and 226 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* Pitchford derives its name from a bituminous spring, the water of which is collected in a large reservoir. From a substance which rises to the top in small pieces is extracted Betton's British Oil, famous for relieving rheumatism, bruises, &c.: the sandstone rock hereabouts is also strongly impregnated with this bituminous substance. Pitchford Hall, the seat of the Earl of Liverpool, is a fine specimen of domestic architecture, before the decay of forests induced a general use of stone and brick. The house is framed wholly with timber springing into a variety of forms for its support, the interstices being filled with plaster. It is exceedingly picturesque in appearance, and is surrounded by well disposed grounds, diversified with abundance of wood, and a small stream flowing in front of the house. From the early period of the reign of Edward IV. this estate was the seat and residence of the Oteley family, of which William Oteley was sheriff of this county in 1499, and again in 1513. It is not improbable that this curious mansion was built by him, as it bears every mark of that period in its construction. The late Mr. Oteley in 1806 devised the estate to the present noble proprietor.

CHURCH PREEN, 6 miles W. from Wenlock, contains 13 houses, and 73 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. Here was a small priory of Cluniac monks, a cell to Wenlock, which was in the patronage of the Lords Burnell. Holt Preen is south of the village.

CHURCH PULVERBATCH, 8½ miles S.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 81 houses, and 539 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* South of the village was formerly a castle, of which William de Cantilupe was governor in 1204. It was afterwards the seat of Sir Ralph Boteler, a younger son of Lord Boteler of Wem.

SMETHCOTT, 9 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 65 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 9*s.*

STAPLETON, 6 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 36 houses, and 240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

WOOLSTASTON, 10 miles S. from Shrewsbury, contains 16 houses, and 93 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* On the west of Woolstaston is Cothercott Hill.

6. Ford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the river Severn, which separates it from Oswestry and Pimhill hundreds; on the east by Shrewsbury liberty and Condover hundred; on the south by Purslow hundred; and on the west by Chirbury hundred, and Montgomeryshire in Wales.

ABBERBURY, or Alberbury, partly in Montgomeryshire, is 8 miles W. from Shrewsbury, and contains 53 houses, and 332 inhabitants. The church, a very curious and ancient edifice, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of All Souls College Oxford. Warine, sheriff of this county in the reign of Henry I., founded an abbey for black monks, a cell to Grandmont in Limosin, which, at the suppression of alien priories, was bestowed by Henry VI. upon the college founded by Archbishop Chicheley. Benthall, Eyton, Rowton and Amaston, and Wollaston, are all townships of this parish. Loton Hall, near Abberbury, is the seat of Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart. Rowton Castle is the seat of Mrs. Lyster, relict of Colonel Lyster, M.P. for Shrewsbury, who died in 1819, and was buried at Abberbury. At Glyn, on the borders of Wales, is the celebrated Old Parr's Cottage, which has undergone little alteration since his time; it is timber framed, rude and picturesque, within view of Rodney's Pillar on Breidden Hill in Montgomeryshire. In Wollaston chapel is a brass plate with his portrait, thus inscribed: "The old, old, very old man Thomas Parr was born at the Glyn in the township of Wennington, within the chapelry of Great Wollaston and parish of Alberbury, in the county of Salop, in the year of our Lord 1483. He lived in the reigns of ten kings and queens of England, viz. King Edward IV., King Edward V., King Richard III., King Henry VII., King Henry VIII., King Edward VI., Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, King James I., and King Charles I.; died the 13th, and was buried in Westminster Abbey on the 15th of November 1635, aged 152 years 9 months."

CARDESTON, 5½ miles W. from Shrewsbury, contains 65 houses, and 297 inhabitants, including the township of Watlesborough. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* Sir Edward Leighton of Watlesborough was created baronet 2nd March 1623.

FORD, which gives name to the hundred, is 4 miles W. from Shrewsbury, and contains 39 houses, and 212 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a peculiar, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

HABBERLEY, 9 miles S.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 24 houses, and 151 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* On Stiper Stones Hill, 27th May 1813, a cloud burst and swept away houses, mills, bridges, trees, cattle, and almost every intervening obstacle between it and the Severn, which rose very considerably; many lives were lost.

Stiper Stones is the most elevated peak of an assemblage of lofty hills, stretching for a considerable distance, between the road from Shrewsbury to Bishops Castle and the Vale of Montgomery. Its summit is extremely craggy, and overspread with enormous loose blocks of quartz, that at a distance appear like the ruins of a fortress of considerable magnitude. In height it is rather superior to the Wrekin, and forms the abrupt termination of a line of mountains that hence extend south-west into Radnorshire. In the time of Edward the Confessor, Griffyd, a Prince of the Welsh nation, rendered himself so formidable by his predatory inroads that his very name had become a terror to the English. King Harold undertook an expedition against him by land and sea; when his light armed troops and cavalry pursued the Britons into their fastnesses, and harassed them so effectually that they sent to the victorious chief the head of their Prince as a token of subjection. In memory of his achievements, great piles of stone are said to have been erected on many of the mountains of Wales and Shropshire, and there is a tradition that the rude heaps of rock called by the Britons Carneddan Tewion, on the ridge of the Stiper Stones, were thrown together as monuments of his triumph. Lead is procured in considerable quantities from various parts of this mountain, but chiefly from the Hope and Sneilbach mines.

PONTESBURY, 9 miles S.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 209 houses, and 1322 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, divided into three portions; the first, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; the second, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the third portion, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* The old church was taken down, except the chancel, in 1825, since which time it has been rebuilt in the pointed style of architecture. The parish is divided into four quarters, Cruckton, Edge, Longdon and Pontesbury, which last includes Little Hanwood, locally situated in the liberty of Shrewsbury.

WESTBURY, 8½ miles W. from Shrewsbury, contains 232 houses, and 1395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, in two portions; the first, value 13*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, the second, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* Westley and Yockleton townships are in this parish; as also the chapelry of Minsterley, in which are lead mines. A mile beyond Westbury, westward, is Whetton, the seat of R. Topp, Esq., and Cause Castle on the borders of Wales; the site of the last is perhaps one of the most lofty and commanding in the whole range of the Salopian frontier. It is an insulated ridge rising abruptly from a deep ravine on one side, and sloping towards a vast valley bounded by the Stiper Stones on the other. The keep mount is singularly steep and towering; but the castle itself is in a state of complete dilapidation, the only existing remains being the materials used for filling up the interior of the thick walls, with part of a gate-house, evidently of more recent date than the keep.

7. Munslow Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Condover hundred; on the east by Wenlock liberty and Overs hundred; on the south by Herefordshire; and on the west by Purslow hundred.

ABDON, 10 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 31 houses, and 157 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* In the hills eastward are iron mines.

ACTON SCOTT, 11 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 24 houses, and 187 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 10*s.*

ASHFORD BOWDLER, 3 miles S. from Ludlow, contains 16 houses, and 89 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy. Batchcott on the south is the seat of Rev. Richard L. Halifax. Between this village and Ludlow is Huck's Barn, said to have been the residence of the uncle of George Barnwell, the hero of the popular tragedy named after him. Barnwell's Green near it was so called from his waiting there to rob his uncle as he returned from Leominster fair, and adjoining the green is the wood in which he perpetrated the murder of his relative. Huck's Barn is used only as an occasional residence, and appears of the time of James I.

ASHFORD CARBONELL, 3 miles S. from Ludlow, and 1¼ mile E. from the above, contains 56 houses, and 316 inhabitants. It is a curacy, and is situated partly in the hundred of Stottesden.

BROMFIELD, 3 miles N.W. from Ludlow, on the banks of the river Oney, contains 101 houses, and 540 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. Bromfield Priory, to which the church formerly belonged, was a cell to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester. The gate-house of the Priory is still standing in a beautiful situation, between the rivers Oney and Teme, and within the boundaries of Oakley Park, the seat of the Hon. Rob. Henry Clive, M.P. The grounds which environ this mansion, naturally romantic, are disposed with great taste, so as to give effect to the charms of the surrounding scenery, which is enlivened by the meanderings of the Teme. On the south-eastern side is a fine view of the town and castle of Ludlow; Oakley park contains several groups of noble oaks, the remains of a forest, whence its name was derived. The township of Dinchope, and the chapelry of Halford, are both in the parish of Bromfield.

CARDINGTON, 9 miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 124 houses, and 687 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

CLEE ST. MARGARET'S, 8 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 55 houses, and 229 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

CULMINGTON, 5 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 95 houses, and 569 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*

DIDDLEBURY, 9 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 73 houses, and 434 inhabitants, including the townships of Crofton and Splashford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* Here was formerly a priory, a cell to the abbey of Seez in Normandy. The parish contains the divisions of Middlehope, Peaton, and Sutton, including the hamlets of Lawton, Poston, Upper and Lower Parks, and West Hope.

EAST HOPE, 5 miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 13 houses, and 93 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*

HOLDGATE, or Castle Howgate, 12 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 12 houses, and 77 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The castle here was the chief seat of the Barony of the Lords Burnell. The townships of Bouldon and Brookhampton are in this parish.

HOPE BOWDLER, 16 miles N. from Ludlow, and 1½ mile E. from Church Stretton, contains 28 houses, and 179 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The parish includes Chilmick and Ragdon township.

HOPTON IN THE HOLE, or Hopton Cangeford, 5 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 6 houses, and 24 inhabitants. Downton Hall, situated on an eminence south-west from Hopton, is the seat of Sir Charles William Edward Rouse Boughton, Bart., which came into the family by marriage with Catherine, heiress of William Pearce Hall, Esq., of Downton.

LUDLOW, most delightfully situated on an eminence at the junction of the rivers Teme and Corve, 142 miles from London, contains 1006 houses, and 4820 inhabitants. The principal street leads from the bridge to the town-house, and the next to the horse course; both are intersected by smaller ones. The market is on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; and fairs Monday before 13th February, Tuesday before Easter, Wednesday in Whitsun week, 21st August, 28th September, and 6th December. Ludlow returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in 12th Edward IV.; the right of election is vested in the common burgesses. Their sons, and those marrying the daughters of burgesses, have a right to be made burgesses; but every person ought to demand the right by petition: the number of electors is about 500. The present members are the Right Hon. Edward Viscount Clive, of Powis Castle, Montgomeryshire; and the Hon. Robert Henry Clive, of Oakley Park. The town is governed by a high-bailiff, bailiff, two justices, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four common-councilmen, a recorder, coroner and chief constable. The recorder and justices of Ludlow hold a weekly court, and the petty sessions for the hundreds of Munslow and Overs are held here. The arms of the town are, Azure, a lion couchant between three roses argent. The chief antiquity of Ludlow is the castle, originally built by Roger Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, soon after the Conquest; but by the attainder of his son for treason, reverted to the Crown in the reign of Henry I. In 1138 it was besieged by Stephen, when Henry, son of David, King of Scotland, approaching too near the walls, was dragged from his horse by a grappling hook thrown out by the besieged, but rescued, though at the peril of his own life, by King Stephen. By Henry II. the castle was granted to Sir Fulke Fitz Warine, and again reverted to the Crown in the reign of Edward IV. From this castle Edward V. and his brother Richard Duke of York, who were under the tuition of their maternal uncle Widville, Earl Rivers, set out for London, Edward having been first proclaimed King at this place. Here Prince Arthur, eldest son of King Henry VII., celebrated his marriage with Katherine of Arragon, and kept his court with great magnificence. In 1502 he died here. The Court of Marches was fixed at Ludlow by King Henry VIII., and the jurisdiction confirmed by Act of Parliament in 1542. Prince Charles, afterwards King Charles I., was entertained with great pomp at Ludlow in 1616; and in 1634, during the presidency of the Earl of Bridgewater, the Masque of Comus was written here by Milton, at the request of his friend Lawes, who set it to music: it is considered one of the finest specimens of his genius, and was occasioned by the earl's two sons, Viscount Brackley, and the Hon. Thomas Egerton, with his daughter Lady Alice, afterwards Countess of Carberry, being benighted on their journey to Ludlow in Heywood Forest in Herefordshire, when the lady, for a short time, was lost. It was originally performed by the two brothers, the young lady, Lawes, and others. At the Restoration, Butler, who was appointed secretary to the Earl of Carberry, then Lord President, composed in this castle the three first cantos of his inimitable Hudibras. The jurisdiction of the Court of Marches was abolished by Act of Parliament in 1689. Ludlow castle was repaired by Sir Henry Sydney, K.G., during his presidency; and upon a gate-house are his arms, beneath the arms of Queen Elizabeth, with this inscription, "Hominibus ingratis loquimini Lapides. Ann. Regni Reginæ Elizabethæ 23. The 28 year cōplet of the Residence of Syr Henry Sydney, Knight of the most noble order of the Garter, 1581." Round the castle is a beautiful public walk, commanding a delightful prospect of Ludford in Herefordshire, the course of the Teme through a rich vale, Oakley Park, the Clee Hills, Caer Caradoc, and other hills near Church Stretton. The White Cliff opposite the castle, and Hackluyts Close near the Leominster road are also favourite walks. The church of Ludlow, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The edifice, originally collegiate, one of the finest parochial churches in England, is ancient, and consists of a nave and side aisles, a north and south transept, and a high chancel with chapels on the north and south sides, containing abundant remains of painted glass in the windows. A very fine tower rises in the centre, 130 feet high; it is embattled and enriched with pinnacles at the angles. The choir retains its ancient stalls; and near the altar are monuments of Sir R. Townshend, ob. 1581; Lady Eure, ob. 1612; Ambrosia, daughter of Sir Henry Sydney, K.G., ob. 1574; Edmund Walter, ob. 1592; Thomas Salwey, ob. 1760: and in the north chapel, or St. John's chancel, is an altar tomb to Sir John Bridgeman, ob. 1637. Near the church is an almshouse, rebuilt in 1758. The Lodge at Ludlow, the seat of Arthur Salwey, Esq., is delightfully situated upon an elevation, skirted by extensive woods. From the summit of Mary's Knoll, a contiguous hill, a fine view of the surrounding country is obtained.

MUNSLOW, or Mounslow, which gives name to the hundred, is situated on the banks of the Corve, 11 miles N. from Ludlow, and contains 108 houses, and 708 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Sir Edward Lyttleton of Munslow, lord keeper of the great seal, was created Lord Lyttleton of the same place: at his death, in 1645, the title became extinct.

ONIBURY, on the river Oney, 5 miles N.W. from Ludlow, contains 66 houses, and 445 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

RUSHBURY, 8½ miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 91 houses, and 478 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* The parish comprises the townships of East Wall, Gritton, Lutwych and Stanway, Stone Acton, and Wall under Haywood. Lutwych Hall is the seat of Ralph Benson, Esq.

STANTON LACY, on the Corve, 3 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 243 houses, and 1267 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

LONG STANTON, 13 miles N.E. from Ludlow, and 8 miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 49 houses, and 261 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford.

STOKE SAY, 6½ miles N.W. from Ludlow, contains 100 houses, and 564 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Stoke Say Castle belonged to Sir John Ludlow, of Hodnet, whose heiress married into the Vernon family. There are considerable remains of the ancient edifice.

CHURCH STRETTON, on the Watling Street, 14 miles S. from Shrewsbury, and 16 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 248 houses, and 1226 inhabitants, including the townships of All Stretton, Little Stretton, and Minton. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 10*s.* On the western side of the town are the Longmount Hills, a lofty elevation, commanding a great variety of extensive and interesting prospects. It is 1674 feet above the level of the sea at low water. On Caer Caradoc, or the Querdic Hill, it is said Caractacus was defeated, and afterwards carried to Rome in triumph, where he made the celebrated speech before Claudius. On the whole summit of the eminence is an encampment, guarded by its steep ascents, and strengthened by deep double and triple entrenchments.

TUGFORD, 11 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 40 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

COLD WESTON, 7 miles N. from Ludlow, contains 5 houses, and 24 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 2*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*

WISTANSTOW, partly in Purslow hundred, 10 miles N.W. from Ludlow, contains 162 houses, and 883 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 18*l.*

8. Oswestry Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Denbighshire; on the east by Pimhill hundred; and on the south by Montgomeryshire.

WEST FELTON, 5 miles S.E. from Oswestry, in the road to Holyhead, contains 180 houses, and 1035 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The Nursery is the seat of John F. M. Dovaston, Esq. Pradoe is the seat of the Hon. T. Kenyon; and Tedsmoor, of T. B. Owen, Esq. About a mile north of the village is the Llanymyneeh branch of the Ellesmere Canal.

HALSTON, on the Perry river, 3 miles N.E. from Oswestry, and one mile westward from Whittington Castle, contains 2 houses, and 39 inhabitants; it has a chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Here was formerly a preceptory of the Knights Templars, which afterwards belonged to the Knights Hospitallers of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, valued at 160*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* per annum. It was granted, 5th Elizabeth, to William Horne. Halston Hall is the seat of T. Mytton, Esq.

KINNERLEY, 7 miles S.E. from Oswestry, contains 215 houses, and 1167 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

KNOCKIN, 6 miles S.E. from Oswestry, contains 45 houses, and 225 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* Here was the chief seat of the barony of the Lords Strange. In 1216 John Le Strange was sheriff of Shropshire, and in 1219 he had the King's precept to the sheriff of the county for aid to rebuild part of his castle at Knockin, and to repair the rest. His descendant James, son of William Earl of Derby, was summoned to Parliament in the life-time of his father, as Lord Strange of Knockin, in 1628, whose representative, the Duke of Athol, was created Earl Strange in 1786; but the manor was purchased by the Lord Keeper Egerton, with other estates in the neighbourhood, from the feoffees of the Earl of Derby.

LLAN Y BLODWELL, on the borders of Wales, 4 miles S. from Oswestry, contains 156 houses, and 850 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of St. Asaph.

LLAN Y MYNECH, on the borders of Montgomeryshire, 5 miles S. from Oswestry, contains 89 houses, and 454 inhabitants, including the townships of Llwyntlanan and Treprenal. The church, dedicated to St. Agatha, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of St. Asaph. Here is a branch of the Ellesmere Canal: which, about a mile and a half from the village, is conducted by an aqueduct of five arches over the river Virney, near which it is joined by the Montgomery Canal; and in the neighbourhood is Offa's Dyke.

ST. MARTINS, 5 miles W. from Ellesmere, contains 390 houses, and 1852 inhabitants, including Ifton Rhyn township, and Weston Rhyn and Bron y gath township, both within the parish. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of St. Asaph.

MELVERLY, 10 miles W. from Shrewsbury, near the river Severn, contains 43 houses, and 225 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the patronage of the rector of Llandrinio in Montgomeryshire.

OSWESTRY, or Oswaldestre, 17 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, and 172 from London, contains 844 houses, and 3910 inhabitants. It is situated on an eminence, and is intersected by the roads from Shrewsbury to Wrexham, and from Ellesmere to Welsh Pool. The town is governed by a mayor, recorder, high steward, twelve aldermen, fifteen common councilmen, and a coroner. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The markets on Wednesday and Saturday are amply supplied with provisions; and there are fairs on 15th March, 12th May, Wednesday before Midsummer-day, 15th August, Wednesday before Michaelmas, and 11th December. The town was originally named Maserfield, but obtained its present designation in 652, on the defeat of Oswald, King of Northumberland, by Penda, King of Mercia, who executed him on the spot. A monastery was afterwards founded here and dedicated to St. Oswald; and Oswald's well, a remarkably fine spring of water, had an oratory erected over it. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald, and is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*: part of the service is read at stated times in the Welsh language, which is still used by some of the parishioners. The town, situated between Offa's Dyke and Watts's Dyke, was formerly surrounded by walls, and had four gates of entrance taken down about 1769, since which time it has extended considerably beyond the ancient boundaries, particularly on the English side. The castle of Oswestry, built on a lofty artificial mount at the west end of the town, of which the ruins indicate the site, was granted to Allen Fitz Flayd in the reign of William the Conqueror; it had belonged with the territory adjoining to Meredith ap Blethon, a Briton. It must have been a place of considerable strength; and in the civil wars held out for King Charles I. till 1641, when the castle surrendered to the Parliamentary army under General Mytton and the Earl of Denbigh. The view hence is at once rich and extensive, embracing great part of Shropshire and some of the adjacent counties. Old Oswestry, or Hen Dainas, about a mile westward of the town, is situated upon an eminence, containing an area of about sixteen acres. The whole of this encampment was covered with trees, which had a fine effect. The parish of Oswestry includes the townships of Llanforda, Trefarclawdd, Pontregaer and Lynymon, Maesbury, Morton and Crickheath, Middleton, Aston, Hisland and Wooton, Weston, Swecney, Treflach and Tresonna. Aston Park, the seat of W. Lloyd, Esq., is surrounded by grounds replete with natural beauties, the effect of which has been considerably heightened by art. About a mile beyond Oswestry, in the road to Holyhead, is Porkington, the seat of William Ormsby Gore, Esq.; the name is a corruption of Brogyntyn, an old castle of the Welsh princes, the site of which is within the pleasure-grounds. In the saloon of the mansion—a modern Grecian edifice—is a curious painting, part of the altar-piece of the abbey of Vale Crucis. The grounds at Porkington are adorned by some very fine old timber. The hills of Wales, which bound the prospect on the west, have a majestic appearance; while on the east the eye roams unconfined over the rich and highly ornamented plains of Shropshire, commanding a view of Hawkestone Hills, Aston Park, Halston, and many other beautiful seats. Northward are the distant hills of Cheshire, the romantic grounds about Wynstay, with Chirk Castle and Brinkynalt in the fore ground.

RUYTON IN THE ELEVEN TOWNS, 10 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 168 houses, and 862 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 18*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Ruyton Hall is the seat of Colonel Proctor.

SELATTYN, 4 miles N.W. from Oswestry, contains 204 houses, and 959 inhabitants. A number of cottages have been built, and much waste land has recently been cultivated in this parish.

WHITTINGTON, 3 miles N.E. from Oswestry, contains 273 houses, and 1749 inhabitants, including the townships of Berghill, Daywell, Ebnall, Fernhill, Frankton, Henlley, Himford, and Old Martin. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* The remains of Whittington Castle are extremely picturesque; on the mount in the interior are some tall wych elms and ash-trees, perhaps the finest in the county. Soon after the Conquest this castle was held by Roger de Montgomery, but being forfeited by his son Robert, was given to William, a sister's son of Payne Peverell, whose daughter Mallet was the object of contention to the warlike youths of her time. Peverell offered his daughter in marriage, with Whittington Castle as a dowry, to him who should display the greatest prowess at a tilting-match: Peverell's Castle in Derbyshire was appointed for the place of combat. Amongst the knights who repaired thither was Gwarine de Meer, of the house of Lorraine, Lord of Abberbury, who carried off his fair prize, and received this castle as her dower. His posterity, of the name of Fitz Warine, continued Lords of Whittington nearly four hundred years, every heir for nine descents preserving the Christian name of Fulke. The manor, after various transfers in succeeding ages, devolved to William Albany, Esq., of London, the heiress of which family married Thomas Lloyd, Esq., of Aston Park, in whose descent it still continues. The situation of the castle is flat, and it was originally surrounded by a moat; several vast ditches and other works are yet discernible, together with the remains of eight very massive towers, with intermediate walls. The former are not regularly placed, except four at the angles of the keep; at the western angle are two very close together, with steps between, as if for an entrance. The towers of the gate-house, still entire, are inhabited by a farmer; on the eastern side is a rivulet, which washes the walls of the castle, now covered with ivy and shaded with large old trees. The gate-house towards the village, with the old towers as a back-ground, presents a very interesting appearance; a running stream occupies part of the moat, and the keep is used for a garden, having a deep well on its northern side. On digging in this garden some years since, a pavement was found all over it at an even depth; and on removing part of the ruins three curious bottles, of a depressed form, bearing the appearance of having been highly gilt, were discovered. "Fitz Gwarine, a ballad of the Welsh Border," by John F. M. Dovaston, Esq., of the Nursery, West Felton, describes the ancient and present state of this beautiful domain.

9. Overs Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wenlock liberty; on the east by Stottesdon hundred; on the south by Worcestershire and Herefordshire; and on the west by Munslow hundred.

BITTERLEY, 4 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 191 houses, and 1064 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* The parish extends into Munslow hundred, and abounds with coal-pits, particularly on Titterstone Hill, part of the Clee range.

BURFORD, on the borders of Worcestershire, 2 miles W. from Tenbury, contains 69 houses, and 365 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, in three portions: the first, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; the second, value 8*l.*; the third, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Burford was anciently the seat of the Cornwalls, and was held by the service of finding five men towards the army, on any expedition going into Wales. There are many monuments of this noble family in the church. Burford House is now the seat of the Hon. and Rev. G. Rushout. The parish includes the townships of Buraston and Whetmere, Nash, Tilsop and Weston, and Whetton.

GREET, 2½ miles N.W. from Tenbury, and 5 miles S.E. from Ludlow, contains 14 houses, and 79 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.*

MILSON, 5 miles N.E. from Tenbury, and 3½ S.W. from Cleobury Mortimer, contains 30 houses, and 125 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a curacy.

NEEN SOLLERS, 3 miles S.W. from Cleobury, and 5 miles N. from Tenbury, contains 42 houses, and 231 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

SILVINGTON, 8½ miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 9 houses, and 38 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Adjoining this parish on the east is Farlow, a detached part of Herefordshire.

10. Pimhill Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Flintshire; on the east by North Bradford hundred and Shrewsbury liberty; on the south by Ford hundred; and on the west by Oswestry hundred.

BASCHURCH, 8 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 207 houses, and 1277 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. At Stanwardine, about a mile and a half northward of Baschurch, Sir Roger Acheley was born: he was Lord Mayor of London in 1511.

ELLESMERE, situated on a spacious and pleasant lake, or mere, whence it derives its name, 17 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, and 170 from London, contains 1143 houses, and 6056 inhabitants, and has a market on Thursday; and fairs the third Tuesday in April, Whit Tuesday, 25th August, and 14th November. The excellence of the barley in this neighbourhood has produced a trade in malt-making. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* The edifice is cruciform, with a tower in the centre. Sir Thomas Egerton, an eminent statesman and lawyer, and lord chancellor in the reign of James I., was created Lord Ellesmere 21st July, 1603. The castle, anciently the seat of the Lords Strange, is demolished; and the hill which marks its site is now converted into one of the finest bowling-greens in the kingdom, and affords at the same time an unbounded and delightful prospect into nine different counties, including several highly interesting places, and a number of very lofty eminences, forming a beautiful contrast with the fertile vales, enriched by winding streams. The mere or lake covers an area of 100 acres, and is well stocked with fish. Opposite to the town, on the banks of the lake, is Oakley Park, the seat of A. Mathew, Esq. The Ellesmere Canal communicates with Whitchurch and Shrewsbury, and with Montgomery and Newtown; also with the river Mersey, passing through Denbighshire: it afterwards crosses the Dee by an aqueduct of seven arches, 130 feet in height, and 350 feet in length. The line of this canal is through a country abounding with slate, lime, coals, and other minerals. It completes an inland navigation from the Bristol Channel to the Irish Sea, uniting the ports of Liverpool and Bristol. Hardwick House, a mile and a half westward from Ellesmere, is the seat of Rev. Sir Edward Kynaston, Bart., B.D.; and the Grange, the seat of General Despard.

FITZ, on the banks of the Severn, 5 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 39 houses, and 229 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*

HORDLEY, 5 miles S. from Ellesmere, contains 53 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* Woodhouse, 1½ mile N.W. from Hordley, is the seat of W. Owen, Esq.

LOPPINGTON, 2½ miles W. from Wem, contains 101 houses, and 622 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

MIDDLE, 8 miles N. from Shrewsbury, contains 143 houses, and 833 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* The chapelry of Hadnall Ease, within the liberty of Shrewsbury, is in this parish; it is 4 miles S.E.: and between them is Pimhill Hill, whence the hundred is named.

MONTFORD, on the banks of the Severn, 5 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 76 houses, and 517 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

GREAT NESS, 7½ miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 104 houses, and 580 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Great Ness is the seat of J. Edwards, Esq. The chapelry of Little Ness, under Ness Cliff Hill, is in this parish.

PETTON, 6 miles S.E. from Ellesmere, contains 5 houses, and 48 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Petton is the seat of W. Sharling, Esq.

SHRAWARDINE, on the banks of the Severn, 7 miles N.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 30 houses, and 177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Sir Clement Edmondes, secretary for the French tongue to Queen Elizabeth, was born here in 1566. He was author of "Observations on Cæsar's Commentaries," &c.

WELCH HAMPTON, 3 miles E. from Ellesmere, contains 75 houses, and 478 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Cool Mere, White Mere, and Cross Mere, are in the neighbourhood of Welsh Hampton; and the Ellesmere Canal passes close to the village on the north.

11. Purslow Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Ford hundred; on the east by Munslow hundred; on the south by Radnorshire and Herefordshire; and on the west by Montgomeryshire and Radnorshire.

BEDSTONE, 10 miles S. from Bishop's Castle, and 4 miles N.E. from Knighton in Radnorshire, contains 25 houses, and 165 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

BETTUS, 10 miles S.W. from Bishop's Castle, on the borders of Radnorshire, contains 56 houses, and 341 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

BISHOP'S CASTLE, 21 miles S.W. from Shrewsbury, and 159 from London, is situated on an eminence near a branch of the river Clun, and contains 324 houses, and 1616 inhabitants. It has a market on Friday for all sorts of commodities, much frequented by the Welsh. Fairs, Friday before 13th February, Friday before Good Friday, the first Friday after May-day, 5th July, 9th September, and 13th November. The corporation consists of a bailiff, a recorder, and 15 aldermen: their common seal represents a castle, with the initials I. R., in chief, and the date 1609, in base. Bishop's Castle returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred 17th Elizabeth, which is vested in the bailiff and all the burgesses, amounting to about 100. The present members are Edward Rogers, Esq., and F. H. Cornewall, Esq. of Delbury in this county. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* It is a stately edifice, standing below the town, and traditionally said to have been surrounded with buildings, which were destroyed by fire. The bishops of Hereford, in whose diocese it is, had formerly a castle here, whence its name is derived: this has long been demolished, and part of its site is now converted into a bowling-green. Bishop's Moat, at the very edge of the county, is a small round hill in Montgomeryshire: near it is a large hill, and upon it an area of about an acre, surrounded with an entrenchment. Brompton Hall is the seat of R. J. Davies, Esq.

BUCKNILL, on the borders of Herefordshire, and on the Ony river, 11 miles S. from Bishop's Castle, and 3 miles N.E. from Knighton in Radnorshire, contains 57 houses, and 331 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The townships of Buxton and Coxall, locally situated in Herefordshire, are in this parish.

CLUN, 5 miles S. from Bishop's Castle, is situated on a river of the same name, and contains 179 houses, and 792 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Clun Castle, now a ruin, was built in the reign of Henry III. by William Fitz Alan, to whose ancestor the manor had devolved by marriage into the family of Say. John Fitz Alan, the son of William, was Captain-general of the forces guarding the Welsh marches; and this castle was in those times a place of great strength. It remained in possession of the same family until the reign of Queen Elizabeth. By the marriage of Mary Fitz Alan with Philip Howard, son of Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the estate became vested in that noble family. From them it passed to the Walcotts, and afterwards by purchase to the family of its present possessor, Earl Powis. The Duke of Norfolk still retains the title of Baron of Clun. There are several encampments in the neighbourhood, which appear to be Roman, and were probably thrown up by Ostorius and the legions under his command. The townships of Edeclift, Hobendrid, and Newcastle are in this parish.

CLUNBURY, 7 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, and 4 miles E. from Clun, upon the same river, contains 65 houses, and 355 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Obley. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a curacy. The townships of Clunton and Rempton are in this parish.

CLUNGUNFORD, 3 miles lower down on the river Clun, and 7 miles N.E. fron Knighton in Radnorshire, contains 85 houses, and 474 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a rectory, value 16*l.* Clungunford is the seat of Rev. John Rooke, Jun.

DINMORE, a single house, contains 12 inhabitants, and is extra-parochial.

EDGTON, 4 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 40 houses, and 220 inhabitants, including the township of Brunslow and Harderlea, an extra-parochial place. The church of Edgton, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy.

HOPE SAY, 6 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 100 houses, and 612 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

HOPTON CASTLE, 9 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, and 6 miles E. from Clun, contains 21 houses, and 150 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.*

LLANVAIR WATERDINE, on the borders of Radnorshire, 12 miles S. from Bishop's Castle, and 4 miles W. from Knighton, contains 87 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

NORTH LYDBURY, 3 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 139 houses, and 892 inhabitants, including the townships of Acton, Brockton, Down, Eaton, and Choulton, Eyton, and Plowden, Ledbury, and Totterton. The church of North Lydbury, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* On the south of the village is Walcot Park, the seat of Earl Powis. The mansion is situated on a gentle eminence, amidst hills covered with woods, with a fine expanse of water on the approach to the house. The park is very extensive, charmingly diversified, and abundantly stocked with deer. Some remains of Bury Ditches, a British encampment, are visible on Tongley Hill, whence a grand prospect may be enjoyed. The area of the encampment is circular, and of great extent, defended by three trenches with high mounds or ramparts, which in some places have been planted with firs, by direction of the Earl of Powis, who is the proprietor: these plantations interrupt the continuity of the trenches, and destroy the character of the place. From the eminence a varied scene is presented. Clun, with its ancient castle, now a ruin, bounded by bleak heights on the south; and on the north is the town of Bishop's Castle, with the interjacent valley, displaying several gradations of culture and fertility. At other points the prospect is enlivened by occasional glimpses of rich pastoral landscape, rendered more delightful by contrast with the bold and naked hills that overlook them. Amongst other encampments in this neighbourhood there is one between Purslow and Basford Gate, in the road from Bishop's Castle to Ludlow, which takes in the whole circuit of Borough Hill, in a form resembling a heart, and is fortified with a single foss in some parts or more, according as the ground is more or less accessible; and where there is the advantage of a precipice, there is neither ditch nor rampart; the foss is grown over with trees.

LYDHAM, on the river Camalet, 2 miles N. from Bishop's Castle, contains 18 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 10*l.* The township of Aston, locally situated in Montgomeryshire, is in this parish.

MAINSTONE, 4 miles S.W. from Bishop's Castle, contains 49 houses, and 296 inhabitants. The township of Castlewright, in Montgomeryshire, is in this parish.

MINDTOWN, 5 miles E. from Bishop's Castle, and on the western boundary of the Longmount Hills, contains 6 houses, and 31 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

MORE, on the river Camalet, 3 miles N.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 47 houses, and 277 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* Lindley Hall, on the north of the village, is the seat of B. More, Esq.

NORBURY, 4 miles N.E. from Bishop's Castle, between the rivers Camalet and Ony, contains 72 houses, and 377 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy.

RATLINGHOPE, 7 miles N.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 40 houses, and 277 inhabitants, including the township of Gatton. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Here was formerly a priory of canons regular of St. Augustine, a cell to the monastery at Wigmore, which was granted, 37 Hen.VIII., to Robert Long.

SIBDON CARWOOD, 8 miles S.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 10 houses, and 61 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Sibdon Castle is the seat of J. F. Baxter, Esq.

STOW, 11 miles S. from Bishop's Castle, on the borders of Radnorshire, and 2 miles N. from Knighton, contains 26 houses, and 157 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WENTNOR, 5 miles N.E. from Bishop's Castle, contains 97 houses, and 583 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Christ Church College Oxford.

12. Stottesden Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Brimstree hundred; on the east by Staffordshire; on the south by Worcestershire, and on the west by Overs hundred and Wenlock liberty.

ACTON ROUND, 6 miles N.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 38 houses, and 214 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ALVELEY, 7 miles S. from Bridgnorth, on the banks of the Severn, contains 157 houses, and 831 inhabitants, including the township of Nordley Regis. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

ASTLEY ABBOTS, on the banks of the Severn, 2 miles N. from Bridgnorth, contains 138 houses, and 664 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Stanley Hall is the seat of Sir Thomas John Tyrwhitt Jones, Bart. The grounds constitute a well wooded table of the richest land, overlooking in a striking and singular manner, across the depth of the surrounding valleys, the finest of the abrupt and picturesque features with which this district abounds. The house, originally built about 1642, was enlarged by the present proprietor, after designs by Smalman of Quatford, about 1820. In the hall windows are the arms of the family, &c. by Collins. From the top of a tower a view is obtained into every abrupt and romantic dingle surrounding the mansion. In the distance are seen the Clent Hills, rising on the boundary of the county, and the Malvern Hills in Worcestershire; the Clee Hills and the Wrekin are also distinguishable.

ASTON BOTTERELL, 8 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 40 houses, and 230 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 1*s.*

BILLINGSLEY, 5 miles S. from Bridgnorth, contains 34 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

BRIDGNORTH, on the river Severn, 22 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, and 139 from London, contains 988 houses, and 4345 inhabitants. It is divided into two parts, the upper and lower town, by the river Severn, over which is a handsome bridge of seven arches. The upper part of the town stands on a hill, rising a hundred and eighty feet above the bed of the river; many of the houses are founded on the rock, with famous cellars hewn out of it under the gardens. From the higher part of the town to the bridge is a curious walk hewn through the depth of the rock, the descent being rendered easy by steps and rails. From the terrace at Apley is a fine view of the town: here is a market on Saturday, and fairs Thursday before Shrovetide, 1st May, 30th June, 2nd August, and 29th October. The town is governed by two bailiffs, elected annually out of twenty-four aldermen, by a jury of fourteen, together with forty-eight common councilmen, a recorder, town-clerk, and other officers. Their seal represents a castle, but the arms are azure, a castle argent, and a canton of the last. Bridgnorth returns two members to Parliament, which privilege was conferred 23 Edward I., and is vested in the corporation and freemen, who amount to about 1700; the bailiffs are the returning officers. The present members for Bridgnorth are Thomas Whitmore, Esq. of Apley Park, and William Wolryche Whitmore, of Dudmaston. The town was anciently walled round; and the castle, originally built by Robert de Bellesme stood on the south side of the hill; the only remain, is part of a tower, which having been undermined inclines so much as to threaten destruction to such as approach it. It makes an angle of seventeen degrees from the perpendicular. There are two churches, St. Leonard's, and St. Mary Magdalen; both are curacies: the last, situated within the castle, was rebuilt about the year 1795. Here was also a priory, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and a house of Grey Friars; the site of the last is on the western bank of the Severn.

BURWARTON, 10 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 22 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Burwarton Hall is the seat of Viscount Boyne.

CAINHAM, 3 miles E. from Ludlow, in a part of this hundred, which intersects that of Overs, contains 194 houses, and 936 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Cainham Court is the seat of the Rev. W. Calcott.

CHELMARSH, 4 miles S. from Bridgnorth, contains 72 houses, and 458 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*

CHELTON, 4 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 85 houses, and 454 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 11*l.* The chapelry of Loughton is in this parish.

CLEOBURY MORTIMER, situated on the borders of Worcestershire, near the Clee Hills, 12 miles S. from Bridgnorth, and 7 miles W. from Bewdley, contains 328 houses, and 1602 inhabitants. It has a market on Wednesday, and fairs 21st April, and 27th October. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* The Clee Hills abound in coal, limestone, and iron ore; there are also remains of an ancient encampment, called Castle Toot. Mawley Hall, situated on the eastern bank of the Teme, is the seat of Sir Edward Blount, Bart. Woodhouse, now a small farm, in this parish, formerly belonged to the family of Tubervile, by whom it was granted to the friars of the order of St. Augustine about 1250: the site, at the Dissolution, was granted to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton.

Robert Longland, an ancient English poet, and the reputed author of "The Visions of Pierce Plowman," was born at Cleobury Mortimer; his work was written about the year 1369. The Visions form a satire on almost every occupation of life, but particularly on the Romish clergy, and abound with humour, spirit, and imagination; all which are drest, to great disadvantage, in very uncouth versification and obsolete language.

NORTH CLEOBURY, 8 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, and 12 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 32 houses, and 173 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* Cleobury Park is the seat of T. Mytton, Esq.

CORLEY, 8 miles E. from Ludlow, and 3½ miles N. from Tenbury in Worcestershire, contains 121 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*

DOWLES, in Wire Forest, on the banks of the Severn, and on the borders of Worcestershire, 2 miles N.W. from Bewdley, contains 15 houses, and 61 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 4*l.*

GLAZELEY, on Bore Brook, 3 miles S. from Bridgnorth, contains 7 houses, and 46 inhabitants; it is a rectory.

HIGHLEY, 7 miles S. from Bridgnorth, on the banks of the Severn, contains 84 houses, and 424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

HOPE BAGGOT, 5 miles E. from Ludlow, contains 17 houses, and 71 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

HOPTON WAFERS, 2½ miles W. from Chobury Mortum, and 10 miles E. from Ludlow, contains 93 houses, and 459 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* Hopton Court is the seat of T. B. Botfield, Esq.

KINLET, 8 miles S. from Bridgnorth, contains 87 houses, and 552 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* Kinlet Hall is the seat of William Child, Esq.

MIDDLETON SCRIVEN, 5 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 19 houses, and 86 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Faintree is the seat of William Purton, Esq.

MORVILL, 3 miles N.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 73 houses and 367 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Here was a priory of Benedictines, subordinate to the abbey of Shrewsbury, valued at 15*l.* per annum, granted at the Dissolution to Henry Viscount Lisle. Morvill Hall is the seat of Henry Acton, Esq. Aldenham Park is also in this parish. Sir Edward Acton, of Aldenham, was created baronet 17th January 1644; and the mansion was rebuilt by Sir Edward, the third baronet, about the year 1694, who also built another house at Acton Round, two miles distant. Aldenham was long considered the best house in the county; it stands in the midst of a very fine park, and is now the seat of Sir John Francis Edward Acton, Bart., a major-general in the Austrian service. Aston Eyre is a township in the parish of Morvill.

NEEN SAVAGE, 1 mile N. from Cleobury Mortimer, contains 87 houses, and 485 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NEENTON, 6 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 23 houses, and 119 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*

OLDBURY, 1½ mile S. from Bridgnorth, contains 18 houses, and 110 inhabitants.

QUATFORD, on the banks of the Severn, 2 miles S.E. from Bridgnorth, contains 26 houses, and 105 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a curacy. The nave and part of the tower of the church were rebuilt in 1714, but the chancel retains its ancient appearance. It is furnished with plain benches, and quatrefoil ornaments at the ends. Eardington township is in this parish, which is within the liberties of Bridgnorth.

QUATT MALVERN, 4 miles S.E. from Bridgnorth, contains 61 houses, and 342 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 5*s.* Dudmaston, the seat of William Wolryche Whitmore, stands on the eastern banks of the Severn, in a beautiful situation, with a fine prospect. Sir Thomas Wolryche, of Dudmaston, was created baronet 2nd August, 1641.

SHINETON, locally situated in Condover hundred, 10 miles N.W. from Bridgnorth, and 3 miles N. from Wenlock, contains 37 houses, and 182 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*

SIDBURY, 6 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 16 houses, and 93 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

STOTTESDEN, whence the hundred takes its name, is situated 8 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, and contains 232 houses, and 1263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

TASLEY, 1½ mile N.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 17 houses, and 95 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Eastward of Tasley is Stanley Hall, the seat of Sir Thomas John Tyrwhitt Jones, Bart.

UPTON CRESSETT, 5 miles W. from Bridgnorth, contains 9 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

WHEATHILL, 9 miles N.E. from Ludlow, contains 23 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*

13. Shrewsbury Liberty

Is bounded on the north-west by Pimhill hundred; on the east by North and South Bradford hundreds; on the south by Condover hundred; and on the south-west by Ford hundred.

BATTLEFIELD, 4 miles N. from Shrewsbury, contains 13 houses, and 64 inhabitants. It is the site of the battle of Shrewsbury, fought 22d July 1403; when Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, was slain. On the King's part fell the Earl of Stafford, Sir Walter Blount the Royal standard-bearer, Sir Hugh Shirley and Sir Nicholas Gausel. The King had his horse slain under him, and the Prince of Wales was wounded in the face: of the vanquished, besides Hotspur, Sir Hugh Mortimer, Sir John Calverley, and Sir John Massey were slain. The Earl of Worcester, brother of Northumberland, Sir Richard Vernon, and Sir Theobald Trussel, were taken prisoners, and beheaded at Shrewsbury High Cross. The Scots Earl of Douglas, who is said to have slain three persons armed like the King, was taken prisoner on Haughmond Hill. The number slain in the battle and pursuit was about nine thousand, of which two-thirds were of the Earl of Northumberland's party. In grateful commemoration of this victory, Henry IV. built and endowed Battlefield Church on the spot where most of the slain were buried; and as the battle was fought on the eve of St. Mary Magdalen, it was dedicated to that saint. At the east end of the church is a figure of King Henry IV., and in the window below it is some ancient stained glass. It was formerly collegiate, but is now a curacy. In the church is a handsome monument to John Corbet, Esq., of Sundorne, who died 19th May, 1817, æt. 65. It was designed by the Rev. Archdeacon Owen, and erected by Carline of Shrewsbury.

BROUGHTON, 8 miles N. from Shrewsbury, contains 31 houses, and 177 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

GRINSHILL, 7 miles N. from Shrewsbury, contains 40 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 18*l.* Clive Hill, on the north, contains excellent quarries of stone.

Hardwick Grange, the seat of Lord Hill, G.C.B., &c. &c. is situated amidst beautiful eminences, clothed with wood. The mansion was rebuilt by Lord Hill from designs by Harrison of Chester, and contains several windows of painted glass by Evans of Shrewsbury. In the dining-room is a portrait of Lord Hill by Sir William Beechey, R.A., and a portrait of the Duke of Wellington by G. Dawe, R.A. Lord Hill has most gallantly distinguished himself in the service of his country.

GREAT HANWOOD, 4 miles S.W. from Shrewsbury, contains 31 houses, and 157 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* Little Hanwood is a hamlet of this parish.

MEOLE BRACE, 1 mile S. from Shrewsbury, is part of the borough of Shrewsbury.

PRESTON GUBBALS, 4½ miles N. from Shrewsbury, contains 38 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a curacy. The township of Merrington is in this parish.

Albrighton, Astley and Clive are chapelries, and Leaton and Woolascot, hamlets of St. Mary's parish, in the borough of Shrewsbury. Clive Hall was the birth-place of William Wycherley in 1640. It is now a farm-house; a large walnut-tree, close to the house, is said to have been planted by the poet. Sansaw Hall, near it, is the seat of the Rev. Dr. Gardner: the grounds here are very beautiful.

SHREWSBURY, 153 miles from London, contains 3603 houses, and 19,602 inhabitants. It is situated near the centre of the county, occupying the whole of two gentle eminences, which are surrounded on all sides but the north by the Severn. It was formerly walled round, defended by several towers, and had three principal gates of entrance, besides posterns; the gates have been demolished, and but few vestiges of the former, chiefly on the south side, are in existence. On the north side of the town are the remains of the castle, built by Roger Earl of Montgomery, which came into the possession of the Crown upon the forfeiture of Earl Roberts. The sheriff of the county had afterwards the custody of it, and lands were granted in tenures for its defence. A chamberlain was also appointed, by whose care it was kept in good repair for the security of the marches. It was surrendered to the Parliament in 1644, but on the restoration of Charles II., the castle was granted to Francis Viscount Newport, afterwards Earl of Bradford. It is now the residence of John Cressett Pelham, Esq. M.P. for the county, and forms one of the most magnificent mansions in the county; the area of its large ancient court has been converted into a beautiful garden. A watch-tower, on a wall near one of the angles, has been rebuilt, whence is obtained a complete panoramic view of the town and adjacent country. Some of the Parliamentary army entered Shrewsbury by St. Mary's Water Gate, the last that was suffered to remain of seven. The town was incorporated by King Charles I., and is governed by a mayor, recorder, steward, town-clerk, twenty-four aldermen, forty-eight common councilmen, and other officers. The Corporation has a power of trying causes within itself, even in such cases as are capital, except for high treason. The arms of the town are, Azure, three leopards' heads or. The seal of the Corporation, engraved in 1425, exhibits a curious representation of the town at that early period. The assizes for the county are held in the county hall. The privilege of returning two members to Parliament was conferred upon Shrewsbury in 23rd Edward I., and the right of election vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, amounting to about five hundred. The present members are Richard Jenkins, Esq., and Robert Aglionby Slaney, Esq. Shrewsbury has long been the principal mart for Welsh flannels and webbs, and is noted for its cakes and brawn. The markets are on Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and the fairs are 28th February, Saturday after 15th March, Wednesday in Easter week, Wednesday before Whitsunday, 3rd July, 12th August, 2nd October, and 12th December. The town has several times for short periods been the residence of Royalty, and Parliaments have also been held within its walls. It is rendered famous in history for the two severe sieges it has sustained; besides which, the neighbourhood has at different times been the theatre of much war and bloodshed. Shrewsbury contains several public buildings of considerable utility. The Guild and County Hall, the bridges over the Severn, and the Market-house, erected in 1515, may be particularly mentioned; as also the House of Industry, the Free Grammar School, founded by Edward VI., and the County Gaol, built in 1793 by Haycock.

The Grammar School, a noble foundation, having been, from a variety of causes, in a declining state, which was attributed in part to defects in certain of the ancient rules and ordinances, a bill was brought into Parliament and received the Royal assent in 1798, "for the better government and regulation of the Free Grammar School of King Edward VI." By this act the management of the revenues, and the removal or discharge of the school-masters, who are reduced from four to two, is vested in the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, as visitor, and thirteen trustees or governors, of whom the mayor for the time being is one. The appointment of masters rests solely in St. John's College Cambridge.

The school is a large and lofty structure of freestone, surrounding two sides of a court, with a square pinnacled tower in the angle. The first school-room was of timber, and the present chapel, tower, and library, were added to it in the year 1595. The chapel was consecrated in 1617 by John Overal, D.D. Bishop of Lichfield, and the sermon preached by Dr. Sampson Price, who, for his hatred of popery, was called "the maule and scourge of Hereticks." He was son of Thomas Price, M.A. minister of St. Chad's. The wooden building which contained the original school-room was taken down, and the present stately edifice of Grinshill stone arose in its place, and was finished in 1630. In the centre of this part is a gateway, adorned on each side with a Corinthian column, rudely designed, upon which stand the statues of a scholar and a graduate, bare headed, in the dress of the times. Over the arch is a Greek sentence from Isocrates, importing that a love of literature is necessary to the formation of a scholar. Above are the arms of King Charles I. The south end is terminated by a large window with a pointed arch and mullioned tracery, in the style of the fourteenth century. The other windows are all of the Tudor form. The parapet is singular, and probably a clumsy imitation of that beautiful kind of battlement consisting of a series of curled leaves, crockets, and pinnacles found in our finest pointed architecture, especially on stalls, screens, and canopies of monuments. This structure is a fine specimen of the mode of building in the 16th and 17th centuries, and probably was one of the latest erected in that mixed style, if it deserves the name of one, wherein the Grecian and pointed, however discordant and irreconcilable, are mixed together, and compose a fantastic species hardly reconcilable to any class or name. The ground-floor, on one side the gateway, contains a room originally used as the accidence school; and on the other, the third master's house, now given to the head-master, who places his assistant in it. In the middle story are comprised the lodging-rooms of the assistant's house, and the lower master's apartment, which has been for many years converted into a writing school. The principal school-room, which occupies the upper story, is eighty feet by twenty-one. It was originally divided into three rooms, by partitions adorned with carved work, in which were folding-doors. These are now removed, but the arches remain. Over the entrance to this spacious room was once perhaps a music gallery, as was customary.

The chapel is on the ground-floor of another part of the building, and is divided from the ante-chapel by a handsome open screen of oak, very richly embellished with the grotesque carving of Queen Elizabeth's days, as are the pulpit and Bible-stand. The ceiling was in 1798 adorned with embossed fretwork, consisting of a variety of foliage, devices, and rebusses, preserved from the ruins of St. Alkmond's church. The arms of the founders, and of the first and present masters, are placed along the centre, which altogether have a good effect. The dimensions are sixty-three feet by twenty-two. Prayers are read here twice on school days by the head-master, who is chaplain and catechist, for which he has a distinct salary of 20*l.* a year. The first mention of this office is in the year 1603, when the Corporation ordered "that 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* be given out of the revenues of the schoole to a minister to read prayers and catechise the schollars in the schollars chapel." This office seems afterwards to have been united to the preachership of Chirbury; for in the 13th of James I. it is ordered that "20*l.* be given annually to a person to take the place of catechiser of the scholars and to preach at Chirbury."

Over the chapel, and of the same size, is the library, which, from its early erection, was probably intended as a public recompense for the loss of the various ecclesiastical libraries in the convents and colleges of the county. This venerable room now contains a most valuable collection of books, and in size and decoration is in no respect inferior to the greater number of those in the Universities. The ceiling is adorned in a manner similar to that of the chapel, and with the arms of the founders, visitors, and the thirteen first trustees. The two principal windows were at the same time embellished with stained glass. That towards the north contains the arms of Edward VI., Queen Elizabeth, St. John's College Cambridge, the See of Lichfield and Coventry impaling Cornwallis and the arms of this town:—in the opposite window are those of the four principal benefactors, with Latin inscriptions, Englished thus:

"At the supplication of Henry Edwards and Richard Whitaker King Edward VI. laid the foundation of Shrewsbury school.

"Queen Elizabeth augmented this Foundation at the instance of Thomas Ashton, a man pious, learned, and prudent,—within these walls ever to be revered.

"The library was increased more than double by the testamentary bequest of John Taylor, LL.D."

In front of the schools on the town side is a play-ground, inclosed from the street by iron railing. A grant of this was made by the Corporation in 1630, and is described to be "so much of the streete called highe pavemente, over against the newe schole-house, lyinge to a house of Sir Andrew Corbet, Knight, towards a house of Richard Breese," &c. A lofty stone wall was erected round the play-ground, and two handsome gateways, one of which remains at the bottom of the School-lane; the other, which was similar, stood opposite to the portal of the schools, where the iron gates now stand. This wall was unfortunately demolished about the year 1790, under an idea of improving the prospect of the school buildings from the town, and iron railing substituted; but the privacy of the play-ground, and its almost entire seclusion from the street, have thus been destroyed, and the venerable character of the structure itself injured. A considerable piece of land is also allotted for a play-ground at the back of the schools, open to the country, and entirely shut out from the town. Two large houses most delightfully situated, contiguous to the schools, belong to the masters, with every accommodation for the reception of boarders.

Upon the whole it may truly be said, whether we consider the handsome appearance of the edifice, the internal decorations of the school-room, library, and chapel; the noble collection of printed books and MSS.; the excellent houses of the masters; the salubrity and beauty of the situation, or its numerous exhibitions and ample revenues; to which may be added, without suspicion of flattery, the distinguished learning and talents of the masters,—few seminaries can, in these respects, boast a superiority over the Free Grammar School of King Edward the Sixth, in Shrewsbury.

Many persons of eminence received their education in this school. Besides Sir Philip Sydney and Lord Brook, are some celebrated heads of the law and of the church; of the former, was the lord chancellor Jefferies.

There is a beautiful public promenade on the west side of the town, called the Quarry, occupying about twenty acres, commanding a view of the river and town, and the picturesque landscape formed by the surrounding country. The Theatre is said to be part of a palace of the Princes of Powisland; it is of red sandstone, and appears of high antiquity. Shrewsbury contains the following parishes: St. Alkmond, a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Chad, a curacy; the Holy Cross, and St. Giles, a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Julian's, annexed to St. Michael's in the Castle, a curacy; St. Mary's, a curacy, and Meole Brace.

A monastery, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, was founded here in the year 1083 by Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, for Benedictine Monks from Seez in Normandy. The founder endowed it largely, and at length became a monk of his own abbey, where he died in 1094, and was here buried; as was also his son Hugh, slain in the Isle of Anglesea. Robert Pennant, the fourth abbot of this house, obtained the reliques of St. Winifrede, and enshrined them, which added much to the emolument of the abbey. Its abbots had, at a very early period, the privilege of wearing the mitre, and were summoned to Parliament. At the Dissolution its revenues were valued by Speed at 656*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* The site of the abbey, with all its buildings, originally comprised about ten acres, as we learn from the no less accurate than splendid History of Shrewsbury, by the Rev. Hugh Owen, and the Rev. J. B. Blakeway, from which nearly the whole of this account is derived. Of this venerable edifice, the chief remnant is the nave of the church, which in a great measure has escaped the devastation that befell almost every other part of the conventual buildings. The nave, like those of many other abbey churches, was anciently parochial, and had a low screen for the altar, probably between the great piers, on a line with the present pulpit; the space to the west being appropriated to the parishioners. The abbey church was originally cruciform, and had its transepts, choir, and lady chapel, together with various chantries, each containing its altar. Of these distinct parts of the abbey church, the whole eastern limb, with the transept and centre steeple, have been swept away, and thus has it lost considerably more than two-thirds of its original dimensions. The length of the nave, including the west tower, is now 123 feet. The present parochial church of the Holy Cross, embraces within its walls the nave, side aisles, porch and western tower of the abbey church. It is principally constructed with a red sandstone, of good quality. The fabric, as it now exists, bears deep marks of havoc and mutilation, yet displays in some of its parts curious and interesting features. The effect of the external elevation is cruelly injured by the loss of the eastern portion of the clerestory, which having been neglected by the parishioners, the roof, from decay, fell in, long after the dissolution of the abbey; and the shattered walls of the clerestory were swept away to save trouble and expense. Thus, as the western portion retains its original height, a great disproportion arises between the east and western parts of the fabric. The west front of the abbey church is composed of the tower, with the western ends of the side aisles; these had originally each a Norman window, that on the north side still remains, with a small pointed light inserted within it: the window of the corresponding aisle has a pointed arch, evidently cut out of the old Norman masonry, and now entirely void of mullions and tracery. The tower is nearly perfect; and though neither lofty nor much enriched, is noble, and would be a well-proportioned structure, were it not that the want of pinnacles on the summit gives it a heavy effect, not usual in towers of that age. It rests on an early Norman basement, evidently once a part of the ancient nave, surmounted by a superstructure of the fourteenth century. A round-headed arch, deeply recessed, and richly laced with mouldings, having a pointed doorway, similarly adorned, inserted within it, forms the western entrance, which has an ascent of three shallow steps. The exterior rib of the outward round arch springs on each side, from a Norman shaft, with an indented capital: the pointed arch was doubtless engrafted within the ancient semicircular doorway, when the tower was erected, in order to preserve uniformity. This is an elegant portal, and it is impossible not to admire the skill and ingenuity with which the architect has combined the pointed with the Norman round arch. Immediately above the western door rises a magnificent and beautiful window, its sides and arch enriched with delicate mouldings, in the deep hollow soffits of which is a series of small panels, having foliated arched heads. The outward mouldings of the arch rise high above it, enriched with crockets, and ending in a flower, from which springs, very elegantly, a niche or tabernacle.

The body of the western window, to the spring of the arch, contains two stories, divided horizontally by a transom, and perpendicularly by six upright mullions, into seven compartments for the glass. The two central mullions, as they approach the spring of the arch, bisect the head into smaller arches on each side; these are further subdivided into others, which are uncommonly acute; the interstices of all being filled with several tiers of small opened panelled tracery, mingled with trefoiled and quatrefoiled foliage, in beautiful and variegated profusion. For a window of such large dimensions, the arch is remarkably sharp and lofty; the tracery, too, is uncommon, and of an intricate richness seldom met with, partaking of the perpendicular straight-lined and horizontal curved characters. The form of this tracery, and the armorial bearings, quite fix it to the latter part of the fourteenth century, when the foliated and more elaborate fashion, displaying infinite variety and beauty, was giving way to the upright, or small-arched, style then beginning to take place. For justness of proportion, and elegance of design, we have very few great western or eastern windows equal to this; the easy and graceful ascent from the base to the summit, and the light though rich combination of the tracery, are remarkably pleasing. The lower story of the window was never pierced to admit glazing, but consists of blank panels, which in shape and size exactly resemble the range above them; this was undoubtedly done to preserve a due proportion, which otherwise would have been too short for the breadth. The square and shallow piers of the old basement are continued upon the front, attached to the angles of the tower in the new masonry, as far as to the summit of the middle or window story, where they end in pointed canopies. On the face of each of these, midway, is a niche, both of which have evidently been elegant, but are now almost mouldered away; they originally contained the statues of St. Peter and St. Paul, the tutelary saints of the abbey.

Handsome shelving buttresses flank the northern and south-western angles of the tower, their sets-off worked into canopied pediments; these are finely proportioned, and give a remarkably pleasing effect, by the gradual diminution in breadth as the tower rises to the summit. On the north-eastern angle are vestiges of a flying buttress. The middle story of the tower has two handsome pointed windows in its northern and southern sides; those in the former being now blocked up, and having been barbarously despoiled of their mullions, the blank arches are painted to represent tracery. The upper or bellchamber story displays a double window on every side; they are small but handsome. Between those on the western front is an armed knight standing on a corbel, which rests on the finial of the great window below. He occupies a tabernacle, which has a high straight-sided canopy, flanked with a small pinnacle at each impost. It has been usual to denominate this figure the effigy of Roger Montgomery, the founder; but in the History of Shrewsbury, before quoted, it is most satisfactorily assigned to King Edward III.: the armour of the figure exactly accords with that of the middle and latter part of the fourteenth century. The helmet is conical, the throat and breast clad in mail, while the rest of the figure is enveloped in plated steel. In one hand he bears a fragment of what appears to have been a sceptre, the other rests on the hilt of his sword, now mutilated; round the helmet are the evident remains of a crown. The painted glass of the great window beneath his feet strongly confirms this opinion, displaying as it does a series of armorial bearings of the Royal family, and of the chief nobility of Edward the Third's time, and proving that the tower was in a great part erected, if not finished, during that reign. The battlements, which originally crowned this fine old tower, were suffered either to go to gradual decay after the Dissolution, or were ruined in the civil war, and have been meanly repaired with brick-work.

The large bell, called St. Winifrede's, famed for its fine sound, was preserved long after the Dissolution, as the chief ornament of the abbey tower. It was broken in ringing for the safe return of Corbet Kynaston, Esq., from France, in 1730. Its weight was 35 ewt.: round the upper part of this bell, near the crown, was inscribed,

Sancta Wynefrida deo nos comendare memento,
Ut pietate sua nos serbet ab hoste cruento.

and about the middle was the following Leonine verse,

Protege, pura, pia, quos convoco Virgo Maria.

There is now a deep-toned peal of eight bells in the tower. On the north side of the church is a lofty and handsome porch. Its portal is formed by a deeply recessed square opening, the mouldings of which fall over the angles far down the sides, ending in busts, now mutilated. Within this is a graceful pointed arch, rising from a round column on either side. Above are two chamber stories, each lighted by a small window; the heads nearly flat, and divided by single mullions; on the right and left is a niche, extending the whole height of the upper stories. The bold embattled gable, unnecessarily destroyed, has been replaced by an ill-designed square parapet.

The eastern termination of the church is formed by a wall, built between the two great western piers of the central tower of the ancient church, in which is inserted a pointed window, with mullions selected from the ruins, and placed in it with more care than has been bestowed on the other early reparations.

Although barbarously defaced and curtailed of its fair proportions, the interior of the church has still much of that solemn dignity which irresistibly fills the mind with religious awe, to the excitement of which, the ancient cathedral and monastic churches contribute in a degree far beyond all other ecclesiastical structures, that the art of man has ever yet produced.

The ancient nave displays five arches on each side; three on the eastern portion are semicircular, and rest on short, thick, round piers, having shallow bases and filleted capitals in the plainest and earliest Anglo-Norman style. The two half columns, which adjoin the great piers of the central tower, are, like them, broken into a cluster of massive round shafts with indented capitals: above these are the remains of the triforium. The accommodation for the parochial duties in the abbey church are highly respectable. The altar stands on a raised area, beneath the eastern wall.

Near the western end of the north aisle is the font, which is of great antiquity, and once belonged to the ancient church of High Ercal. The pedestal stands upon an elevated area, paved with very curious ancient glazed tiles, some of which were found on the spot once occupied by the refectory of the abbey: amongst the figures delineated upon the tiles are a knight on horseback, arms of the Talbots, Fitz Alans, Mortimers, &c.

The tower at the west end is nearly open to the nave, divided from it by a lofty and beautiful pointed arch, reaching to the ceiling, and springing from high clustered imposts; the whole breadth and nearly height of the western front of the tower is occupied by the great window; the glazing of this window was restored in 1814 chiefly at the expense, and entirely under the superintendence of the Rev. William Gorsuch Rowland, curate of the parish; the series of armorial bearings was copied from a sketch made by Sandford the herald in 1658. Besides the above, other windows of the church have been embellished with painted glass by the indefatigable exertions of the same benefactor. With the exception of a few old shields of arms, the whole was executed by Sir John Betton of Shrewsbury, and his partner David Evans.

Of the monuments in this church, the oldest is that of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury; but on the fall of St. Chad's, and the demolition of St. Alkmond's church, several ancient monuments, which, from their size, the confined system of modern church-buildings could not, or from their antiquity, the fastidiousness of modern church-builders would not, admit within the new edifices, found an asylum within the ample side aisles of the abbey church. The oldest of these, brought from St. Chad's, is a cumbent figure, representing a person robed to the feet, with a coif drawn close over his head, and tied under his chin, which possibly may be the effigy of one of the judges of assize, who died at Shrewsbury while upon the circuit. A monument was removed from Wellington church in 1788, and stood more than thirty years in the churchyard of that parish. It is composed of alabaster, and contains the figures of a man and his wife, with this inscription:

Hic jacet in tumba corpus Will'mi Charlton armigeri, et Anne Uxor ejus, que quidem Anna obiit vii die Mensis Junii Anno D'ni Mille'mo cccccxxiiii et dictus Will'ms obiit p'mo die Mensis Julii Anno D'ni Mill'imo cccccxliiii. quorum animab' p'picietur Deus.

The sides of this monument consist of a series of five canopied niches; within the first, at the head of the tomb on the north side, is an angel holding a shield, bearing quarterly 1st and 4th, Or, a lion rampant gules, debruised by a bend argent, Charlton. 2nd and 3rd, Gules, ten bezants, Zouch. Within the second niche is a friar or pilgrim. In the centre compartment are two angels, bearing a shield. Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Charlton. 2nd, Argent, on a cheif or, a raven proper, Horde. 3rd, Zouch. The fourth niche contains another friar, and towards the foot of the monument is an angel bearing the arms of Horde singly. Another monument formerly stood in the north aisle of St. Alkmond's, and was transferred to the abbey, and repaired at the expense of Sir Thomas T. Jones, Bart., of Stanley Hall. This is a handsome altar-tomb, bearing two cumbent figures, an alderman in his civic robe, and a lady in a scarlet gown, with the following inscription at the head:

Gulielmus Jones, Aldermanus Villæ Salopiæ, et Ælianora, uxor ejus, jacent sub hoc monumento.

The following inscription is upon the south side:

Gulielmus Jones, obiit 15 Julii, Anno D'ni. 1612.

and on the north side is inscribed,

Æleanora Jones, obiit 25 Feb. 1623.

Arms, 1st and 4th, Argent, a lion rampant vert, vulned on the shoulder gules, Jones. 2nd and 3rd, Or, a bend gules, Cottel. Impaling quarterly of six. 1. Sable, three nags' heads erased argent, Owen. 2. Vert, three eagles displayed in fess, or, Owen Gwynedd. 3. Argent, a lion rampant sable, Madoc ap Meredith. 4. Or, a lion rampant vert, Santhe Hardd. 5. Argent, a boar's head couped proper. 6. As 1. Over the head of this tomb is placed an elegant and finely executed mural monument, bearing an inscription commencing thus: M. S. Heic juxta jacet Thomas Rock, Arm. Vita functus Jan. 3°, Anno Ætat. 62. Dom. 1678, &c., &c.

St. Giles's church, at the end of the Abbey Foregate, is now annexed to the parish of Holy Cross. The church of St. Alkmond's was rebuilt about 1794. It contains a painted window, by Eginton of Birmingham, representing an emblematical figure of Faith. St. Julian's also contains a figure of St. James, of ancient stained glass, which came from Rouen in Normandy. The painted glass of the east window of St. Chad's church, which fell down in 1788, has been removed to St. Mary's; and the church was rebuilt, but not in a style to merit particular notice; its plan is a circle, of the diameter of one hundred feet. The remains of the Franciscan or Grey Friary, on the banks of the Severn, near the east bridge, are supposed to be the refectory. There is no account extant of the exact time when this house was founded, but it is supposed to have been erected by Geoffery Lord Powis.

At the entrance of the town from the London road is a column, erected in 1816, to commemorate the noble actions of Lord Hill, which is surmounted by a statue of his lordship, modelled by Panzetta; the column was designed by Haycock of Shrewsbury. It is of the Doric order, one hundred and twenty feet high, the pedestal and statue not included. It bears the following Inscription on the north side of the pedestal:

TO LIEUTENANT-GENERAL ROWLAND LORD HILL, BARON HILL OF ALMAREZ AND HAWKESTONE, G.C.B., NOT MORE DISTINGUISHED FOR HIS SKILL AND COURAGE IN THE FIELD DURING THE ARDUOUS CAMPAIGNS IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL, THE SOUTH OF FRANCE, AND THE MEMORABLE PLAINS OF WATERLOO, THAN FOR HIS BENEVOLENT AND PATERNAL CARE IN PROVIDING FOR THE COMFORTS AND SUPPLYING THE NECESSITIES OF HIS VICTORIOUS COUNTRYMEN, AND FOR THAT HUMANITY AND GENEROSITY WHICH THEIR VANQUISHED FOES EXPERIENCED AND ACKNOWLEDGED, THE INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN AND COUNTY OF SALOP HAVE ERECTED THIS COLUMN AND STATUE AS A MEMORIAL OF THEIR RESPECT AND GRATITUDE TO AN ILLUSTRIOUS CONTEMPORARY, AND AN INCITEMENT TO EMULATION IN THE HEROES AND PATRIOTS OF FUTURE AGES. A.D. MDCCCXVI.

At Cotton Hill, near Shrewsbury, the celebrated Admiral Benbow was born in 1650; his portrait, preserved in the grand jury-room of the town, was presented by his sister Mrs. Eleanor Hind. Benbow was the subject of a ballad entitled "A true British Hero, or Benbow the Brave," which appears to have been written about the time he sailed for the West Indies in 1701; he died in 1702.

SUTTON, 2 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, contains 15 houses, and 71 inhabitants. It is a rectory. Betton is the seat of R. Scott, Esq.

Wenlock Liberty

Is bounded on the north by South Bradford hundred; on the east by Brimstree and Stottesden hundred; on the south by Overs hundred; and on the east by Condover and Munslow hundred.

BADGER, in a detached part of the liberty, 5 miles N.E. from Bridgnorth, contains 28 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Badger is the seat of Mrs. Hawkins Browne, relict of the late Isaac Hawkins Browne, M.P. for Wenlock. The dingle, a very romantic part of the grounds, is much admired.

BARROW, 2½ miles E. from Wenlock, contains 96 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 13*s.*

BECKBURY, 6 miles N.E. from Bridgnorth, about a mile N. from Badger, contains 54 houses, and 285 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Milburgh, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

BENTHALL, 3 miles N.E. from Wenlock, contains 119 houses, and 554 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy. Benthall Hall, the seat of F. B. Harries, Esq., was built in 1535; part was destroyed by a fire in 1818, but the carved woodwork of the parlour and the staircase was saved.

BROSELEY, 3 miles N.E. from Wenlock, contains 1019 houses, and 4814 inhabitants. It has a market on Wednesday, and a fair on Easter Monday, and is surrounded by mines of coal and iron, having great foundries, wherein excellent malleable iron and great quantities of cast-iron, consisting of cannon, &c. are made. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* Near this place was formerly the Burning Well, so called from its taking fire on a lighted candle being lowered into it, when it burned for upwards of forty-eight hours: but it totally disappeared on the sinking of a coal-pit in the neighbourhood in 1755. The water was supposed to be indebted for its inflammable properties to the petroleum it contained, which is one of the most ignitable substances in nature, and has the property of burning in water. Here are the residences of John Pritchard, Esq. and John Onions, Esq.; and near Broseley, on the south, is Caughley Place, the seat of —— Brown, Esq.

PRIORS DITTON, 8 miles S.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 145 houses, and 645 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* The townships of Ruthale and Ashfield, locally situated in Munslow hundred, are in this parish.

DEUXHILL, in a detached part of Wenlock liberty near Glazeley, 4 miles S. from Bridgnorth, contains 9 houses, and 49 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

EATON, 9 miles S.E. from Wenlock, contains 78 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*

HUGHLEY, 4 miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 17 houses, and 101 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

LINLEY, 4 miles N. from Bridgnorth, contains 19 houses, and 96 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory.

MADELEY, 9 miles N. from Bridgnorth, contains 1081 houses, and 5379 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* Coalbrook Dale, two miles westward, is situated between two lofty hills, and is chiefly famous for its iron bridge over the Severn. This is a very elegant structure, consisting of one arch forty feet high, and more than a hundred feet span; erected in 1779, from a design by Darby. Here are some of the largest iron works in England. At the Birches between Buildwas and Coalbrook Dale, in 1773, an extraordinary convulsion of the earth happened; when several fields, containing about thirty acres of land, were shifted from their site, the ground broken up into irregular masses with immense chasms, in one of which a barn was entirely swallowed up, and a grove with twenty large oak-trees forced into the middle of the Severn, filling up its bed for two hundred yards, and diverting its waters into a new channel. The turnpike road for three hundred and twenty yards was entirely destroyed. The principal chasm extended three hundred and ninety-six yards; its breadth was forty-two, and its greatest depth ten. The devastation is described in a sermon by the Rev. John de la Flechere, vicar of Madeley, which he preached to a large congregation at the place on the following day. Madeley Wood is the seat of W. Anstice, Esq.; and at Coalbrook Dale are seats of Francis and Richard Darby, Esqrs., William Tothill, Esq., and B. Dickinson, Esq. The inclined plane and China manufactory at Coalport, about a mile and a half distant from the iron bridge over the Severn, are particularly worthy of attention.

MONK HOPTON contains 34 houses, and 168 inhabitants.

POSENHALL, containing 3 houses, and 14 inhabitants, is extra-parochial.

SHIPTON, 6 miles S.W. from Wenlock, contains 18 houses, and 126 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory.

STOKE, ST. MILBOROUGH, 6 miles N.E. from Ludlow, near the source of the Ledwich brook, contains 90 houses, and 554 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Milborough, the Abbess of Wenlock, is a vicarage.

WENLOCK, or Much Wenlock, 14 miles S.E. from Shrewsbury, and 148 from London, contains 481 houses, and 2200 inhabitants. The town is situated on the Pho Brook, a branch of the Severn, and consists chiefly of two streets. It has a market on Monday, and fairs on the 12th May, 5th July, 17th October, and 4th December. The Corporation of Wenlock, pursuant to a charter of King Charles I., consists of a bailiff, recorder, two other justices of the peace, and twelve bailiff peers, or capital burgesses. The town, with Broseley and Little Wenlock, sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred by King Edward IV. in 1478, and the right of election is vested in the burgesses, who at present amount to about one hundred; the bailiff is the returning officer: the present members are the Hon. Cecil Weld Forester of Willey, and Paul Beilby Thompson, Esq. of Escrick, Yorkshire. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* The remains of Wenlock Abbey are remarkably extensive and picturesque. St. Milborough, who was the daughter of King Merwald, founder of Leominster, and niece to Wolphen King of Mercia, erected a nunnery here about 680, and presided as abbess over it, with the reputation of great sanctity: this foundation was destroyed by the Danes, but restored by Leofrick Earl of Chester, in the reign of Edward the Confessor. Being again decayed and forsaken, Roger Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, rebuilt and endowed the monastery in 1079, placing therein a prior and convent of Cluniac monks, who were looked upon as a cell to the priory of La Charité in Nivernois. The Abbey was suppressed, with other alien priories, till it was made prioratus indigena, in the reign of Richard II. It was dedicated to St. Milburgh, who is said to have been here buried. At the Dissolution its yearly revenue amounted to 401*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* It stands in a deep valley on the south side of the town, near the churchyard. A large portion of the church exhibits a fine specimen of the architecture of the thirteenth century; the walls of the chapter-house are standing, and traces of the cloisters may be discovered. The prior's lodgings also remain. The whole belongs to Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Bart. The seal of the abbey, found about 1760, in digging the foundation of the church of Clun, which formerly belonged to Wenlock Abbey, is of brass, and represents St. Michael encountering the dragon, with this legend: S · ECCLE · CONVENTVALIS · DE · WENLOK · AD · CAVSAS · TANTVM ·

LITTLE WENLOCK, on the east side of the Wrekin, 5 miles N. from Much Wenlock, contains 184 houses, and 965 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

WILLEY, 5 miles N.W. from Bridgnorth, contains 28 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* Willey Park, the seat of Lord Forester, is large, and adorned with fine woods in the valleys, as well as on the sides of some of the hills, although near the mansion the scenery is more open; at the foot of the eminence, on which the house stands, is a lake of considerable dimensions. The house was erected after designs by Louis Wyatt; it is entirely constructed of fine white stone, with a principal front extending about one hundred and twenty feet, and to the extremity of the offices very nearly three hundred feet. Carriages drive under a portico of the Corinthian order, which opens upon a vestibule leading to a saloon, much admired for its very fine architectural effect. It is forty feet by thirty in dimension, and is adorned with Corinthian columns of scagliola, the entablature supporting a light gallery of communication with the chambers above. In the saloon are large equestrian portraits of the Emperor Napoleon and the Duke of Wellington, K.G.,—the two great generals of the age; and statues of Apollo and Acteon, copies from the antique, upon pedestals. This estate was anciently the residence of the Weld family. Sir John Weld resided at Willey Park in the reign of Charles II.; George Weld, his son, and Sir William Forester, represented Wenlock in Parliament in the reign of William and Mary. Lord Forester is lineally descended from John Forester, Esq. of Watling Street, who held a singularly curious grant from King Henry VIII., to wear his hat in the royal presence, which identical document is preserved in the family. At Ross Hall near Shrewsbury, the late Lord Forester had the honour of receiving a visit in the year 1806 from the Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV., in company with His present Majesty, then Duke of Clarence.

STAFFORDSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Cheshire; on the east by Derbyshire; on the south by Warwickshire and Worcestershire, and on the west by Shropshire. The greatest length is sixty miles, being thirty-eight miles in breadth, and one hundred and eighty miles in circumference. The present county was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, inhabited by the Ordovices, afterwards the Cornavii and Brigantes. During the Saxon heptarchy, Staffordshire formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia. The celebrated Roman road Watling Street crosses the county; and the Roman stations were Etocetum at Wall, and Penocrucium at Penkridge: there is a Roman earthwork at Morton; Roman encampments at Arleywood, Ashton Heath, Ashwood Heath, Kinner, Oldbury, Shareshill, Teddesley Park, and Wolverhampton churchyard; Roman remains at Eccleshall and Wall. There were formerly abbeys at Burton, Chotes, Croxden, Dieulacres, Hanbury, Hilton, and Radmore; also priories at Calwich, Canwell, Lapley, Lichfield, Ronton, Rocester, Sandwell, Stafford, Stone, St. Thomas, Trentham, Tutbury and Wolverhampton. The castles of its earlier lords were at Alton, or Alveton, Audley, Bonebury, Burgh Maer, Burton, Cannock, Caverswall, Chartley, Chesterton, Croxden, Darlaston, Eccleshall, Heleigh, Lichfield, Newcastle, Stafford, Stourton, Tamworth, Tirley, Tutbury and Wednesbury. This county contains one city, Lichfield; one county town, nineteen market-towns, one hundred and fifty parishes, 63,319 inhabited houses, and 341,040 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. Staffordshire returns ten members to Parliament; two for Stafford, two for Lichfield, two for Newcastle-under-Lyne, two for Tamworth, and two for the County, Sir J. Wrottesley, Bart. of Wrottesley Hall, and E. J. Littleton, Esq., of Teddesley Park. The aspect of this county is various; the northern part rises gently in small hills, which, beginning here, run through the heart of England in a continued ridge, rising gradually higher and higher under different names. The Moorland is a rough, dreary, cold tract, the snow lying long on it. It is here observed that the west wind always brings rain, but the east and south winds make fair weather, unless the wind turns about from the west to the south, which then continues rainy. The middle and southern parts of the county are generally level, or with only gentle eminences; to this, however, there are some exceptions; as the limestone hills of Sedgeley, which furnish an inexhaustible supply of that material, and great part of it of excellent quality. The quartzose, or ragstone hills of Rowley furnish an excellent material for roads and pavements. The Clent Hills and Barr Beacon, besides many others of less elevation, as the high grounds on Cannock Heath, the hills of Bushbury and Essington, formed chiefly of, or at least containing, great quantities of gravel. Kinfare Edge, Tettenhall Wood, and some situations near Enville, also command extensive prospects. Staffordshire is particularly celebrated for its Potteries, now become the general name of a district in which the manufacture of earthenware is carried on in an improved manner. These manufactures give employment to nearly 20,000 people in the county; and the operations of digging and collecting the clay, flint, terra porcellana, &c. in Kent, Sussex, Hampshire, Dorsetshire, Devonshire and Cornwall, and conveying them to the different ports, are supposed to employ nearly 40,000 more, besides upwards of 60,000 tons of shipping. In the north-western part of the county considerable iron-works are established; and its southern parts are enlivened by various branches of hardware. The mineral productions of the county are iron ore, limestone, firestone, freestone, pipe-clay, ochre, and a valuable clay which bears the fire very well. The rivers are Blythe, Burne, Churnet, Dane, Dove, Hamps, Ilam, Lime, Manifold, Penk, Smestall, Sow, Stour, Tame, Tern, and Trent. The river Severn passes through Over Areley, and receives the tribute of some considerable brooks in this county. The Trent takes its rise from three springs or heads in the north-western extremity of Staffordshire in the Moorlands. After traversing the Potteries, it runs in a southerly direction past Trentham Park to the town of Stone, whence inclining eastward, at Great Haywood it receives the waters of the Sow; thence pursuing a south-east course is at King's Bromley further augmented by the Blythe, and at Wichnor by the Tame: here suddenly turning to the north-east it flows past the town of Burton, about two miles beyond which it is joined by the Dove; running east, it crosses the south part of Derbyshire, where it receives the Derwent; and now skirting the north-west part of Leicestershire it meets with the Soar, when it becomes a considerable river as it advances through a range of flowery meadows, bounded by high tufted hills, and chequered with villages, to the town of Nottingham. After passing Newark and Gainsborough, it makes a bold junction with the Ouse, and combined with it, forms the grand estuary of the Humber. The Dove rises in the rocky hills of Derbyshire, and pursues a south course at no great distance from the towns of Ashborne and Uttoxeter; at the latter place, inclining to the east, it flows on in a south-east direction, and unites with the Trent near Newton Solney. The lakes of Staffordshire are those of Aqualate, Eccleshall Pool, Latford Pool, Lush Pool, Maer Pool, and New Pool. The canals of this county are, the Birmingham, Coventry and Oxford, Dudley and Netherton, Grand Trunk, Gresley's, Staffordshire and Worcestershire, Stourbridge, Trent and Mersey, and the Wyrley and Essington. The chief manufactures are earthenware, various kinds of hardware, glass toys, hats, shoes, buttons, ferrets, handkerchiefs, twists, sewing-silks, cotton, leather, woollen, and linen.

The Clog, or Perpetual Almanack, was in common use in this county; of the word clog there is no satisfactory etymology in the sense here used, which signified an almanack made upon a square stick. Dr. Plot, who wrote the history of this county in 1686, instances a variety of these old almanacks then in use here. Some he calls Public, because they were of large size, and commonly hung at one end of the mantle-tree of the chimney: others he calls Private, because they were smaller and were carried in the pocket. There were three months contained upon each of the four edges of the clog, the number of days in them are represented by notches: that which began each month had a short turned up mark upon it, and every seventh notch of a larger size stood for Sunday. Upon these ancient clogs or almanacks the symbols of the saints were carefully represented, and all the purposes of a modern almanack were obtained by the use of this log of wood, known to antiquaries by the name of the Staffordshire Clog.—Ingestrie Hall is the seat of Earl Talbot, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Cuttlestone Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Pirehill hundred; on the east by Offlow hundred; on the south by Seisdon hundred, and on the west by Shropshire: the hundred is also separated into eastern and western divisions.

Eastern Division.

BASWICH, or Berkswich, 2 miles S.E. from Stafford, contains 99 houses, and 559 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Walton and Milford. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes near the village; the townships of Acton Trussel, Bednall, and Brockton, are within the parish. Weeping Cross is within the distance of a mile from Baswich; there are two other places so called, one near Shrewsbury and one between Oxford and Banbury. The expression "to return by Weeping Cross" denoted repentance of an undertaking.

BREWOOD, 8 miles N.W. from Wolverhampton, and 4½ miles S.W. from Penkridge, contains 437 houses, and 2263 inhabitants, including the liberties of Chillington and Somerford, and the townships of Bishops Wood, Hide, and Wooley, Kiddermore Green, and Park Lanes. Brewood is said to have been a city; and in ploughing the fields, Roman coins and other antiquities have been found. Before the Conquest the Bishop of Lichfield had a seat here. The town is situated on a gentle eminence, and has a market on Thursday; and a fair, September 19th, for horses and cattle. The inhabitants had a custom of adorning their wells on Holy Thursday with boughs and flowers. Here is a Free School, well endowed, of which the Rev. William Budworth, the friend of Dr. Johnson, was a distinguished master; he died in 1745. Bishop Hurd received his education here. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lichfield. It has a lofty spire, but is not very ancient. Here was formerly a small Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, called The Black Ladies of Brewood, granted at the dissolution to Thomas Giffard. On the northern side of the parish is Boscobel, and the priory of White Ladies, Cistercian nuns, in Shropshire (vide page 104). Chillington Park is the seat of Thomas Giffard, Esq., whose ancestry and family have resided here for many centuries. The house appears to be of the date of Henry VIII., and is remarkable for the various forms of the windows and chimneys. Queen Elizabeth visited Chillington in 1575. It is one of the best timbered estates in the county, adorned by the Pool, a large and beautiful piece of water. Somerford Hall is the seat of the Hon. Edward Monckton. The liberty of Coven is in the parish of Brewood. In the hamlets of this parish considerable quantities of locks and other articles are made, and the Birmingham and Liverpool canal runs through it.

CANNOCK, or Cank, 8 miles N. from Walsall, and 5 miles S.E. from Penkridge, contains 143 houses, and 766 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield; here are fairs on 8th May for horses and toys, and on 18th October for horses, cattle and sheep. The townships of Cannock Wood, Cheslyn Hay, Hednesford and Leacroft, Huntington and Great Wyrley, are all in this parish. Cannock Heath, the most extensive waste in the county, contained upwards of twenty-five thousand acres; being situated nearly in the centre of England it is conjectured to have been a principal seat of the Druids, which idea is strengthened by the names of several places in the neighbourhood having the prefix Col, a word in the British language signifying holy; as Colfield, Colton. Coley, Colwich, &c. Cannock Heath is now almost destitute of wood except on the northern skirts towards Shugborough Park, where some romantic forest scenery and sylvan glades are still to be met with; it abounds in coal, and has some beds of limestone. The herbage, which is very short, affords subsistence to about three thousand head of deer and to numberless sheep, all the freeholders having an unlimited right of common. In one part is an extensive rabbit-warren. There appears to have been a castle in early times upon Cannock Chace, where our Norman kings occasionally resided; the castle existed in the reign of Elizabeth, and one of the offices held under that Queen was the Constable of Cannock Castle. Haywood Park, between Cannock Heath and Shugborough Park, is a romantic dale, with a limpid brook rambling through it, encircled by lofty wooded banks, presenting a rich amphitheatre of umbrageous oaks; this spot, now the property of the Marquess of Anglesey, was formerly the red deer park of the Bishops of Lichfield. Beaudesert Park, the seat of the Marquess of Anglesey, K.G., on the eastern side of Cannock Chace, originally belonged to the Bishops of Lichfield, and was granted to Sir William Paget by King Edward VI.; Richard Sampson, then bishop, accepting of certain impropriations of the value of 183*l.* a year instead. The mansion was partly rebuilt by Thomas Lord Paget in the reign of Elizabeth, but many parts of the building are more ancient. It is constructed of brick and stone, and the original character of its architecture has been tastefully preserved in the extensive alterations made under the direction of the noble marquess. The porch opens upon a hall eighty feet by twenty-one, having a lofty groined ceiling, and a splendid window at the upper end containing the arms of William Lord Paget, K.G., and his lady Anne, daughter and heiress of Henry Preston, Esq. In a gallery at the lower end is an organ by Pyke, the gift of King George III. to the Earl of Uxbridge. The drawing-room, forty-two feet by twenty-seven, contains a portrait of the first Lord Paget by Holbein: of this nobleman, Fuller relates it was said of him, "that he was not only fit to represent kings, but to be a king himself." Here are also portraits of Henrietta Maria Queen of Charles I., and of Henry Earl of Holland by Vandyck, portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte by Ramsay, the Earl of Uxbridge by Pocock, and Sir Arthur Paget by Hoppner. In the windows are portraits in stained glass of Edward IV., Henry VIII., Queen Mary and Elizabeth, and King James I. A magnificent gallery in the house is ninety-seven feet long by seventeen wide. In compartments over recesses for books in the gallery, is a series of paintings representing the most important battles fought under John Duke of Marlborough.

The mansion stands on the side of a sloping eminence five miles north from Lichfield, sheltered above and on each side by beautiful rising grounds, and embosomed in trees commanding in front over the tops of far subjacent woods an extensive and agreeable view of nine different counties, vindicating the propriety of its name. Castle Hill near Beaudesert is the site of a British encampment.

Beaudesert Park in 1815 was honoured by a visit of the Prince Regent, the Duke of Clarence, and the Archdukes John and Louis.

CASTLECHURCH, one mile S.W. from Stafford, contains 231 houses, and 1118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Crown. The townships of Burton, Forbridge and Rickerscote, are included in the parish.

PENKRIDGE, 6 miles S. from Stafford, contains 406 houses, and 2299 inhabitants, including the townships of Bickford, Drayton, Lovedale, Longridge, Mitton, Otherton, Pilcaton, Preston, Rodbaston, Watereaton, and Whiston. The town is situated on the river Penk, over which it has a stone bridge, and eastward is the Staffordshire and Wolverhampton canal. It consists of two streets crossing each other at right angles, through the principal of which is the road from Wolverhampton to Stafford; and has a market on Tuesday, and fairs 30th April, and first Monday in September. The petty sessions for the eastern and western divisions of Cuttleston hundred are held here. It has a charity-school for twelve boys and eight girls; and in 1819 two excellent school-rooms for the children of this and the neighbouring parishes to be educated on the Madras system, with a house for the master and mistress, were built by E. J. Littleton, Esq. M.P., by whom the whole of the expense is defrayed. The church, dedicated to St. Michael the Archangel, is a curacy. It is a large handsome fabric, in the pointed style of architecture, the walls being ornamented with pinnacles and battlements. It contains monuments of the Littleton family of Teddesley Park. The church of Penkridge, or Pencriz, is mentioned in the charter of King Stephen and the bull of Pope Lucius, as given to the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry in the same manner with Wolverhampton and Stafford, which were Royal free chapels; and it is probable that this of Penkridge might be of the same nature. The advowson of the church and the manor were granted by Hugh House to the Archbishop of Dublin and his successors, which gift was confirmed by King John in 1215; and in process of time the archbishop was always dean of this church, and had the collation of all the prebendaries, who were thirteen in number, about the year 1534, when they were valued at 106*l.* 15*s.* The grant of King John was abolished by the Act of Edward VI. in 1547, by which colleges and chantries were vested in the Crown.

The chapelry of Coppenhall and the township of Dunston are within the parish.

Sir Edward Littleton of Pileaton Hall was created a baronet 28th June 1627. This ancient and curious mansion has been deserted by the family for Teddesley Park, where the mansion was built by Sir Edward Littleton, Bart., about 1780. Sir Edward Littleton, Bart. died in 1812 sine prole, when the title became extinct; he was succeeded in his estates by Edward John Littleton, Esq., M.P. for the county, grandson of his sister Frances, wife of Moreton Wallhouse, Esq. of Hatherton in this county. The mansion at Teddesley commands an extensive view of a well cultivated country on the west, and of Cannock Heath and the hills on the east; the woods and plantations of the park are of very considerable extent. In a small square Roman camp within the park, a short dagger was found in 1780; the metal is iron, and the form perfect, although much corroded.

RUGELEY, 7 miles N.W. from Lichfield, and 9½ miles S.E. from Stafford, contains 494 houses, and 2677 inhabitants. It is situated within a short distance of the river Trent, on the Trent and Mersey canal; several mills and iron forges stand on a brook that flows through the town, which consists of a principal street on the sides of the road from Lichfield to Stafford. Here is carried on a considerable trade in felts and hats, with a market on Tuesday; and fairs 6th June and 21st Oct. for horses, sheep, and cattle. The town is governed by two constables. The church, dedicated to St. Augustin, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 2*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. An ancient timber-framed house near the church once belonged to the Chetwynds. Hagley Hall, the seat of the Hon. Robert Curzon, M.P., is within half a mile of the town, environed with beautiful woods and plantations. The late Viscount Curzon in the alterations of the house, made under his direction, rendered it picturesque in appearance, although it is extremely irregular upon the front, arising from the enlargements that have been made at various periods. Hagley was the patrimonial estate of the Weston family, from the early time of Edward III. Sir Richard Weston, created Earl of Portland by King Charles I., was descended of this family. Hagley afterwards became the property of Viscount Curzon, on whose decease in 1820 it was left to his son the present proprietor, who is brother to Earl Howe. About a mile north of Rugeley the Grand Trunk canal is carried over the river Trent by means of an aqueduct. A celebrated cold bath in the neighbourhood springs from beneath a hill on Cannock Chace.

SHARESHILL, 5 miles N. from Wolverhampton and about the same distance S. from Penkridge, contains 53 houses, and 286 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The church was rebuilt about 1750, except the tower. Some curious monuments were preserved at the demolition of the ancient edifice, said to belong to the Swinnerton family. In Shareshill are two encampments, supposed to have been of Roman construction. Great and Little Sardon are included within the parish, through which the Staffordshire canal passes over Calf Heath: near Great Sardon is the Four Crosses Inn, viz. the arms of the see of Lichfield. Dean Swift, who rested at this inn on his way to Ireland, finding the landlady a notorious scold, wrote this distich on the window:

> Thou fool! to hang four crosses at thy door:
> Hang up thy wife, there needs not any more.

Western Division.

BLYMHILL, 7 miles S.W. from Penkridge, and 4½ miles N.E. from Shiffnall, contains 121 houses, and 604 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Brincton. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*

BRADLEY, 3 miles N.W. from Penkridge, contains 134 houses and 723 inhabitants, including the liberties of Billington and Woolaston. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* The inhabitants repair the fence of the churchyard in allotments proportionate to the land they occupy, on which account it is not uniformly inclosed. Alstone, Brough, and Rule, formerly deemed extra-parochial, are now considered in this parish, which is famous for its iron-works.

CHURCHEATON, 5 miles N.W. from Penkridge, contains 151 houses, and 829 inhabitants, including the townships of Marston, High Own, and Little Own, Oslow, and Wood Eaton. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* The Birmingham and Liverpool canal passes near the village.

FORTON, on the borders of the county, 11 miles W. from Stafford, and 1½ mile N.E. from Newport in Shropshire, contains 123 houses, and 702 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Meer. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*; it contains memorials of the Skrymshire family. The Newport branch of the Liverpool and Birmingham canal passes the eastern side of the village; and beyond is a large pool, or meer, covering two hundred and fifty acres, denominated by the Romans Aqua Lata. Aqualate Hall, the seat of Sir Thomas Fletcher Boughey, Bart., is situated upon its banks, amidst rich and well wooded grounds, occupying the southern side of the lake. Anchills, from Ancilis, denotes a Roman station. Forton by its name, and also that of Warton near it, indicates a place of defence and contest. Monk's Farm, a small estate in the neighbourhood, was the occasional residence of the Abbot of Shrewsbury.

GNOSAL, 7 miles S.W. from Stafford, contains 182 houses, and 1038 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is a very ancient and interesting edifice, and contains an altar-tomb, supporting a recumbent figure in chain mail. It was formerly a Royal free chapel, and was enjoyed by secular canons. The Bishop of Lichfield was accounted dean; and there were four prebends, viz. Mordhall, Suckerhall, Baverlay Hall, and Chiltren Hall, the last valued at 14*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the three others at 11*l.* each; the patronage of all which was granted by King Edward VI. to the Bishop of Lichfield and his successors. The church of Gnosal has peculiar privileges, of very ancient date. The minister and churchwardens annually elect a jury of twelve men, who are empannelled and deliver a verdict on all ecclesiastical matters, concerning which any dispute may arise during the ensuing year. The hamlets of Apeton, Cowley, Knightley, and Moreton are within the parish; the Birmingham and Liverpool canal passes over Gnosal Heath through Cowley.

HAUGHTON, 4 miles S.W. from Stafford, contains 93 houses, and 473 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

LAPLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Penkridge, contains 33 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* Here was an alien priory of Black monks belonging to the abbey of St. Remigius at Rheims, to which it was given by Algar Earl of Mercia in the time of Edward the Confessor: having shared the fate of the alien priories, it became the property of Tong College in Shropshire, by a grant from the Crown, to which it belonged at the Dissolution, when it was granted to Sir Richard Manners. The township of Wheaton Aston, on the opposite side of the Birmingham and Liverpool canal, is in this parish. Stretton, about a mile southward of Lapley, stands upon the Watling Street, and was anciently a seat of the Congreves, of which family was the celebrated dramatic writer. Richard Hurd, successively Bishop of Lichfield and Worcester, a distinguished prelate, was born here. Land in this parish is held by Borough English.

NORBURY, 5 miles S.W. from Eccleshall, and 3½ N.E. from Newport in Shropshire, contains 35 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* It is an ancient building, with a modern brick tower, and contains several memorials of the Skrymshire family, formerly lords of the manor. The township of Weston Jones is within the parish.

SHERIFF HALES, on the borders of Shropshire, in which county it is partly situated, is 10 miles W. from Penkridge, and 2½ N.E. from Shiffnall. It contains 167 houses, and 876 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

WESTON UNDER LIZARD, on the borders of Shropshire, 4 miles N.E. from Shiffnall, and 7 miles S.W. from Penkridge, contains 32 houses, and 296 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* Weston Hall, the seat of the Earl of Bradford, is situated in a well-timbered and extensive park, one of the most picturesque spots in the county. This seat has for three generations belonged to the family of Bridgeman, who are lineally descended from Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Bart., Lord Keeper of the Great Seal in the reign of Charles II., of whom it was said by Prince, in his "Worthies of Devon," that "his moderation and equity were such that he seemed to carry a chancery in his breast."

2. Offlow Hundred,

On the eastern side of the county, is bounded on the north, east, and south by the adjoining counties of Derby, Warwick, and Worcester; and on the west by each of the other hundreds of Staffordshire. It is separated into two divisions, north and south.

Northern Division.

ALREWAS, on the banks of the Trent, 5 miles N.E. from Lichfield, contains 202 houses, and 979 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Chancellor of the cathedral of Lichfield. The hamlets of Fradley and Orgreave are in this parish. Orgreave Hall, the seat of Samuel Winter, Esq., is about a mile westward of the village. The Grand Trunk canal passes Alrewas.

ALREWAS HAYES is extra-parochial, where, says Erdeswick, there is plenty of deer and game, and a noble piscary on the rivers Trent and Tame. It consists of 11 houses, and 74 inhabitants.

BROMLEY REGIS, or King's Bromley, on the Trent, 4½ miles N. from Lichfield, contains 110 houses, and 612 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Alrewas in the cathedral of Lichfield. Bromley derives its additional name from its having been the property of the Crown for two centuries after the Norman Conquest. It had in earlier times been distinguished as the residence of the earls of Mercia. Leofric, the fifth earl of Mercia, husband of the famous Godiva, died here in 1057. Dr. Plot, in his History of Staffordshire, relates an instance of longevity in the person of Mary Cooper, residing in this parish, who had seen her descendants to the sixth generation alive at the same time, and could say to her daughter, "Rise, daughter, go to thy daughter, for thy daughter's daughter hath got a daughter." Bromley Hall is the seat of J. Lane, Esq., descended from Col. John Lane, whose sister was so conspicuous for her remarkable zeal in the preservation of King Charles II. after the battle of Worcester.

BURTON UPON TRENT, 125 miles from London, and 21 miles E. from Stafford, contains 833 houses, and 4114 inhabitants. It is situated on the northern bank of the river, over which it has an ancient bridge of thirty-six arches, which, aided by the trees that grow near it, possesses a highly picturesque appearance. At the west end formerly stood a chapel, said to have been erected by Edward II. in memory of his victory over the Earl of Lancaster. This bridge is supposed to have been built some time before the Conquest, and coeval with the foundation of the abbey. The town, considerable both for trade and manufacture, consists of one principal street, crossed by another at right angles. It is governed by a perpetual bailiff, coroner, constables, &c., who are chosen by the lord of the manor: and has a market on Thursday, and fairs 5th February, 5th April for cattle and horses, Holy Thursday for cattle, 16th July for toys, and 29th October for cattle and horses. Here are extensive cotton works and iron forges, it having the advantage of navigable communication with all parts of the county by the river Trent, part of which is rendered navigable by art, and by the Grand Trunk canal. The chief production of Burton is ale, and its excellence is celebrated in most parts of England. In the brewing of the ale, hard water is used in preference to soft, which certainly makes a great difference in its strength: and is accounted for by Dr. Darwin on the supposition that some of the saccharine acid in malt forms a kind of mineral sugar by its combination with the calcareous earth of hard water, which, like true sugar, is convertible into spirit. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Modwen, is a curacy. The ancient beautiful edifice was taken down, and the present one erected in 1720. Here was formerly an extensive abbey, founded in 1004 by Wulfric Sprott, for Benedictine monks: the chief remains are vestiges of the cloisters, visible in the old walls near the church; and on the margin of the river is the abbot's lodgings or manor-house, much altered by additions and repairs. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Modwen, and at the Dissolution was valued at 356*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* per annum. The lands and endowments of the abbey were soon afterwards granted to Sir William Paget, or Lord Paget of Beaudesert in 1569, in whose posterity the greatest part of the estates has since continued; and it is now the property of the Marquess of Anglesey. The lord of the manor enjoys the privileges which the abbots formerly possessed. He has a Court of Record, whose pleas can be maintained to any amount; and here is a Court of Requests for the recovery of small debts. The townships of Branson, Burton extra, Horninglow, and Stretton, are in this parish.

The arms of Burton are Barry wavy of six, argent and azure; on a chief gules, an eagle displayed between two fleurs de lis, or.

CLIFTON CAMPVILLE, on the borders of the county, 5 miles N.E. from Tamworth, contains 111 houses, and 626 inhabitants, including the township of Haunton. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 30*l.* In the church is a splendid monument of Sir John Vernon and his wife, both of whom died in 1543. Clifton was in possession of the Campville family from 1200 to 1315, whence the addition to its name. It was afterwards the property of Sir Humphrey Stanley, Knt. banneret and knight of the body to Henry VII., who died in 1505, and is buried in the chapel of St. Nicholas in Westminster-abbey. Clifton Hall is now the residence of Henry Stokes, Esq. The chapelry of Harleston is in this parish.

DRAYCOTT, on the borders of Needwood Forest, 5 miles S.E. from Uttoxeter, and 7 miles N.W. from Burton, contains 63 houses, and 321 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

EDINGHALL, or Edingale, on the borders of the county, and partly situated in Derbyshire, 5 miles N. from Tamworth, contains 44 houses, and 224 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Alrewas, in Lichfield Cathedral.

HAMSTALL RIDWARE, 6 miles N. from Lichfield, and 4 miles E. from Rugeley, contains 84 houses, and 455 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 1*s.* The manor-house was once fitted up in a state of great splendour; near it is a watch-tower, ascended by a staircase, and open at the top, which formerly communicated with the other buildings.

HANBURY, on the northern edge of Needwood Forest, 6 miles

N.W. from Burton, contains 28 houses, and 147 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, the value of which is not certified, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield. The manor of Hanbury with the rectory was given by Henry VIII. to Sampson Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry and his successors; and here the bishops frequently resided. The name of the village is derived from the Saxon Hean, high, it being situated on an eminence that commands a bold view over the rich meadows upon the Dove, which here separates the county from Derbyshire. The church, an ancient building, stands on the edge of the steep declivity towards the Dove: under an arch in the south wall is the sculptured figure of Sir John de Hanbury, and there are also memorials of the families of Villiers, Adderley, Agard, and Egerton. The parish register, commencing in 1574, is perhaps unique of its kind, being richly illuminated on the margin with blazonry of arms, and containing several curious epitaphs not found in the church. Here was a monastery, of which St. Werburgh, daughter of Wulfric and sister of Ethelred, kings of Mercia, was abbess. She died here, and was buried at Chester, where a splendid shrine was erected to her honour: not even a vestige of the building is extant. The parish is very extensive, and contains the most romantic part of Needwood Forest, with the townships of Coton, Fauld, Hanbury Woodend, and Marchington Woodlands, the hamlet of Stubby-lane, and the chapelries of Marchington and Newborough. Coton Hall is the seat of Charles Bowyer Adderley, Esq. Fauld Hall, an ancient timber-framed edifice on the banks of the Dove, was the property and residence of William Burton, the historian of Leicestershire, who died here in 1645. Robert Burton, the learned author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy," was his brother. Burton's collections for this county were given by his son to Walter Chetwynd, Esq. of Ingestre, and were used by Shaw in his History of Staffordshire. Holly Bush Hall, near Newborough, is the property of Earl Talbot.

LICHFIELD, 119 miles from London, and 16 miles S.E. from Stafford, contains 1121 houses, and 6075 inhabitants. It is situated on a rivulet which falls into the Trent, and consists of four principal streets, and several smaller ones, the road from Birmingham to Newcastle running through it. The houses, chiefly ancient, are intermixed with good modern buildings. It is divided into the City and the Close, and forms a distinct county, possessing very large and peculiar privileges; is governed by two bailiffs, chosen annually out of twenty-four burgesses, a recorder, sheriff, steward, and inferior officers. Their seal represents a view of the cathedral, with the bodies, heads, and limbs of men, crowns, swords, and banners, strewed upon the ground before it. The arms, Ermine, on a cross quarterly pierced, or, four chevrons gules. The markets on Tuesday and Friday are plentifully supplied, and at a reasonable rate. Fairs, Ash Wednesday, for cattle, sheep, bacon, cheese, and iron; 12th May for cattle and sheep, and first Tuesday in November for geese and cheese. A court is annually held at Green Hill, at the east end of the city, on Whit Monday, a temporary stand being erected for the occasion upon the spot, amidst a grove of trees, and surrounded with booths, &c. The constables of the city, attended by armed men, morris-dancers, &c., escort the sheriff, town-clerk, and bailiffs, to the bower, when all persons owing suit and service are summoned to this "court of array, or view of men and arms." The dozeners or petty constables of the twenty-one decennaries or wards of the city attend with their respective emblems, and deliver rolls of the names of all men residing within their several districts: during the course of the day the constables, &c. perambulate the city, the armed men firing volleys over the houses, and conclude by a procession to the market-place, where the town-clerk delivers a charge to the constables, and thanks them for their attendance. Lichfield returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred 33 Edward I. The right of election is vested in the bailiffs, magistrates, freeholders of 40*s.* per annum, and all that hold by burgage tenure; and in such freemen only as are enrolled paying scot and lot, who at present amount to about six hundred. The present members are Sir George Anson of Rushal Hall, and George Granville Venables Vernon, Esq., son of the Archbishop of York

The Bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry is said to have been founded by Oswy King of Mercia, in the year 656; and although it has a double name, yet, like Bath and Wells, is only a single diocese. It was so extremely wealthy, that King Offa, by the favour of Pope Adrian, constituted it an archiepiscopal see, a title laid aside on the death of that king. In 1075, Peter, the 34th bishop, removed the see to Chester; and in 1102, Robert de Limesey, his immediate successor, removed it to Coventry; Hugh Novant, the 41st bishop, moved it back to Lichfield, but with great opposition from the monks of Coventry; and the dispute was finally settled in a manner nearly similar to that of Bath and Wells, the bishop being styled of both places, and Coventry having the precedence. It was agreed that they should elect the bishop alternately, and that they should both make one Chapter to the bishop, in which the Prior of Coventry should be the chief. It continued thus till the Reformation, when the priory of Coventry being dissolved, the style of the bishop continued as before; but an Act of Parliament was passed in 1541, 33 Henry VIII., to make the dean and chapter of Lichfield one sole chapter to the bishop. This see has given three saints to the church, and to the nation one lord chancellor, three lord treasurers, three presidents of Wales, &c. The Diocese contains the whole counties of Stafford and Derby, except two parishes of the former, the largest part of Warwickshire, and nearly one half of Shropshire, comprising 555 parishes. It is valued in the King's books at 559*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, and computed to be worth 2,800*l.* per annum.

The cathedral, built by Oswy King of Mercia, stood on the same site as the present church, upon the declivity of a hill, inconvenient for such an edifice, but chosen by the King as the venerated spot whereon a number of Christian martyrs suffered death under the Diocletian persecution. A distance of thirty yards more to the north would have placed the building on the summit of the hill, where the great labour of levelling the ground, which appears to have been employed, might have been spared; and where the length of the edifice might have been carried duly east and west, which has not been done, nor could without great inconvenience have been accomplished in its present situation. The sanctity of the site was thought to compensate amply for its defects. Hence is derived an additional proof in support of the tradition concerning the Christian martyrs of Lichfield.

The present fabric was begun by Bishop Clinton, who presided over this church from the year 1128 to 1153. The architecture employed in churches, during this period, was wholly of the Anglo-Norman style. Consequently, so far as the building then proceeded, it was in this character, still to be traced in some parts of the edifice. On the outside of the transept are some Norman buttresses and mouldings, and the windows have apparently been altered from circular to pointed. In the north aisle adjoining the choir, and in the northern and southern portals, and about the building now used for the bishop's consistory court, perhaps the most ancient part of the fabric, are enrichments of the Anglo-Norman character.

Early in the thirteenth century, the style of building with pointed arches began generally to prevail. The parts of this fabric, already erected, seem at that time to have been altered after the new model, and the additional buildings to have been carried up entirely in the same character. In 1235, Royal permission was granted to the dean and chapter to get stone for the fabric in the forest of Hopways; and there appears to have been another Royal grant to the same purpose at an earlier period. About fifty years afterwards, Bishop Langton lengthened the building by the addition of a lesser choir or chancel, under the name of Our Lady's Choir. By this prelate also a vaulted roof was placed over the transept, which before his time is said to have been open to the exterior covering; a proof of which is now to be seen in the heads of windows appearing between the two roofs. If the vaulting of the transept was the work of this bishop, it was probably done in the early part of his episcopacy; for the style of enrichment is more ancient than that in the Lady Choir, which is known to be the work of his later days; and by the same method of judging, it is presumed that the remainder of the vaulting throughout the church was executed either late in his time or subsequently.

During the three succeeding centuries, the fabric does not appear to have undergone any very important alterations. In the civil wars, the Close of this cathedral being surrounded by a wall and foss, the work of Bishop Langton, was garrisoned for the King; and in March 1643 was compelled to surrender to the enemy. In the course of the next month it was recovered by Prince Rupert, and continued in the possession of the Royalists till after the battle of Naseby. The King, in his retreat from that fatal conflict, passed through Lichfield and was lodged in the Close; as he was afterwards, at two several times, in the course of that year. In 1646, the Royal cause becoming hopeless, this garrison, with many others throughout the kingdom, submitted to the conquerors. During these years of warfare, this cathedral, being frequently in a state of siege, suffered much from the artillery of the enemy. The tall central spire was completely thrown down. While the Puritans were in possession of the structure, they stripped it entirely of its external covering, and of every thing which they could convert into money; and, from hatred to idolatry, mutilated the images and carved ornaments, and destroyed the monuments and the painted glass. After the Restoration, when Dr. Hackett came to be enthroned bishop of this cathedral, he found it no other than a splendid ruin. By the zeal of this pious, generous, and active prelate, such contributions were obtained as to enable him in the course of a few years to restore this desolated church to a considerable share of its former dignity. The exterior of this cathedral, although it has suffered deplorably from puritanical malignity, and from the influence of time and weather on a mouldering stone, is still seen to exhibit much that is grand and beautiful. This church is singularly adorned by three tall spires, which, varying their apparent position, as the spectator changes his place, afford a variety of interesting views to the surrounding country. But they will bear a near and critical examination. The two western spires appear to have been erected in the thirteenth century, not long after this pyramidical kind of steeple first appeared in England. They are well proportioned and highly ornamented; and the pinnacles, from amongst which they rise, connect them gracefully with the supporting towers, and with the whole western front. All this western façade is eminently beautiful, the design noble and elegant, and the component parts harmoniously adapted. It is still superlatively rich in tabernacled statues. A figure of King Charles II. placed over the large window is the work of a stonemason, whose loyalty, it may be supposed, rather than his success in statuary, procured for him the honour of knighthood. The western front comprehends the portals opening upon the two aisles, the grand central entrance with its beautiful portico, and the row of kings seated in their tabernacles above. These kings have been supposed to represent the monarchs of Israel—a supposition resting on mere conjecture,—a conjecture which seems to have had no other foundation, than that one of the kings appears with a harp, and was consequently taken for King David. At Canterbury, York, Lincoln, and Exeter, there is a similar display of kings, but they are known and acknowledged to be British. Their dress and costume is British, and they all bear strong resemblance to those at Lichfield, and were put up towards the conclusion of the fourteenth century. It seems, in short, to have been a prevailing custom at this time and the early part of the fifteenth century, to place on the western fronts of the fabric, or of the choir of cathedrals, the statues of their kings; and it may reasonably be supposed that these at Lichfield must have had resemblance to those of other churches. It is therefore more likely that the regal statues refer to English history than to that of Scripture.

The number of these statues is twenty-five, all of them kings, bearing regal crowns, except the central one, which appears by the mitre and episcopal habit to represent a Christian bishop. There can be no donbt that this is St. Chad, the first stationary Bishop of Lichfield, and after his death and canonization by the Pope, a patron saint of this and other churches. In this central situation, with twelve kings on his right hand, and the same number on his left, he appears to make a division of the kings into two separate classes. That on his right hand, if beginning, as at Lincoln, with William the Conqueror, concludes with Richard II., as at Canterbury, and is exceeded only at York, by a period of about twenty years. In the restoration of these statues, they were found to accord well with the memorials and character of the princes whom they are here supposed to represent. Every ancient lineament, in face, and figure, and attitude, has been carefully preserved; and the parts totally lost have been supplied from acknowledged portraits, or the seals and coins of the kings. The twelve kings on the right hand of St. Chad, beginning with the Conqueror, bring down the regular succession, as above stated, to the period when these statues are supposed to have been erected, the reign of Richard II., who, then being upon the throne, is placed nearest to the saint; the order commences on the extremity of the north-west tower. As to the twelve statues on the left hand of St. Chad, it would have been difficult to ascertain the kings whom they were intended to represent, if a clue to the discovery had not been afforded in the king bearing the harp. This description is appropriate to only one British king, the renowned Alfred, whom alone history represents as an accomplished poet and musician, and tells how he entered the camp of his Danish foes with harp in hand, personating a minstrel. After having ascertained the ninth king in this row to be Alfred, we naturally look to the Saxon kings, who preceded and followed him, to make up the line of succession. These statues were all restored by Joseph Harris, of Bath, sculptor, in 1820 and 1821. The three western portals, and especially the central one, are most beautifully enriched with sculptured ornaments. Within the receding porch of the latter are to be seen injured statues of the Virgin and Child, and of four attendant saints, called the Four Evangelists, but two of them are evidently female figures; and upon a higher range, Christ ministered to by angels. The lace work and purfled mouldings, within and without, being wrought on a durable stone, retain much of their ancient excellence. In viewing these elegant enrichments, which may be traced through many parts of this beautiful front, their pious and tasteful magnificence cannot but be admired.

The great central or rood spire having been thrown down in the civil war by the artillery of the besiegers, was rebuilt by Bishop Hackett, not perhaps with sufficient attention to the character of the tower which supported it, nor to that of the sister spires; but it is in other respects a noble piece of architecture, erected, as it has been said, from a model by Sir Christopher Wren, intended originally for Westminster Abbey. The northern portal is deeply recessed. Five mouldings, delicately and expressively sculptured, run parallel through the recess; two are composed of foliage and flowers, one of angels in ovals, two of patriarchs and saints. Amongst the latter, and on the lowest range, is supposed to be Saint Chad, the patron saint, administering baptism to the Saxon Prince Wulfere. The southern portal is of the same character, but underwent considerable alteration at the close of the seventeenth century, as appears by the insertion of the arms of Bishop Lloyd, and of Dean Addison, amongst its sculptured ornaments. The arms in a lozenge adjoining, are the paternal coat of Lady Catherine Leveson, grand-daughter of the celebrated Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, and wife to Sir Richard Leveson of Trentham, K.B. She was a bountiful benefactress to the cathedral at the time when it was restored by Bishop Hackett; and opposite to the arms are the remains of another tablet, which has contained an inscription recording this lady's pious munificence. Of the statues over this door no written or traditionary information is left. The central one seems to have been representative of Christ; the external one eastward, bearing a lamb within a glory, St. John the Baptist. Near the outside of this portal is an ancient but elegant monument in stone, with a recumbent figure of a dean or canon of this church in the style of the fourteenth century. On the north side, under one of the windows, west of the transept, are the remains of dean Yotton's monument and chantry, 1512. In a tabernacle, on one of the external buttresses of the choir and its southern aisle, is the figure of a female saint, the face destroyed, but the drapery light and elegant, wonderfully preserved, through times of danger, in an exposed situation. From Bishop Hackett's time, few alterations were made in the fabric till the year 1788, when the building being much dilapidated, from the insufficiency of the fund appointed to support it, subscriptions were raised in the diocese to repair and adorn it; and Dr. Proby, then dean, generously advanced the loan of a considerable sum of money, afterwards repaid under the authority of Parliament. The expenditure was placed under the direction of James Wyatt, architect to His Majesty, who substantially repaired the external structure, and restored many parts of the internal decorations. Observing the two choirs to be of corresponding architecture, he removed the screen which separated them. This was an altar-piece of painting on wood, after a Grecian design, behind which he discovered the original screen, erected by Bishop Langton, and formerly containing the rich shrine of St. Chad. This fine piece of sculpture had been so mutilated in the civil wars, as to discourage any attempt to restore it by Bishop Hackett's artists. But, with the assistance of Roman cement, Wyatt repaired it; who, adapting a part of it to form the new altar-piece, employed the remainder to compose the screen, which is now the admired basis of the organ, and beautiful porch or entrance into the choir. In the niches of this restored screen, he placed the stalls of the dean and precentor, and of two other canons. In the year 1814 this screen was extended by the addition of two residentiary stalls; and the six adjoining arches, which had been closed by Wyatt, were re-opened; and stalls for the remaining clergy were erected under them, after the same model: thus was obtained, not only a correspondence of architecture and ornament in the style of Bishop Langton's time, but an enlargement also of the choir in breadth, bearing a fitter proportion to the length given to it by the late alteration. The stalls, which were at this time removed, had been put up by Bishop Hackett, but in a style bearing no resemblance to the chaste and beautiful enrichments of the ancient choir. The pulpit, reading-desk, and pews, which were new in 1789, after the designs of Wyatt, were continued. The vaulted roof of this choir is deservedly admired. It does not boast that profusion of tracery common in pointed architecture of a later style; but there are persons of taste, who prefer the simplicity and elegance of design exhibited in this specimen, tracing its progress from the base, on which it apparently rests, to the more intricate combinations of florid architecture. The nave and its aisles afford an excellent specimen of the simple, yet rich and beautiful architecture of the thirteenth century, and early part of the fourteenth. The clustered columns, with foliated capitals, each different from the other, supporting the pointed arches delicately moulded, the windowed triforia, and the vaulted roof, elegantly and curiously embossed, produce a light and airy, and at the same time most solemn effect. The great western window having been totally destroyed during the Usurpation, was restored at the expense of King James II. when Duke of York, and was afterwards filled with painted glass, the work of Brookes, by the legacy of Dr. Addenbroke, who died dean of this cathedral in 1776. In the centre of the circular part of this painting are the arms of James Duke of York; placed there at the time that he gave the window. It has been before observed, that the stained glass which was formerly placed in the windows of this church was totally destroyed in the civil war: that which now adorns the principal windows of the choir was obtained by the dean and chapter in 1802, through the assistance of Sir Brooke Boothby, Bart.; who, travelling through the bishopric of Liege in Germany, after it was under the dominion of the French, visited the dissolved abbey of Herckenrode. Here twenty-five regular nuns of the Cistercian order, all of noble extraction, had been in possession of a splendid revenue; and rebuilding their chapel in the sixteenth century, had adorned the windows with the choicest productions of glass staining: this was precisely the period when the art had attained its highest pitch of perfection; for at this time the technical knowledge, by chemical experiments, of producing a variety of bright and splendid colours upon glass, had made its greatest advance. And the artists had now the advantage of availing themselves of those wonderful improvements in design, which had taken place in the early part of this century, under the great masters of the Italian school. Add to this, that the reformation of religion now established on the continent had occasioned, a selection of more pure and Scriptural subjects for the decoration of churches, and a rejection of many legendary representations, which had disgraced the art prior to this æra. Sir Brooke Boothby bargained for the glass, consisting of 340 pieces, at the price of 200*l.*, and transferred the purchase to the dean and chapter of the cathedral. The short peace of Amiens afforded an opportunity of safely importing the glass, which was sufficient to fill seven of the large windows in the chancel or lady choir of this cathedral. The two remaining windows are of modern staining. In these, placed by the side of the German glass, it was thought proper to attempt nothing of more difficult design and execution than armorial or heraldic bearings. The ornamental parts, and the disposition of the whole, were designed by the Rev. W. G. Rowland, of Shrewsbury, and the staining executed by Sir John Betton, of the same place, who was also employed in repairing the parts of the ancient glass which had arrived broken or defective. The first window on the south of the chancel contains the arms of the Bishops of Lichfield and Coventry, from the period of the Reformation to the present time. In the summit of this window, at the uppermost part of the tracery, are the Royal arms of Great Britain and Ireland. Below these are the archiepiscopal arms of Canterbury, and the episcopal arms of Lichfield and Coventry. Still lower, in one line, are the arms of Bishop Langton, who built this beautiful part of the church; of Bishop Hackett, who restored it after the devastation of the civil war; and of a late Bishop, the Honourable James Cornwallis, D.D., to whose paternal care and exertions this church is indebted for the Act of Parliament, by which the fund appropriated to the fabric, before miserably defective, was so increased as to enable the dean and chapter to purchase these magnificent ornaments of foreign glass; and by whose munificence the expense of staining this heraldic window was principally defrayed. In the body of this window the arms of the successive bishops are disposed in four columns, containing five coats in each, and with the arms of each prelate are impaled those of the see over which he presided at the time of his decease. Of the prelates, whose arms are here exhibited, three were engaged in the translation of the Bible, published by Royal authority: Bishop Bentham, by Queen Elizabeth; Archbishop Abbot, and Bishop Overall, by King James I.; Bishops Overton, Overall, Hackett, Lloyd, Chandler, Smalbrooke, and Hurd, are amongst the list of English authors of greater or less celebrity. The prebendal window is immediately opposite to the episcopal window, and was designed by the same artists, at the expense of the persons whose arms and names it bears, being the members of the larger chapter, who were possessed of their respective stalls during any portion of the time in which this window was under the hands of the artists, from 1806 to 1808 inclusive. It is divided into three columns; the first containing the arms of the deans and residentiaries, the second and third, those of the prebendaries. Fifteen of the subjects painted on the German glass are taken from Scriptural history, beginning with the window next adjoining the episcopal one, and proceeding eastward. In this window are four compartments: 1. Pontius Pilate delivering Jesus to be crucified; 2. Jesus going forth to be crucified; 3. The body of Jesus taking down from the Cross; 4. The Resurrection of Jesus. The smallest southern window contains, 5. The Day of Judgement; 6. The Descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles; 7. The incredulity of Thomas reproved. In the south-east window are, 8. Jesus washing his Disciples' feet, and then taking the Paschal Supper with them. Judas Iscariot going out to betray him; 9. Jesus entering into Jerusalem, and afterwards the Greeks brought to him; 10. The apprehension of Jesus after his agony in the Garden. In the eastern window over the altar-piece are, 11. The Ascension of Christ into Heaven; 12. Jesus with the two Disciples at Emmaus. In the north-east window are, 13. Jesus scourged; 14. Jesus crowned with thorns, derided, and beaten; and 15. The Annunciation to the Virgin Mary by the Angel, and her consequent visitation of her cousin Elizabeth. The two windows of ancient stained glass remaining to be described in the choir are on the north side; and the subjects which they contain are both of the same character. In each of these are displayed portraits of the nobility and gentry connected with the religious house of Herckenrode. They are evidently portraits taken from the life, and are very delicately designed and penciled. They are supposed to represent the Abbess of Herckenrode, Matilda, of the noble family of de Lechy or Lexy, and two of the sisterhood, at the time when this piece bears date, the year 1532.

In the larger window the portraits of distinguished noblemen are very gorgeously displayed. The Cardinal is Evrard de la Marck, descended from the noble and distinguished family of that name, enthroned Bishop of Liege in 1505. Floris d'Egmont, Count of Buren. Maximilian d'Egmont, Count of Buren. The portrait in the compartment adjoining and immediately above the Cardinal, are those of John Count of Horn, and of his lady Anne daughter of Floris d'Egmont Count of Buren, and the Lady Margaret, his wife. There are three more pieces: the first, in the southern aisle of the choir, contains the portrait of a knight worshiping, supported by St. Hubert, and also the symbol of the Trinity; the second, in the northern aisle, is a knight and his lady kneeling before altar-tables, with St. Christopher carrying the infant Jesus, in another compartment; the third, which is in the window of the dean's consistory court, adjoining the south transept, contains figures of a similar description, kneeling before altar-tables, and also Mary Magdalen embracing the Cross upon Mount Calvary. The stained glass that adorns the great north transept window is the gift of the Very Reverend Dr. Woodhouse, dean of this cathedral. In it are represented its principal founders and patrons, standing on rich pedestals, and canopied by lofty tabernacles. These figures are taken, for the most part, from contemporary representations, and composed by John James Hall, Esq. The architecture and ornaments of tracery were designed by the Reverend W. G. Rowland, Prebendary of Curborough; and the staining is the work of Sir John Betton. The ancient monuments of bishops and benefactors to this cathedral, suffered much from puritanical fury; those which remained after the civil war, have been tastefully disposed in the south aisle adjoining the choir. One represents the son of Sir Humphrey Stanley, knight of the body to Henry VII. The Cadaver is the only part left of Dean Heywood's monument. He was a great benefactor to this church, and died in 1492. The figure of Bishop Hugh de Patteshull, who died in 1241; and that of the munificent Bishop Walter de Langton, who died in 1321. There are many monuments in this cathedral erected since the Restoration, and exhibiting statuary figures or busts. The recumbent figure of Bishop Hackett is beautifully sculptured; he died October 21, 1670, æt. 79. At the west end of the north aisle is a monument of Lady Mary Wortley Montague, who introduced from Turkey the practice of inoculating for the small pox, which was erected by Henrietta, relict of Theodore William Inge, Esq., and daughter of Sir John Wrottesley, Bart. in 1789. In the dean's consistory court, adjoining the south transept, are busts of Dr. Johnson and David Garrick, with appropriate inscriptions, and a monument by Westmacott, of Andrew Newton, Esq., of Lichfield, a liberal promoter of the repairs of this cathedral, a benefactor to the English free school, and founder of the institution in the Close for widows and orphans of clergymen: he died January 14, 1806, æt. 77. In the north transept is a monument by Bacon, to Anne Seward, who died March 25, 1809, æt. 66; and in the south choral aisle, a monument of the Rev. William Robinson, B.C.L., Prebendary in this cathedral, Rector of Swinnerton, and of Stoke upon Trent, ob. March 21, 1812, æt. 35. On the north side of the west door, in the nave, is the monument of Dean Addison, who died in 1703. Other monuments and mural tablets are in the nave and adjoining aisles, many of them richly adorned. The bishop's consistory court appears to be one of the most ancient parts of the present fabric. Circular arches, crossing each other in support of the vaulted roof, show a Norman origin, which is also to be traced in the room above, now used for the registry of the dean and chapter. The Chapter-house is on the northern side of the church. The approach to it is by a gallery or vestibule, having a range of arched seats on one side, and an arcade in the same character on the other, and leading to a portal or entrance of elegant workmanship, of the earlier part of the thirteenth century. The chapter-house is an oblong, forty-five feet by twenty-eight, whose four angles are taken off so as to reduce it to an octangular form. A clustered column in the middle, whose capital is beautifully and elaborately worked, supports the vaulted roof, which is richly embossed. Around this room are forty-nine stalls, the central one projecting beyond the rest. The canopies over them have been very splendidly adorned in the earliest mode of pointed architecture. The stained glass in the windows of the chapter-house has been tastefully restored. The coats-of-arms now placed in these windows were selected and arranged under the care of the Reverend John Newling, Canon residentiary. The arms of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry are, party per pale gules and argent, a cross potent, and quadrant in the centre, between four crosslets patee of the second, and or. The bishop's palace, which had been built by Langton, who caused the history of the wars of Edward I. to be painted in the great hall, was destroyed in the civil war; and the present palace was built by Bishop Wood, 1687, and is now the residence of Sir Charles Oakley, Bart.

The castle of Lichfield, in which King Richard II. kept his Christmas in 1397, and in which two years afterwards he was confined, together with the city walls, Bishop Clinton's costly fortifications, with the beautiful western gate, are all levelled. The castle stood on an eminence on the south side of Tamworth-street, its site now occupied by small houses and gardens; several parts of the friery, built by Bishop Stavenby in 1229, yet remain. The priory of St. John the Baptist, originally founded by Bishop Clinton, was afterwards refounded by Bishop Smith as an hospital. The hospital in Bacon-street, for a master and fifteen old women, was founded by Bishop Heyworth in 1424, and refounded by Dr. Miller in 1504.

Lichfield has three parish churches: St. Chad, a curacy, in the presentation of the vicar of St. Mary's. It was founded at a period prior to the date of the cathedral: near it is St. Chad's Well, where that pious prelate first held his oratory, and which was in early times frequented by numerous votaries in honour of him. St. Mary's church, situated in the market-place, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield; and St. Michael's, or Greenhill church, at the east end of the city, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Vicar of St. Mary's. Whittington the grammarian, Elias Ashmole the antiquary, founder of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, Gregory King the herald, Smalridge and Newton, Bishops of Bristol, and Dr. Samuel Johnson, were natives of this city. Samuel Johnson was the son of Michael Johnson, a bookseller and a member of the corporation; he was born on 7th September, 1709, in the house at the north-west corner of the market-place, also fronting Market-street, and received his early education, under the Rev. Dr. Hunter, at the Grammar-school. After his marriage in 1735, Johnson rented Edjall Hall near Lichfield, which was taken down in 1809. It was here that he received under his tuition the celebrated David Garrick, and his brother George Garrick. During the latter years of his life he frequently visited his native city, and viewed with partial delight the scenes which in his youth had been familiar to him, and wrote an inscription for a stone placed over the remains of his parents in the middle aisle of St. Michael's church.

Maple Hayes, the seat of John Atkinson, Esq., is situated on an eminence two miles S.W. from Lichfield, and commands a most delightful and interesting view of the city and its venerable cathedral, with the forest of Needwood in the distance, and in the intermediate valley the luxuriantly rich domains on the banks of the Trent. Amongst many pictures of great merit in the house, are portraits of Edward VI., by Holbein, Edmund Burke, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, P.R.A., and of Sir Robert Walpole, by Sir Godfrey Kneller: there are also many valuable pictures by the old masters. From the pleasure-grounds at Maple Hayes rises a never-failing spring, which supplies the inhabitants of the Cathedral Close with abundance of the purest water: attached to the grounds is the botanical garden of the celebrated Dr. Darwin, the identical scene of his elegant work. This sequestered spot contains a spacious bath, said to be the coldest in England. The garden abounds with ornamented walks and secluded dells, and was the subject of a poem by Miss Anne Seward; an inscription for the Naiad of the fountain was written by Dr. Darwin.

The township of Burntwood, Edgehill and Woodhouse, and the townships of Fisherwick and Haselor, with the hamlets of Freeford and Street Hay, are all in the parish of St. Michael's Lichfield; and the township of Curborough, with Elmhurst, is in the parish of St. Chad. At Burntwood a chapel was erected in 1819 for the use of a numerous population, the hamlet being at the inconvenient distance of four miles from the parish church. Sir William Skeffington of Fisherwick was created a baronet 8th May, 1627. Sir John Skeffington, the fifth baronet of this family, married the heiress of Viscount Massarene, so created with remainder to his son-in-law, who became second Viscount Massarene at his death in 1665. Fisherwick Park continued in the Skeffington family till 1756, it soon afterwards became the property of Arthur Chichester, Marquess of Donegal. The old brick mansion of the Skeffington's, with immense semicircular bay windows, remained unaltered in 1760. A superb stone portico was added in 1774, when the plantations were laid out by Brown, at an expense, it has been said, for the house and grounds, of 200,000*l.* It was sold in 1810 to Richard Howard, Esq. of Elford, and in the course of a very short time not one stone was left upon another. The park has been divided into farms, and the estate has been resold to different purchasers. Freeford Hall, the seat of Lieut.-Gen. William Dyott, came into possession of the family in the reign of Elizabeth. Sir Richard Dyott, one of the privy council to King Charles I. in his court at York, and Steward of Lichfield in the charter of King James I. in 1621, was an active and faithful adherent to the Royal cause in the civil war. He represented the town of Stafford, and afterwards the city of Lichfield during the whole reign of Charles I., and was a great sufferer in his service. It is related that Lord Brook was shot from the battlements of the cathedral of Lichfield by a person called Dumb Dyott: this was John Dyott, brother of Sir Richard Dyott. Buryhill Cottage, half a mile westward, is the seat of —— Stanley, Esq. Elmhurst Hall is the seat of John Smith, Esq. Here was a mansion built by Sir Theophilus Biddulph, Bart., which was levelled with the ground in 1804, when the present seat was erected near the site of the former.

MAVESYN RIDWARE, on the banks of the Trent, 2 miles E. from Rugeley, and 5 miles N.W. from Lichfield, contains 82 houses, and 598 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* The hall is the seat of Charles Chadwick, Esq. It derives its name from the family of Malvoisin, a branch of the house of Roswy in Normandy. The old manor-house is entirely demolished, except the gate-house, in which is a chamber said to have been an oratory. The ancient part of the church contains several curious monuments: a stone coffin, in which was deposited the body of Hugo Malvesyn, founder of Blythbury Priory; the altar-tomb of Sir Robert Malvesyn, who slew Sir William Handsacre, lord of the neighbouring manor, ob. 1403, &c.

PIPE RIDWARE, on the Trent, 3½ miles E. from Rugeley, contains 15 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Alrewas, in the cathedral of Lichfield. The church is ancient, and contains an antique font, sculptured with circles interlaced.

ROLLESTON, or Rolveston, on the borders of Derbyshire, and near the junction of the Dove with the Trent, 3 miles N. from Burton, contains 114 houses, and 599 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* Sir Edward Moseley of Rolleston was created baronet 20th July, 1640, a title which, becoming extinct, was revived in Sir Oswald Moseley of Rolleston, sheriff of the county in 1715, created baronet 18th June, 1720. The Rev. Sir John Moseley, third baronet, dying in 1779, sine prole, his cousin and heir Sir John Parkin Moseley was created baronet 24th March, 1781. Rolleston Hall was rebuilt by him, and the grounds were at the same time greatly improved. The situation amidst the pasture lands on the banks of the Dove is somewhat level. It is now the seat of Sir Oswald Moseley, Bart., D.C.L. Anslow, or Annesley, is a township of this parish. Dove Cliff is the seat of T. Thornville, Esq. Monks Bridge near it was built by John Stafford, abbot of Burton, about 1270: the Ikeneld Street passes this way into Derbyshire.

TATENHILL, 3 miles S.W. from Burton on Trent, contains 89 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The township of Dunstall and the chapelries of Barton under Needwood and Wichnor are in this parish. Barton under Needwood chapel was built in 1528 by John Taylor, a native of the village, now very populous. The Royal Forest of Needwood, formerly extra-parochial, was allotted at its inclosure to the several parishes within its boundary. The extent of the Forest by an ancient survey was 9220 acres, its form and aspect comprehending a great and beautiful variety of one of the finest soils in the kingdom. Gradual eminences and easy vales with meandering rills, and now and then a bolder and more abrupt swell, formed the general feature of the forest. In the northern part, particularly within Marchington Woodlands, the aspect is bolder; here the forest is composed of deep glens, surrounded by abrupt precipices well clothed with wood, amongst which the stout native oak is in great abundance. Swilcar Lawn Oak on this forest is of great antiquity, and is said to contain at least 1000 feet of timber. The forest was stocked with deer, horned cattle, and horses, but no sheep were suffered to feed on it. The stock of deer was supposed to be about 3000.

Wichnor, on the banks of the Trent, derives its name from its situation, wich a village, and onna a bank. The chapel here forms a conspicuous object for some distance, owing to its position on an eminence, whence many delightful prospects are enjoyed. As a member of the house of Tutbury, it was held by Sir Philip Somerville, in the reign of Edward III. The charter granted by John of Ghent, enjoined the lord of the manor to keep a flitch of bacon hanging in his hall at all times in the year, except in Lent, that it might be delivered to any person who should demand it, and would swear that he or she had been married a year and a day without repenting, and that if they were again single, the claimant would take in marriage the same party again in preference to all others. Few have, however, ventured to claim the bacon; and three couple only have obtained it, one of which having quarrelled about the mode of preserving it, was adjudged to return it. The other two couple were a seaman and his wife, who had not seen each other from the day of their marriage till they met in Wichnor Hall; and a couple in the neighbourhood, of which the husband was good tempered and the wife dumb. Wichnor Lodge was built by Crewe Offley, Esq., upon part of the site of the ancient mansion, which was in ruins in the time of Leland; it is the seat of Theophilus Levett, Esq. Wichnor Bridge, over the Trent, was destroyed by a flood in February 1795, and the present bridge was soon afterwards erected; a large inn on the road from Lichfield to Burton is distinguished by the sign of the Flitch of Bacon, in commemoration of the curious custom of the manor, similar to that at Dunmow in Essex.

THORPE CONSTANTINE, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles N.E. from Tamworth, contains 4 houses, and 40 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* In 1255 Geoffery Costentin held it of the King as of the honour of Lancaster, from whom it derived the addition to its name. It once belonged to the see of Ely, and Bishop Hotham obtained a charter of free-warren in 1316. The hall, built by Richard Inge, Esq. in 1651, is now the seat of William Phillips Inge, Esq.

TUTBURY, on the banks of the river Dove, 5 miles N.W. from Burton, contains 226 houses, and 1444 inhabitants. It has increased in population in consequence of the inclosure of Needwood Forest, and has considerably revived by the introduction of the cotton manufacture. The town consists of a single street, with a stone bridge over the Dove, in the road from Burton to Uttoxeter: here is a market on Tuesday, and fairs 14th February, 15th August, and 1st December, for cattle and pedlary. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire; the edifice belonged to an ancient priory, and exhibits the peculiar character of Anglo-Norman architecture, particularly on the west front. A Benedictine Priory, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was founded by Henry de Ferrers about 1080, and was a cell to the abbey of St. Peter super divam in Normandy, on which account it was surrendered into the King's hands amongst the alien priories; but being at length made demesne, it continued till the Reformation, and was valued at 244*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* per annum: the site was then granted to Sir William Cavendish. Tutbury Castle is supposed to have been the residence of Wulfric Sprott, the founder of Burton Abbey, as it belonged to him. In 1269 it was forfeited by Robert de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, sometimes called Earl of Tutbury, by his rebellion against Henry III., who bestowed it on his son Edmund Earl of Lancaster. In 1322 it was again seized by the Crown, on the rebellion of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, who fortified it against Edward II.; he lay at Burton Abbey when the Royal army advanced against him. The King being prevented from passing over Burton Bridge, crossed the Trent at Walton: Tutbury Castle was obliged to surrender, and was demolished. It was rebuilt and enlarged by John of Ghent in 1350. This magnificent residence of the Dukes of Lancaster was long distinguished as the scene of splendour and festivity, and crowds of minstrels assembled here to contend for preeminence and contribute to the entertainments. Mary Queen of Scots was confined here in October 1568, and continued till November 1569, under the care of the Earl of Shrewsbury, when she was removed to Coventry. The Queen gives a most dismal description of her residence here, in a letter published in the Life of Lord Egerton. The lodgings appointed for her reception were built of wood, and in a ruinous state. The castle, she says, was situated on a high hill, exposed to every wind, and surrounded by a lofty wall, which in a great measure excluded the sun. She had two small chambers allotted for herself and maids, the walls of which were pierced with fissures, and the plaster had in many places separated from the timber. Although they entrenched themselves behind screens, curtains and blankets, they were always ill with colds. The Queen complains that she had no place where she could walk under cover in the house, and no room to which she could retire, except two little closets, about seven feet square, looking on to a wall, &c. After enduring a series of indignities for several years at different places, the Queen was again removed to Tutbury in March 1585, whence she was conveyed to Chartley, and thence to Fotheringay Castle, the scene of her trial and execution. During the civil war Tutbury Castle was garrisoned for the King, but was taken by the Parliamentary forces; and an order in 1646 finally reduced this once splendid edifice almost to its present ruinous condition.

WHITTINGTON, 3 miles E. from Lichfield, and 5 miles N.W. from Tamworth, contains 124 houses, and 707 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Tamhorn, on the banks of the Tame, is a hamlet of this parish.

YOXHALL, on the Swerburn, a clear and rapid stream that falls into the Trent near Wichnor, is 7 miles N. from Lichfield, on the borders of Needwood Forest, and contains 199 houses, and 1145 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Hoar Cross is a hamlet of this parish.

Southern Division.

ALDRIDGE, 3 miles N.E. from Walsall, contains 159 houses, and 820 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* On the south side of the church is an arch, designed perhaps for the monument of the founder; the tomb of Robert Stapleton bears his figure and shield of arms. Bentley Liberty and Great Barr Chapelry are in this parish. Barr Beacon, an eminence, is supposed to have been the spot whence the Druids gave notice of their sacrifices; the prospect from it is perhaps as beautiful as from any part of England: near it is Druid Heath, now inclosed. The family of Scott have been seated at Great Barr from the time of Edward I. Sir Simon Degge, who wrote in 1669, says, Thomas le Scott is owner of a pretty gentleman's estate, and may justly be accounted the prince of the yeomanry, he continuing the old manner of housekeeping in hospitality to strangers and relieving the poor; and as he is not sparing to himself in taking recreation with his hounds when his other affairs will give leave, so he is not ashamed to put his hand to the plough to encourage his servants. In truth in these parts I know none who equal his yeomanlike manner of living; but many that take upon them to be gentlemanlike, come far behind him both in estate and manner of living.—Sir Joseph Scott of Great Barr was created baronet 30th April, 1806; he succeeded as heir-at-law to an estate of John Hoo, Esq. of Great Barr, the will being set aside by a paper-maker proving that the paper on which it was drawn up had been made by him several years after the date of the will. At Snails Green is the seat of J. Adams, Esq., and Charlemont Hall, near it, is the seat of T. Price, Esq.

ARMITAGE, 3 miles S.E. from Rugeley, and 6 miles N.W. from Lichfield, contains 140 houses, and 793 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Handsacre. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Handsacre, in the cathedral of Lichfield. Armitage derives its name from a tradition that a hermit resided between the river and the church. Armitage Park, the seat of Thomas Lister, Esq., is in a beautiful sequestered situation, with a fine view over the surrounding country. The Grand Trunk canal passes through a very noble subterraneous cavern adjoining the grounds. In the house are original portraits of Elizabeth Countess of Chesterfield, daughter of the Duke of Ormond; of Francis first Earl of Westmorland; of Dr. Butts, physician to Henry VIII.; and of Cibber the sculptor, father of Colley Cibber. At Handsacre are remains of an ancient house, surrounded by a moat.

CANWELL, on the borders of Warwickshire, 7 miles S. from Lichfield, and 8 miles N.W. from Coleshill, contains 3 houses, and 24 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial, a priory of Benedictine monks having been founded here in 1142 by Geva, daughter of Hugh Earl of Chester and widow of Geoffrey Ridel, dedicated to St. Mary, St. Giles, and All Saints, which was granted in 1525 to Cardinal Wolsey, towards the endowment of his college. At the Dissolution it was purchased by John Harman, alias Vesey, Bishop of Exeter. The estate afterwards passed by marriage to Sir Thomas Lawley, Bart., who on becoming possessor of Canwell Hall, changed the residence of the family from Spoon Hill in Shropshire to this seat. His descendant Sir Robert Lawley, Bart. now resides here.

DARLASTON, 1½ mile N.W. from Wednesbury, contains 1080 houses, and 5585 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*; although a very populous village, many of its inhabitants have removed to the collieries of Wednesbury and West Bromwich.

DRAYTON BASSETT, 3 miles S. from Tamworth, contains 84 houses, and 468 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here was the chief seat of the Bassetts, Barons of Drayton. The curious old house in which the powerful and accomplished Earls of Leicester and Essex often resided, has given way to a modern structure. The estate of Drayton Park was purchased in 1790 by Sir Robert Peel, Bart., whose eldest son is the present proprietor.

ELFORD, on the river Tame, 5 miles E. from Lichfield, and the same distance N.W. from Tamworth, contains 56 houses, and 424 inhabitants. It is supposed to have taken its name from the number of eels with which the Tame here formerly abounded. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; the edifice is in the Norman style of architecture, and contains some splendid mouuments in memory of the Ardernes, Stantons, and Stanleys, early lords of the manor. Elford Hall is the seat of the Hon. Fulke Greville Howard, second son of Viscount Templetown.

Near Okeley, on the north of the village, is Elford Low, a tumulus perhaps of the date of the Saxon heptarchy. At the seat of the Stanleys Edward IV. was a frequent visitor for the amusement of hunting; and here the Earl of Richmond slept on his way from Lichfield to Bosworth Field.

FAREWELL, 2 miles N.W. from Lichfield, contains 36 houses, and 202 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Charley. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield; it was rebuilt in 1748. Here was a priory founded by Roger, Bishop of Lichfield, about 1140, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for Regular Canons, afterwards changed into a house for Benedictine nuns. It was suppressed by Wolsey, and in 1530 was annexed to Lichfield, towards augmenting the number and maintenance of the choristers.

HAMMERWICK, 3½ miles S.W. from Lichfield, contains 45 houses, and 218 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean aud Chapter of Lichfield. Anciently the village was divided into Nether and Over, and its division seems to have been at the hill, upon which the church is built. In this parish is an extensive reservoir of water for the supply of the Wyrley and Essington canal.

HANDSWORTH, on the borders of Warwickshire, 7 miles S.E. from Wednesbury, and 2 miles N.W. from Birmingham, contains 597 houses, and 3082 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Soho. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* It contains some ancient monuments of the Wyrleys. Soho, an extensive manufactory, was founded by Matthew Boulton, Esq., whence issued an English coinage of copper about 1797, including two-penny pieces, ingeniously contrived to avoid counterfeits. From Mr. Boulton's mint have also issued coinages of copper for the East India Company, of silver for the Sierra Leone Company, and two complete coinages for the Russian Government. In 1762 Mr. Boulton purchased Soho, at that time a barren heath, and laid the foundation of the present celebrated establishment. About 1769 he induced Mr. Watt of Glasgow, who had obtained a patent for the steam-engine, to come and settle at Soho. These two ingenious men formed a partnership, and under their direction a manufactory of these engines was established at Soho, whence most of the great mines and manufactories in England continue to be supplied; and they have since been rendered applicable to almost every mechanical purpose in which great power is required. The buildings in which this establishment is conducted are situated near the base of a considerable elevation, and consist of four squares, that are connected by ranges of workshops sufficiently extensive to accommodate one thousand workmen. On the south side are gardens, giving an air of peculiar cheerfulness to this stupendous seat of art and industry. The residence of Matthew Robinson Boulton, Esq. is at a short distance from the manufactory, surrounded by delightful pleasure-grounds. Perry Barr is a hamlet of Handsworth parish. Perry Hall is the seat of John Gough, Esq.

HARBONE, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles S.W. from Birmingham, and 7 miles S. from West Bromwich, contains 252 houses, and 1400 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. Harbone belonged to the Lords Dudley, and passed from them to the family of Cornwallis, whose residence was at Blackley Hall, now the seat of George Birch, Esq. Smethwick is a hamlet of this parish.

HINTS, 4 miles W. of Tamworth, contains 48 houses, and 250 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Handsacre, in the cathedral of Lichfield. The village is situated on the Watling Street, and derives its name from Hynt, in British a common road; near it is a tumulus, supposed of Roman construction.

LONGDON, 3 miles N.W. from Lichfield, contains 234 houses, and 1115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Longdon, in Lichfield Cathedral. About thirty manors, lordships and villages owe suit and service to the court-leet held at Longdon four times in the year. It was anciently part of the Forest of Cannock, of which Beaudesert constitutes the chief ornament. Stonywell is so called from a well on the road-side leading to Farewell, with a large stone in the middle of it. John Stonywell, a learned abbot of Pershore, was born here. He became a suffragan bishop, by the title of Episcopus Poletensis; he died in 1553, and was buried in a chapel on the south side of the church of Longdon, which he had built. This chapel is separated by two pointed arches from the body of the church, on the outside of which, upon the buttresses, are sculptured alternately the conjoined initials I. S., and the emblematical Dove and Holy Lamb.

NORTON UNDER CANNOCK, 7 miles W. from Lichfield, and the same distance N. from Walsall, contains 116 houses, and 669 inhabitants, including the township of Little Wyrley. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Handsacre, in the cathedral of Lichfield.

OGLY HAY, 6 miles S.W. from Lichfield, is extra-parochial. It contains 3 houses, and 23 inhabitants; near it is the Essington and Wyrley canal. On Ogly Hay is Cat's Hill, or Canute's Hill, where are two barrows of Roman or British construction, perhaps the sepulchral monuments of eminent chieftains.

RUSHALL, one mile N. from Walsall, contains 123 houses, and 670 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 5*s.* Rushall Hall is the residence of John Parsons, Esq. During the civil wars the Hall was strongly fortified and defended by a garrison. The area of the walls extends over an acre of land, and was once surrounded by a moat. The ancient house is dilapidated; the manor is still held by the Leigh family, one of whom was the author of Critica Sacra, and was buried in the chancel in 1671.

SHENSTONE, 3 miles S. from Lichfield, contains 301 houses, and 1699 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Shenstone Park is the seat of Edward Grove, Esq. The Park, inclosed in 1235, was three miles in circumference, and had three lodges of entrance. In the reign of Henry VIII. it was stocked with deer and game, but was disparked in the time of Charles II. The manor came into the possession of the Fryths, of which family was Rowland Frith, Lancaster Herald, and architect, who gave name to Frith Street, Soho, London. He died in 1712, and was buried at Shenstone. The Hall afterwards became the residence of the Brandreths, who sold it to Samuel Hill, Esq., from whom it passed to Thomas Harwood, Esq., of Tern Hall, Shropshire, who afterwards took the name of Hill, and was grandfather of the present Lord Berwick. The Harwoods, anciently of Compton, Stourton Castle, and Sandwell, were also of Hagbourne and Streatley in Berkshire, and of Goring in Oxfordshire, and this branch was afterwards of Tern and Shrewsbury. Of the Streatley branch is descended the Rev. Thomas Harwood, B.D. F.S.A., author of the History and Antiquity of the Church and City of Lichfield, and editor of A Survey of Staffordshire, by Erdeswick, published in 1820, which has been the source of much information contained in these pages. Henry Doyley, High Constable of England, gave Shenstone Moss to the Abbey of Oseney, at Oxford, and the monks erected a Grange here for their residence, which was granted at the Dissolution to the Stanleys, and is now the property of Henry Case, Esq. At Thickbroom, near Shenstone Park, is a barrow, called Off Low, whence the hundred takes its name: an extensive inclosure has taken place in this parish.

STATFOLD, or Stotfold, on the borders of Warwickshire, 3 miles N.E. from Tamworth, contains 3 houses, and 29 inhabitants. In the chapel, which has been long disused, are several memorials to the family of Wolferstan. Statfold Hall is the seat of Samuel Pipe Wolferstan, Esq.

The hamlets of Pipe Hill and Wall form part of the parish of St. Michael in the city of Lichfield. Little Pipe is a prebend in Lichfield Cathedral, and was formerly held by the family of Hill, who afterwards possessed the Friery at Lichfield. Their mansion is now the property of Samuel Pipe Wolferstan, Esq. The Essington and Wyrley canal passes Pipe Hill. Wall was the Etocetum of the Romans, and a gold Otho was dug up here in 1690. It is on the Watling Street. Antoninus's Itinerary makes Wall the next station to Manvessedum, or Manceter, in Warwickshire.

TAMWORTH, at the junction of the rivers Tame and Anker, partly situated in Warwickshire, is 115 miles from London, and 7 miles S.W. from Lichfield, and contains 324 houses and 1636 inhabitants in Staffordshire. It was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, and is governed by two bailiffs, a recorder, high steward, under steward, a town clerk, twenty-four principal burgesses, and other inferior officers; the Corporation have power to keep a three-weeks court of record, and a court leet twice a year. Their seal represents a fleur-de-lis, and is inscribed SIG · BVRGI · DE · TAMWORTH · IN · COMITAT · WARWIC · ET · STAF. The manufactures carried on are cotton spinning, calico printing, superfine narrow woollens, and very considerable tan works, and by its short distance from the Coventry canal it has great facilities of water carriage. Here is a market on Tuesday, and fairs 4th May, 26th July, and 24th Oct. for cattle, sheep, and wool. This town sends two members to Parliament; the right of election is vested in the inhabitants, being householders paying scot and lot and not receiving alms, who amount to about two hundred and fifty. The present members are, Sir Robert Peel, Bart., of Fazeley, and Lord Charles Townshend, of Tamworth Castle. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, once collegiate and now a curacy, is supposed to occupy the site of a nunnery: it is surmounted by a massive tower, to which there is a double staircase, the roof of the one being the floor of the other, and each having a separate entrance and exit. The town contains an excellent grammar school founded by Queen Elizabeth, and a hospital founded and endowed by Thomas Guy, bookseller, also founder of the hospital bearing his name in Southwark, London.

Tamworth Castle, the seat of Lord Charles Townshend, is in Warwickshire. There are two bridges, Bow bridge over the Anker, and St. Mary's bridge, of twelve arches, over the Tame and leading to Coventry. Hopwas Hayes, on the Coventry canal, is extra-parochial, but the townships of Biddescote, Bonehill, Fazeley, and Wigginton, are in the parish of Tamworth. Bonehill Cottage is the residence of William Peel, Esq. M.P. Fazeley, or Falkesley, has a bridge over the Tame, through which the Watling Street passes at its entrance into Staffordshire. The chapel here, having gone to decay, was rebuilt and endowed by the late Sir Robert Peel, Bart. Wigginton belonged for some time to the Comberfords, who had also the Moat House at Tamworth, and the Hall at Wednesbury. The late accomplished architect, James Wyatt, Surveyor General of the King's works, was born at Tamworth in 1747.

TIPTON, or Tippington, 2 miles N. from Dudley, and 10 miles N.W. from Birmingham, contains 1973 houses, and 11,546 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Prees, in the Cathedral of Lichfield. The church is in a state of decay, but a new church has been erected to accommodate the increased population. The strata of iron ore in this neighbourhood are very considerable. Iron works, rolling and slitting mills, and a soap manufactory are established on the banks of the Birmingham canal. The extent of the iron trade in all its varieties, wrought and unwrought, for agricultural and other purposes, for home consumption and for exportation, is now very great, and from the abundance of iron ore and fuel, the trade, particularly so far as relates to the production of the metal, is capable of being much extended.

WALSALL, 118 miles from London, 9 miles N.W. from Birmingham, and 8 miles E. from Wolverhampton, contains 1145 houses, and 5504 inhabitants. Its streets are formed by the roads from Lichfield, Stafford, Wolverhampton, Wednesbury, and Birmingham. The Corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, twenty-four aldermen, and a town clerk. The mayor, senior alderman, and the late mayor, are in the commission of the peace, and hold sessions four times a year. Here is a market on Tuesday, which is amply supplied, and fairs on 24th Feb., Whit Tuesday, and Tuesday before Michaelmas day. The town is situated upon the Wyrley canal, and possesses a most extensive inland navigation, which is highly conducive to its prosperity. In the neighbourhood of the town are several collieries and iron mines, and its staple manufactures are buckles and chapes; the adjoining villages, particularly Bloxwich, are famous for saddlers' ironmongery, circulated from Walsall to every part of the kingdom. Here is an endowed grammar school. The first Lord Somers and Bishop Hough were educated here. A custom obtains in this town of giving a dole of one penny to all persons in it, even to strangers, on the eve of the Epiphany annually. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew and All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* The edifice stands on a lofty hill, and the entrance into the churchyard from the High Street is by a number of stone steps. At the south-western angle of the church is a massive tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. Under the eastern part is an archway forming a passage through the churchyard.

The township of Walsall Foreign in this parish includes Great and Little Bloxwich, Caldmore, Little London, and the Windmill. The chapel of Bloxwich is held by a chaplain nominated by the Merchant Tailors' Company first, then St. John's College, but if both decline to nominate, then the parishioners.

WEDNESBURY, 117 miles from London, 3 miles S.W. from Walsall, 8 miles N.W. from Birmingham, and 7 miles E. from Wolverhampton, contains 1194 houses, and 6471 inhabitants. It is situated near the source of the river Tame, on the Birmiugham canal, and is celebrated for its numerous and valuable manufactures, the principal of which are guns, edge tools, cast and wrought iron in almost every form, particularly the heavier kinds of hardware and ironmongery, the town having the advantage of a navigable communication with every part of the kingdom, and a well supplied weekly market on Wednesday. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The edifice, in the pointed style of architecture, is on the summit of a hill on which the ancient castle was situated: it is surmounted by a spire of unusual beauty, and is divided into a chancel, nave, and north and south aisles, the latter being separated from the nave by a range of arches springing from octagonal pillars. In the chancel are stalls ornamented with carving. The church contains a number of monuments in memory of the ancestors of Lord Dudley and Lord Harcourt. Wodensbury, the Saxon name of the town, was derived from Woden the god of battle. In the time of the Mercians it had a castle, fortified by Adelfleda governess of the Mercian kingdom; its vestiges are visible near the churchyard, and the prospect from this spot is amongst the most extensive in the county. The coal in this neighbourhood extends in separate veins from 3 to 14 feet in thickness, and affords to its various proprietors an almost princely revenue, it being beyond all doubt the best in England for the smith's forge, on account of the intense heat which it produces. Here likewise is found that peculiar species of iron ore denominated blond metal, used chiefly in the manufacture of nails, horse-shoes, axes, and tools of a similar description. Some parts also abound with that sort of reddish earth used in painting or glazing vessels of different kinds, known by the name of pip.

WEEFORD, or Weyford, on Black Brook, a stream which runs through a rich tract of meadows bounded by fertile eminences, is 4 miles S. from Lichfield, andcontains 45 houses, and 278 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Weeford in the cathedral of Lichfield. Swinfen is a hamlet, and Packington a liberty of this parish. Swinfen Hall, the seat of John Swinfen, Esq., is a noble residence, situated in a beautiful demesne, ornamented with an extent of water, lawns, and hanging woods. The ancient chapel of Packington has been long dilapidated.

WEST BROMWICH, 2 miles S.E. from Wednesbury, and 6 miles N.W. from Birmingham, contains 1790 houses, and 9505 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Earl of Dartmouth. At Sandwell, or the Holy Well, was a priory of Benedictine monks, founded in the reign of Henry II. by William, son of Guy de Offney, which in 1525 was granted to Cardinal Wolsey. Sandwell Park, the seat of the Earl of Dartmouth, is situated in a romantic valley, with a noble lawn in front of the mansion, tastefully and judiciously ornamented with plantations. The mansion is built on the site of the ancient priory, some of the foundations of the edifice being yet visible. On the lawn near the house is the Holy Well, protected by iron palisades. In the house is a valuable collection of pictures by the old masters.

3. Pirehill Hundred

Derives its name from a hill near Stone, and is bounded on the north-east by Totmonslow hundred; on the east by Offlow hundred; on the south by Cuttlestone hundred, and on the west and north-west by Shropshire and Cheshire. It is separated into northern and southern divisions.

Northern Division.

ADBASTON, on the borders of Shropshire, 5½ miles W. from Eccleshall, contains 18 houses, and 157 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean of Lichfield. The townships of Bishops Offlow, Flashbrook, and Tunstall, are in this parish. Batchacre Park was the seat of the late Earl Whitworth, G.C.B. who was created Viscount Whitworth of Adbaston in 1812, and Lord Adbaston and Earl Whitworth 25th November 1815, titles which, on his lordship's death, 13th May 1825, became extinct. Near Batchacre Park have been found several spear-heads of brass, and swords made of a mixture of copper and brass.

ASHLEY, 8 miles N.W. from Eccleshall, contains 149 houses, and 729 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* It was built by David Kenric, a native of the place and a soldier under Edward the Black Prince.

AUDLEY, 6 miles N.W. from Newcastle, contains 130 houses, and 583 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the south wall of the church are three stone seats and a piscina, in niches, with trefoil heads. Within an arch on the north side of the chancel is an altar-tomb with a recumbent figure to Edward Vernon, 1622. In the nave is a mural monument to Elizabeth and Alice, daughters and heiresses of Edward Eardley of Eardley; and also a brass plate with the figure of Thomas Audley, ob. 1385. The baronial family of Audley is supposed to be a branch of the ancient and noble house of Verdon, and to have assumed its name from this place. A farm at Apedale now occupies the site of Audley, one of the residences of the heroes of this name; but in later times they inhabited Heleigh Castle, about 3 miles distant, situated on a lofty rock. Lord Audley sold it in 1577 to Sir Gilbert Gerard.

There is a peculiarity in the situation of Hardingwood, near Audley, mentioned by Pennant in his Journey from Chester to London. Whenever the family go to church, which is that of Lawton in Cheshire, they go out of the province of Canterbury into that of York; pass through two counties, Staffordshire and Cheshire; three constablewicks, Tunstall, Chell and Lawton; three parishes, Woolstanton, Audley, and Lawton; two hundreds, Pirehill and Nampt-wich; and two dioceses, Lichfield and Coventry, and Chester.

Audley parish abounds in coal, and comprises the townships of Bignall End, Eardley End, Knowl End, Park End, Talk-o'-th'-Hill, and the liberty of Halmer End. Talk was part of the ancient possession of the Stanleys: the chapel was built in 1749. The river Trent rises near this place.

Batterley, in a beautiful part of the county, on the borders of Cheshire, 3 miles W. from Audley, is a township of Barthomley parish in Cheshire.

BETLEY, on the borders of Cheshire in a fine part of the county, 8 miles N.W. from Newcastle, contains 171 houses, and 932 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy. The chancel was built, as appears from an imperfect inscription in the east window, by Ralph Egerton in 1610. The vane on the tower of the church is perforated with the date 1713, the time it is presumed when it was erected. Betley Court is the seat of Sir John Fenton Boughey, Bart., and Betley Hall, of George Tollet, Esq., a gentleman celebrated for his spirited and useful improvements in agriculture.

BIDDULPH, 11 miles N. from Newcastle, and 7 miles W. from Leek, contains 317 houses, and 1666 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* The manor house, built in the reign of Elizabeth, was garrisoned in the civil war on the side of the Parliament: it is the seat of John Biddulph, Esq. Three new collieries, a cotton factory, an earthenware manufactory, and an iron forge have been established at Biddulph since 1811. The village presents some curious remains of antiquity. The Bride Stones consist of eight upright stones, two of which stand within a semicircle formed by the other six. The outside stones are six feet from each other. Near them is a pavement of an artificial cave, composed of fragments of stone about two inches and a half thick. Two large unhewn stones about 18 feet long and 6 high, form the sides of this cave. Mole Cop, a hill in Cheshire, is about two miles S.W. from the village.

BURSLEM, 3 miles N.E. from Newcastle, contains 1869 houses, and 9699 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Stoke upon Trent. It is a clean town situated on a hill, and is remarkable for its manufactures in earthenware. The markets are on Monday and Saturday, and the fairs 22nd March, 28th June, and 17th October. The township of Hulton Abbey is in this parish.

The district, which is distinguished by the name of the Potteries, reaches from Lane End on the N.E. of Newcastle to Golden Hill, 4 miles N.W. of it, including an extent of ten miles. This situation was probably chosen from coal being abundant, and the other strata consisting most commonly of clays of different kinds, some of which make excellent firebricks for building the potters' kilns, and are also used in forming the saggers, a corruption of the German schraggers, which signify, cases or supporters in which the ware is burnt. One of the earliest authors who notices the pottery of this county is Dr. Plott, in his "Natural History of Staffordshire," published in 1686, when all the ware was of the coarse yellow, red, black or mottled kind, with the common glaze produced by lead ore finely powdered, and sprinkled on the pieces of ware before firing. In 1690 two foreigners of the name of Elers invented, at Bradley, a new species of glaze, by throwing into the kiln, when brought to its greatest heat, a quantity of common salt, the fumes of which occasioned a superficial vitrification of the clay. This practice was succeeded in a short time by a capital improvement in the body of the ware itself, which originated in the following incident:—Mr. Astbury, a potter, in his journey to London was recommended by the hostler of his inn at Dunstable to use powdered flint for curing some disorder in his horse's eyes. and for that purpose a flint stone was thrown into the fire to render it more easily pulverizable. The potter observing the flint to be changed by the fire to a pure white, was immediately struck with the idea that his ware might be improved by an addition of this material. He accordingly sent home a quantity of the flint stones from the chalk hills of Dunstable, and tried them with pipe-clay, and thus produced the white stone ware, which soon became the staple branch of pottery.

In the year 1763 Josiah Wedgwood, who had previously introduced several improvements in the composition, form, and colour of this ware, invented the improved kind now generally made. It is composed of the whitest clays from Dorsetshire and other places, mixed with a due proportion of ground flint. The pieces are fired twice, and the glaze applied after the first firing, in the same manner as porcelain. The glaze is a vitreous composition of flint and other white earthy bodies, with the addition of white-lead for the flux, analogous to common flint glass. This compound being mixed with water to a proper consistence, the pieces, after the first firing, are separately dipt into it: being somewhat bibulous, they imbibe a quantity of the mere water, and the glaze which was united with that portion of the water remains adherent uniformly all over their surface, so as to become, by the second firing, a coat of perfect glass. Enamelled ware, after painting, undergoes a third firing to fix the colours. A powerful steam-engine is the first grand agent in the preparation of the raw material; it is employed in performing many of the processes hitherto carried on by manual labour. The water which drains from the coal mines is impregnated with a yellow substance termed car, which is used by the potters, and is a necessary ingredient in making that kind of ware called Egyptian Black. The mode of procuring the car is as follows: being of a specific gravity greater than that of water, it forms a sediment at the bottom of the channel of the stream that conveys it from the mine: when a considerable quantity is thus lodged in a certain space, the stream to that extent is diverted from its usual course, and the car is thrown out of the channel whence the water has been turned off upon the adjoining banks, where it remains till dry. Sometimes small pits or ponds are made on the adjoining banks, and the car is scooped from the bottom of the channel, and thrown into them without diverting the course of the water. When it is sufficiently dry it is sold at the rate of one guinea per cart-load.

Cornwall produces three materials of primary importance in the manufacture of porcelain—the steatite of the Lizard, and the granite and decomposed feldspar of the parish of St. Stephen.

Manganese from the mines near Callington in Cornwall is employed in giving the black hue to the Wedgwood ware.

The granite from St. Stephen's in Brannell is exported under the name of China-stone, for the purposes of the porcelain manufactories here. A fine white clay is procured also in abundance from some pits in the same parish, the property of Lord Grenville, for that manufacture, and they are both exported from the neighbouring port of Charles Town. The late Mr. Wedgwood is said to have first applied these valuable articles to the purposes of the porcelain manufacture. A new species of ware also, for which Mr. Wedgwood obtained a patent, being honoured by royal approbation and patronage, received the name of Queen's Ware. Continuing his experimental researches, Mr. Wedgwood afterwards invented several other species of earthenware and porcelain, of which the principal are a *terracotta, resembling porphyry, granite, Egyptian pebble, and other beautiful stones of the siliceous or crystalline order: basaltes or black ware, a black porcelain biscuit† of nearly the same properties with the natural stone, receiving a high polish, resisting all the acids, and bearing without injury a very strong fire: white porcelain biscuit, of a smooth wax-like appearance, of similar properties with the preceding: jasper, a white porcelain of exquisite beauty, possessing the general properties of basaltes, together with the singular one of receiving throughout its whole substance, from the admixture of metallic calces, the same colours which those calces give to glass or enamels in fusion, a property possessed by no porcelain of ancient or modern composition: bamboo, or cane-coloured biscuit porcelain, of the same nature as the white porcelain biscuit; and lastly, a porcelain biscuit remarkable for great hardness, little inferior to that of agate, a property which, together with its resistance to the strongest acids, and its impenetrability to every known liquid, renders it well adapted for the formation of mortars and many different kinds of chemical vessels. These six distinct species of ware, together with the Queen's Ware, have increased by the industry and ingenuity of different manufacturers into an almost endless variety of forms for ornament and use. These, variously painted and embellished, constitute nearly the whole of the present fine earthenwares and porcelains of English manufacture. Such inventions prodigiously increased the number of persons employed in the potteries, and in the traffic and transport of their materials from distant parts of the kingdom. This class of manufactures is considerably indebted to Wedgwood for much mechanical contrivance and arrangement in their operations, his manufactory having had for upwards of thirty years all the efficacy of a public work of experiment. This pottery is near Newcastle, where Mr. Wedgwood built a village named Etruria, from the resemblance which the clay there dug up bears to the ancient Etruscan earth. To promote the interest and benefit of his neighbourhood, he planned and carried into execution a road ten miles in length through the Potteries, thus opening another source of traffic, if by frost or other impediment the carriage by water should be interrupted. At an early period of his life, seeing the impossibility of extending considerably the manufactory he was engaged in, without the advantage of inland navigation, he was the proposer of the Grand Trunk Canal, 90 miles in length, uniting the rivers Trent and Mersey. By it he enabled the manufacturers of the inland part of Staffordshire to obtain from the distant shores of Devonshire, Dorsetshire, and Kent, those materials of which the Staffordshire ware is composed, affording at the same time a ready conveyance of the manufacture to distant countries, and thus to rival the foreign markets.

Great improvements have been made in the art of pottery since the time of Mr. Wedgwood. Blue-printed, or blue and white, ware, in imitation of the Oriental china or porcelain, has been introduced with great success in various manufactories, but particularly in that of Messrs. Spode and Copeland, at Stoke upon Trent, now the principal manufactory, and they have been unwearied in their exertions to improve the art of pottery. In the year 1806 their manufactory was visited by his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and several of the nobility; Mr. Spode held the appointment of Potter and English Porcelain Manufacturer to his Royal Highness. On this occasion a room of 117 feet in length was fitted up with a splendid assemblage of finished goods. Other manufactories of considerable importance in this district are those of Ridgway, and Hicks and Meigh, both near Hanley.

This manufacture is perhaps superior to any of its kind in Europe, and does not yield in elegance and usefulness to the celebrated potteries of China.

ECCLESHALL, on the river Sow, 7 miles N.W. from Stafford, and 148 from London, contains 235 houses, and 1254 inhabitants. The market on Friday was established by Bishop Durdent about 1161; here are fairs Thursday before Mid Lent Thursday, Holy

* Terracotta, Ital. baked earth. † Biscottato, Ital. twice baked.

Thursday, 16th August, and first Friday in November, for horses, cattle, sheep, and pedlary. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Bishop Bentham was buried here in 1578, and here are a few monuments of the Bosvile family of Byana. The manor of Eccleshall was annexed at the Conquest to the see of Lichfield, then called the see of Chester; it is of great extent, and still belongs to the bishop. The Castle was founded at a very early period; about the year 1200 Bishop Muschamp had a licence from King John to make a park here, and embattle the walls of his castle. In 1310 it was rebuilt by Bishop Walter Langton, and from his time has been the principal residence of the Bishops of Lichfield.

When Queen Margaret fled hither from Muckleston after the battle of Blore Heath in 1459, Bishop Halse secreted her for a time in the church. In the civil wars the castle was held for the King, and taken by the Parliament, when it was so much damaged as to be untenable at the Restoration. The following account of the siege of Eccleshall Castle is taken from Vicar's Parliamentary Chronicle. "Upon Wednesday, August 30th, 1643, being the fast-day of that moneth, and therefore, as in many of our former victories, so much the more memorable, the brave and strong castle called Ecclesall Castle was taken by Stafford souldiers; and thus in brief it was: Great preparations were made by the Lord Capel, Colonell Hastings, Baggott, and others, to relieve the castle, the old bishop being dead, and his corps unburied, his wife the lady Woolsley and others being also at that time in it. This castle had been besieged about eight weeks, but then the King's forces came to Ecclesall, and ere they went did relieve the castle, and had little opposition therein, though Stafford-men had notice thereof time enough to have prevented it. But whiles the King's forces were at the castle, Captain Bowyer and Captain Snow, with Captain Mason and their souldiers, (who kept Ecclesall church, and were then in it,) saw some of Stafford-horse, commanded by that brave gentleman Colonell Leigh, approach near the town; they in the church (thereupon) gave a great shout; and then instantly some of our dragooners alighted off from their horses, and set upon the King's partie, at Ecclesall townes-end, and Captain Bowyer presently sallied out of the church; whereupon all in the castle, and all the King's partie in the town, cryed out, horse! horse! and presently fled away in such haste and distraction, that they left only one captain and but ten men in the castle, and at the castle-gate had left the bishop's dead corps, and a trunck of plate, which they had brought out to have carried away with them. Hereupon ours seized on all they left behinde, which was a great deal of treasure and plate, and (as was toucht before) store of goods of great value, and worth (as was conceived) many thousand pounds. Now after the King's forces were gone, the castle was shut up fast again; but our men who lay in the church took one of the enemies prisoner that came last out of the castle, who confessed upon examination, that there were but ten men left in the castle. Whereupon that next night our men set upon the castle, and Captain Snow entered the first gate-house and possest the drawbridge; and then he and the captain in the castle entering into a short parlie, the castle was soon delivered up upon free quarter; and so the very strong and almost impregnable castle, and a place of great consequence in these parts, was by the good providence of God taken by ours, with little difficultie, and as little effusion of bloud; which indeed is the highly commendable way of ours, where with any conveniency and possibilitie it may be effected." In 1695 the south front of the castle was renewed by Bishop Lloyd. Bishop Hough, his successor, continued the repairs until it was almost rebuilt. The woods belonging to the bishop in this neighbourhood are very extensive, and are said to contain thirteen hundred acres, well stocked with timber and underwood: the coppices supply the potteries with wood for the purpose of making crates to pack their ware in. North-east from the castle is Byana, an ancient building, once the residence of the family of Bosvile. Eccleshall parish is very extensive, and contains the following townships: Aspley, Bromley, Broughton, Charnes, Chatcull, Chorlton Hill with the Chapelry of Chorlton, Coldmeece, Cotes, Croxton, Horseley, Mitmeece, Pershall, Podmore, Slindon, Great and Little Sugnall, Three Farms, Walton and Wootton.

Broughton Hall is an ancient seat of the family of the same name, one of whom held lands of the Bishop in the reign of Edward I., by the tenure of keeping ward at the Castle of Eccleshall for the space of forty days at his own proper charges. Sir Brian Broughton of this place was created baronet 10th March 1661; he was sheriff of the county, as was also Sir Thomas Broughton in 1772. The principal seat of the family is now at Dodington Hall in Cheshire.

Sir John Peshall of Horseley was created baronet 15th November 1612; the title is now extinct. Sugnall Hall is the seat of C. Rowlands, Esq. At Wootton, or Woodton, is a high paved way, which Dr. Plott supposed to be a Roman Via vicinalis.

KEELE, 2½ miles W. from Newcastle, contains 196 houses, and 1061 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Keele Hall, the seat of Walter Sneyd, Esq., is a curious mansion; it was built by his ancestor Ralph Sneyd in 1581, and has been subjected to few external alterations. It was ordered by the Parliament to be demolished in 1643, but fortunately escaped; it is entirely of stone: the family are distinguished by more than usual liberality to the poor.

MADELEY, 5½ miles W. from Newcastle, contains 210 houses, and 1166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* In it are several monuments of the Egertons, ancestors of the Earl of Wilton, and of the Offleys, who together with the Crewes have been great benefactors to this parish. Madeley Park is the residence of Weston Yonge, Esq. Walton dedicated his Complete Angler to John Offley, Esq. of Madeley; the manor house at that time was a very curious timber framed edifice, extremely pictorial in its general appearance. It passed by marriage from the family of Offley to that of Crewe.

MAER, 7 miles N. from Eccleshall, and the same distance S.W. from Newcastle, contains 42 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. It appears to have been erected or rebuilt in 1610, as that date is upon the south side of the tower, and contains monuments of the families of Macclesfield and Bowyer. Maer Hall is the seat of Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., second son of the late eminent Josiah Wedgwood of Etruria. It is supposed to take its name from the mere, or lake, westward of the house: the hall has undergone considerable alteration as well as the grounds belonging to it, on which several plantations have been made; the whole of Maer Heath within the manor has been inclosed and cultivated within these few years. Near the village are hills called the Byrth or Bruft, Camp Hill, the Little Byrth, and Cop Low, the last of great height and extent, and of a conical form. The Byrth and Camp Hills on Maer Heath were doubtless the stations of some armies in early times, and it has been ingeniously conjectured that the Earl of Salisbury was posted on the Byrth Hill, and Lord Audley was encamped on the Camp Hill previously to the battle of Blore Heath in 1459. At Willow Bridge in the parish of Maer is a medicinal spring, discovered by Lady Bromley; it was formerly celebrated for the great virtue of its waters in curing distempers. Samuel Gilbert, a physician of the seventeenth century, wrote a pamphlet to recommend the wells. Dr. Plott counted sixty springs rising within a space of ten yards square; the water, according to his account, carries with it the most rectified sulphur of any mineral spring in the county.

The townships of Almington or Alkmonton, Blore in Tyrley, and Hales, on the borders of the county, belong to the parish of Drayton in Hales in Shropshire. Blore Heath is celebrated in English history as the scene of a sanguinary combat between the houses of Lancaster and York, in which Lord Audley, the commander of Henry's forces, was slain, together with most of the Cheshire gentlemen who gallantly fought in that cause. Drayton in his Polyolbion commemorates the slaughter of the day. A wooden cross was erected on the field of battle soon after the action, to mark the spot where Lord Audley fell, which having been thrown down, the lord of the manor ordered a stone pedestal to be placed there, with the cross upon it: the height of both is about eight feet; on the pedestal is inscribed

"ON THIS SPOT WAS FOUGHT THE BATTLE OF BLORE HEATH IN 1459. LORD AUDLEY, WHO COMMANDED FOR THE SIDE OF LANCASTER, WAS DEFEATED AND SLAIN. TO PERPETUATE THE MEMORY OF THE ACTION AND THE PLACE, THIS ANCIENT MONUMENT WAS REPAIRED IN 1765 AT THE CHARGE OF THE LORD OF THE MANOR, CHARLES BOOTHBY SKRYMSHIRE."

The stone is in an inclosed field adjoining the road from Newcastle to Drayton in Shropshire, and about two miles from the last place; it stands within a few yards of a brook, which it has been supposed the Earl of Salisbury passed, and when part of Lord Audley's troops were over, and others crossing in confusion, the Earl returned, attacked, and obtained his victory.

MUCKLESTON, or Muxon, on the borders of Shropshire, 9 miles N.W. from Eccleshall, contains 30 houses, and 179 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* Upon the lofty tower of this church the spirited and unfortunate Margaret of Anjou, beheld the battle of Blore Heath, so fatal to the Lancastrian cause. The townships of Aston, Kneighton, Oakley and Winnington, are in this parish, which is partly in Shropshire. Oakley Park on the banks of the Tern, is the seat of Sir John Chetwode, bart.: his ancestor Sir John Chetwode of Oakley, and Chetwode in Buckinghamshire, was created baronet 6th April 1700.

NEWCASTLE UNDER LYNE, 150 miles from London, and 17 miles N.W. from Stafford, contains 1399 houses, and 7031 inhabitants. The town derives its name from a castle that formerly stood at Chesterton, about two miles north. It began to decay so early as the time of Henry III., who granted it to his son Edmund Earl of Lancaster, and he is supposed to have built a new castle a short distance from it, and to have neglected the more ancient edifice. It now consists of several broad and well paved streets, and is governed by a mayor, two justices, two bailiffs, and twenty-four common councilmen, who hold a court for the recovery of debts under 40*s.* The first charter of incorporation was granted by Henry I., which was confirmed with additional privileges by Queen Elizabeth and Charles II.: the inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the clothing trade, the manufacture of hats, and the potteries. Here is a market on Monday, and fairs Shrove Monday, Easter Monday, Whit Monday, Monday before July 15th, Monday after September 11th, and 6th November, for cattle. Newcastle first sent members to Parliament 27th Edward III., and the right of election was determined in 1792, by a Committee of the House of Commons, to be in the freemen residing within the borough, who amount to about five hundred. Richardson Borradaile, Esq., and W. H. Miller, Esq. are the present members. The church, dedicated to St. Saviour, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Stoke upon Trent. At the south end of the town was a monastery of Black Friars, but no trace of it is now visible. The town in 1756 gave the title of Duke to Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle on Tyne, which at his death in 1768, by limitation of the patent, devolved to Henry Earl of Lincoln, who married his niece; and he dying 22nd February 1794, was succeeded by his son Thomas the third Duke, who dying 17th May 1795, was succeeded by Henry the present and fourth Duke. Major General Thomas Harrison, one of the regicides, was born at Newcastle: he was executed at Charing Cross 13th October 1660.

NORTON ON THE MOORS, 5 miles N.E. from Newcastle, on the road to Leek, contains 339 houses, and 1793 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Stoke upon Trent. Bermersley is a township of this parish. Milton, Whitfield, Ford Green, Ball Green and Woodhouse Lane, are hamlets adjoining. It abounds with coal.

HIGH OFFLEY, 5 miles S.W. from Eccleshall, contains 112 houses, and 569 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Offley, in the cathedral of Lichfield. Loynton is a township of this parish.

STANDON, 4 miles N. from Eccleshall, contains 69 houses, and 415 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

STOKE UPON TRENT, 2 miles E. from Newcastle, contains 826 houses, and 3969 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 41*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*; it is an ancient edifice, and exhibits a specimen of the Anglo-Norman style of architecture. The parson of this parish, says Erdeswick, who wrote his "Antiquities of Staffordshire" in the reign of Elizabeth, is the best man in the town, being lord thereof, and it being one of the best parsonages in the county. It is, he continues, a marvel, so many religious houses being near it, how it escaped in all ages the covetousness of them; it resting still, according to the first institution of parsonages, not appropriated. Its numerous hamlets have been separated by an Act of Parliament from this their parent parish, and since the time of Erdeswick have grown into considerable importance in commerce, manufactures, and population. The Mount is the seat of Josiah Spode, Esq., the able successor of Wedgwood. Hanley, a chapelry of this parish, now a populous market-town, contains 1105 houses, and 5622 inhabitants. Its church, founded in 1788, is remarkable for the elegance of its structure. Ridghouse, in the township of Shelton, was purchased by Josiah Wedgwood, and named by him Etruria; it has furnished under him and his descendants a profusion of the most elegant porcelain, and deserves the appellation given to it by its ingenious proprietor.

Besides the chapelry of Hanley and Clayton liberty, the parish of Stoke contains the townships of Longton and Lane End, Penkhul and Boothen, Seabridge and Shelton; these, with the hamlets of Cobridge, Smithfield, Newfield, Longport, Golden Hill, Lane Delft, Lower Lane, and Vale Pleasant, have been raised from comparative insignificance by the manufacture of potters' ware, now very extensive and important, the value of the manufactured article being a creation of the manufacturer from a raw material of no value. There is no doubt but their very rapid extension was much promoted by canal conveyance, with which no county in England is better accommodated. The parish of Stoke upon Trent includes also the townships of Bagnall, Botteslaw, Bucknall, Eaves, Fenton Calvert, and Fenton Vivian, and the entire parish contains no less than 29,223 inhabitants. Longton Hall, near Lane End, is the seat of Richard Edensor Heathcote, Esq. Shelton was the birth-place of Fenton the poet.

SWINNERTON, on the river Sow, 3 miles N.W. from Stone, and 5 miles N. from Eccleshall, contains 141 houses, and 832 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* In the church is an altar-tomb, upon which is the recumbent figure of a knight, supposed to be the monument of Sir Robert Swinnerton, who married Helen, daughter and heiress of Sir Nicholas Beke.

Sir Roger de Swinnerton in 1305 obtained a charter of free-warren in his demesne lands in this manor, and for keeping a market, which has long been disused. He was governor of Stafford in 1317, and afterwards of the Castle of Harlech in Wales. In 1321 he was governor of Eccleshall Castle during the vacancy of the see of Lichfield and Coventry, and being appointed Constable of the Tower of London, was summoned to Parliament 11th Edward III. 1337, and created a knight banneret. About the middle of the sixteenth century, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Humphrey Swinnerton, conveyed the estate in marriage to William Fitz Herbert, fourth son of Sir Anthony Fitz Herbert, the judge, author of the "Book of Husbandry," 1534, frequently reprinted in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth; it was the result of forty years experience in agricultural pursuits, and obtained for Sir Anthony the title of the Father of English Husbandry. He died in 1538, and was buried at Norbury in Derbyshire, the original seat of his family. Swinnerton Hall is now the principal seat of Thomas Fitz Herbert, Esq. of Norbury; it stands on a commanding eminence, and from the upper parts of the house is a very extensive prospect of the north-western parts of the county, with Shropshire, Cheshire, and Worcestershire in the distance. In the mansion are several family portraits, besides many valuable pictures. The actual possession of an estate in the male line from an earlier record than that of Norbury, can very rarely be proved. At the time of the compilation of Domesday Boke in the year 1086, it belonged to Henry de Ferrers, by whom or by his son it was bestowed upon the abbey of Tutbury in this county; the Abbot of which, in 1125, granted the manor of Norbury to William the son of Herbert, whose lineal male descendant Thomas Fitz Herbert, Esq., of Swinnerton, is now the owner of it.

TRENTHAM, 5 miles N.E. from Stone, and 3 miles S. from Newcastle, contains 113 houses, and 589 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Marquess of Stafford. Here was formerly an abbey, of which St. Werburgh was appointed abbess by her brother King Ethelred; and here she died in 683. In the time of Henry I. the abbey was refounded by Ranulf, second Earl of Chester, for Canons of St. Augustin. At the Dissolution it was valued at 121*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and was granted by Henry VIII. in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk, and afterwards came to the family of Leveson. The parish of Trentham includes the chapelry of Blurton, and Lightwood Forest, and the townships of Butterton, Clayton Griffith, Hanchurch and Handford. Butterton Hall is the seat of Thomas Swinnerton, Esq.

Trentham Hall, the seat of the Marquess of Stafford, K.G., derives its name from the river Trent winding through the park, the natural beauty of which has been greatly increased by art. In the valley it has been expanded into a noble lake, while the higher grounds of the domain command diversified and extensive views of the surrounding country. Here the hanging woods with their umbrageous foliage, the verdant lawns with trees and clumps promiscuously disposed, and the spreading sheets of water, lost to the eye by their length and winding forms behind the swelling hill and shady copse, have an imposing and magnificent effect. This admired scenery, originally laid out by Brown, a master in the art of landscape gardening, has been considerably improved by subsequent alteration. The mansion, originally built after the model of the Queen's Palace in St. James's Park, was altered from designs by Holland, under the direction of the late Marquess. The present nobleman, distinguished as a patron of the British Institution, is equally the admirer of the works of the old masters: besides the family portraits, the apartments contain a very splendid gallery of the most choice productions of the pencil, amongst which are several by the present Marchioness of Stafford; a view of Trentham by Wootton, and three views of the same place in the picture-room.

WHITMORE, 4 miles S.W. from Newcastle, contains 44 houses, and 302 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Stoke upon Trent.

WOLSTANTON, 1½ mile N. from Newcastle, contains 196 houses, and 958 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* It is an ancient building, having a nave, side aisles, and a chancel with a tower, on which is a spire at the east end of the north aisle, a conspicuous object to the country round; the church contains several monuments of the family of Sneyd. The parish, which is in two divisions, north and south, comprehends the townships of Chell, Wedgwood, Brerehurst, Stadmerslow, Thursfield, Oldcott, Rains Cliff, or Ravens Cliff, and Tunstall court liberty in the north; and Wolstanton, Knutton, Chesterton, and Chatterley in the south. Manufactories of earthenware and china are established at Tunstall, and between Newcastle and and Chesterton is a cotton work, erected in 1797, which employs a great number of hands. Clay, iron, stone, and coal, abound in the neighbourhood, and brick and tile works are at Chesterton and Tunstall; near the last place the Grand Trunk canal passes more than a mile through a tunnel at Harecastle Hill. Coal is obtained at different depths, from twenty to one hundred and thirty yards from the surface; at Kid Crew on the north side is an improved kind of machinery for raising coal. Iron ore is smelted near Golden Hill, and at Apedale. The agriculture of this neighbourhood has been improved by the establishment of lime-kilns on the banks of the canals, which are the means of conveying the limestone from Derbyshire, &c. to be burnt, and hence the farmers are supplied.

New Chapel is a chapelry, 5 miles north from Wolstanton; here is an altar-tomb, with the following inscription: "James Brindley of Turnhurst, engineer, was interred September 30th 1772, aged 56." This extraordinary man, who planned and conducted the inland navigation of great part of the kingdom, was born in a humble rank of life; but by his superior genius and industry was enabled to acquire an ample fortune by the benefit he conferred upon his country. Some of his relatives and descendants are still living in and near this parish.

Southern Division.

BARLASTON, 4 miles N. from Stone, and 5 miles S.W. from Newcastle, contains 85 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Marquess of Stafford. The Grand Trunk canal is on the west side of the village.

BLITHEFIELD, on the river Blithe, 3½ miles N. from Rugeley, contains 33 houses, and 207 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Bagot. In the chancel are many fine monuments of the fifteenth century, in honour of the Bagot family; there is also a monument to one of the Astons of Broughton, in Longdon parish. Blithefield is the seat of Lord Bagot. The park, at some distance from the house, is remarkable for its towering oaks, which for number, height, straightness, and value, are esteemed the finest in England. In the great irregularity of the ground, and the variety and extent of the views from different parts, it is not surpassed by any in the kingdom. The house was formerly surrounded by a deep and extensive moat, now filled up; it surrounds a quadrangular court, and underwent great alteration in 1822. The whole is embattled, and presents a mass of building, ornamented with towers, turrets, and pinnacles, of great extent. It contains a splendid collection of pictures, by the ablest masters.

Newton is a liberty in the parish of Blithefield.

ABBOTS BROMLEY, 4 miles N.E. from Rugeley, contains 305 houses, and 1533 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The hobby-horse dance, an ancient custom, was observed here till the civil war; ten or twelve of the dancers carried on their shoulders deers' heads, painted with the arms of Paget, Bagot, and Welles, to whom the chief property of the town belonged. The horns yet hang up in the church, but the custom is now discontinued. The parish includes Bromley Bagots liberty and Bromley Hurst township. Bagots Park is the deer-park of Lord Bagot, whose seat is at Blithefield.

CHARTLEY, 6 miles S.E. from Stone, and 8½ miles N.W. from Stafford. This place now consists of a lodge with a large park, and is extra-parochial; it is the property of the Marquess Townshend. Chartley Castle, the seat of Lord Ferrers of Chartley, and afterwards of the Earl of Essex, was destroyed accidentally by fire in 1781, and scarcely any thing remains to mark its site. Near it, on the summit of an artificial hill, stand the ruins of a castle, built by Richard Blundeville, Earl of Chester, in 1220, on his return from the Holy Land, which had fallen to decay in the time of Leland. Its present remains chiefly consist of the parts of two round towers, and a wall twelve feet in thickness; the loop-holes are so constructed as to allow arrows to be shot in the ditch in a horizontal direction, or under the tower. The keep appears to have been circular, and fifty feet in diameter. The more modern castle at Chartley is remarkable as having been for some time the prison of the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots. Queen Elizabeth visited Chartley in August, 1575, in her progress to Stafford. Scarcely any thing but the moat which surrounded it remains.

CHEBSEY, 2 miles E. from Eccleshall, contains 73 houses, and 377 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. In the churchyard is a lofty stone of pyramidal form, supposed to be a Danish memorial. Oncote Grange, near Chebsey, once belonged to Ronton Abbey. Cold Norton is a township of this parish.

COLTON, 2 miles N. from Rugeley, contains 118 houses, and 569 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* The old hall at Colton, large enough to contain fourscore lodging-rooms, was burnt down in the time of Charles I. Colton Hall is the seat of —— Burt, Esq. A grange at Colton formerly belonged to the Priory of St. Thomas, near Stafford. Bellamour Lodge is the seat of W. Blount, Esq.

COLWICH, 3 miles N.W. from Rugeley, contains 302 houses, and 1646 inhabitants, including Great Haywood and Wolseley. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Colwich, in the cathedral of Lichfield. The ancient church contains monuments to the memory of the families of Anson and Wolseley.

Great Haywood is situated at the junction of the river Sow with the Trent. Wolseley Hall is the seat of Sir Charles Wolseley, Bart.; near it the river Trent passes Wolseley Bridge in the road from Lichfield to Stone, at the foot of the hanging woods in the park. In the reign of Edward IV., Ralph Wolseley, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, had licence to inclose a park here, and to stock it with deer from Cannock Chace, to which it is contiguous. The deer-leaps, by which the park is replenished with deer from the Chace, still exist. The pleasure-grounds are beautifully varied, and embellished by the meandering of a branch of the Trent. The curious old hall has been considerably altered; the staircase and drawing-room are of oak, finely carved. Sir Robert Wolseley of Wolseley was created baronet 24th November, 1628. Fradswell is a chapelry of Colwich parish.

Bishton Hall, the seat of John Sparrow, Esq., stands in a beautiful situation near Wolseley Bridge, having the river Trent and the canal in front. The Trent near Bishton or Bishopton flows through a valley remarkable for its prodigality of beauty.

Shugborough Park is the seat of Viscount Anson; the house was long an episcopal residence, having been built by Bishop Langton: the remains now give the appearance of reality and ruin to some beautiful Grecian columns and other fragments of ancient architecture. The principal front of the present mansion is adorned with a magnificent portico of the Ionic order, and the interior contains many valuable pictures and a fine collection of antique statues. The grounds are embellished with beautiful models of classical architecture, by Athenian Stuart: those of Adrian's Arch, the choragic monument of Lysicrates, and of the octagonal tower of Andronicus Cyrrhestes, do great credit to the taste of his patron. The late Lord Anson carried the improvements of his estate to a very great extent. He removed the old village, and cut a new channel for the river Sow, on the banks of which the house formerly stood. A bridge which crossed the river at Hollisford he also removed about half a mile higher up the stream. The lodges at the entrance of the principal approach to Shugborough Park are very much admired.

CRESWELL HALL, 6 miles N.E. from Stone, and 3 miles S.W. from Cheadle, is extra-parochial, and is the seat of the Rev. T. Whitby.

ELLENHALL, 2½ miles S.E. from Eccleshall, contains 51 houses, and 287 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

GAYTON, 6 miles N.E. from Stafford, contains 57 houses, and 284 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

INGESTRIE, or Ingestre, anciently Ingestrent, 3 miles N.E. from Stafford, contains 23 houses, and 125 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Talbot. It was built in 1676 at the expense of Walter Chetwynd, Esq., a gentleman distinguished for his skill in antiquities, and for his encouragement of researches into the history of his native county. To this church he presented the tithes of Hopton. Ingestre Park is the seat of Earl Talbot, Lord Lieutenant of the county. It is bounded by the Trent, from which it rises by a gradual ascent towards the south, where is the Ley Park, the Deer Park, and the Wilderness, a fine tract of forest scenery, one part being a close thicket, and the other an open grove of majestic oaks. The approach to the house is through an avenue of beech-trees of uncommon size and beauty, beneath which shelter stands the ancient mansion on the declivity of the hill. It was built in the reign of James I., and its appearance is very striking.

MILWICH, 5 miles E. from Stone, contains 102 houses, and 567 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

RONTON, 3 miles S. from Eccleshall, contains 54 houses, and 334 inhabitants. Ronton, or Essars Abbey, was founded by Robert Fitz Noel, in the reign of Henry I. The episcopal confirmation of the endowment was made by Hugh de Nonant, between the years 1188 and 1199, for canons of St. Augustine, and was made subordinate to Haughmond Abbey in Shropshire. At the Dissolution, Ronton Abbey was granted to John Wiseman. Some remains of it are yet standing, consisting chiefly of a lofty tower, the outer walls of the church, and part of the cloisters. The south part of the manor-house is very ancient; it is the property of Viscount Anson.

SANDON, 5 miles N. from Stafford, contains 99 houses, and 513 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.*: it stands on the summit of a hill. Amongst other monuments is a handsome one of freestone, against the north wall of the chancel, to the memory of Sampson Erdeswick, author of "The Antiquities of Staffordshire," formerly lord of the manor: he died in April, 1603; also a plain altar-tomb to George Digby, who died in 1649. Sandon Hall is the seat of the Earl of Harrowby; the present mansion was built by Lord Archibald Hamilton, near the site of an ancient half-timbered edifice, the residence of Erdeswick, which was surrounded by a moat. The house commands a luxuriant prospect over the Trent, and an extensive tract of country; the steep slope of the hill is clothed with plantations. On a bold wooded knoll, opposite the south front of the house, is a Doric column, erected to the memory of Right Hon. William Pitt, in 1806.

SEIGHFORD, 2½ miles N.W. from Stafford, contains 151 houses, and 851 inhabitants, including Aston and Doxey townships. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Seighford Hall is the seat of Francis Eld, Esq.; near Aston is Pyre Hill, which gives name to the hundred; Aston Hall is the seat of the Earl of St. Vincent.

STAFFORD, 141 miles from London, contains 991 houses, and 5736 inhabitants. This town, nearly in the centre of the county, is situated on the river Sow, its larger streets being disposed in the form of a cross, and the two principal ones occupying the sides of the road from Newcastle under Lyne to Wolverhampton. Stafford is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, twenty common-councilmen, a town clerk, two serjeants at mace, and inferior officers. The arms of the town are, Gules, a quadrangular castle, with four towers domed, on each a pennon, all proper; in chief two Stafford knots, or; in base, a lion passant gardant of the last. This town, which was long represented by the Right Hon. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, returns two members to Parliament, and has done so since the 23rd of the reign of Edward I. The right of election is vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, amounting to about four hundred. The present members are J. Campbell, Esq., and T. Gisborne, Esq. The manufactures consist of cloth, shoes, and cutlery; and being situated in the vicinity of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, it enjoys a share in the inland trade. The market is on Saturday; and the fairs are 10th February, 14th May, 27th June, 16th, 17th, 18th September, 2nd October, and 4th December. The charities are a free-school, twelve alms-houses, an hospital; and near the town is the county infirmary. In ancient times Stafford was surrounded by a wall, and had four gates, and was likewise defended by a castle. Some workmen, under the late Sir William Jerningham, being employed to search for an ancient wall, discovered that all the basement story of the old castle lay buried under the ruins; he immediately ordered the whole to be excavated. Lord Stafford, son of Sir William Jerningham, rebuilt the castle, and Edward Jerningham, Esq., his lordship's younger brother, supplied the designs and superintended its restoration. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was collegiate, and is now a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown: it is chiefly in the early pointed style of architecture. Here are some ancient monuments of the Astons of Tixall, and one to Lady Barbara Compton. St. Chad's church is a very ancient building, now cased with brick; the tower bears the arms of Stafford and Neville.

STONE, on the river Trent, 141 miles from London, and 7 miles N. from Stafford, contains 532 houses, and 2855 inhabitants. It principally consists of four streets, formed by the roads from Stafford to Leek, and from Lichfield to Newcastle under Lyne. By its situation on the Trent and Mersey canal navigation, it commands a considerable trade, and has a market on Tuesday, and fairs Shrove Tuesday, Whit Tuesday, and 5th August. The church, dedicated to St. Wulfad, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Crown. It is a modern building; in the churchyard is a spacious cemetery of the Jervis family. Wulfere, the first Christian King of Mercia, founded here a college of secular canons about 670: and Ermenelda his wife founded a nunnery of the order of St. Benedict, afterwards made a cell to the abbey of Kenilworth. Many magnificent tombs of the great family of Stafford remained in the church of this nunnery till the Dissolution, when they were removed to the Augustin Friary at Stafford: a remain of the nunnery is yet visible on the road side at the southern extremity of the town. The liberties of Beech, Hilderstone, Kibblestone, and Normicott, are all in this parish. On Stonefield, a large tract of ground, William Duke of Cumberland drew up his army in 1745, in expectation of an engagement with the forces of the Pretender.

STOWE, 7 miles N.E. from Stafford, contains 225 houses, and 1185 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. It was once remarkable for its numerous monuments, in honour of the family of Devereux of Chartley, only one of which remains, the tomb of Walter, first Viscount Hereford: he died in 1558, but the monument was erected during his life-time, and is a beautiful model of sepulchral architecture. On the chancel floor is a brass plate, to the memory of Thomas Newhat, Steward of the Household to Walter, first Earl of Essex, who died in 1587. In this parish land has been divided into small allotments, and many houses built within the last twenty years.

TIXALL, 4 miles E. from Stafford, 12 miles N.W. from Lichfield, contains 26 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, in the patronage of Sir Thomas Constable, Bart. It was rebuilt in 1772. Tixall House, the seat of Sir Thomas Aston Clifford Constable, Bart., was originally built by James Lord Aston in 1750, to which additions were made by the late baronet. The library contains a large picture, by Edward Bird, R.A., of the landing of Louis XVIII. at Calais in 1814, rendered valuable from the number of portraits it contains. A picture of the embarkation at Dover had been previously painted by the same artist for His Majesty George IV. Here is also a celebrated portrait of Cromwell, Earl of Essex, by Holbein, and many portraits of the Aston family. The gate-house of the old mansion, an elegant edifice, was built in 1580 by Sir Walter Aston; behind it are the remains of the ancient seat of the Astons. The late Sir Thomas Constable published a topographical and historical description of Tixall in 1817: he died at Ghent 25th February 1823, æt. 60.

WESTON UPON TRENT, 5 miles N.E. from Stafford, contains 93 houses, and 442 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The Trent and Mersey canal passes it. Yarlett liberty is in this parish.

4. Seisdon Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cuttlestone hundred; on the east by Offlow hundred; on the south by Worcestershire; and on the west by Shropshire. It is separated into northern and southern divisions.

Northern Division.

BUSHBURY, or Bishbury, anciently Bishopsbury, 2 miles N. from Wolverhampton, contains 111 houses, and 569 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* The township of Essington, and Moseley, a hamlet, are in this parish.

The church of Bushbury belonged to the priory of St. Thomas, near Stafford. The monument of Hugh Byshbury, who built the chancel, is in the church. Here is also the tomb of Thomas Whitgreave, remarkable for his faithful protection of Charles II. On the Sunday after the battle of Worcester, 3rd September 1651, King Charles II. was concealed at Moseley Hall, then possessed by Thomas Whitgreave, Esq., and remained till the following Tuesday night, when he went away with Colonel Lane, who lodged him at his house at Bentley.

HIMLEY, 4 miles W. from Dudley, contains 61 houses, and 371 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Dudley; it was built in 1764 by John Viscount Dudley and Ward. In the reign of Edward III. John de Sutton, Lord Dudley, died possessed of this manor; and it has descended to the present noble owner, together with Dudley Castle. Himley Hall, the seat of Earl Dudley, is a noble mansion, well furnished with pictures. In the music-room is one of the best private organs in the kingdom, the late lord being much devoted to music. Himley Hall was long celebrated for the splendid exhibitions of fireworks upon all public and loyal occasions. On a remarkably old yew-tree in the steep walk is affixed an inscription by the late W. T. Fitzgerald. On Pensneth Chace, which once abounded with game, are numerous coal-pits.

KINGS SWINFORD, 3 miles N. from Stourbridge in Worcestershire, and 7 miles S. from Wolverhampton, contains 2051 houses, and 11022 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In this vicinity are extensive mines of coal lying upon a stratum of clay, esteemed very excellent for making glass-house pots.

PENN, 2 miles S. from Wolverhampton, contains 116 houses, and 539 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Lower Penn is a township of this parish.

ROWLEY REGIS, 3 miles S.E. from Dudley, and 7 miles W. from Birmingham, contains 1034 houses, and 6062 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy. Rowley is a lofty tract of country, producing a singular species of quartzose stone called Rowley Ragstone. Turners Hill, in this parish, is the highest ground in the south of the county; the other high points of the Rowley mountain are Oakham and Corney Hills.

SEDGELEY, 3 miles S. from Wolverhampton, contains 2991 houses, and 17,195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Dudley.

TETTENHALL REGIS, 2 miles N.W. from Wolverhampton, contains 301 houses, and 1464 inhabitants, including Tettenhall Clericorum. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. A collegiate church, and one of the king's free chapels, was founded here as early as the reign of Edgar. It had a dean and four prebendaries. The present church was probably part of the original foundation, the college standing at the east end of it.

The village derived its name from Theotenhall, the Hall of Pagans; and in 910 a battle was fought here between the Danes and Edward the Elder, in which the English were victorious. The township of Pendeford, and the hamlets of Wrottesley, Oaken, Pirton, and Trescott, are all in this parish. Wrottesley Hall is the seat of Sir John Wrottesley, Bart., it was built about 1696; the estate is remarkable for its fine woods of well grown timber, and its extensive plantations. Pirton, or Perton, was probably so called from a peculiar species of pear, which grows in this district in great abundance.

WOLVERHAMPTON, 123 miles from London, contains 3338 houses, and 18,380 inhabitants. It is situated on a gentle declivity, near the Birmingham canal. The streets, which are very irregular, have been much improved in their appearance since 1777, when an Act of Parliament was obtained for lighting and paving the town, of which the greater part of the houses are well built; the government is vested in two constables; and by its situation on the Birmingham canal, the town enjoys a very extensive navigable communication, and has great manufactures in iron, brass, japanned ware, and toys executed in gold, silver, brass, mother-of-pearl, &c. The staple manufacture of this town is its locks, which are of every kind, and the very best quality. The principal charities consist of two schools for boys, and one for girls: the petty sessions for the hundred are held here. A medicinal spring has lately been discovered in the vicinity, the virtue of which is highly commended. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Peter, was accounted one of the King's free chapels, and was annexed by King Edward IV. to the deanery of Windsor. It is collegiate, and is of great antiquity; the pulpit, of stone, is of peculiarly beautiful workmanship. In the chancel is a brass figure of Admiral Richard Leveson, who served under Sir Francis Drake. Here are monuments to the memory of John Leveson, ob. 1575; and to Colonel John Lane, of Bentley, who displayed his fidelity in the concealment of King Charles II. after the battle of Worcester. In the churchyard is the remains of a very ancient cross. The new church, dedicated to St. John, was erected by subscription in 1776. Bilston is a chapelry of this parish, although a separate district, and very populous; the east window of the chapel was painted by Willement. Dunstall, the seat of James Horden, Esq., was built by one of the Wightwick family, in the reign of James I. It contains some painted windows, by Willement.

Southern Division.

UPPER ARELEY, on the river Severn, 5 miles N.W. from Kidderminster, in Worcestershire, contains 156 houses, and 715 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield; it is ancient, and contains a monumental figure of a knight in complete armour cross-legged; a Roman road passes in the eastern part of it. In Areley Wood are the remains of a Roman camp.

BOBBINGTON, on the borders of Shropshire, 9 miles W. from Dudley, contains 80 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary or Holy Cross, is a curacy.

BROOM, in a detached part of this hundred, situated in Worcestershire, 4 miles S. from Stourbridge, contains 19 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, which is very small, is dedicated to St. Peter, and is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

CLENT, adjoins Broom, 3 miles S.E. from Stourbridge, and contains 166 houses, and 885 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Clent was the place where Kenelm King of Mercia was murdered, by the order of his sister Quendrida, about the year 820. St. Kenelm's chapel, founded on the spot where he was buried, is mentioned under Hales Owen, p. 104.

The hills of Clent are at and near their summits composed of a light soil intermixed with small broken fragments of rock; a considerable part of these hills are a sheep-walk, covered with a fine tufted herbage. The hill summits are very high ground, nearly equalling those of Rowley.

CODSALL, on the borders of Shropshire, 5 miles N.W. from Wolverhampton, contains 116 houses, and 659 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir John Wrottesley, Bart. The manor has long been the property of his family. In the beautiful church is a noble monument in honour of Walter Wrottesley, Esq.

ENVILLE, 5 miles W. from Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, and 10 miles S.W. from Wolverhampton, contains 151 houses, and 842 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* On the north side of the chancel is the monument of Thomas Grey, ob. 1559. Enville Hall, the seat of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, is a noble mansion, situated on a fine sloping lawn, ornamented by a spacious lake skirted with trees. The grounds are greatly indebted to their original projector, the poet Shenstone, to whose memory a building is here dedicated.

KINFARE, or Kinver, 3½ miles W. from Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, contains 376 houses, and 1735 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. On Kinver Edge is an extensive encampment, supposed to have been the work of the Danes, now occupied by sheep. Prestwood Hall is the seat of the Hon. Edward Foley, to whom the ruins of Stourton Castle belong.

PATSHULL, or Patteshull, on the borders of Shropshire, 7 miles W. from Wolverhampton, contains 29 houses, and 144 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. Patteshull Park is the seat of Sir George Pigot, Bart. The church, rebuilt by Sir Richard Astley, contains a monument of Sir John Astley, K.G.

PATTINGHAM, partly situated in Shropshire, 6 miles W. from Wolverhampton, contains 175 houses, and 866 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

TRYSULL, 5 miles S.W. from Wolverhampton, contains 112 houses, and 539 inhabitants, including Seisdon, which gives name to the hundred. It is a curacy. Apewood Castle is supposed to have been a British work.

WOMBOURNE, 4 miles S. from Wolverhampton, contains 252 houses, and 1308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* Orton is a liberty of this parish. Woodford Grange is extra-parochial.

5. Totmonslow Hundred

Derives its name from a sepulchral monument of a Saxon commander: and is bounded on the north by Cheshire; on the east by Derbyshire; on the south by Offlow hundred; and on the west by Pyrehill hundred. It is separated into northern and southern divisions.

Northern Division.

ALSTONEFIELD, 8¾ miles E. from Leek, contains 142 houses, and 677 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The townships of Upper and Lower Elkstone, Fairfield-Head, Heathy-Lee, Hollinsclough, and the chapelries of Longnor, Quarnford, and Warmslow, are in this parish.

BLORE, 9 miles N.E. from Cheadle, contains 55 houses, and 288 inhabitants, including the township of Swainscoe. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* The chapelry of Calton is in this parish.

CAVERSWALL, 3¾ miles W. from Cheadle, contains 92 houses, and 555 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* The township of Weston-Coyney and Hulme is in this parish. Sir William de Carswall, temp. Edward II., built a large and strong stone castle, surrounded by a deep moat. There were square turrets at the heads of extensive pieces of water round the castle, as an additional defence. Weston Coyney Hall is the seat of Walter Hill Coyney, Esq.

CAULDON, 7 miles N.E. from Cheadle, contains 64 houses, and 350 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

CHEDDLETON, 3 miles S.W. from Leeke, contains 204 houses, and 1061 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a curacy, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* The townships of Basford and Cunsall are in this parish.

DILHORNE, 2¼ miles W. from Cheadle, contains 141 houses, and 744 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield and Coventry. The township of Forsbrook is in this parish.

GRINDON, 6 miles S.E. from Leek, contains 42 houses, and 236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* The township of Grindon is in this parish. There are quarries of variegated marble in this neighbourhood.

HORTON, 2¼ miles N.W. from Leek, contains 76 houses, and 381 inhabitants, including the township of Horton-Hay. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, value 20*l.* The township of Blackwood and Croborough is in this parish.

ILAM, 9½ miles N.E. from Cheadle, contains 36 houses, and 253 inhabitants, including the townships of Throwley and Castern. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

LEEK, 22 miles N. from Stafford, and 154 N.W. from London, contains 783 houses, and 4361 inhabitants, including the townships of Bradnop, Longdon, Heaton, Leek-Frith, Rushton-James, Rushton-Spencer, Stanley, Tittisworth, Rudyard and Caudery, with the chapelries of Endon and Onecote. It is situated on a branch of the river Churnet, and is very irregularly built. The high road from Ashborne to Macclesfield passes through the principal street, and on each side are some good modern-built houses. The manufactures consist of ribbons, sewing-silk, silk-twist, and buttons; the town has also been long noted for fine ale. It has a market on Wednesday, and fairs on Easter Wednesday, 18th of May, Whit Wednesday, 3rd and 28th of July, Wednesday after the 10th of October, Wednesday before Candlemas, and 13th of November, for cattle and pedlary. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 1½*d.*; in its chancel is a curious piece of antiquity, a Danish cross.

In the churchyard of Leek are the remains of a cross ten feet high, having three steps at the base. There is here a large surface of rough unpolished stone upon a supporter of the same, on the brow of a hill, a little declining at one end, called the Hanging Stone.

Near Rushton James is Dieulacres, a Cistercian abbey, founded by Ranulph Blundeville Earl of Chester, in 1214, who transferred hither monks from Pulton in Cheshire. It was granted at the Dissolution to Sir Ralph Bagnall. There are yet some remains of this abbey. Rushton James seems to have once belonged to a family of the name of James. Rushton Spencer is so called for the same reason.

OAKOVER, 10 miles N.E. from Cheadle, contains 10 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. Oakover is remarkable for the barrows of Hallsteds and Arbor Close, which are supposed to have been of Roman construction.

The old mansion has been taken down, and another erected on its site. It is the seat of Haughton Farmer Oakover, Esq. Among other valuable paintings is a Holy Family, by Raphael.

Southern Division.

ALTON, or Alveton, 4 miles E. from Cheadle, contains 200 houses, and 1103 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 5½*d.* The townships of Cotton, Denston, and Farley, are in this parish.

Alton Abbey is the principal seat of the Earl of Shrewsbury.

The park is large, and is entered through a lodge, which is situated at the foot of a steep hill, leading from the town of Alton, and over a bridge that crosses the river Churnet. On ascending the hill by a serpentine road to the mansion, which is more than a mile, through pine woods, the eye is frequently relieved with a view of a square lofty embattled tower, built on the descent of the hill as an observatory. The form of the house is irregular, having in the centre a gable, with a large pointed window, under which is the principal entrance to the hall; the front extends on each side by embattled towers. The gardens and pleasure-grounds are truly romantic. A light iron bridge, cast in imitation of Southwark-bridge, London, erected under the superintendence of Gardiner, crosses a canal. Upon a pedestal in the grounds, is a colossal head of the Right Hon. William Pitt; and opposite, upon a very elevated spot, is a conservatory, of great beauty and extent. The rides, from the inequality of the grounds and beauty of the surrounding country, are varied and picturesque.

BRADLEY IN THE MOORS, 3¼ miles S.E. from Cheadle, contains 17 houses, and 84 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, value 16*l.* 10*s.*

BRAMSHALL, 2 miles W. from Uttoxeter, contains 35 houses, and 189 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*

Loxley Park, the seat of Thomas Sneyd Kynnersley, Esq., is situated in that part of the county called the Woodlands, two miles west from the town of Uttoxeter. The estate is well wooded, and watered by the river Blithe, and a small stream which, rising above Bramshall, passes through Loxley, and falls into the river Dove below Uttoxeter. The house has been partly rebuilt, its front cased with stone, and adorned with a portico of the Doric order. It stands upon a considerable elevation, and commands a picturesque view of the hamlet of Loxley, the villages of Bramshall, Churchleigh, and a beautiful tract of country. The entrance-hall, forty feet long by twenty-four wide and thirty high, contains a curious relic of old wainscot, embellished with paintings, of the Saviour; Virgin and Infant; the Flight into Egypt; the Apostles and Evangelists; and the Last Supper. On the frieze or cornice are the arms of the Royal Family of Stuart; the nobility and gentry of the kingdom; and the potentates of Christendom, about the year 1607, in good preservation. As early as the reign of Henry II. it was settled upon a younger son of Ferrers, Earl of Derby, whose principal seat was at Tutbury, in this county, and was possessed by a branch of that great family for some generations.

CHEADLE, 14 miles N.E. from Stafford, and 146 N.W. from London, contains 746 houses, and 3862 inhabitants; and is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of a hill facing the south, and in the most fertile part of the moor lands. It has a market on Saturday, and fairs 25th March, Holy Thursday, 21st August, and 18th October, for horses and cattle. The church, an ancient structure dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. The town is surrounded with coal of a good quality, and has manufactures of tape, iron, copper, and brass. In the neighbourhood rises a very high ground, called Cheadle Park, affording a most extensive prospect.

CHECKLEY, 5½ miles N.W. from Uttoxeter, contains 311 houses, and 1591 inhabitants, including the township of Team. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* The liberty of Madeley-Holme is in this parish.

CROXDEN, 4½ miles N.W. from Uttoxeter, contains 44 houses, and 258 inhabitants, including the township of Great Yate. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, value 12*l.* Part of the township of Calton is in this parish.

The ruins of a once extensive abbey here are very venerable. Bertram de Verdon in 1176 gave to the Cistercian monks of Aulney in Normandy, land at Chotes, to build an abbey of their order, which three years after was removed here. The founder died in 1192, and was buried at Acre; but most of his descendants were interred at this abbey. The heart of King John was buried here. At the Dissolution the abbey was granted to Geoffrey Foljambe.

DRAYCOTT IN THE MOORS, 2¾ miles S.W. from Cheadle, contains 94 houses, and 579 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

ELLASTONE, 7 miles N.E. from Uttoxeter, contains 72 houses, and 350 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* The townships of Calwick, Prestwood, Ramshorn, Stanton, and Wootton, are in this parish. The petty sessions for the southern division of the hundred of Totmonslow are held here.

Wootton, or Wotton, is on the southern declivity of Wever Hill. From its local situation, it is supposed, arises the proverb, although it is much exposed to the sun:

Wotton under Wever,
Where God came never.

Here are estates belonging to the families of Unwin and Davenport. The seat of the latter, Wootton Hall, is remarkable for having afforded an asylum to the eccentric Jean Jaques Rousseau, in 1766. Wootton Lodge, about a mile distant, the residence of Colonel Wilson, is a beautiful specimen of the architecture of the reign of Elizabeth, built wholly of stone.

GRATWICH, 4 miles S.W. from Uttoxeter, contains 19 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

IPSTONES, 4½ miles N. from Cheadle, contains 194 houses, and 1010 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The township of Morrage and Toxt is in this parish.

KINGSLEY, 2½ miles N.E. from Cheadle, contains 176 houses, and 917 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Warburgh, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 15*s.* The township of Whiston is in this parish.

KINGSTON, 3¼ miles S.W. from Uttoxeter, contains 49 houses, and 355 inhabitants. It is a curacy, value 10*l.*

LEIGH, 4½ miles N.W. from Uttoxeter, contains 184 houses, and 947 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* The township of Field is in this parish.

MAYFIELD, 9 miles N.E. from Uttoxeter, contains 156 houses, and 890 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The townships of Butterton and Woodhouses, with part of that of Calton, are in this parish.

ROCESTER, 4 miles N. from Uttoxeter, contains 184 houses, and 1037 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* The church was part of an abbey for Black Canons, founded and endowed by Richard Bacoun, nephew to Ranulf Earl of Chester, about the year 1146. The site of this monastery was granted in 1539 to Robert Fentham, Esq., and no vestiges of it remain. The monuments of some of the Staffords yet remain in the church. Woodseat is the property of Thomas Bainbrigge, Esq.

SHEEN, 8 miles N.E. from Leek, contains 69 houses, and 429 inhabitants. It is a curacy, value 4*l.* 13*s.*

UTTOXETER, 12½ miles N.E. from Stafford, and 135 miles N.W. from London, contains 926 houses, and 4658 inhabitants. It is situated on the declivity of a hill sloping to the river Dove, over which it has a good stone bridge. The principal streets unite in a spacious market-place, and branch off on the north to Ashborne, on the east to Derby, on the south to Abbot's Bromley, and on the north-west to Cheadle. The houses are in general well built; and the whole appearance of the town is gradually improving. The church, which has a fine lofty spire, is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The manufactures consist of various kinds of ironmongery; and in its neighbourhood are several iron forges. The market is on Wednesday, and the fairs on 6th May, 5th July, 1st September, and 27th November.

WATERFALL, 7 miles S.E. from Leek, contains 95 houses, and 461 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, value 7*l.* Part of the township of Calton is in this parish.

WETTON, 7½ miles S.E. from Leek, contains 112 houses, and 609 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

WORCESTERSHIRE.—Oxford Circuit.

This county, which is towards the centre of the kingdom, is bounded on the north by Staffordshire and Shropshire; on the east by Warwickshire; on the south by Gloucestershire; and on the west by Herefordshire and Shropshire. The greatest length is thirty-six miles, being twenty-six in breadth, and one hundred and thirty in circumference. It was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, and was inhabited by the Cornavii or Dobuni. During the Saxon Heptarchy, Worcestershire formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia. There are encampments at Bredon, Kemsey, Malvern Hill, Wichbury Hill and Woodbury Hill, and there were formerly abbeys at Bordesley, Evesham, Pershore, and Worcester; also priories at Astley, Blockley, Bredon, Claines, Cokehill, Dodford, Kemsey, Little Malvern, Great Malvern, Wicton, and Westwood. The castles of its earlier lords were at Bengworth, Castle-Morton, Elmley, Hagley, Hanley, Hartlebury, Holt, Caldwell, Weoly and Worcester. The ancient forests were Feckenham, Ombersley, Horewell and Malvern. This county contains one city, Worcester, eleven market-towns, one hundred and fifty-two parishes, 34,738 inhabited houses, and 184,424 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and in the diocese of Worcester, excepting Tenbury, which is in the diocese of Hereford. Worcestershire returns nine members to Parliament; two for Worcester, one for Bewdley, two for Droitwich, two for Evesham, and two for the county—the Honourable H. B. Lygon, brother of the Earl Beauchamp, and the Honourable T. Foley. The air is soft, warm and healthy, there being but few lakes and little boggy land; the soil south of Worcester is mostly a rich clay or marl; north of the city it is chiefly gravel or sand. The part of the Malvern Hills, which is distinguished from the Herefordshire range by the name of the Worcestershire Beacon, rises 1300 feet above the level of the plain. This range of hills appears to be one vast rock, principally of limestone towards the west, and quartz towards the east. A variety of springs rise in these hills, the most noted of which are the Malvern Wells, which have acquired a reputation for curing many disorders. The view from the summit of the hill is peculiarly extensive and delightful; and in the month of May, when the orchards in Herefordshire are in full blossom, presents one of the most enchanting landscapes in the kingdom. The Lickey Hills are on the north, the Bredon Hills on the south-east, and the Abberley Hills on the north-west. The valleys of this county are particularly rich and fertile, and the productiveness of the Vale of Evesham is not exceeded by any tract in the kingdom. The rivers of Worcestershire are the Arrow, Upper Avon, Leden, Rea, Salwarpe, Severn, Stour, and Teme. The Severn, famous for its salmon, rises in Plinlimmon Hill in Montgomeryshire, and enters this county a little above Bewdley. At Mitton it receives from the east the Stour, and pursuing a southern course it is further augmented by the Salwarpe; it then runs with a swift current through the city of Worcester, two miles below which it receives the river Teme; and after washing Stoke and Upton, enters Gloucestershire, where it is joined by the Upper Avon, which rises in Northamptonshire, and traversing Warwickshire enters Worcestershire at Cleeve Prior, flows through Evesham, and having united with the Little Stour near the last town, turns to the south at Pershore and falls into the Severn at Tewksbury. The Teme rises in Radnorshire, enters this county above Tenbury, and falls into the Severn two miles below Worcester, after having watered a rich country particularly famous for its many hop-grounds. The canals of Worcestershire are the Droitwich, Dudley, Leominster, Staffordshire, Stourport, and the Worcester and Birmingham. The chief manufactures are hardware, iron, china, and glass, carpets and worsted shag. Croome Park, near Pershore, is the seat of the Earl of Coventry, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Blackenhurst Hundred,

On the south-east side of the county, is bounded on the north by Warwickshire; on the south and east by Gloucestershire; and on the west by Oswaldslow hundred. It has two divisions, the upper and lower.

Lower Division.

ABBOTS MORTON, or Stony Morton, on the borders of Warwickshire, 8 miles N. from Evesham and 5 miles W. from Alcester, contains 44 houses, and 236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, which formerly belonged to the abbots of Evesham,—whence the name.

EVESHAM, or Eovesholme, on the river Avon, 100 miles from London, and 19 miles S.E. from Worcester, contains 722 houses, and 3487 inhabitants, including Bengworth. The only manufacture is one for knit-stockings, but the corn trade is considerable. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in gardening, which is carried on to a great extent for the supply of Cheltenham, Worcester, Birmingham, and even Bath. Here is a weekly market on Monday; and fairs, famous for strong black horses, on 2d February, Monday after Easter-week, Whit-Monday, and 21st September. The market-house, built by Sir Edward Hobby, is used by the Corporation for a Sessions House, and formerly the general assize of the county was held here. The town was incorporated by King James I., at the desire of the Prince of Wales, in 1605, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, 7 aldermen, 12 common-councilmen, and 24 assistants, with a chamberlain, town-clerk and other officers; their privileges are of a very extensive nature, the mayor and 4 aldermen being justices of the peace, justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, with the power of punishing all crimes, except high treason, committed within their liberties. The arms granted to the Corporation with their charter are, Azure, a garb of the earldom of Chester crowned with a prince's crown or, between two ostrich feathers of Wales argent, within a border of the earldom of Cornwall, sable bezanty. Evesham sends two members to Parliament, a privilege granted 23rd Edw. VI.; and the right of election is vested in the common burgesses, who amount to about 600. The election in 1830 was rendered void by a Committee of the House of Commons. Here is a well endowed grammar-school, a charity-school, and alms-houses. The Vale of Evesham, now so remarkable for its beauty and fertility, was once equally celebrated for the magnificent abbey, one of the largest and most stately in the kingdom, founded as early as the year 709 by St. Egwin for Benedictine monks, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Within the precincts of the abbey, besides its own church, were the churches of All Saints and St. Lawrence, the last now in ruins. The Abbot's Tower, almost the only remains of this once splendid abbey, is advantageously situated on an eminence near the banks of the river Avon, and from the road to Worcester on the opposite shore presents an exceedingly picturesque appearance between the two churches, and seeming to form the parts of one building. It was erected for a bell tower or campanile, by Clement Lichfield, abbot, in the reign of Henry VIII. The east and west fronts are exactly similar, consisting of an archway, two chamber stories with windows, an open worked battlement and pinnacles; the whole height to the tops of the pinnacles is about 110 feet, and the tower is 22 feet square at the base; the north and south fronts present a slight difference, being less ornamented at the lower part, and the north having a double window like the others, but on the south is only a single window placed out of the centre towards the west; there are graduated buttresses at the angles covered with panelling: it contains a peal of eight large bells. Both from its situation and the beauty of its architecture, this building is a great ornament to the vicinity. The Abbot of Evesham was a mitred parliamentary abbot, and held his barony in the counties of Worcester, Gloucester and Northampton, of the King by the service of four knights' fees and a half. The arms of the abbey were, Azure, a chain, in chevron, with a ring on the dexter and a fetter-lock on the sinister, between three mitres, or. At the general Dissolution the possessions of this monastery were valued at 1268*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* per annum, when the site was granted to Philip Hobby 34th Hen. VIII. In Evesham are three parishes, All Saints, St. Lawrence, and St. Peter in Bengworth. All Saints is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The church was probably built in the early part of the thirteenth century. At the west end is an embattled tower, in a style of architecture which corresponds greatly with that period; it is surmounted by an octagonal spire; a porch projecting from the base of this tower, built by Abbot Clement Lichfield in the reign of Henry VIII., is of very beautiful construction; it is enriched with panelled arches on its exterior, and finished with an open worked parapet: the body of the church is nearly 130 feet in length, and its greatest breadth, including the aisles, is about 73 feet. In the south aisle is the chapel of Clement Lichfield, the 55th Abbot of Evesham, who after having been a most munificent benefactor of his convent, had the mortification to outlive its total demolition. He was elected in 1513, and resigned the abbacy in 1533 in favour of Abbot Hawford, who surrendered the abbey to the Crown in the same year. Abbot Lichfield retired to Offenham, and at his death in 1546 was buried in this chapel; but his monument is now defaced. The north aisle was called the Derby chapel. In the same churchyard, which is a large square planted with trees, is the church of St. Lawrence; a curacy, in the presentation of the Crown. This edifice is a pleasing specimen of elegant architecture, fast falling to decay. In 1730 money was collected, by brief, for its restoration, and the north side was then rebuilt: a new roof was constructed, and the whole rendered applicable to divine service; but the church is again in ruins. On the south side are remains of a very beautiful chapel, covered with panelling and tracery; the east end of the church is also remarkably fine and worthy of preservation. St. Peter's church in Bengworth is a curacy; it is a large irregular ancient edifice. Amongst other monuments is one to Thomas Watson, of Evesham, ob. 1561, and one to John Deacle, ob. 1706, who founded a free school at Bengworth. Evesham is separated from Bengworth by the river Avon, over which is an ancient bridge. At the east end of Bengworth was formerly a castle belonging to the Beauchamp family, which was rased to its foundation by Abbot Andeville as early as 1156. The site is still called The Castle, and is surrounded by a moat of some depth, which communicates with the river.

GREAT HAMPTON, 1 mile W. from Evesham, contains 67 houses, and 324 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, formerly belonged to the abbey of Evesham; the arms of which are sculptured on the west front. It is now a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. Little Hampton is a township of this parish.

NORTON, or Abbots Norton, 3 miles N. from Evesham, contains 76 houses, and 386 inhabitants. It formerly belonged to the abbots of Evesham. The church, dedicated to St. Egwin, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, and contains some ancient monuments of the family of Bigg, who resided at Lench Wick, a tithing of this parish.

OLD BERROW, or Oldborough, situated in a detached portion of this hundred, 11 miles S.E. from Bromsgrove, contains 19 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester.

Upper Division.

BADSEY, 2 miles S.E. from Evesham, contains 64 houses, and 334 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. Sir Peter Courteen of Aldington, a hamlet of this parish, was created baronet 18th May 1622; but the title is now extinct.

BRETFORTON, or Bratforton, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 3 miles E. from Evesham, contains 87 houses, and 451 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 5*s.* The village is situated on a dry gravelly soil, one of the pleasantest spots in the Vale of Evesham.

CHURCH HONEYBORN, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 5 miles E. from Evesham, contains 25 houses, and 136 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Egwin, is a curacy. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Evesham; and the inhabitants had several remarkable customs, amongst which was an annual procession, with a cross and banners, to the abbey in the time of Pentecost. The manor of Poden in this parish was once the property of the Hobbys, and afterwards of Walwyn Graves, grandson to Richard Graves the antiquary, and ancestor of Morgan Graves, Esq., of Mickleton in Gloucestershire.

NORTH LITTLETON, 5 miles N.E. from Evesham, contains 61 houses, and 342 inhabitants, including the township of Middle Littleton. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford, but is a ruin: and the chapel at Middle Littleton Dr. Nash describes as remarkably dirty, where pigeons breed, and by no means fit for divine service.—Hist. of Worcestershire, vol. ii. p. 105.

SOUTH LITTLETON, one mile S. from the above, contains 35 houses, and 204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford.

OFFENHAM, 2½ miles N. from Evesham, contains 81 houses, and 342 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Milburgh, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. It formerly belonged to the abbots of Evesham, who had a manor-house here, to which Abbot Lichfield retired, and who resided here after the dissolution of the abbey.

WICKAMFORD, on a branch of the Avon, 2 miles S.E. from Evesham, contains 23 houses, and 130 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. On the north side of the chancel is a large monument to the memory of Sir Samuel Sandys, eldest son of Edwyn Sandys Archbishop of York, who died 2nd Sept. 1626, æt. 63, and of his son Sir Edwyn Sandys.

2. Doddingtree Hundred,

On the western side of the county, is bounded on the north by Shropshire; on the east by Oswaldslow hundred; on the south by Pershore hundred; and on the west by Herefordshire. This hundred has two divisions, upper and lower.

Lower Division.

ABBERLEY, 6 miles S.W. from Bewdley, contains 112 houses, and 574 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* It contains several monuments of the family of Walsh, formerly lords of the manor. William Walsh, a critic and poet of this family, was the friend and contemporary of Dryden and Pope. He died in 1708, æt. 46, and was buried in a chapel on the south side of the church. Abberley Lodge is the seat of Henry Bromley, Esq. The County Courts are supposed to have been once held under a tree on Abberley Hill, an eminence south of the village, which is seen from every part of the county.

ASTLEY, 5 miles S. from Bewdley, contains 170 houses, and 784 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the church are several monuments of the Blounts and Winfords. An alien priory of Benedictine monks, subordinate to the abbey of St. Taurinus near Ebroix, was founded here by Ralph de Todeni before 1160. The frequent seizure of this estate into the King's hands, during the early wars with France, induced the abbot and convent of St. Taurinus to obtain leave from King Richard II. to sell it to John Beauchamp, who possessed it some time. In the reign of Edward IV. the priory was annexed to the college of Westbury in Gloucestershire; and at the Dissolution was granted by Henry VIII. to Sir Ralph Sadler. Sir T. Winford, of Glasshampton, was created baronet 3rd July 1702. Glasshampton is now the seat of Rev. Denham Cooke. At Redstone ferry is a high rock, out of which was hewn a chapel or hermitage, on the banks of the Severn.

BAYTON, on the borders of Shropshire, 6 miles W. from Bewdley, and one mile E. from Cleobury, contains 86 houses, and 466 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Shakenhurst, called by corruption Sheekminster, was long the property and residence of the Meysey family. It is now the seat of Thomas Wigley, Esq.

DODDENHAM, on the river Teme, 7 miles W. from Worcester, contains 55 houses, and 252 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. Ankerden is a manor of this parish.

MAMBLE, 7 miles S.W. from Bewdley, contains 65 houses, and 386 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel are ancient monuments of the Blounts and of the Meyseys of Shakenhurst. Sir Walter Blount, of Sodington, was created baronet 5th Oct. 1642. The house, situated on an eminence and moated round, now belongs to Sir Edward Blount, Bart. whose principal seat is at Mawley, near Cleobury Mortimer in Shropshire.

BEWDLEY, in the parish of Ribbesford, 129 miles from London, and 14 miles N. from Worcester, contains 892 houses, and 3798 inhabitants. It is situated on the banks of the Severn, over which is a bridge. The Corporation of Bewdley, by charter of James I., consists of a bailiff, recorder, high-steward, town-clerk, twelve capital burgesses, and other officers. The bailiff is a justice of the peace and of the quorum for the year he officiates; as also for the succeeding year. Arms of the borough, Argent, an anchor, in pale, surmounted by a fetterlock azure, within the fetterlock, on the dexter side a sword erect, and on the sinister side a rose, both proper. From its situation on the Severn, and in the midst of a populous and manufacturing country, Bewdley has long been a flourishing town. Several trades are exercised here. Tanning of leather has long been established; and the Monmouth or sailors' caps made here employ a number of hands. The market is on Saturday, and fairs are held 23rd April for horned cattle, horses, cheese, linen and woollen cloth; Monday before 26th July for cattle, cheese, and other goods; 10th Dec. for horses only; and 11th Dec. for horned cattle, horses, cheese, linen and woollen cloth. Bewdley returns one member to Parliament; and the right of election is vested in the bailiff and capital burgesses, who elect other burgesses to vote with them, and not in all the inhabitants of the borough. The present member is Wilson Aylesbury Roberts, Esq., lord of the manor of Bewdley. The church of Ribbesford, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* It still contains some painted glass, arms of Mortimers, Beauchamps, &c. broken, and several ancient monuments. Many of these memorials had been effaced by modern improvements, according to Dr. Nash; but as he does not state the improvements, it may be supposed an inadvertent expression. The chapel in Bewdley, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt in 1748, and contains neither arms nor monuments of note; but a long list of the decorations of the old chapel is preserved in Habington's MSS. Tickenhill House is the seat of Mrs. Onslow. Tickenhill Manor belonged anciently to the Mortimers; Richard Earl of March, son and heir of Richard Plantagenet Earl of Cambridge and Anne sister and heiress of Edmund Mortimer, is said to have originally built the mansion on the summit of the hill here; which coming afterwards into possession of the Crown, it was repaired by Henry VII. for his eldest son Prince Arthur: the ceremony of that prince's marriage in his own person with Katherine the Infanta of Spain, by her proxy, was here performed on Whitsunday, 19th May 1499. The prince died soon afterwards at Ludlow Castle, and his corpse rested here on the night after St. Mark's day 1502, on its way to Worcester. After Prince Arthur's death the Court of the Marches of Wales was held alternately at Tickenhill and Ludlow Castle. The park here was famous for its large spreading oaks, resembling those in the neighbouring forest of Wyre, part of which is within the precincts of the borough of Bewdley, and was once remarkable for its great quantity of timber. The manor-house at Tickenhill was considerably damaged in the Civil War, but was afterwards repaired by Mr. Ingram. It still belongs to the Crown, and is held under a lease. Winterdyne House, the seat of W. M. Moseley, Esq., commands a delightful view of the river Severn, with its pendant rocks and woods. The situation is peculiarly healthy; and the environs of Bewdley are confidently described as the pleasantest part of the county, if not of all England. This seat was built by Sir Edward Winnington, Bart., of Stanford Court, after he had resigned the ancient seat of the family to his son Sir Edward Winnington, the second baronet. Ribbesford was formerly the seat of Lord Herbert of Chirbury. Spring Grove is the seat of John Taylor, Esq. At Blakiston Rock near Bewdley is a hermitage of some extent.

ROCK, or Aka, 5 miles S.W. from Bewdley, contains 245 houses, and 1266 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Alton, or Alwinton, Snead, Hightington, and Lindons. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* The body of the edifice is of Anglo-Norman architecture; but the south aisle and the large tower and steeple were erected by Sir Humphrey Coningsby, one of the justices of the King's Bench, in 1510.

SHELSLEY BEAUCHAMP, or Great Sheldesley, on the river Teme, 10 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 52 houses, and 282 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* King's Shelsley is a hamlet of this parish.

SHRAWLEY, 8 miles N. from Worcester, contains 83 houses, and 484 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*

STOCKTON, on the river Teme, 8 miles S.W. from Bewdley, and 13¼ miles from Worcester in the road to Tenbury, contains 28 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church, erected about the time of Henry II., contains several monuments of the family of Walsh, formerly lords of the manor.

GREAT WITLEY, 10 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 79 houses, and 354 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Redmarley. The Petty Sessions are held here. Witley Court, the seat of Lord Foley, is situated in a most beautiful park, commanding various prospects, not only over the domain, but including the delightful though distant vale of Severn. In the grounds are a variety of well-placed seats and lodges, with spacious lawns and ornamental sheets of water. The estate was purchased of the Russells of Strensham by Thomas

Foley, a rich iron-manufacturer of Stourbridge, who died in 1677, the grandfather of the first Lord Foley created in 1711. This title having become extinct was revived in the person of Thomas eldest son of Thomas Foley, Esq., of Stoke Edith in Herefordshire, who was created Lord Foley of Kidderminster 20th May 1776. The church of Great Witley, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Foley. The present edifice was built by the first Lord Foley and Mary his widow; and there is a very handsome closet on the north side the altar communicating with the house, facing which is a sumptuous marble monument of the founder and his family. The windows of the church were painted by Price in 1719, and the ceiling by Verrio. The last was brought from Canons in Middlesex.

In this parish the river Teme passes under Woodbury Hill, a beautiful eminence, on the summit of which is an entrenchment called Owen Glyndwr's Camp, but is probably of more remote antiquity.

Upper Division.

ACTON BEAUCHAMP, on the borders of Herefordshire, 13 miles S.W. from Worcester, and 3 miles from Bromyard, contains 49 houses, and 258 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 4*l.* It was the only parish in this county of which the Beauchamps, Barons of Powick, were absolute lords.

KING'S ARELY, or Lower Arely, on the river Severn, 3½ miles S. from Bewdley, contains 76 houses, and 358 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Dunley. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 9*l.* Arely Hall is an ancient seat of the Mucklow family.

BOCKLETON, on the borders of Herefordshire, 6 miles S. from Tenbury, contains 52 houses, and 294 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of the treasurer of Hereford Cathedral. In the church is a monument of Richard Barnaby, lord of the manor in the reign of Elizabeth.

CLIFTON UPON TEME, 10 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 86 houses, and 520 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Kellom, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* This town was constituted a borough 50th Edward III., and privileged with fairs, and a weekly market on Thursday, with many other immunities, by a charter granted to Mortimer, then lord of the manor. Home Castle, an ancient seat of the Jefferies family, is eastward of the village.

COTHORIDGE, on the river Teme, 4 miles W. from Worcester, contains 44 houses, and 277 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Howson and Otherton. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy. In the chancel is the monument of Thomas son of Sir Rowland Berkeley of Cothoridge, who died in Greece in 1669.

EAST HAM, on the river Teme, 4 miles E. from Tenbury, contains 65 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* Hanley Child and Orleton are chapelries of this parish, which produces very good hops and cider.

EDVIN LOACH, or Yedefen Loges, locally situated in Herefordshire, 9 miles S.E. from Tenbury, and 3 miles from Bromyard, contains 13 houses, and 63 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 2*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

HANLEY WILLIAM, or Upper Hanley, 6 miles S.E. from Tenbury, contains 23 houses, and 124 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*

GREAT KYRE, or Kyre Wyard, 4½ miles S. from Tenbury, contains 37 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* Kyre Park is the seat of Edmund Pytts, Esq. The mansion is large and handsome; the park, watered by the Kyre brook, a trout stream, and also by an ornamental sheet of water, is 25 acres in extent; the views are exceedingly pleasing, and the plantations well designed. The Clee Hills in Shropshire, about seven miles distant, produce excellent coal. Little Kyre is a hamlet of Stoke Bliss in Herefordshire.

MARTLEY, 6½ miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 226 houses, and 1126 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 10*s.* Hillhampton is a hamlet of this parish.

SAPEY PRITCHARD, or Lower Sapey, on the borders of Herefordshire, 12 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 43 houses, and 200 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Upper Sapey is in Herefordshire.

SHELSLEY WALSH, or Little Sheldesley, 10 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 11 houses, and 57 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* In the chancel is a large monument to the memory of Francis Walsh, Esq. ob. 1596. Sir Walter Walsh, who arrested Cardinal Wolsey at Cawood, was of this family.

STANFORD, on the river Teme, 14 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 31 houses, and 194 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Edward Winnington; it was built in 1768: an offertory dish preserved here, in which oblations to the abbot and convent of Evesham were formerly received, is exceedingly curious. Stanford Court, the seat of Sir Edward Winnington, Bart., is situated in a very extensive park, abounding with delightful prospects and fine groves of oak; here are two large pieces of water. The mansion has lately been much enlarged, and is a neat plain edifice, without architectural pretension. In the park is a curious hermitage, and in the garden is a cedar of Lebanon more than three yards round. Sir Edward Winnington of Stanford was created baronet 15th February 1775.

Stanford bridge, over the Teme, was originally built of wood, by Humphrey Pakington of Chaddesley Corbet, in 1548. It has been rebuilt.

SUCKLEY, or Sukeley, on the borders of Herefordshire, 10 miles S.W. from Worcester, contains 109 houses, and 622 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Alfrick and Lulsley are chapelries of this parish; the last is situated on the banks of the river Teme about a mile below Knightsford bridge.

TENBURY, on the river Teme, which here separates the county from Shropshire, 133 miles from London, and 21 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 210 houses, and 1008 inhabitants. It is the only market-town in this division. The market-place is ancient; and a new butter-cross has added to the convenience of the inhabitants. The principal trade of the town is in hops and cider. The market is held on Thursday, and the fairs are on 23rd April, 18th July, and 26th September. Three streets of the town form the roads leading to Bromsgrove, Worcester, and Cleobury Mortimer, and at the upper end of the principal street the little river Kyre flows with a rapid course under a handsome bridge. The bridge over the Teme, on the north side of the town, is of stone, consisting of six arches. This river is subject to great floods; one of which in 1770 greatly damaged the church; and in the repairs no regard was paid to the style of architecture in which it was originally erected. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and is a rectory, value 21*l.* In the chancel on the north side is the figure of a child in armour under an arch, his legs crossed, and under his feet a talbot. In the south aisle is a monument of Thomas Acton of Sutton, ob. 1546. Berrington and Sutton are hamlets of the parish of Tenbury.

3. Halfshire Hundred,

Is the north-east part of the county, is bounded on the north by Staffordshire and a detached part of Shropshire; on the east by Warwickshire; and on the south and west by Oswaldslow hundred. It is separated into upper and lower divisions.

Lower Division.

BELBROUGHTON, 5 miles N.W. from Bromsgrove, contains 311 houses, and 1476 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 19*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. The edifice is of Anglo-Norman architecture. Bell Hall is the seat of Mrs. Noel.

CHADDESLEY CORBET, 5 miles N.W. from Bromsgrove, in the road to Kidderminster, contains 262 houses, and 1343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cassyon, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is an Anglo-Norman edifice; and the font, adorned with rude sculpture, has the appearance of great antiquity.

CHURCHILL, on a branch of the river Stour, 3½ miles N.E. from Kidderminster, contains 26 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The parish coffer, kept in the church, is of singularly rude workmanship, consisting merely of a huge block of oak hollowed, with a thick cover.

DUDLEY, situated in a detached part of the county, 119 miles from London, and 26 miles N.E. from Worcester, contains 3184 houses, and 18,211 inhabitants. It is an ancient town, and formerly sent members to Parliament; the principal street being the great thoroughfare from Bridgnorth to Birmingham, has the appearance of much bustle and business. The manufactures consist of all sorts of hardware, ironmongery, and flint glass: possessing great facilities of water carriage, by means of its canal, it is continually increasing in opulence and population. Within the parish is a coal-mine, having a vein, called from its prodigious size the Ten-yard Vein; additional coal-mines and ironstone-mines have been opened, and a correspondent number of iron-works erected within a few years. The petty sessions are held here, and here is a free Grammar-school.

The market is on Saturday, and fairs are held, on 8th May for cattle, wool, and cheese; 5th August for lambs; and 2nd October for horses, cattle, wool, and cheese. In the town are two churches, situated at each extremity of the longest street, the one dedicated to St. Edmund, and the other to St. Thomas; they are both united in one vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* in the patronage of Earl Dudley. The church of St. Edmund was demolished by Colonel Leveson in 1646, and was rebuilt at the expense of Richard Bradley. An account of the monuments and painted glass in the old church is printed in Dr. Nash's History of Worcestershire, but many of them are not to be found in the present church. In 1815 an Act of Parliament was obtained for taking down and rebuilding St. Thomas's church, when the present edifice was afterwards built. Earl Dudley subscribed 2000*l.* towards its erection; his lordship had previously contributed 400*l.* towards the building of a chapel in the adjoining parish of Sedgley in Staffordshire, and gave the land on which that edifice stands.

Gervase Paynell, lord of the manor, founded a priory here about 1161, and established a certain number of Cluniac Monks, from Wenlock, to which it was accounted a cell. It was dedicated to St. James, and valued at 36*l.* 3*s.* per annum at the Dissolution, when it was granted as parcel of Wenlock to Sir John Dudley, and afterwards by Queen Mary to Sir Edward Sutton Lord Dudley; the remains of this priory afford but a faint idea of its former state. Dudley Castle is said to have been originally built by William Fitz Ansculph, and fortified by Gervase Paynell, in the reign of Stephen, for Maud the Empress. In 1175 it was demolished as a punishment for Paynell being in rebellion with Prince Henry. In 1263 the castle was rebuilt, with license from King Henry III., by Roger de Somery. Considerable additions were made to it by John Dudley Duke of Northumberland, in the reign of Queen Mary, and it was formerly very extensive. The castle stands on the summit of a high hill, and the prospects from the ruins are extremely grand and diversified; seven English and two Welsh counties may be distinctly seen on a fine day; numerous ridges of mountains, rich and fertile vales, populous towns, the spires of different churches, and various seats, are included in the view. Ann, great-granddaughter of Sir Edward Sutton, son and heir of Lord Dudley, who sold Dudley to the Duke of Northumberland, carried the estate by marriage to Humble Ward, created Lord Ward of Birmingham, in 1643. During the civil war, the castle was twice besieged: in 1644, when after a resistance of three weeks, it was relieved by some of the King's forces from Worcester; and in 1646, when it was surrendered to Sir William Brereton, Commander of the Parliamentarian forces, by Colonel Leveson, Governor for the King. This noble family are said to have resided here for some years after the Restoration, but at length abandoned it, and left it in the ruinous condition to which it had been reduced by the siege. The title of Viscount Dudley was renewed in 1763, in the person of John Lord Ward, by the title of Viscount Dudley and Ward, of Dudley, and John William, fourth Viscount, was created Earl Dudley 24th September 1827. The ruins of this baronial mansion consist of numerous buildings, surrounding a court, and encompassed by a wall, flanked with towers. The keep, the gate-house, and the chapel are very ancient; the other parts are of more modern date.

The Dudley canal forms a communication between the Birmingham canal and the Stourbridge canal. The Dudley extension canal joins the former near Netherton, and passing through a tunnel in Combe's Wood, on the north of Hales Owen, enters Lapal tunnel, nearly two miles in length, and shortly after joins the Worcester and Birmingham canal. There are two collateral cuts from the canal at Windmill End towards Dudley.

ELMLEY LOVETT, 5 miles S. from Kidderminster, in the road to Worcester, whence it is distant 10 miles, contains 76 houses, and 447 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* It derives its name from the Lovett family, who held great estates in this county soon after the Conquest. In the chapel of St. Nicholas, in the church, was a perpetual chantry to pray for the soul of Sir John Lovett, and of his ancestors and successors; but it was of small value, and no notice is taken of it after 1335. The successors of this family in the manor were the families of Beauchamp, Acton, and Townshend; the last held it partly by inheritance and partly by purchase.

FRANKLEY, 6½ miles N.E. from Bromsgrove, and 3½ miles S.E. from Hales Owen, contains 32 houses, and 189 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy; it was originally built, according to Dr. Nash, about the reign of Henry III.; but in 1751 the tower was rebuilt of stone from the ruins of Frankley Hall. The Hall or manor house was the birth-place of that great lawyer Sir Thomas Lyttleton, alias Westcote, styled by Lord Coke the English Justinian. It was garrisoned for the King by Prince Rupert in 1642, but when he could no longer keep it, he burnt it to the ground, to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy; since which time it has never been rebuilt, and this family have resided at Hagley Park. George Lyttleton was created Lord Lyttleton of Frankley, 19th November 1757, extinct in 1779.

The chapelry of Cradley, and the hamlets of Luttley, and Warley Wigorn, are all in the adjoining parish of Hales Owen, in Shropshire.

HAGLEY, 6 miles W. from Kidderminster, and 3 miles S. from Stourbridge, contains 124 houses, and 595 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Lyttleton; the parish contains the small hamlet of Wassel, and certain lands called Harborow. On Wichbury hill is a large encampment, and on Clent heath are five barrows or lows. The chancel of the church of Hagley, rebuilt in 1754, contains several monuments of the Lyttleton family, who have resided here at different times ever since they purchased the manor in the reign of Elizabeth.

Hagley Park, the seat of Lord Lyttleton, may be considered a classical spot, having been celebrated by several of our best poets. Thomson, in his poem of Spring, has called it the British Tempé, and it was long regarded as a masterpiece in the art of landscape gardening; a tower on the highest ground in the park commands an extensive prospect, bounded by the Clent and Malvern Hills, the Black Mountains in Wales, the Wrekin and the Radnor Trump. At a short distance from a cascade in the park is a Palladian bridge leading to a column surmounted by a statue of Frederick Prince of Wales, the father of George III. The mansion was built by the first Lord Lyttleton, created 1757. Its elevation is extremely plain, presenting none of the enrichments of architecture on either of its four fronts, which are nearly similar; but in the housekeeper's room is a fine old carved chimney-piece, which belonged to the great parlour of the old house, and is of the Elizabethan age. In the house is a collection of pictures, the list of which has been frequently printed: it contains, besides family portraits of some interest, portraits of the friends and co-patriots of the first Lord Lyttleton; a portrait of Pope and his dog Bounce; another of Thomson; and one of Gilbert West, the intimate friend and companion of Lord Lyttleton; and busts of Rubens and Vandyck. William Henry Lord Westcote, of Baltimore, in Ireland, was advanced to the British peerage by the title of Lord Lyttleton of Frankley, 13th August, 1794; he died in 1808, and was succeeded by his eldest son George Fulke Lord Lyttleton.

KIDDERMINSTER, on the river Stour, 128 miles from London, and 14 miles N. from Worcester, contains 2353 houses, and 12,752 inhabitants, including the suburbs, called the Foreign. The hamlets on the east side of the river within the parish are Broadwaters, Hircott, Wannerton, Blakedown, Heathy Mill, Commerton and Aggborough. On the west side of the river are the hamlets of Blackbrook, French, High and Low Abberley, Trimpley, Eymore, Hall, Wassall, Hoarestone, Wribbenhall, Sandburn, Blackstone, Lickhill, Upper and Lower Mitton, and Stourport. This flourishing town consists chiefly of two principal streets, one of which runs nearly parallel to the river, and through the other, about a mile in length, passes the road from Bewdley to Birmingham. It occupies rather a low situation; but its appearance is very striking from the hill after passing Hartlebury; and the approach to it from either Bewdley or Stourbridge is advantageous for a view of the town: many of the houses are cut out of the solid rock, while the central part lies in a bottom. The town is governed by a bailiff, twelve aldermen, twenty-five common-councilmen, a recorder, and town-clerk. The petty sessions are held here, and the magistrates of the county have concurrent jurisdiction in the borough. The town-hall stands in the centre of the market-place, and the council-room occupies the principal story, while the lower part is used as a market-house; the market is on Thursday, and fairs are held in the town on Palm Monday, Holy Thursday, 20th June, and 4th September. Both trade and manufacture flourish here, especially wool-spinning and carpet-weaving. The carpet trade was introduced in 1735, with the manufacture of Scots or flat carpets, without a pile, and in 1749 the cut carpets like those of Wilton were made. Kidderminster carpets are remarkable for the brilliancy and durability of the colours, a circumstance attributed to the peculiar properties of the water of the Stour, for scouring and striking, it being strongly impregnated with fullers earth and iron. The manufactures in the town are altogether upon a very extensive scale, but that of carpets is certainly the most considerable. In 1671, an Act of Parliament was passed for regulating the manufacture of Kidderminster stuffs, but it is now obsolete; the linseywoolseys or Kidderminsters were succeeded by a stuff of worsted and silk mixed, known by the name of Spanish poplins. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 30*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* It stands on the brow of a knoll, at the end of a street leading from the market-place. The tower is uncommonly fine, and during a late repair, the style of the building was carefully preserved. In 1640, Richard Baxter, the celebrated non-conformist, was minister here. The monuments in the church claim particular attention; the more ancient are those of the Cokeseys and the Blounts. On the banks of the river at Caldwell, a short distance from the town, stand the ruins of a castle of considerable antiquity, formerly the seat of the Cokeseys, whose monuments are in the church. It consists of a tower of reddish stone, incorporated into the modern residence of a manufacturer. The charities of this town are very numerous; the principal is an excellent well endowed free school. By means of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal a very considerable trade is carried on; on the banks is a commodious quay, warehouses, &c. There are very pleasant walks on the side of the Stour, and of the canal, with diversified prospects from the contiguous eminences; the principal of these leads to Round Hill, about half a mile distant, where there is a chalybeate spring; there is also one at Sandburn. On Wassal Hill, about three miles N.W. near the banks of the Severn, are the remains of an encampment. Lower Mitton is a chapelry of Kidderminster, and contains 483 houses, and 2544 inhabitants, not included in the above statement of the population of the parish. Lea Castle is the seat of J. Knight, Esq., and Hircott House is the seat of —— Hallen, Esq.

STOURPORT, an extensive village at the junction of the river Stour with the Severn, four miles below Kidderminster, has a market on Thursday, and fairs on Easter Monday and 13th September for cattle and hops. A handsome cast-iron bridge of one arch has been constructed over the Severn. The basin of the canal here was finished in 1771; it was constructed under the inspection of Brindley.

OLD SWINFORD, on the Swin, one mile S. from Stourbridge, contains 932 houses, and 4980 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; the name of this parish, of which Stourbridge is a township, is derived from a ford over the Swin rivulet; with the addition of Old, to distinguish it from the neighbouring parish of King's Swinford, in Staffordshire. Here is a school, founded by Thomas Foley, of Stourbridge, for clothing, maintaining and educating sixty boys of this and the neighbouring parishes, besides three other charity schools. Within three miles of this town, but in the county of Stafford, are very extensive mines of coal.

PEDMORE, 2 miles S. from Stourbridge, contains 57 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* It is bounded on the south by Hagley. Here is a free school, founded about 1699 by Thomas Foley, Esq.

RUSHOCK, 5 miles W. from Bromsgrove, contains 32 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Merchant Taylors' Company of London hold the manor of Rushock.

STONE, 2 miles S.E. from Kidderminster, in the road to Bromsgrove, contains 86 houses, and 464 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It was dedicated in 1269.

STOURBRIDGE, 122 miles from London, and 5 miles S.W. from Dudley, contains 979 houses, and 5090 inhabitants. It is a township of the parish of Old Swinford, and is an ancient borough by prescription, governed by a bailiff, assisted by some of the principal inhabitants, a town-clerk, and other officers. The petty sessions are held here. It derives its name from its situation on the river Stour, over which there is a stone bridge, and has a well attended market on Friday, and fairs 29th March and 8th September. There are several manufactures of hardware, but the chief production of the town is glass, which is here made, and cut with extreme elegance. The church is a brick building, situated at the west end of the town; here is also an excellent free school, founded by King Edward VI., containing an extensive library. This library was built, and many books were given, by Henry Hickman of London about the year 1665. The ancient chapel of Stourbridge was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and was situated where the school now stands. A new chapel here was erected about the reign of Elizabeth. By means of the Dudley canal Stourbridge enjoys a communication with several adjacent counties. Dennis is the seat of —— Hill, Esq.

Upper Division.

BROMSGROVE, near the source of the Salwarpe, 116 miles from London, and 12 miles N.E. from Worcester, contains 1513 houses, and 7519 inhabitants. It is an ancient borough, and is governed by a bailiff, recorder, aldermen, and other officers. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of nails, needles, and coarse linens. It has a good market on Thursday, and fairs 24th June and 1st October, for linen, cloth, cheese, and horses. The parish is divided into ten Yields,—the Town Yield, Burnford, Fockbury, Catshill, Chadwick, Shepley, Burcot, Padesbourne, Timberhanger, and Woodcot Yield. It also contains eight manors, Bromsgrove, Bunhill, Chadwick, Cudford, Dyers, Gannow, Grafton, and the manor of the rectory. The lord of the manor holds a Court Baron every three weeks, for the recovery of debts under 40*s.*, in the Town-hall. Here is a free Grammar-school. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 41*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. It stands on an eminence, with an ascent of fifty steps; the tower and spire are not surpassed in architectural beauty by any other church in the county; on the west front of the tower is the statue of St. John the Baptist, between the figures of St. Peter and St. Paul. It contains some fine ancient painted glass; in the east window is the figure of St. Wolstan, and several coats of arms, now mutilated. Here is the monument of Sir John Talbot, ob. 1550 and others of that family, besides many other curious monuments. Several springs rise in this parish; one at Gannow divides itself into two streams, one of which directing its course towards the north falls into the Rea, and the other towards the west falls into the Stour; a great number of springs which rise in the Lickey Hill run to almost all points of the compass, whence some conclude that hill to be the highest ground in this part of the kingdom. Hawkesley House, the seat of the Middlemore family, on the north side of the Lickey Hill, was fortified and garrisoned by the Parliament in the reign of Charles I. It was besieged and taken by the King in person, 15th

May, 1645, when Captain Gouge the governor and eighty men were made prisoners; the King that night slept at Cofton Hall. The Padesbourne brook passes through Bromsgrove, and unites with the Salwarpe. Finshall House is near Bromsgrove and Whiteford Lodge; the last is the seat of Mrs. Lawrence.

CHURCH LENCH, on the borders of Warwickshire, 6 miles N. from Evesham, contains 39 houses, and 203 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Sheriffs Lench or Shreve Lench, and Atch Lench or East Lench, are hamlets of this parish.

COFTON HACKET, or Corton Hacket, 5 miles N.E. from Bromsgrove, contains 35 houses, and 187 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Bilberry Wake is kept on three successive Sundays after Midsummer: Cofton Hill is remarkably productive of that fruit. Cofton Hall, formerly the seat of Thomas Jolliffe, Esq. who enlarged it, descended to Michael Biddulph, of Ledbury: here is a portrait of Thomas Jolliffe, represented with a key in his hand, said to have been given him by Charles I. when in prison, that he might have access to him when he pleased. Vide Dr. Nash's History of the County. This was certainly a most unusual present from a prisoner. He, it is added, continued faithful to his Sovereign till the last, and attended his execution. The Worcester canal passes the east side of the village.

DOVER-DALE, 4 miles N.W. from Droitwich, contains 6 houses, and 60 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*

DROITWICH, on the Salwarpe, 6 miles N.E. from Worcester, and 126 from London, contains 453 houses, and 2176 inhabitants, exclusive of Dodderhill parish, its northern suburb, which contains 145 houses, and 734 inhabitants. It was anciently named Wich, and is a borough town; the Corporation consists of two bailiffs, a recorder, town-clerk, and eleven burgesses. In some instances the magistrates of the county have concurrent jurisdiction; the petty sessions are held here. The arms on their seal is, a sword in pale, the hilt in chief, surmounted by two lions passant. Here is a market on Friday, and fairs are held on Friday in Easter-week, 18th June, 24th September, and 18th December, for cattle, cheese, wool, and other goods. Droitwich returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon the town 23rd Edward I., by which the right of election is vested in the burgesses of the Corporation, who amount to about 40: the bailiffs are the returning officers; and the present members are the Earl of Sefton, and John Hodgetts Hodgetts Foley, Esq. of Prestwood House, near Stourbridge.

Droitwich contains three parishes, St. Andrew and St. Mary Witton, a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Nicholas, a rectory, value 4*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; and St. Peter Witton, a vicarage, value 6*l.*, besides Dodderhill, the church of which is dedicated to St. Austin, and is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* In this part of the town of Droitwich was a free chapel or hospital, founded in the reign of Edward I. by William de Dovere, rector of Dodderhill, consisting of a master and some poor brethren. It was dedicated to St. Mary, and was under the government of the priory of Worcester, but was suppressed with the free chapels in the reign of Edward VI. At Droitwich was a house of Friars Heremites, of the order of St. Austin, founded by the ancestors of Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, before the time of Edward III. It was granted by Henry VIII. to John Pye. Droitwich is chiefly celebrated for its salt-works, which are very ancient. In Domesday Book shares of the salt-works appear annexed to many estates in the county, some of them at the distance of ten or fifteen miles: the only fuel then used for boiling the brine was wood, and the lords of manors had Salinæ or vats of brine granted in proportion to the wood their lands afforded. The strength of the Droitwich brine it is said exceeds that of any other, excepting that at Barton in Lancashire, and some at the pits at Northwich. The Droitwich brine certainly exceeds all others in purity. A canal commences at Droitwich and communicates with the Severn near the mouth of the Salwarpe, being a navigable course of five miles and a half, with a fall of fifty-six feet six inches. High Park is the seat of P. Greesley, Esq. Elmbridge is a chapelry of Dodderhill parish.

FECKENHAM, 7 miles E. from Droitwich, and on the borders of the ancient forest of the same name, contains 460 houses, and 2383 inhabitants. Here are several needle-manufactories. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. In the town is a free school, endowed by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart., founder of Worcester College Oxford. John Feckenham, a learned monk of Evesham, was born here in the forest; he became chaplain to Queen Mary, who appointed him Dean of St. Paul's and Abbot of Westminster; he was held in much favour at Court both in her reign and that of Elizabeth; but opposing the supremacy of the Crown he was committed to the Tower and afterwards to Wisbeach Castle, where he died in 1585. Feckenham Pools formerly belonged to the abbey of Bordesley. Feckenham Forest, enlarged by Henry II., had been very much thinned of its timber to supply the neighbouring salt-works. It was disafforested in 1629, 5th Charles I. Pyperode Forest was a member of it.

GRAFTON MANOR, 2 miles S.W. from Bromsgrove, contains 7 houses, and 45 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial, and the chapel is in ruins. The old manor-house belonging to the Talbots was burnt down about 1710. The porch and part of the dining-hall remains. Grafton Hall is the seat of R. Lucas, Esq.

HADSOR, one mile S. from Droitwich, contains 22 houses, and 135 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* Hadsor Common was inclosed in 1773, and was then planted. Hadsor House is the seat of the Rev. Dr. Amphlett.

HAMPTON LOVETT, 2½ miles N.W. from Droitwich, contains 30 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 16*s.* In a chapel on the north side of the chancel are several monuments of the Pakingtons of Westwood. Hampton Court, the ancient seat of this family, built in the reign of Henry VIII., was burnt down during the civil war, but large additions having been made to Westwood Lodge, it became afterwards their principal seat. The plan of Westwood Lodge is somewhat singular, being a square building with a projecting wing at each angle, surmounted by a high-roofed turret. The park, of about two hundred acres, contains much wood, and is ornamented with a lake covering nearly sixty acres; the woods are planted with wide avenues converging towards the centre, where the house stands, upon rising ground, encompassed by rich and stately oaks. Sir John Pakington of Westwood was a favourite at the Court of Queen Elizabeth, and a member of the Privy Council; his son was created a baronet 22nd June 1620, being one of the first two hundred created by King James, the founder of the order. The late Sir John Pakington, eighth baronet, died on 6th January 1830, æt. 69, when the title became extinct: the disposition of his property, directed by his will, is very singular; having bequeathed his large landed estates to the eldest son, that may be born of a child, then four years of age, who is the son of his nephew John Somerset Russell, Esq. of Powick Court, near Worcester. So that the income must accumulate for nearly forty years. In default of issue the estates go to the descendants of the second son of Sir W. B. Cooke of Wheatley, near Doncaster; and in case of a second default, to a grandson of I. Knight, Esq. of Lea Castle, near Kidderminster. Dorothy Lady Pakington, daughter of Thomas Lord Coventry, is the supposed author of "The Whole Duty of Man," the first edition of which was published in 1659: it retained its popularity for more than a century.

KING'S NORTON, 8 miles N.E. from Bromsgrove, contains 684 houses, and 3651 inhabitants. It has a market on Saturday, and fairs are held 25th April and 5th September. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy. The petty sessions are held here. The parish of King's Norton includes the hamlets of Headley, Moseley, Moundsley, and Rednall. The Worcester and the Stratford-on-Avon canals pass the village.

Moseley Hall, the seat of Mrs. Taylor, is pleasantly situated within two miles of the town of Birmingham. The late John Taylor, Esq. was one of the principal sufferers during the memorable and disgraceful riots which took place here in the year 1791. The present seat is built upon a more extensive scale than the former, no cost having been spared to render it one of the most capital residences in the county. The grounds, the situation of which must ever be admired, amidst beautiful woods, exhibit great taste in the various dispositions in which they are arranged, and were laid out by Repton. John Taylor, Esq., the son and heir of the late possessor of Moseley Hall, resides at Spring Grove, near Bewdley.

KINGTON, or Kingston, 8½ miles E. from Worcester, contains 26 houses, and 148 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 8*l*. Here was formerly a seat of the Toky family, whence it is sometimes called Tokyngton.

NORTHFIELD, 5 miles S.E. from Hales Owen, contains 278 houses, and 1567 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l*. 15*s*. 2*d*. Here are some remains of Weoley Castle; its space originally included about half an acre, surrounded by a broad and deep moat supplied from a brook on the north. The vicinity is well wooded, and affords very rich and beautiful prospects.

The Pigeon House is the seat of S. Ryeland, Esq.

SALWARPE, on the river of the same name, 3 miles W. from Droitwich, contains 65 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l*. 14*s*. 7*d*. In the chancel is the monument of Thomas Talbot, ob. 1613.

TARDEBIGG, 3 miles S.E. from Bromsgrove, contains 581 houses, and 2998 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth. The church was pulled down and entirely rebuilt in 1774. This parish contains some hamlets in Warwickshire. At Bordesley, which is a chapelry of this parish, Maud the Empress built, in 1138, a Cistercian abbey in honour of the Blessed Virgin; its revenues amounted to 392*l*. 8*s*. 6*d*. per annum: the site, as related above, was granted to Andrews Lord Windsor. Sir Thomas Cookes, founder of Worcester College Oxford, lived at Bentley, where he had a good house, and was buried in the chancel of the old church of Tardebigg. Hewell Grange is the seat of the Earl of Plymouth. This mansion is singularly divided between the counties; the northern part being in Warwickshire, and the southern part in Worcestershire. It is a large building, nearly quadrangular, adorned with Doric pilasters. The north-west front is one hundred and nine feet six inches in length; and the north-east, which faces a beautiful lake covering thirty acres, is one hundred and twenty-seven feet six inches. It was built about 1712, but greatly improved and finished in 1758: a collection of family and other portraits by Lely, Kneller, &c., adorn the walls of the principal apartments. The park is large, and admits of the greatest variety of landscape, from the undulating form of the ground, which rises in gently swelling hills covered with plantations, abounding with fine old oaks. Andrews Lord Windsor of Stanwell, in the reign of Henry VIII., accepted of Bordesley Abbey, with all its lands and appurtenances, comprising the manor of Tardebigg, in exchange for the ancient seat of the family at Stanwell, and being commanded to quit his residence immediately, though he had laid in his Christmas provisions for the keeping of his wonted hospitality there, he left all in the house, saying they should not find it "bare Stanwell." The male line of the ancient Barons Windsor became extinct in 1642. Elizabeth, sister of the last Lord Windsor, having married Dixie Hickman, Esq., their son Thomas was created Lord Windsor of Bradenham, in Buckinghamshire, June 16th, 1660; and in the same reign, December 6th, 1682, advanced to the dignity of Earl of Plymouth. Other, the fifth Earl of Plymouth, died June 11th, 1799, when he was succeeded by his eldest son, the present peer, who married Lady Mary, eldest daughter of John Frederic Duke of Dorset, at Knole, in 1811.

UPTON WARREN, on the Salwarpe, 3 miles N. from Droitwich, contains 60 houses, and 463 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l*. 2*s*. 3*d*. The west door of the church is of Anglo-Norman architecture.

YARDLEY, on the borders of Warwickshire, 4 miles E. from Birmingham, contains 440 houses, and 2313 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edburgh, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. 19*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Crown. Marston chapel, in this parish, was built and endowed by Job Marston, Esq., about the year 1704.

4. Oswaldslow Hundred.

This hundred lies chiefly in the centre of the county, but has detached portions in several other parts. It is bounded on the north by Doddingtree and Halfshire hundreds; on the east by Warwickshire; on the south by Pershore hundred; and on the west by Doddingtree hundred. It has three divisions, the lower, middle, and upper division. This hundred was granted to St. Oswald Bishop of Worcester and the monks of St. Mary, by King Edgar, in 964, and consisted of all the lands that then belonged to them. It contains certain parcels of land separated from the rest of the county, all which, as they belonged to the church, were included within this hundred.

Lower Division.

BERROW, or Berga, in a detached part of the hundred, 5 miles S.W. from Upton, and 7 miles W. from Tewksbury, contains 77 houses, and 464 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Dean and chapter of Worcester. The village is sometimes called Nether Berrow, as distinguished from Over Berrow. West bridge, Farley bridge, and Old Strike bridge are repaired by the vicar.

BREDICOT, 3 miles E. from Worcester, contains 7 houses, and 37 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 3*l*. 18*s*. 1*d*., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

BROADWAS, on the river Teme, 6 miles W. from Worcester, contains 47 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 10*l*. 9*s*. 2*d*., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The meadow grounds in this parish are rich; and the uplands fruitful in hops, and orchards.

CHURCHILL, 4 miles E. from Worcester, contains 22 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.

CLAINES, 2 miles N. from Worcester, contains 496 houses, and 2509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. A branch of the Birmingham and Worcester canal passes the village. Whiston is a large tithing of this parish, where a new gaol has been erected. Barbone Bevere, Tapenhall, Hollow, Astwood, Milnham and Hayford, Northwick, Smith and Tollerdine, are hamlets.

A nunnery of the order of St. Benedict, and dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, was founded at Whiston by Walter de Cantelupe, Bishop of Worcester, in 1255; the nuns were called White Ladies, from the colour of their dress. The site of this priory still retains the name of the White Ladies, and is held under the governors of a charity, founded soon after the Reformation by Queen Elizabeth, for the support of a Blue-coat school in the city of Worcester. Bevere was the residence of the Rev. Treadway Russell Nash, D.D. F.S.A., rector of Leigh, and father of the magistracy of the county, of which he was a member nearly fifty years. He was the editor of the History of this County, the first volume of which was published in 1781. The original collectors for this work were Thomas Habington of Henlip, and his son William; the MSS. of both, augmented by those of Dr. Thomas and Bishop Lyttleton, were bequeathed to the Society of Antiquaries. The second volume appeared in 1784, and the editor died 26th January, 1811, æt. 85.

CROOM D'ABITOT, 5 miles W. from Pershore, contains 18 houses, and 129 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 7*l*., in the patronage of the Earl of Coventry. In 1763 the old parish church, which formerly stood on what is now the lawn of Earl Coventry's park, was pulled down, and a new one erected, on a commanding eminence, having a most extensive prospect over the country. It is built in the pointed style, and all the family monuments, with the bodies, &c., were removed to this building. The situation of the old church is now marked by two trees on the lawn. Croom Court is the seat of the Earl of Coventry, Lord-Lieutenant of the county. The lordship was originally purchased in 1563 by Sir Thomas Coventry, who was succeeded by his son and heir Thomas, who in the 18th of James I. was appointed Attorney-general, and advanced, 1st of Charles I., to the office of Keeper of the Great Seal; and in the fourth year of the same reign he was created a peer, by the title of Lord Coventry of Aylesborough. After continuing in office upwards of fifteen years, with unblemished reputation, he died at Durham House, in the Strand, January 14th, 1639. Thomas, the fifth Lord Coventry, was by William III, April 16th, 1697, advanced to the title of Viscount Deerhurst and Earl of Coventry. The greater part of the old house at Croom was taken down the beginning of last century, and the present mansion erected on the site and partly on the walls of it. The style of architecture of the house is plain; it is built wholly of stone, and has a handsome portico of the Ionic order on the south front. The architect was Launcelot Brown. Many valuable pictures embellish this mansion, amongst which are the family portraits.

EARL'S CROOM, or Croom Simon, 2 miles N.E. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 37 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* In the chancel are monuments of the family of Jefferies. William Jefferies, Esq., Cofferer of the Household to Henry VIII., resided here; to his grandson Thomas Jefferies, who resided here in 1634, Samuel Butler, the author of Hudibras, was Secretary. Some of the family portraits in the house are said to have been painted by Butler, who was the intimate friend of Samuel Cooper, the most eminent English painter of that period.

HILL CROOM, 4 miles E. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 31 houses, and 188 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

GRIMLEY, on the Severn, 5 miles N. from Worcester, contains 130 houses, and 666 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester, who has also a fine demesne on the banks of the river. The house, built in 1511, was entirely pulled down in the time of Bishop Hough. Monk Wood is within the manor.

HALLOW, on the Severn, 3 miles N. from Worcester, contains 221 houses, and 1081 inhabitants. It is a curacy. In this parish was formerly the Gulf or Wier-pond of Henwyke, in the Severn, whence the convent of Worcester was supplied with fish. Hallow is delightfully situated on the ascent of a hill that rises from the river, the summit of which is crowned by Hallow Park, formerly belonging to Reginald Lygon, Esq., surrounded by pleasure-grounds and commanding one of the most rich and beautiful prospects imaginable, enlivened by the vessels on the Severn, which are constantly passing. Near Hallow on the north is Thorngrove, the seat of Richard Griffiths, Esq., once the property of Lucien Buonaparte, elder brother of the Emperor Napoleon; in front is an extensive lawn, ornamented by a serpentine stream, the banks of which are planted, and the view is bounded by the Abberley Hills.

HARTLEBURY, 5 miles S. from Kidderminster, contains 326 houses, and 1676 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. Here is a free grammar-school.

Hartlebury Castle, the seat of the Bishop of Worcester, was completed by Bishop Gifford, in the reign of Henry III.; it had been founded by Bishop Walter de Cantelupe, and was surrounded by a moat; the gate-house was erected by Bishop Carpenter in the reign of Henry VI. This castle surrendered to Colonel Morgan in 1646, but was restored to the Bishop in the reign of Charles II. Bishop Hough made several additions and alterations; and Bishop Hurd built a new library in 1782, to which he presented many books. He was visited here by His Majesty George III. in 1788. Upper Mitton is a hamlet of this parish.

HENLIP, 4 miles N. from Worcester, contains 18 houses, and 129 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 16*s.* In the church are many curious monuments of the Habingtons. Henlip House was founded by John Habington, Esq., Cofferer of the Household to Queen Elizabeth. It contains a collection of family portraits, and here was preserved a small enamelled casket presented to Cardinal Wolsey by the King of France, afterwards in the possession of Anne Boleyn. Thomas Habington of this family was implicated in the Gunpowder Plot; he was the original collector of the Antiquities of the County, published by Dr. Nash. Garnett, one of the conspirators, was hanged in St. Paul's churchyard, 3rd May, 1606.

HOLT, or Holt Castle, on the western bank of the Severn, 5½ miles N. from Worcester, contains 64 houses, and 355 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin is a rectory, value 15*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* The church contains several monuments of the Bromleys, particularly that of Sir Henry Bromley, son of the Chancellor, who died in 1615. Holt Fleet Bridge, over the Severn, consists of one arch, the span of which is 150 feet, of iron, and two stone arches at each end; the whole length is 266 feet. It was opened to the public on New Year's Day 1828. The castle of Holt is supposed to have been built by one of the D'Abitots, the Norman Earls of Worcester; a tower and some of the walls remain near the house erected by Sir John Bourn. The manor afterwards came to the Beauchamps, of which family John Lord Beauchamp of Holt, Steward of the King's Household, was the very first Baron, created by patent 5th October, 1387. Holt Castle, in the reign of Elizabeth, was the seat of Sir Thomas Bromley, Lord Chancellor of England. The trees in the avenue were planted about 1670. It is now the seat of Henry Chillingworth, Esq. Little Witley is a chapelry of this parish.

ST. JOHN BEDWARDINE, a suburb of the city of Worcester, but situated without the liberties, on the western bank of the river Severn, contains 235 houses, and 1161 inhabitants, exclusive of the populous township of Wick Episcopi on the Teme, which contains 247 houses, and 1263 inhabitants. It derives its name of Beodwardine from the Saxon, having been allotted to supply the table of the monks of Worcester with bread and provisions. There is a fair kept annually at St. John's on the Friday before Palm Sunday, when the mayor and aldermen of Worcester walk in procession, attended by the sword-bearer, constables, &c., through it, but have no jurisdiction. Lawern, in this parish, derives its name from a rivulet, and once belonged to the Knights Templars. The church of St. John is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

KEMPSEY, or Kemsey, on the Severn, 4½ miles S. from Worcester, contains 235 houses, and 1129 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. It contains a monument and effigy of Sir Edmund Wyld, ob. 1620; and many others.

KNIGHTWICK, on the borders of Herefordshire, 9 miles W. from Worcester, and 5½ miles N.E. from Bromyard, contains 24 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. Kenswick is a chapelry of this parish. Knightsford bridge over the Teme is about a mile northward from the village.

LINDRIDGE, on the river Teme, in a detached part of this hundred, 5 miles E. from Tenbury, contains 116 houses, and 635 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. Corn Wood, in the hamlet of Newnham in this parish, contained 282 acres in 1649. Lindridge is particularly distinguished for the cultivation of hops, especially near the Teme side, where are some of the finest hop-yards in the county. Knighton-upon-Teme and Pensax are chapelries of this parish.

LITTLE MALVERN, 3 miles S. from Great Malvern, 7 miles W. from Upton-on-Severn, and 12 miles S.W. from Worcester, contains 14 houses, and 67 inhabitants. It is situated on a wooded slope of the range of hills, of which the Herefordshire Beacon forms a conspicuous object. Here, about the year 1171, two brothers Joceline and Edred founded a Benedictine priory, subordinate to the priory at Worcester. It was dedicated to St. Giles, and continued till the dissolution of the lesser monasteries in 1538, when it was valued at 98*l.* per annum. Its possessions were then granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple. The present church, which belonged to the priory, was built about 1482. It is a perpetual curacy, in the presentation of Mrs. Wakeman. In descending the hill from Ledbury, the eye glances over the tower of the church and penetrates into Gloucestershire, the intermediate country being finely variegated.

NORTON BY KEMPSEY, 4 miles S.E. from Worcester, contains 78 houses, and 517 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

ODDINGLEY, 3 miles S. from Droitwich, contains 32 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* Oddingley Heath, now inclosed, belongs to several parishes.

OMBERSLEY, 4½ miles W. from Droitwich, contains 355 houses, and 1814 inhabitants, including the townships of Borley, Hadley and Hay Elms, Mayeux and Chatley, Northampton Parsonage and Powers, Sychampton, Brookhampton and Comhampton, Uphampton, Winnal, Acton and Dunhampton. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* It contains many monuments of the Sandys family. Samuel Sandys was created Lord Sandys of Ombersley, 20th December 1743, and was made cofferer of His Majesty's Household. Edwin, second Lord Sandys, died without issue in 1797; his niece and heiress the Marchioness of Downshire was created Baroness Sandys of Ombersley, 15th June 1802, with remainder to her second son, &c. Ombersley Court is the seat of the Marchioness of Downshire.

PENDOCK, 5 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 53 houses, and 276 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

REDMARLEY D'ABITOT, on the borders of Herefordshire, 8 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 161 houses, and 955 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*; the tower, built in 1738, contains eight bells. There was formerly a chapel at Inneston, or Inardeston, in this parish. The D'Abitots lived at Down House, now the seat of — Dowdeswell, Esq.

RIPPLE, 2½ miles S.E. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 142 houses, and 780 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 42*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The hamlet of Holdfast and the chapelry of Queenhill are in this parish. Queenhill Manor, on the banks of the Severn, in the reign of Edward III., was held of the King by the service of finding a brach yearly on the feast of St. John the Baptist. A brach, or little dog for hunting hares and foxes, frequently occurs in the old Italian romances; and perhaps this kind of rent might be reserved because the manor lay within Malvern Chase.

SPETCHLEY, 3 miles E. from Worcester, contains 18 houses, and 121 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Robert Berkeley, Esq., who has a handsome seat here. Sir Robert Berkeley, the second son of Rowland, inherited Spetchley, with the contiguous manors of White-Lady-Aston, Churchill, and Warndon; he was one of the justices of the King's Bench in the reign of Charles I. On the 3d of May, 1811, the first stone of the present mansion was laid by Robert, son and heir of Robert Berkeley, Esq., who died Dec. 19, 1804, aged 91; the building was completed under the direction of Tasker. A beautifully winding road across the grounds for three quarters of a mile, leads to the principal entrance in the west front, ornamented with a portico of the Ionic order. The length of this front is eighty feet, and with the offices one hundred and forty-five feet. The architrave and cornice are continued round the principal fronts, supported by pilasters. The whole is of Bath stone. The library contains a Bible, and the Book of Common-Prayer, both which were in the possession of Charles I.: they are covered with red velvet, with the arms of England richly embossed. Amongst the family portraits is one of Judge Berkeley. In the front of the house is a large piece of water, shaded by luxuriant foliage of beech and oak; amongst the latter, many are much admired for their size and venerable appearance. The Malvern Hills on the right, Bredon on the left, and the distant Gloucestershire Hills in front, greatly contribute to give the scenery a grand and picturesque appearance. At the back of the house is the parish church; amongst the monuments, is one with the figures of Rowland Berkeley, Esq. and Catherine, his wife, in alabaster; and another of the Judge, in black marble.

STOULTON, 4½ miles N.W. from Pershore, contains 55 houses, and 380 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy. It contains monuments of the Actons of Little Wolverton in this parish.

WARNDON, or Warmedon, 2½ miles N.E. from Worcester, contains 28 houses, and 177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* It was consecrated in 1542. The parish comprehends part of Smyte, Tollerdine, and Trotswell.

WELLAND, 2½ miles W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 94 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is a part of the ancient chase of Malvern.

WHITE LADY ASTON, 5 miles S.E. from Worcester, contains 54 houses, and 342 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* It formerly belonged to the White Ladies of Whiston. Oliver Cromwell is said to have made his head-quarters at the house of Mr. Symonds, in this parish, previously to the battle of Worcester. This estate in 1708 came into the possession of Bishop Lloyd, who founded with it the Bishop's Charity-schools in Worcester in the year 1713.

WICHENFORD, on a branch of the Severn, 5 miles N.W. from Worcester, contains 48 houses, and 334 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence in 1269, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. It contains several monuments of the Washbornes; of one of this family, John Washborne, Esq. living in 1632, Habington says he was the best continual housekeeper and the best beloved gentleman in this county.

WOLVERLEY, on the river Stour, in a detached part of the hundred, one mile N. from Kidderminster, contains 256 houses, and 1529 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Blakesall, Caunsall, Cookley, Haustley, Horseley, Kingsford, Low, Sion-hill, and Little Wolverley. The iron and tin manufactures, for which the parish is famous, have much increased lately. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The old church here was taken down in the year 1769, and the new one was opened for divine service, 20th Sept. 1772. At Sion-hill is the seat of John Smith, Esq.

THE CITY OF WORCESTER, nearly in the middle of the county, 114 miles N.W. from London, contains 3037 houses, and 17,023 inhabitants. It is situated on the banks of the river Severn, over which it has a handsome stone bridge, rebuilt in 1781, by Gwynn. The City is in circumference about four miles; the houses are well built, and the streets, remarkably clean and well paved, rise gradually from the margin of the river. Its general appearance is equalled by very few cities in the kingdom. The Corporation of Worcester, by charter of King James I., consists of a mayor, recorder, sheriff, six aldermen, who are acting magistrates, a town-clerk, two coroners, two chamberlains, twenty-four common-councilmen, forty-eight assistants and other officers. The arms of the city are, Quarterly, gules and sable, over all, a castle triple-towered argent. On a canton of the last, a fesse between three pears sable. The Guildhall, situated near the centre of the high street, is of brick, and was erected, about 1720, by White, an architect of this city. In niches on the front are statues of Queen Anne, and Charles I. and II.; the whole building presents a noble appearance. The assizes and sessions are always held here. The manufactures are chiefly confined to gloves and china, the last superior in beauty. The porcelain manufactory is in Mardyke. The Worcester china exceeds all the rest in fineness and whiteness, in which it equals even the porcelain of China, and is found to be much harder and more durable than the body of any other whatever. It is perfectly clear and transparent, which is a quality that peculiarly distinguishes it from the others of European manufacture; and the finer sort, which is enamelled, so nearly resembles in every particular the oriental pieces, that where it has been made in imitation of these, as has often been the case, in order to match and make up sets that have been broken, the difference is scarcely discernible. The markets are on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, five of which are toll-free, the second Monday in February, and the first Mondays in May, June, July, and November. The hop-market, in the season, is one of the most considerable in the kingdom, and the quantity of cherries brought to market in a plentiful year is surprising. Fairs, Saturday before Palm Sunday, Saturday in Easter-week, 15th August, 19th September, and first Monday in December. Worcester returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred 23rd Edward I. The right of election is vested in the citizens, admitted to their freedom by birth, servitude, or by redemption, and the sheriff is the returning officer. The present members are Col. Davies, of Elmley Castle, and G. R. Robinson, Esq. Worcester contains nine parishes: All Saints, a rectory, value 13*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Albans, a rectory, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop; St. Andrews, a vicarage, value 10*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter (the spire of this church is much admired for its beautiful tapering form; it was erected in 1751 by Wilkinson, and is 245 feet in height from the ground); St. Clements (within and without), a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter; St. Helen, a rectory, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop; St. Martin (within and without), a rectory, value 15*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter; St. Nicholas, a rectory, value 16*l.* 10*s.* 7½*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop; St. Peter the Great (within and without), a vicarage, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter; St. Swithin, a rectory, value 15*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The See of Worcester, of Anglo-Saxon origin, was founded by Ethelred, King of the Mercians, in the year 679, and taken from the see of Lichfield, of which it composed a part; he likewise originally built the cathedral church, and endowed the same. This fabric, which was dedicated to St. Peter, becoming ruinous, Oswald, the eighteenth Bishop of Worcester, began to repair it, and his successors finished it; he likewise displaced the married priests, and settled monks in their stead in 964; but his foundation was destroyed by the Danes; and the church which now stands was begun by St. Wolstan, the twenty-fifth bishop of this see, about the year 1030, who dedicated it to the Virgin Mary. The Bishops of Worcester, in ancient times, were the peculiar chaplains of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and by their office said mass in all general assemblies of the clergy where the Archbishop was present. This see has given to the church of Rome four saints, and to the English nation five Lord Chancellors, and three Lord Treasurers. The diocese contains all Worcestershire, excepting twenty-one churches and chapels, which belong to the see of Hereford; about a third part of Warwickshire; two parishes in Staffordshire, one parish in Shropshire, and two chapelries in Gloucestershire, making in all 241 parishes, whereof 71 parishes are impropriations. This see has an Archdeacon of Worcester, and is valued in the King's books at 1049*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, but is computed to be worth annually upwards of 4000*l.* The clergy's tenth is 228*l.* To this cathedral belong a bishop, a dean, a treasurer, a chancellor, ten prebendaries, ten minor-canons, ten lay-clerks, ten choristers, forty scholars, two schoolmasters, and other officers. The arms of the bishopric are Argent, ten torteaux. The total length of the cathedral from east to west is 410 feet, and of the transepts from north to south 130 feet. The height of the tower to the points of the pinnacles is 196 feet. Parts of the church built before 1150 may be traced; and the nave, erected about 1218 by William de Blois, is extremely beautiful both in style and proportion. The choir, of the same period, was consecrated in the presence of King Henry III. and a great assemblage of nobility. The stalls with the Bishop's throne were made in 1397; they are of oak, richly carved: the east end is inclosed on the sides by stone screens of elegant design, crowned with a series of open-worked quatrefoils. The openings in the screens are glazed. The altar-screen now corresponds, the Grecian altar-piece having been removed about 1812.

The eastern window was at the same time repaired, and brought more into view; it is glazed with stained glass of rich colours, which would admit of re-arrangement. The much admired stone pulpit stands in the centre of a range of screens of corresponding elegance; it is octagonal, and is sculptured with the emblems of the Evangelists, the Royal arms, and the arms of the bishopric; at the back is a representation of the New Jerusalem, as described in the Revelations. Our Lady's Chapel was built by Thomas Cobham, Bishop, in 1327, and is sometimes called the Presbytery.

The monuments in this cathedral are numerous, and many of them of great interest, particularly that of King John, the most ancient Royal monument now remaining in England; the King died 19th Oct. 1215. Here is also the very beautiful monumental chapel of Arthur Prince of Wales, on the south side of the choir; round the verge of his tomb is the following inscription:

Heere lyeth buried Prince Arthur the first begotten sonne of the right renowned King Henry the Seaventhe, which noble Prince departed out of this transitory life att the Castle of Ludlow the seventeenthe yeere of his fathers reign and of our Lord God one thousande five hundred and two.

The badges of the House of Tudor upon this chapel are extremely curious; they consist of, 1. The Tudor rose, showing the descent of the family from the Houses of York and Lancaster: 2. The portcullis of the House of Beaufort, with an ostrich feather above it, and the motto Altera securitas, implying a more decided right to the Crown than was given by his descent: 3. A single ostrich feather, with a label inscribed Ich Dien; in other parts of the chapel two ostrich feathers are placed together, and even three are united by a scroll, but without the coronet, which is an addition to this badge of the Princes of Wales, first borne by Edward, afterwards Edward VI.: 4. A rose, en soleil, with the motto Semper vivat in eterno: 5. A fleur-de-lis: 6. A falcon on a fetter-lock: 7. A pomegranate slipped, a badge of the House of Arragon; and 8. A sheaf of arrows, also a badge of Arragon, derived from the conquest of Grenada by the superiority of the archers.

The monuments of Bishops Gauden, Blandford, Fleetwood, and Stillingfleet, and of Bishops Hough, Maddox, and Johnson, are interesting from the celebrity of the several prelates. The cloisters erected in 1372, and in fine preservation, are one hundred and twenty feet square, on the south side of the church; the east cloister leads to the deanery, an ancient building, formerly the prior's lodging, but enlarged and modernized; on this side of the cloister is the chapter-house, a decagon fifty-eight feet in diameter, now appropriated as a library, and on the south is the college hall, the monk's refectory. The audit house was built in 1320 by Prior Braunsford, afterwards Bishop.

The entrance to the college-green is by an ancient gate-house, called Edgar's Tower. St. Michael Bedwardine joins the cathedral within the college precincts: this church is a peculiar, subject to the jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter; it is extra-parochial, and contains 793 inhabitants.

Whittington, 1½ mile S.E. from the city, is a chapelry, in the parish of St. Peter, or Sidbury, and contains 42 houses, and 207 inhabitants. In this parish are the manors of Battenhale, Barnes, and Timberdine. The commandery, a house of preceptores or commanders, is also in the parish of Sidbury or St. Peter's; part of the ancient building remains. At the battle of Worcester, in 1651, the heat of the engagement lay near this house, at a small distance from which was the Royal battery. The Duke of Hamilton when wounded was brought here and died.

Middle Division.

ALVECHURCH, or Allchurch, in a detached part of this hundred, 4 miles N.E. from Bromsgrove, contains 269 houses, and 1413 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Hopwood and Lea End. It is called a borough, and is governed by a bailiff, chosen annually at the court of the lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. It is a large structure of Anglo-Norman architecture, but the tower is modern. It contains some very ancient monuments; a hospital here was founded by Nicholas Lewkenor, of Hadsor, in 1580. The Bishops of Worcester had formerly a palace here. Bishop Brian, Chancellor of England in the reign of Edward III., and to whom the Black Prince wrote a particular account of the victory of Poictiers, died here in 1361. Bishop Latimer repaired it in the reign of Henry VIII.; it appears to have been a timber building. It was not inhabited by any of the Bishops since the Restoration, and has been entirely pulled down nearly a century, when the park was converted into farms. The river Arrow, which rises in the Lickey Hills, runs through the parish towards Beoley Park and Warwickshire; and the Ikenild-street also passes it.

BISHAMPTON, in the Vale of Evesham, 4 miles N.E. from Pershore, contains 73 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester.

BREDON, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 7 miles S. from Pershore, and 3½ miles N.W. from Tewksbury, contains 202 houses, and 928 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Hardwick and Mittons, Kinsham and Westmancoate. Cutsdean, on the Cotswold Hills, twelve miles distant, is also in this parish. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 11*s.* Norton by Bredon is a chapelry, at the western extremity of Bredon Hill. From the summit of the hill is a very interesting view, embracing Broadway Hill, Lord Coventry's Tower, and the woods beneath the Cotswold Hills, with the town of Cheltenham, Gloucester Cathedral, Tewksbury, with the junction of the Severn and Avon, on the race-ground, May Hill, the Black Mountains in South Wales, the Malvern Hills, the church of Great Malvern, the Shropshire Hills, the city of Worcester, Cracombe Hill, and Evesham, with the Abbott's Tower, and the church of All Saints, furnish a sublime panorama. On the Breedon Hill is an encampment, with a double trench, inclosing about twenty acres; on the brow of the hill is a prospect-house, and near it is the Bramsbury Stone, large and conspicuous.

CROPTHORN, on the river Avon, 3 miles E. from Pershore, and 3½ miles N.W. from Evesham, contains 62 houses, and 304 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. In the north aisle is a fine monument of Francis Dineley, Esq., of Charlton, ob. 1624. Charlton and Netherton are hamlets of this parish.

CROWLE, 5 miles S. from Droitwich, and the same distance E. from Worcester, contains 69 houses, and 461 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* Froxmore Court was the seat of Richard Amphlett, Esq.

ELMLEY CASTLE, 4 miles S.W. from Evesham, contains 66 houses, and 316 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. A castle was built here on an eminence under Bredon Hill, by Robert D'Abitot, in the reign of William the Conqueror, which descended to the Beauchamp family, Earls of Warwick, by the marriage of Walter Beauchamp with Emmeline daughter and heiress of Urso D'Abitot Earl of Worcester, together with the hereditary sheriffalty of the county. Richard Earl of Warwick repaired the castle, and Guy Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the reign of Edward II., founded a chapel in the castle, which he dedicated to the honour of the Blessed Virgin. Elmley Castle falling into the King's hands upon the attainder of the Earl of Warwick, the old castle was destroyed, and in the reign of Henry VIII. the manor was granted by the King to Christopher Savage. Elmley castle is now the seat of Colonel Davies, M.P. for the city of Worcester.

FLADBURY, on the Avon, 3 miles E. from Pershore, contains 80 houses, and 451 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 81*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. It contains a monument of William Lloyd, Bishop of Worcester, who died 1719. Hill and Moor is a township of this parish. Hob Lench, or Abbott's Lench, is a hamlet. Stock and Bradley, Throckmorton and Wyre Piddle, are chapelries of the parish.

HANBURY, 3 miles E. from Droitwich, contains 161 houses, and 1042 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* It is situated on a hill, whence there is a fine prospect; from the parsonage-house to the church is an ascent of one hundred and eighty steps; it contains many monuments of the Vernons. Hanbury Hall, the seat of J. Phillips, Esq., was erected by Thomas Vernon, Esq., a celebrated lawyer, about the year 1710; it consists of a centre and two wings. The hall and staircase were painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller; the subjects are allegorical: Sacheverell is represented carried away by the Furies. Amongst the pictures was a fine original of Charles XII. of Sweden. The park includes about one hundred and thirty acres, well stocked with fine timber, and commands many very beautiful prospects.

HARVINGTON, or Hereforton, 4½ miles N. from Evesham, contains 61 houses, and 353 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

HIMBLETON, on a branch of the Avon, 4 miles S.E. from Droitwich, contains 84 houses, and 437 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The small hamlet of Shell is in this parish.

HUDDINGTON, or Hodington, 4½ miles S. from Droitwich, contains 17 houses, and 125 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of St. Wolstan's Hospital, in the city of Worcester. In the chancel is a monument of Sir George Wintor, Bart., ob. 1658. The ancient manor-house, the seat of the Wintors, is moated, but has been neglected since the Gunpowder Plot in 1606, in which the Wintors were deeply concerned. Granger mentions a print of the conspirators, inscribed Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, Robert Wintor, &c. In a window of the great chamber are the Royal arms, and the arms of Wintor, A.D. 1584. Sir George Wintor of Huddingdon was created baronet 29th April, 1642.

INKBERROW, or Inteborough, on the borders of Warwickshire, 10 miles S.E. from Droitwich, and 4 miles W. from Alcester, contains 352 houses, and 1667 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The steeple was built and repaired by the Dysons, and the south aisle, built by the Savages of Dormston, contains a monument of John Savage, of Egioke, ob. 1631. Noberry, or Newborough, and Knighton Park, both in this parish, belong to the Earl of Abergavenny. At Cokehill, or Cookefield, about two miles E. from Inkberrow, a priory was founded by Isabel Countess of Warwick in 1260; the ruins of the chapel, in which the founder was buried, still remain. It was valued at the Dissolution at 35*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* per annum. Morton Underhill was a seat of the Gowers.

OVERBURY, on the southern side of Bredon Hill, 6 miles S. from Pershore, and 6 miles N.E. from Tewksbury, in Gloucestershire, contains 90 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester; the body of the church is of Anglo-Norman architecture, but the chancel and aisles are of later date. Overbury is the seat of John Martin, Esq., M.P. for Tewksbury; the mansion, originally built in 1735, was burnt down a few years after; the present house was inhabited about 1767.

Conderton, or Canterton, is a hamlet of this parish, and Alstone, Teddington, and Little Washbourne are chapelries; the latter are nearly surrounded by Gloucestershire. Little Washbourne is sometimes called Knights Washbourne, from a family of the same name, who flourished here previously to the reign of Edward III. On Kemerton Hill, eastward of Overbury, but in Gloucestershire, is an encampment of a triangular form, the north and west sides of which are defended by the steep precipice of Bredon Hill; the area is about twenty-one acres.

ROUSE LENCH, or Lench Radulphi, on the borders of Warwickshire, 11 miles E. from Worcester, and 6 miles W. from Alcester, contains 54 houses, and 258 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* Sir Thomas Rouse, of Rouse Lench, was created baronet by King Charles I. 23rd July, 1641. His family was the great support of Oliver Cromwell in this county. At the siege of Worcester, in 1646, Sir Thomas Rouse signed the summons for the surrender of that city; and when the governor consented to give it up, was nominated one of four commissioners to treat for terms. His name stood first of the five members returned for the county during the Commonwealth in 1654, for which he was re-elected in 1656. The oak is still shown on Rouse Lench Hill, where he was sitting when the voters, returning from one of these elections, announced that the choice had fallen upon him. In 1660 he was representative for the borough of Evesham. Sir Thomas Rouse, the fourth baronet of this family, died 29th Dec. 1721, when the title became extinct; the estate descended to Thos. Phillips, Esq., who assumed the name of Rouse, and was sheriff of the county in 1733: he died in 1768, and left his estate to Charles William Boughton, Esq., M.P. for Evesham in 1783, who took the name of Rouse, and was created baronet 21st June, 1791, but succeeded to a baronetage in his own family on the death of his brother Sir Edward Boughton, Bart. of Lawford in Warwickshire in 1794, after which Sir Charles placed his own name last. He was the father of Sir Charles William Edward Rouse Boughton, Bart., now of Downton Hall, Shropshire, and of Rouse Lench. In the church are several monuments of this family.

SEDGEBERROW, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 4 miles S. from Evesham, contains 49 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated 16th Sept. 1331, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

STOKE PRIOR, 2 miles S. from Bromsgrove, contains 176 houses, and 900 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. In this parish is the chapel of St. Godwale, rebuilt in 1772, when the parish was inclosed by Act of Parliament. The Worcester canal passes through it.

TIBBERTON, 4 miles N.E. from Worcester, contains 55 houses, and 288 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to God and St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

Upper Division.

BLOCKLEY, in a detached part of the county, surrounded by Gloucestershire, 10 miles S.E. from Evesham, and 2½ miles N. from Morton-in-the-Marsh, contains 235 houses, and 1158 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 54*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The church is ancient, but the tower was rebuilt in 1727, when the Right Hon. Sir John Rushout, Bart. laid the first stone. In the north aisle is a monument of the Rushout family, by Rysbrach. This parish includes the hamlets of Aston Magna, Ditchford, Dorne, Draycott, Northwick and Paxford, and the whole is about twelve miles in circumference. Northwick Park about a mile northward is the seat of Lord Northwick. Sir James Rushout, who purchased the estate in the reign of Charles II., was created baronet 17th June 1661. The old manor-house was altered in 1730, under the direction of the Earl of Burlington, celebrated for his taste in architecture, and was again altered in 1778 by Sir John Rushout, the fifth baronet, who greatly improved the estate; he was M.P. for Evesham, and was created Lord Northwick 26th Oct. 1797. The park is extensive, well wooded and stocked with deer. In the house are some family portraits, one of Lord Lechmere, and a fine original of Addison, who was M.P. for Malmsbury at the same time with Sir John Rushout. Dorne is supposed to have been a Roman station; the foss-way is carried through it to Stretton-upon-Foss, in Warwickshire. The parish of Blockley is well watered by a branch of the Stour, upon which are several corn- and silk-mills. The manufacture of silk employs a number of persons; the first mill was erected about 1700.

CLEEVE PRIOR, on the river Avon, which here separates the county from Warwickshire, 5 miles N.E. from Evesham, and 7 miles S. from Alcester, contains 68 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. Cleeve Hill commands a view of the rich meadows on the banks of the river, terminated by the woods of Warwickshire on the north, and on the south by Bredon Hill. Here are quarries of very good stone, some of which bears a fine polish; and by means of the Avon it is sent to distant parts of the country.

DAYLESFORD, 4 miles E. from Stow-on-the-Wold, is locally situated in Gloucestershire, and contains 19 houses, and 103 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* Daylesford is the seat of Mrs. Hastings. As early as the reign of Henry II., Milo de Hastings held this estate of the Bishop of Worcester, for which he owed suit to the court of Blockley. Daylesford was so highly favoured by the see of Rome, that when the whole kingdom was interdicted in the reign of King John, the church enjoyed the full exercise of religious worship. On this estate was first introduced the cultivation of sainfoin, a French grass, brought into England by John Hastings, Esq. in 1650. After the decay of the old mansion, the Hastings family resided for some time at Yelford in Oxfordshire. The patrimonial estate has been re-purchased, and the present handsome mansion was built by the late Right Hon. Warren Hastings, Governor-General of Bengal. It partakes in some respects of the architectural character of the East, and is crowned by a light airy dome. The situation is at once conspicuous and commanding, being on a rising ground covered with trees, and looking down upon a well-wooded glen.

The late Right Hon. Warren Hastings retired from his arduous situation, as Governor-General of Bengal, in 1785; after which he was kept on a trial of impeachment for seven years, at the bar of the House of Lords. The sentence of acquittal which the House passed upon that occasion did not redound more to his praise than did his enduring patience, his dignified comportment, and his undisturbed temper, during this protracted trial. In the neighbourhood of his retirement, all who knew him loved him. He died at this seat, August 22, 1818, in the 86th year of his age; and in the north transept of Westminster Abbey is a tablet erected to his memory, surmounted by a very finely executed bust, by J. Bacon, jun.

EVENLOAD, or Emlade, locally situated in Gloucestershire, 3½ miles E. from Morton-in-Marsh, contains 42 houses, and 297 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* Near this village is the four-shire stone, an ornamental pillar, where Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire are contiguous.

ICCOMBE, or Ickham, in a detached part of the county, 3 miles S.E. from Morton-in-Marsh, is partly situated in Gloucestershire, and contains 33 houses, and 164 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. That part of Iccombe which is situated in the county of Gloucester is extra-parochial, and consists only of two farms, separated from this county by the river Evenlode.

SHIPSTON UPON STOUR, so called from its situation on that river, in a detached part of this county, surrounded by Warwickshire, 12 miles E. from Evesham, contains 314 houses, and 1562 inhabitants. The principal street of the town is formed by the road to Stratford-on-Avon, whence it is distant ten miles and a half. John Hart, Esq., who was sheriff of this county in 1739, established a manufacture of shaggs in this his native town, in which business he employed a great number of hands; but the trade is represented to be now in a declining state. Here is a very considerable market on Friday for the sale of corn; and fairs are held 27th June, and on Tuesday after 10th October, for horses and cattle. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 8*d*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, and of Jesus College Oxford; the last presenting twice, and the first alternately once. It was formerly a chapel annexed to the parish of Tredington. This part of the county consists in general of small well-cultivated farms; even the pastures are inclosed by hedge-rows, considerable attention having been paid to agriculture.

TIDMINGTON, on the river Stour, in a detached part of the county, 1½ mile S. from Shipston, contains 12 houses, and 70 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Tredington, Shipston-upon-Stour, and Tidmington form altogether a distinct portion of Upper Oswaldslow hundred, being locally situated in Warwickshire.

TREDINGTON, on the river Stour, 2 miles N. from Shipston, contains 51 houses, and 226 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a rectory, value 99*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford. The parishes of Shipston-upon-Stour and Tidmington were taken out of this parish, which now contains the hamlets of Armscott, Blackwell, Darlingscott, and Newbold. Halford bridge, over the Stour, in the road to Warwick, is about a mile northward of Tredington. Near it is Eatington Hall in Warwickshire, the seat of Evelyn John Shirley, Esq.

5. Pershore Hundred,

On the southern side of the county, is bounded on the north and east by Oswaldslow hundred; on the south by Gloucestershire; and on the west by Herefordshire. It has two divisions, upper and lower.

Lower Division.

BIRTS MORTON, or Brutes Morton, 5 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 41 houses, and 236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* The altar-piece was presented to the church by the last Earl of Bellamont.

In the church is a very curious ancient monument of Sir John Nanfan, of Trerice in Cornwall, and several others to members of the same family. The manor-house, moated round, is very ancient. In a parlour, panelled with oak carved, is a chimney-piece bearing the arms of Nanfan and those of the alliances of the family, Harley and Cornwall: round the room are painted the arms of Harley, Baskerville, Cornwall, Crofte, Throckmorton, Pole, Copley, Blount, Rudhall, Wyet, Bromwich, Minors, Vaughan, Manington, Cole, and De la Bere. Sir Richard Nanfan, of Birch Morton, Sheriff of this county in the first year of the reign of Henry VII., which he held two years, was Constable of Elmley Castle; he was also Treasurer and Deputy Lieutenant of Calais, and Esquire of the Body to the King. The last of this family who possessed the estate, was Bridges Nanfan, Esq., who died in 1704. His daughter Katherine married Richard Earl of Bellamont, whose son Richard the second Earl left an only daughter and heiress Judith, who died unmarried in 1771, leaving this estate to Charles Coote, created Earl of Bellamont 15th August, 1767, who dying in 1800 the title again became extinct.

BUSHLEY, on the river Severn, 5 miles S. from Upton, and 2 miles N. from Tewksbury in Gloucestershire, contains 62 houses, and 366 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dowdeswell family. Pull Court, the seat of Lieutenant-General Dowdeswell, is in this parish; it formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewksbury: it is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river. A staircase window, of painted glass, was executed by Willement.

CASTLE MORTON, or Morton Foliot, 4 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 137 houses, and 738 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Vicar of Longdon. A hill on the western side of the village is the site of a castle, probably built by the Foliots. Castle Morton was afterwards the seat of the Bartletts.

CHASELEY, or Chadesley, 7 miles S. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 46 houses, and 337 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of the vicar of Longdon. Chaseley, Eldersfield, and Staunton form a distinct portion of this division of Pershore hundred, being the south-western corner of the county.

ELDERSFIELD, 7 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 146 houses, and 743 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

HANLEY CASTLE, 1¼ mile N.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 256 houses, and 1424 inhabitants. The parish, consisting of the upper and lower divisions, extends westward to the Malvern Hills: and the resort of invalids and others to Malvern Wells has greatly increased the population of the neighbourhood. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 15*s.* Hanley was part of the great Chase or Forest of Malvern; and on that side which is bounded by the Severn stood a castle, the residence of the De Spensers, Earls of Gloucester, and afterwards of the Beauchamps. Henry Duke of Warwick was born here in 1424. The castle descended to Richard the great Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, slain at the battle of Barnet in 1471. He was attainted of high treason, when his estate was forfeited to the Crown. Queen Elizabeth granted Hanley to John Hornyhold, of Standon in Hertfordshire. Blackmore Park is the seat of Thomas Hornyhold, Esq. The Rhydd is the seat of Sir Anthony Lechmere, created baronet 3rd October, 1818. Severn End, the seat of Mrs. Lakin, was the residence of Nicholas Lechmere, Attorney-general in the reign of George I., created Lord Lechmere of Evesham 25th August 1721, to whom there is a monument in the church of Hanley Castle; he died in 1727, when the title became extinct. Drakes Place is the seat of John Allen, Esq.; and Drips Hill is the seat of William Chambers, Esq. Belmont Lodge, near Malvern Wells, is the seat of Sir Robert Wigram, Bart.

LEIGH, on the river Teme, 5 miles W. from Worcester, contains 301 houses, and 1546 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Brockamine, Hows Hills, Sandlin, Sherrards, and Sinton. The church, dedicated to St. Edburgh, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The ceiling of the chancel is painted, and represents the firmament, with this inscription: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work." The church contains several ancient and curious monuments, viz., to the memory of Edmund Colles, ob. 1606; William Colles, ob. 1615; Sir Walter Devereux, Bart., ob. 1633,—the monument was erected in 1642; Essex Devereux, ob. 1639; William Colles, ob. 1558. Bransford is a chapelry of this parish, partly situated in that of Powick; there are very rich meadows on the banks of the Teme, over which Bransford bridge is in the road from Worcester to Hereford. The manor-house of Cowleigh, under Malvern Hill, which formerly belonged to the Abbots of Pershore, is said to be the boundary of this county and to separate it from Herefordshire. After the dissolution of Pershore Abbey it was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the family of Colles.

LONGDON, 3 miles S. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 117 houses, and 640 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

MADRESFIELD, 6 miles S.W. from Worcester, contains 39 houses, and 202 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.* Madresfield Court, the seat of Earl Beauchamp, was formerly a manor belonging to the Abbot of Westminster. The mansion, built in the reign of Henry VIII., notwithstanding its modern alterations, retains some characteristic remains of its original construction. The hall rises to the whole height of the house, with a framed timber roof. A staircase in one of the ancient towers leads to the winter drawing-room, decorated by a collection of miniatures of distinguished characters, from the reign of Henry VIII. to that of Charles II. Near the long gallery is the King's room, in which King Charles II. slept the night before the battle of Worcester. The park is flat, but extensive and richly wooded.

GREAT MALVERN, 9 miles S.W. from Worcester, contains 293 houses, and 1568 inhabitants. It is situated near the northern extremity of the Malvern Hills, the highest parts of which are distinguished by the names of the Worcestershire and Herefordshire Beacons, about four miles distant from each other; the former rising 1300 feet, and the latter 1260 feet above the level of the plain. A variety of springs descend from these hills; and the Malvern Wells, in the parish of Hanley Castle, have long been a fashionable resort in the summer season. Malvern is also celebrated in ecclesiastical history, and is said to owe its origin to a hermitage established in "the wild forest" here, anterior to the Norman Conquest, by certain monks of the priory of Worcester. Aldwin, one of the anchorites of Malvern, at the instigation of St. Wolstan, founded a priory and church for thirty monks, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, about 1083. In this work he was greatly assisted by Gislebert, Abbot of Westminster, who at the same time stipulated that the patronage of the priory should belong to the Abbots of Westminster. It was therefore regarded as a cell to that abbey, and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster still hold estates in its vicinity. At the Dissolution its possessions were valued at 375*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* per annum. The demesne was granted, 36 Hen. VIII., to William Pinnock, who transferred it to John Knotesford, Sergeant-at-arms, by whose descendants it was sold to James Oliver, of the city of Worcester, about 1774. The Gate-house of the ancient priory remains in very good preservation; as also a timbered edifice, supposed to have been the refectory, or audit-hall, now converted to a barn and stabling. The priory church was purchased by the inhabitants of Malvern, of John Knotesford, for 200*l.* and made parochial; it is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Edward Foley, Esq., of Stoke Edith, in Herefordshire. The church is a spacious edifice, cruciform in plan, with a lofty tower at the intersection of the nave and transepts. The pillars and arches of the nave are of Anglo-Norman architecture, but the principal part of the building is in the pointed style of the time of Henry VII. Sir Reginald Bray, K.G. was the architect, and Henry himself, his queen, and family are said to have assisted in the erection of this interesting pile. The painted glass that formerly filled the windows, and of which many beautiful specimens remain, is stated to have been executed at the charge of these illustrious personages. Besides numerous subjects from Scriptural history, of which enough remains to attest its original splendour, there were also figures of Henry VII., Elizabeth his queen, the Princes Arthur and Henry their sons, Sir Reginald Bray, K.G., Sir John Savage, and Thomas Lovell, all of whom were Henry's Privy Councillors. The figures of Prince Henry and Sir R. Bray only are preserved, excepting the lower part of that of the Queen. About the year 1810 the church was repaired by a subscription of the gentry of the surrounding country; and through the exertions of the Rev. Dr. Card in 1818, a more complete reparation and improvement was effected. The length of the church is one hundred and seventy-three feet, and its breadth sixty-three. Near the altar are ranged on a low semicircular wall a number of curiously painted tiles, part of the ancient pavement of the church; the date of these is about 1463. On each side the choir are placed the ancient stalls of the monks, the subcellæ of which exhibit various grotesque carvings. Several monuments of great antiquity and curiosity remain in the transepts; and on the south side of the chancel is that of John Knotesford before mentioned, who died in 1599. The road from Great Malvern to Ledbury over the Wytch, cut though the summit of the hill, presents an extensive and beautiful view.

MATHON, or Mathin, on the western side of Malvern Hill, and on the borders of Herefordshire, 9 miles N.W. from Upton-on-Severn, and 7 miles N.E. from Ledbury, contains 98 houses, and 633 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. This part of the county is famous for the cider and perry made here.

POWICK, or Powycke, 3 miles S. from Worcester, contains 287 houses, and 1360 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Coventry. Priors Court formerly belonged to the Priors of Great Malvern, and Beauchamps Court was an ancient seat of the Beauchamps. John Lord Beauchamp of Powick was so created 25th Henry VI., and died in 1475. Anne daughter and heiress of Richard Lord Beauchamp married Thomas Lygon, Esq., whose descendant, through the Pindar family, William Lygon, was created Lord Beauchamp of Powick, 26th Feb. 1806, and Earl Beauchamp, 30th Sept. 1815. Clieveload and Woodsfield are hamlets of this parish. At the battle of Powick, in September 1642, Colonel Sandes was killed and is buried at Worcester. Powick bridge is over the Teme, in the road to Upton-on-Severn.

SEVERN STOKE, or Stoke-upon-Severn, 7 miles S. from Worcester, and about the same distance W. from Pershore, contains 142 houses, and 666 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denys, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Coventry. Clifton, in this parish, anciently belonged to the priory of Malvern. The village affords many delightful prospects, embracing the whole range of the Malvern Hills, and the picturesque country towards Worcester.

STAUNTON, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 9 miles S.W. from Upton-on-Severn, contains 55 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 5*s.* This parish is watered by two streams, the Leden, which rises in Herefordshire, and unites with a branch of the Severn near Maisemore; on this stream are several corn-mills: very good cider and perry are made in the neighbourhood. On Gildens Green, about a mile westward from the village, was formerly a stone cross.

UPTON UPON SEVERN, 10 miles S. from Worcester, 7 miles N. from Tewksbury, in Gloucestershire, and 111 miles from London, contains 464 houses, and 2319 inhabitants. From its situation, on the banks of the Severn, over which is a bridge of six arches, built in 1605 at the expense of the county, the town has a considerable trade in corn, malt, coals, &c., with a commodious wharf. Here is a market on Thursday; and fairs, Thursday after Midlent, Thursday in Whitsun-week, 10th July, and Thursday before September 21, for cattle, horses, drapery, pedlary, &c. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 27*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester: the old church was pulled down, and a new one erected in 1758; but the tower was not entirely completed till 1772. Ham Court, the seat of the Rev. Joseph Martin, is situated on a rising lawn, studded with plantations, on the banks of the Severn, about two miles south from Upton.

Upper Division.

ABBERTON, 7 miles N.E. from Pershore, contains 13 houses, and 82 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* In this parish are medicinal springs little inferior to those at Cheltenham.

ALDERMINSTER, on the river Stour, in a detached part of the county, situated in Warwickshire, 10 miles E. from Evesham, 7 miles N. from Shipston, contains 90 houses, and 443 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

BEOLEY, on the borders of Warwickshire, in the north-east part of the county, 8 miles E. from Bromsgrove, contains 119 houses, and 640 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* A chapel on the north side of the chancel contains several monuments of the Sheldon family. Here was anciently a castle, the residence of the Beauchamps, burnt in 1303. The manor-house at Beoley, the seat of the Sheldons, was also burnt down in the civil war by the Cavaliers to prevent the enemy making a lodgement.

BESFORD, 3 miles W. from Pershore, contains 29 houses, and 154 inhabitants. It is a curacy. This estate was the seat of Sir Edmund Harewell, K.B., sheriff of the county 39th of Elizabeth, who sold it to William Sebright of London. His relative Sir Edward Sebright, of Besford, was created a baronet 20th December 1626; but since the acquisition of Beechwood in Hertfordshire, that has been the principal seat of the family.

BIRLINGHAM, on the river Avon, 3 miles S. from Pershore, contains 52 houses, and 327 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

BROADWAY, in the south-east corner of the county, 5 miles from Evesham, and 7 miles N.W. from Morton-in-the-Marsh in Gloucestershire, contains 278 houses, and 1382 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edburgh, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* On the top of Broadway Hill is Farnham Abbey, late the seat of Colonel Cotterell, commanding a most delightful prospect westward over Worcestershire. Middle Hill, the seat of Sir Thomas Phillips, Bart., overlooks one of those winding valleys which so frequently intersect these hills, and commands a fine view of Bredon Hill, with part of the extensive Vale of Evesham, behind which rises the irregular outline of the Malvern Hills; and still further in the distance are seen the summits of the Blorenge in Wales. The earliest mansion at Middle Hill was erected about the year 1724 by William Taylor, Esq., Recorder of Evesham. Part of the edifice built by him still remains. Mr. Taylor bequeathed it to Robert Surman, Esq. of Valnetines, in Essex, who left it to Thomasina, his daughter, wife to the Honourable John Boscawen, by whom he had issue William A. Spenser Boscawen, who sold it to George Savage, Esq., who added three fronts to the house, and also made the plantations behind it. Upon his demise his sisters sold it to Thomas Phillips, Esq., third son of William Phillips, Esq. of Broadway. He died November 1, 1818, and left this estate to his son, the present possessor. The house contains a fine library of MSS., part of it consisting of the greater portion of the celebrated collection of manuscripts formerly preserved in the College of Jesuits, of Clermont, at Paris, which on the suppression of the order of Jesuits in France, 1762, were sold to Baron Meerman of the Hague, on the extinction of whose family they were dispersed into various hands. Middle Hill library includes about six hundred volumes of the Meerman collection. There are also about fifteen thousand ancient deeds relative to the history of monasteries in France, together with several cartularies, rentals, obituaries, &c., of many religious houses in England, France, Holland and Germany.

Spring Hill is the seat of the Honourable John Coventry. It is embosomed in woods: on these bleak hills very extensive plantations have been made in belts, which shelter the lands and improve the temperature, but are not likely to prove valuable as timber.

BROUGHTON HACKET, 4½ miles E. from Worcester, contains 27 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel is a memorial of Thomas Moule, M.A., rector, who died 6th March 1647, æt. 46.

GREAT COMBERTON, 3 miles S. from Pershore, contains 48 houses, and 206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l.*

LITTLE COMBERTON, northward of the above, 2 miles S. from Pershore, contains 40 houses, and 172 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* The prior and convent of Worcester granted to John Sonneburne, rector, in the reign of Richard II., a chamber in the priory, decent and suited to his rank, to be repaired and furnished at their expense, and likewise a loaf of the larger size, another of the sponsable size, and a draught of the best beer that the convent drank, every day during his life, together with the sum of fifty-two shillings yearly.

DORMSTON, an insulated parish of this hundred, 8 miles S.E. from Droitwich, and 6 miles W. from Alcester, in Warwickshire, contains 21 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, anciently appropriated to the priory of Studley, is a curacy.

ECKINGTON, on the river Avon, 4 miles S. from Pershore, contains 109 houses, and 668 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. It contains monuments of the Hanfords of Wollashall, now the seat of Francis Hanford Esq. The house, which fronts the north, is built with an excellent hard stone. Over the porch is "MEMORARE NOVISSIMA," and the date 1611. The hall is in length thirty-four feet, in width twenty-two feet, and is eighteen feet high; it is adorned with a carved screen and gallery, and presents a noble appearance. Amongst the pictures are a few original portraits, viz. Sir George Wintor, by Vandyck; Lady Wintor, by Sir Peter Lely; and Queen Henrietta Maria, by Vandyck. It would be difficult to select a finer situation for a country-seat than Wollashall: the most complete view of the Vale of Evesham may be found near the house; from the bowling-green are seen Strensham, Upton-upon-Severn, the abbey and town of Pershore, with the white sails of the craft on the Avon meandering amongst groves, orchards, and through open pasture.

FLAVEL FLYFORD, 8 miles E. from Worcester, contains 30 houses, and 159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*

GRAFTON FLYFORD, 7 miles E. from Worcester, contains 43 houses, and 241 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Hill Court is on the north.

MARTIN HUSSINGTREE, or Husentree, an insulated parish of this hundred, 3 miles S.W. from Droitwich, contains 35 houses, and 217 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* The Droitwich canal passes on the western side of the village.

NAUNTON BEAUCHAMP, on the river Piddle, 5 miles N. from Pershore, contains 25 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It contains a monument of Humphrey Littleton, ob. 1624, and others to members of the same family, which was seated at Sheriff's Naunton in this parish. On the church-tower are sculptured bears, the badges of the family of D'Abitot.

PEOPLETON, or Pibleton, 3 miles N. from Pershore, contains 36 houses, and 264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.*

PERSHORE, on the river Avon, 10 miles S.E. from the city of Worcester, 6 miles N.W. from Evesham and 106 miles from London, contains 487 houses, and 2328 inhabitants. The town chiefly consists of one long street. The petty sessions are held here. Its only manufacture is that of knit stockings; but a considerable trade is carried on by means of the river Avon, which unites with the Severn at Tewksbury, and is navigable; the inhabitants importing groceries and coals, and exporting corn, malt, and perry. The market on Thursday is well supplied with excellent provisions, and fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, 26th June, and Tuesday before the 1st of November; All Saints-day for cattle, horses, pedlary and clothes. The beautiful situation of this town, and the salubrious temperature of the atmosphere, have occasioned a considerable influx of persons, who have made it their permanent residence. It consists of two parishes, St. Andrew's, a vicarage, value 8*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster; and the Holy Cross, a curacy, in the presentation of the vicar of St. Andrew's. The parish church of St. Andrew was built about the year 1147, and was then in the gift of the monks of Malvern, but was appropriated to the convent of Westminster about 1337. The church was repaired in 1776; it has no monuments which are remarkable. The centre tower, south transept, and beautiful choir, the only remains of the abbey, are now used by the parish of Holy Cross: it was repaired in 4177. Oswald, one of the nephews of Ethelred King of Mercia, is said to have founded a religious house here in 689. King Edgar remodelled the abbey and dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, and St. Peter and St. Paul, and afterwards to St. Edburgh. The church and convent were several times destroyed by fire. In 1287 the abbey and almost the whole town was reduced to ashes, and in one of these fires the register of the abbey was destroyed. The arms of the abbey were, Sable, on a chevron, between three ant-hills or, three holly-leaves azure. At the Dissolution the yearly revenues of the abbey were valued at 666*l.* 13*s.* John Stonywell, the last abbot, subscribed to the King's supremacy, and had a pension of 160*l.* per year assigned to him, when he retired to his native village of Longdon in Staffordshire. A house in the town is called the Abbey-house; and the gate-house, or northern entrance of the abbey, still remains; but a very small part of the church is now standing: the nave is totally destroyed. A memorial of William Newnton, or Naunton, abbot, in the reign of Henry VI., is preserved with his rebus, and also a monument of Timothy Hazlewood, ob. 1550. The site of the abbey, with the manors of Old and New Pershore, Abbots Wood, and Wadborough, &c., were granted to William and Francis Sheldon in 1553. Pershore is of great extent, and has many manors and chapelries within its limits. Aylesborough, situated on a hill about a mile northward of Pershore, commands a most beautiful prospect of the Vale of Evesham, the river Avon, and Bredon Hill. Thomas Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England in the reign of Charles I., was created Lord Coventry of Aylesborough 10th April 1628. This title became extinct in 1719; but a new entail having been created, the Earldom of Coventry descended according to the patent of 1697. Walcott cum membris, Caldwall, &c., two miles north-east from the town, is a hamlet of the parish of Holy Cross. Wadborough, three miles north-west, is also a hamlet of the same parish, adjoining which is Abbots Wood, a plantation of two hundred and twenty acres, laid out in rides and walks; it was the property of Dr. Nash, the historian of the county, who finished the plantation. Defford, a chapelry of St. Andrew's parish, is situated two miles S.W. from Pershore. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. Coppice Court, near here, is said to have been formerly a magnificent edifice: on the site is now a farm-house. Pensham, on the banks of the Avon, about a mile below Pershore, is a hamlet of St. Andrew's parish. The shores of the river abound with orchards of pear-trees. Wyke Waryn and Wyke Burnell are also in this parish. The last was formerly the seat of the Hazlewoods; and the first, called Wick, near Pershore, is a chapelry. Pinvin is a chapelry of St. Andrew's parish. Bricklehampton, situated under Bredon Hill, is a chapelry of the same parish.

NORTH PIDDLE, on the river Piddle, 6½ miles E. from Worcester, contains 28 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*

PIRTON, 5 miles N.W. from Pershore, contains 40 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Coventry. It was anciently the seat of the Foliots.

STRENSHAM, on the river Avon, 5 miles S.W. from Pershore, contains 63 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 12*l.* It contains many monuments of the Russell family, long seated here. Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, born in 1612, was a native of this parish.

UPTON SNODSBURY, 5½ miles E. from Worcester, contains 57 houses, and 291 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Kenelm, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

DERBYSHIRE.—Midland Circuit.

This county, situated nearly in the middle of the island, at an equal distance from the east and west seas, is bounded on the north by Yorkshire and part of Cheshire; on the east by Nottinghamshire; on the south by Leicestershire; and on the west by Staffordshire and Cheshire. In extent it is about fifty-five miles long, thirty-three miles broad, and two hundred and four miles in circumference. It was included in the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, inhabited by the Coritani. The Roman stations were Derventio, Little Chester; Ad Trivonam, Berry Farm; Aquæ, Buxton; and Lutudarum, Chesterfield. There are circles of stones at Arbor Low, and Nine Ladies; an earthwork at Staden Low, and Cair's work on Hathersage moor. During the Saxon Heptarchy this county formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia. There were formerly abbeys at Beauchief and Dale, and castles at Bolsover, Castleton or Peake, Codnor and Mackworth. Derbyshire contains one county town, eleven market-towns, 116 parishes, 40,054 inhabited houses, and 213,333 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. This county returns four members to Parliament,—two for Derby; and two for the shire, the present members being Lord G. A. H. Cavendish, and F. Mundy, Esq., of Markeaton Hall. The general appearance of the county is extremely dissimilar, its southern and northern parts exhibiting a striking contrast; the former is not particularly remarkable for hills or valleys, but the latter is eminently distinguished by a long and continued succession of both. From this irregularity of surface, the upper and middle parts of the county are generally denominated the High and Low Peake; the southern part has not received any particular appellation. The mountainous tract of country commencing in the Low Peake, extends northward in one great chain varying in breadth, and at length forms the very elevated tract called the High Peake,—a region of bleak, barren heights, and extended moors, interspersed with deep valleys, through which small streams take their course. The scenery is here in many parts romantic and sublime; but beauty is only resident in the valleys, the high ground being dreary and sterile, serving by way of contrast to heighten the charms of the dales and valleys by which it is intersected. The most considerable eminences in this part of the county are Axe Edge and Kinder Scout; the first is situated near Buxton, and the last rises in the centre of the north-western angle of the county. The Low Peake abounds with eminences of various heights and extent on the eastern side of the county; there is also a high ridge of considerable length and extent, beginning on the south of Hardwick, and continuing in another direction to the extremity of the county, where it enters Yorkshire. The seven wonders of the Peake, as they are here denominated, are St. Anne's Well, Poole's Hole, the Ebbing and Flowing Well, Elden Hole, Mam Tor or the shivering mountain, the Peake Cavern, and Chatsworth. The southern part of Derbyshire is in general pleasant and well cultivated; while the mountainous part is distinguished from the rest by the greater quantity of rain which falls in it. The large tract on the eastern side of the county, extending from Stanton, Dale, and Morley to the borders of Yorkshire, abounds with coal, and is covered with a clay of various colours, black, gray, brown, and yellow, but principally the last; and is in some places mixed with a large proportion of sand. In the valleys near the banks of the larger rivers, the soil is very different from that of the adjacent parts, and has been evidently altered by depositions from inundations. Peat bogs exist in the northern parts of the county, even on the highest mountains; and in some of them, trees have been found nearly perfect. There are many mineral and medicinal waters, and chalybeate springs are numerous. The mineral productions are lead, iron, calamine, and coal; iron-stone, grit-stone, lime-stone, fluor-spar, and gypsum. The rivers are the Amber, Ashop, Barbrook, Burbadge, Crawley, Derwent, Dove, Ecclesburn, Erwash, Ethrow, Goyt, Gunno, Headford, Henmore, Ibber, Idle, Lathkill or Larkill, Martin-brook, Mease, Mersey, Morledge, Noa, Rother, Schoo, Trent, and the Wye. The Trent enters this county from Staffordshire at a little distance south of Catton, and for several miles forms the south-western boundary of the county; but taking a more easterly direction near Newton Solney, it flows by Twyford and Swarkestone to the confines of Leicestershire; and after continuing its course between the counties for some miles finally quits Derbyshire near Sawley. The Derwent rises in the mountainous district of the High Peake, and is soon increased by various small torrents, which flow from the moorlands that inclose its spring. One of these issues directly from the cavern of Castleton, where it bursts into light under a natural arch, after its subterraneous passage, fertilizing the valley of Hope in its way. Another rivulet forms in its descent Middleton Dale, where piles of rocks rise in successive clusters, so as to imitate the artificial formation of pillars. Soon after it emerges from its native wilds, the Derwent forms the principal ornament of Chatsworth, and has its current afterwards enlarged by the waters of the Wye. Both rivers thus united traverse the delightful vale of Darley, environed by fertility, and encompassed by lofty rocks, which inclose in their romantic scenery the baths of Matlock; whence flowing through several deep valleys, it at length enters the cultivated dale extending to Derby, where suddenly turning to the east it passes to the wide plain enlivened by the Trent, into which it flows on the Leicestershire border near Wiln. The Dove springs from the base of Axe Edge, near the town of Buxton, and proceeding in a south-easterly direction divides this county from Staffordshire; near Ashborne, the Dove receives the Manifold, and in the vale of Uttoxeter adorns the grounds of Doveridge; then flowing beneath the walls of Tutbury Castle it falls into the Trent below Burton. This river, in the earlier part of its course, forms the beautifully romantic dell of Dove Dale, winding between almost perpendicular hills, fringed with wood and abounding in bold projecting rocks, which often turn the torrent from its course. The canals are the Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Chesterfield, Cromford, Derby, Erwash, Nutbrook, Peake Forest, and the Trent and Mersey. The manufactures which are carried on in Derbyshire are various and extensive. With Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire it partakes of the manufacture of stockings and lace; with Yorkshire in that of iron and of woollen cloth; and with Lancashire in the manufacture of cotton; and to these may be added silk, and the ornaments of Derbyshire spar. Chatsworth and Hardwick Hall are the seats of the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Appletree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wirksworth hundred; on the east by Morleston and Litchurch hundred; on the south by Repton and Gresley hundred; and on the west by Staffordshire. A detached part of this hundred lies on the eastern side of Derby, surrounded by Morleston and Litchurch hundred.

BARTON BLOUNT, 10 miles S. from Ashborne, and 11 miles W. from Derby, contains 9 houses, and 73 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.*, and formerly belonged to the family of Blount. 9th Richard II., Walter Blount obtained a charter of free warren in all his demesne lands at Alkmanton, Sapperton, and Hollington. William Blount, Lord Mountjoy of Thurvaston, who was born here, directed in his will, dated 13th Oct. 1534, that in case he should die within the counties of Derby or Stafford his body should be conveyed to the church of Barton, there to be buried on the south side near the altar. During the civil war a skirmish took place, 15th Feb. 1646, between the forces of Parliament from Barton Blount House and a party of Royalists from Tutbury Castle about four miles south.

BOYLSTONE, 7 miles S. from Ashborne, contains 59 houses, and 330 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* It is situated on a branch of the Dove, which falls into that river at Scrapton.

BRADLEY, 3 miles E. from Ashborne, contains 42 houses, and 320 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Bradley Hall is the seat of Godfrey Meynell, Esq.

BRAILSFORD, 7 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 132 houses, and 724 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

BREADSALL, on a branch of the Derwent, 3 miles N.E. from Derby, contains 104 houses, and 544 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* A house of Friars Heremites was founded here about the reign of Henry III., which afterwards became a priory of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to the Holy Trinity; and at the Dissolution was valued at 13*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* per annum. The priory was granted in the 6th year of Edward VI. to Henry Duke of Suffolk.

CHADDESDEN, in a detached portion of this hundred, 2 miles E. from Derby, contains 97 houses, and 486 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. Sir Edward Wilmot of Chaddesden was created a baronet 25th Feb. 1759. Chaddesden Hall, the seat of Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart. was rebuilt by Edward Wilmot, Esq. about 1720; but this family have been seated here from the reign of Elizabeth.

CHURCH BROUGHTON, on a branch of the Dove, 10 miles W. from Derby, contains 100 houses, and 536 inhabitants, including the township of Sapperton. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* It formerly belonged to the priory of Tutbury.

CUBLEY, on a branch of the Dove, 6 miles S. from Ashborne, contains 76 houses, and 439 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*

DALBURY, on a branch of the Trent, 6 miles W. from Derby, contains 37 houses, and 241 inhabitants, including the township of Lees. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* It formerly belonged to Trentham Abbey.

DOVERIDGE, on the banks of the river Dove, which here separates the county from Staffordshire, 18 miles W. from Derby, and 2 miles E. from Uttoxeter, contains 155 houses, and 843 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*; it formerly belonged to the priory of Tutbury. Doveridge Hall, the seat of Lord Waterpark, stands upon rising ground in a remarkably fine situation, commanding a view of the river, flowing through rich pastures, the town of Uttoxeter, and a range of distant hills. It was founded in 1769, and presents a handsome elevation; the centre being adorned with pilasters supporting their entablature and a pediment of stone; the rest of the building is brick. Sir Henry Cavendish of Doveridge was created a baronet 3rd May 1755. He married Sarah, the heiress of Richard Bradshaw, Esq., descended from Lord President Bradshaw. Her ladyship was created Baroness Waterpark, of the county of Cork, 14th June 1792; and her eldest son succeeded to the title upon her death in 1807.

DUFFIELD, on the river Derwent, 4 miles N. from Derby, contains 463 houses, and 2683 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Alkmund, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 4*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. A castle, which belonged to the family of Ferrers, Earls of Derby, formerly stood on rising ground at the north-west end of the town; but it was destroyed by order of King Henry III. in 1235. There was a large forest here which likewise belonged to the Earls of Derby. William Lord Hastings, beheaded by Richard III., was chief forester of Duffield. The parish is very extensive, and comprehends the chapelries of Belper and Turnditch, with the townships of Hazlewood, Heap, Holbrook, Shottle and Postern, and Windley. At Duffield is the seat of Sir C. H. Colville.

BELPER, 4 miles N. from Duffield, on the same river, contains 1239 houses, and 7235 inhabitants; it is now one of the most flourishing places in the county, and has a market on Saturday: the great increase in its extent and population is owing to the enlargement of the cotton manufactory, established here by Messrs. Strutt, 1776. A stone bridge of three arches over the Derwent was erected in 1795, at the expense of the county; and about a mile and a half lower down the river is another bridge of two arches. A new road from Belper to Cromford, along the banks of the Derwent, was completed in 1818, under the auspices of the Dukes of Devonshire and Rutland, assisted by the gentry of the neighbourhood and some public-spirited individuals of Manchester. Through an extent of thirty-five miles every hill of any difficulty is avoided; and between Derby and Sheffield, although the distance is somewhat greater, travelling is performed with greater ease than by the old road. The new line leads through the most delightful scenery, with Matlock and Bakewell on the route. The chapel at Belper is dedicated to St. John. At Belper is the seat of G. Strutt, Esq. Belper Lane End is about a mile distant, on the opposite side of the river. At Holbrook a chapel was built and endowed by —— Bradshaw, Esq. Holbrook Hall is the residence of the Rev. John Carr. Near Heage, a populous township of the parish of Duffield, the Cromford Canal passes.

EDLASTON, 3 miles S. from Ashborne, contains 54 houses, and 277 inhabitants, including the township of Wyaston. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln.

ETWALL, on a branch of the Trent, 6 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 78 houses, and 445 inhabitants, including the township of Bearward Cote. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*; it formerly belonged to Welbeck Abbey. A hospital was founded here in 1557 by Sir John Port, which was rebuilt in 1680 upon an enlarged plan; the government of this hospital is vested in the heirs of the founder. Etwall Hall is the seat of A. N. E. Mosley, Esq. Burnaston, about a mile eastward, is a hamlet of this parish.

KEDLESTON, 4 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 21 houses, and 109 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Scarsdale; it contains several monuments of the Curzon family. Kedleston House, the seat of Lord Scarsdale, stands in a pleasant park, nearly seven miles in circumference, which contains some of the finest trees in the kingdom. The mansion is upon rising ground, and upon the principal front towards the north a beautiful green turf slopes down some hundred yards to a broad canal, a branch of the Derwent, which winds for nearly two miles through the park; a bridge of three arches is thrown over it, and cascades and small islands are formed at various distances. A ride carried through the whole length of the park presents beautiful prospects of the neighbouring country. The house was built, under the direction of Adam, about 1770. The north front, one hundred and thirty feet in length, consists of a noble centre of the Corinthian order, and two pavilions, which are connected with the main building by corridors. The hall, sixty-seven feet by forty-two in dimension, is adorned by columns of the variegated marble of the country, antique statues, and bassi-relievi. The saloon is circular in plan, and is forty-two feet in diameter, crowned with a dome. The music-room contains a Bacchus and Ariadne by Guido, and the Triumph of Bacchus by Luca Giordano, &c. The drawing-room, forty-four feet by twenty-eight, is ornamented by columns of Derbyshire alabaster, and a coved ceiling with enrichments after the antique: it contains many capital pictures by Raffaelle, Claude, Cuyp, &c.; Cain and Abel by Benedetto Lutti, a very striking picture. The library, thirty-six feet by twenty-four, with a ceiling painted in mosaic; over the chimney-piece is Daniel interpreting Belshazzar's Dream, a celebrated picture by Rembrandt. The ceiling of the dining-room is beautifully painted. The centre represents Love embracing Fortune by Morland; the four Quarters of the Globe in circles by Zucchi; and the Four Seasons in square compartments by Hamilton. The corridor leads to a gallery overlooking the kitchen, over the fire-place in which is the significant motto, WASTE · NOT · WANT · NOT. The family of Curzon were seated here as early as the reign of Edward I. Sir John Curzon of Kedleston was created baronet 11th August 1641; and Sir Nathaniel Curzon, the fifth baronet, was raised to the dignity of a peer by King George III. 9th June 1761, by the title of Lord Scarsdale, the name of one of the hundreds of this county.

LONGFORD, on a branch of the Dove, 5 miles S. from Ashborne, contains 96 houses, and 573 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Edward Coke, Esq. It contains a monument of Sir Nicholas Longford, ob. 1610. Sir Edward Coke, of Longford, was created baronet 30th December 1641; he was sheriff of this county in 1646. Sir Edward, his son, succeeded to the title and estate, and died in 1727, when the baronetcy became extinct. Longford then became the property of Edward, second son of Edward Coke, Esq. of Holkham, who dying unmarried in 1733 left this estate to his younger brother Robert Coke, Esq., Vice Chamberlain to Queen Caroline. He died in 1750; and Wenman Roberts, son of his sister Anne, succeeded to his estates in the counties of Derby and Lancaster, and assumed the name of Coke; he left two sons, Thomas William and Edward. Thomas William Coke, Esq., the eldest son, not only succeeded his father in his estates, but afterwards became heir to the vast property of Thomas Coke Earl of Leicester, who died in 1759. Edward Coke, Esq., the youngest son, acquired this estate at Longford, and became M.P. for Derby in 1780. Longford Hall, the seat of Edward Coke, Esq., is large and ancient, but the wings are modern additions. The townships of Alkmonton and Hollington, the liberty of Hungry Bentley, and the hamlet of Rodsley, are all in this parish. Walter Blount Lord Mountjoy founded the hospital of St. Leonard, which is situated between Alkmonton and Bentley, and directed that a chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, should be built at Alkmonton.

MARSTON UPON DOVE, on the borders of Staffordshire, 9 miles S.W. from Derby, and 5 miles N. from Burton-on-Trent, contains 16 houses, and 107 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. It formerly belonged to the priory of Tutbury. The hamlet of Hatton, and the townships of Hilton and Horn, are included in the parish.

MARSTON MONTGOMERY, 7 miles S. from Ashborne, and 4 miles N.W. from Uttoxeter in Staffordshire, contains 90 houses, and 469 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Devonshire. The ancient seat of the Montgomery family is entirely demolished. Marston House was built in 1659 with the materials.

MUGGINTON, on a branch of the Derwent, 7 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 52 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* The township of Mercaston is in this parish, and also the hamlets of Weston-under-Wood and Ravensdale Park.

NORBURY, on the river Dove, 5 miles S.W. from Ashborne, contains 94 houses, and 498 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Roston, about a mile southward from the village. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 16*s.* It was built in the reign of Henry VI. by Nicholas FitzHerbert, lord of the manor, who died 19th November 1473, and is buried in the chancel; here is also the monument of Sir Anthony FitzHerbert, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, ob. 27th May 1538. Norbury Hall was the ancient seat of the family of FitzHerbert, now of Swinnerton Hall in Staffordshire.

OSMASTON, 2½ miles S.E. from Ashborne, contains 60 houses, and 296 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a curacy.

RADBOURN, on a branch of the Derwent, 5 miles W. from Derby, contains 42 houses, and 260 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* It contains several monuments of the family of Pole, lords of the manor from the time of Edward IV. Radbourn Hall is the seat of E. S. C. Pole, Esq. The present mansion was erected about 1740, and is large and handsome; it stands in a very high and pleasant situation, and commands many extensive and beautiful views of the surrounding country.

SCROPTON, or Scrapton, on the banks of the Dove, 11 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 94 houses, and 510 inhabitants, including the liberty of Foston. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a curacy. Foston Hall is the seat of John Broadhurst, Esq.

SHIRLEY, 4½ miles S.E. from Ashborne, contains 60 houses, and 309 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Sewallus, having removed his seat from Eatington in Warwickshire to Shirley, became the founder of the family of Shirley: their ancient mansion here is entirely demolished; but the Earls Ferrers continued lords of the manor till the time of Lawrence, the fourth earl. The townships of Stydd and Yeaveley are in the parish of Shirley: at the last place was a hermitage, dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Baptist. Ralph le Fun, in the reign of Richard I., granted it to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, when it became a preceptory of that order. At the Dissolution the revenue of it and Barrow in Cheshire was 107*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* The preceptory of Yeaveley was granted 35 Hen. VIII. to Charles Lord Mountjoy.

SNELSTON, 3 miles S.W. from Ashborne, contains 73 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

SOMERSALL HERBERT, 9 miles S.W. from Ashborne, and 3½ miles W. from Uttoxeter in Staffordshire, contains 18 houses, and 104 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* The manor-house is said to have been built with the materials of the mansion of the Montgomerys at Marston.

SPONDON, or Spoondon, in a detached part of this hundred, in a high and pleasant situation, is 3 miles S.E. from Derby, contains 223 houses, and 1186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*; it formerly belonged to the Hospital de Lazars at Burton in Leicestershire. Stanley is a chapelry of this parish.

SUDBURY, on the river Dove, 13 miles W. from Derby, and 6 miles E. from Uttoxeter in Staffordshire, contains 92 houses, and 628 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Vernon; it contains a number of monuments of the Vernon family. The sessions for this hundred are held here. Sudbury Hall is the seat of Lord Vernon. It was originally built by Mary, widow of John Vernon, Esq., who died in the year 1622, and is a well-proportioned structure, with two wings, containing several very elegant apartments, and a gallery running through the house adorned with a collection of pictures by the old masters; besides the family portraits, here are others of great interest, three of King Charles's favourites,—Lord Cromwell, Sir George Vernon, and Lord Strafford. The estate devolved to this family in the reign of Henry VIII., when Ellen, daughter and heiress of Sir John Montgomery of Sudbury, married Sir John Vernon, fourth son of Sir Henry Vernon, of Haddon Hall, in this county. Hill Somersall is a hamlet of this parish.

SUTTON ON THE HILL, 8 miles W. from Derby, contains 22 houses, and 151 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Ash and Cropotop are hamlets, and Osleston and Thurvaston form a township of this parish. Walter Blount, Lord Treasurer of England in the reign of Edward IV., in consideration of his services, fidelity, and wisdom, was created Lord Mountjoy of Thurvaston June 20, 1464; he was also a knight of the garter: a descendant of this nobleman, Mountjoy Blount Lord Mountjoy in Ireland was created by King Charles I. Lord Mountjoy of Thurvaston, in 1628, and the next year was advanced to the title of Earl of Newport, in the Isle of Wight: these dignities became extinct in 1681.

TRUSLEY, on a branch of the Derwent, 7 miles W. from Derby, contains 16 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Trusley was the residence of the Coke family, of which three brothers were eminent in the reign of Charles I.: Sir Francis Coke of Trusley; Sir John Coke, M.P. for the University of Cambridge, and Secretary of State, 1620, in which office he continued about twenty years; and George Coke, successively Bishop of Bristol and Hereford, who died in 1646.

2. High Peake Hundred,

In the north-western part of the county, is bounded on the north by Cheshire and Yorkshire; on the east by Scarsdale hundred; on the south by Wirksworth hundred; and on the west by Cheshire.

BAKEWELL, on the river Wye, 26 miles N.W. from Derby, and 153 from London, the most populous and extensive parish in the county, contains 357 houses, and 1782 inhabitants, besides which, there are nine chapelries and several large hamlets. It has a market on Friday; and fairs on Easter Monday, Whit Monday; August 13, for cattle and horses, and on Monday after November 22. The sessions for the hundred are held here. Near the north end of the town is a cotton-manufactory, erected by Sir Richard Arkwright, founder of the cotton trade in this neighbourhood. Some of the inhabitants are engaged in the lead and zinc mines, and in collecting the fossil productions of the Peake. Provisions of every kind, as well as coals, are here plentiful and cheap, and the situation of the town on the river Wye makes it a great resort for anglers, the trout, grayling, &c. affording excellent sport. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. It occupies an elevated situation, and is built upon the plan of a cross, with an octagonal tower in the centre, surmounted by a lofty spire; the arch at the west end is of Anglo-Norman architecture. It contains several interesting monuments, particularly of the families of Vernon and Manners; one of Sir Godfrey Foljambe, who founded a chantry here in the reign of Edward III.; under an arch in the vestry is the monument of Sir Thomas de Wednesley, slain at the battle of Shrewsbury. Ashford, Baslow, Beeley, Buxton, Chelmerton, Great Longstone with Holme, Money Ash, Sheldon, Taddington and Priestcliffe, are chapelries of this parish. Blackwell, Brushfield, Bubnell, Flagg, Froggatt, Harthill, Haddon, Rowland, and Great Rowsley, are townships of the parish, together with part of Wardlow, and the hamlets of Calver, Curbar, Hassop and Little Longstone. The entire parish contains 9162 inhabitants, that part of Wardlow which is in Hope parish being included. Ashford is situated on the banks of the Wye, about a mile above Bakewell; here is a mill for sawing and polishing the marble, found in the neighbourhood, which is much in request, being exported to different parts of the world. The chapel here is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Baslow is on the Derwent, eight miles W. from Chesterfield, and contains the hamlets of Bubnell, Froggatt, and Curbar. Beeley is also on the Derwent, three miles E. from Bakewell. The chapel here is dedicated to St. Anne.

BUXTON is about 13 miles W. from Bakewell, 33 miles from Derby by the Ashborne road, and 39 miles by way of Matlock, which last is usually chosen to avoid the hills. The warm baths at Buxton were distinguished in the time of the Romans by the name of Aquæ, and since, by their efficacy in certain disorders, they have been held in estimation, notwithstanding the dreariness of its situation, in a bottom surrounded with hills and bleak elevated tracts of moorland. The baths are six in number, one for ladies, another for gentlemen, three private baths and a cold bath; these, although all adjoining, are entirely separate and distinct; here is also a bath for the use of the poor, who are not only exempted from any charge, but meet with great assistance from an excellent institution, the Buxton Bath Charity. The temperature of the water, as it rises at the baths, is about 82 degrees of Fahrenheit; it is however about half a degree colder at St. Anne's Well, where it is usually drank. This well is considered one of the seven wonders of the Peake, from the circumstance that both hot and cold water are obtained within twelve inches of each other, from a pump upon the opposite side of the building to that which contains the basin. As early as the reign of Elizabeth these tepid springs appear to have been in high repute. The unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots, during the time she was in the custody of the Earl of Shrewsbury, visited Buxton several times. The first printed account of the place is entitled "The Benefit of the Auntient Bathes of Buckstones, which cureth most Greevous Sicknesses, never before published, compiled by John Jones, phisition, at the King's Mede, nigh Derby, Anno Salutis 1572," 4to. The Crescent was erected from designs by Carr, of York, in 1785, by the Duke of Devonshire; it is of the Doric order: the lower story is a rusticated arcade, forming an agreeable promenade in unfavourable weather, and the entablature of the order is crowned with a balustrade, in the centre of which are the arms of the Duke finely sculptured. This elegant building contains three hotels, St. Anne's, The Centre, and the Great Hotel. The stables, a large pile of building, with a circular area of sixty yards internal diameter, around which is a colonnade that forms a covered Ride; and adjoining are coach-houses for sixty carriages: all the buildings are of freestone. A new church, also built by His Grace, is of the Tuscan order, the interior finished in a chaste and pleasing style. The promenade walks on the hill fronting the Crescent, called Hanscliff, form a beautiful appendage to the edifice, and prove an agreeable recreation to the visitors. The serpentine walks near the square are laid out on the banks of the Wye, here a small stream; the Wye Head is situated in a field about a quarter of a mile from these walks, near which it is joined by Cary brook, rising in the moors about three miles from Buxton. The Duke's Ride leads to the Lover's Leap, about half a mile from the town, on the Bakewell road: here is Shirbrook Dell, a fissure in the rock, at the upper end of which is a small cascade. Grin Low is about half a mile S.W. from Buxton; in this hill is situated Poole's Hole, a subterranean curiosity, which extends 2007 feet from the entrance: the stalactitical formations in this cavern are singularly grotesque; and at Diamond Hill, a short distance from Grin Low, quartz crystals, called Buxton Diamonds, are found.

Chelmerton stands at the foot of a lofty eminence, about 10 miles W. from Bakewell, near which are lead-mines; here is also a manufactory of ribands. About a quarter of a mile N.E. from the village, a barrow or low was opened in 1782; its circumference is about seventy-five yards, and its height seven feet; it contained several human skeletons.

Great Longstone is about 4 miles N. from Bakewell; the chapel is dedicated to St. Giles. Little Longstone is an adjoining hamlet. A muslin manufactory is carried on here.

Money Ash, 5 miles W. from Bakewell, is situated in an open part of the Peake, near which are the lead-mines. The chapel is dedicated to St. Leonard. A court of miners for this hundred is held here. Sheldon chapel, dedicated to All Saints, and Taddington chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, are in the immediate vicinity of Money Ash. Flagg is situated between Sheldon and Chelmerton.

Nether Haddon is about two miles below the town of Bakewell. Haddon Hall, the seat of the Duke of Rutland, K. G., one of the most perfect and curious baronial mansions in the kingdom, stands on a rock in the midst of thick woods, the river Wye winding in the valley at a great depth beneath the walls. The building includes two large courts, and the whole is embattled and surrounded with turrets. The gate-house on the north, a high tower, had originally double gates, presenting all the apparent forms of regular defence. A flight of steps ascending to the great or west court prevented a carriage or horse approaching the porch; the court is paved with flat stones. The great porch under a turret, charged with the arms of Vernon and Pembrugge, and the motto GOD · SAVE · THE · VERNONS ·, opens upon a passage communicating with the second or east court, and also with the great hall on the right hand, and offices connected with it. On the left of the entrance, the first door is that of the buttery; this room contains a vast chest of oak, with divisions for bread, shelves for butter, &c.; out of this room, which is spacious and separated from the rest of the house, is a descent by steps to the beer-cellar, a large room with a groined roof supported by pillars; it has a raised stone-work around it, sufficient to hold a prodigious number of casks, with a stone drain before it to carry off the droppings; through this great arched room is a passage to the brewhouse and bakehouse, with remains of places for coppers, coolers, and ovens. Adjoining are store-rooms for corn and malt, having a communication from the outside of the building for bringing in the stores. In other respects this suite of offices is unconnected with the rest of the mansion, except by the first door mentioned above. The second door-way opens upon a long continued descent to the kitchen, having midway a hatch-door with a broad shelf on the top whereon to place the dishes, and to which the servants in waiting had access. In the kitchen are two vast fireplaces, with irons for a number of spits, stoves, double ranges of dressers, chopping blocks, and a massive wooden table hollowed out for kneading paste, &c. In the floor are iron rings to raise the stones covering the entrance of drains; adjoining the kitchen are numerous offices, as larders, &c. but as distinctly annexed as those of the buttery were to it. The third door-way opens into a small vaulted chamber, unconnected with any other. This, says Mr. King*, was clearly the wine-cellar; wine being considered merely as a cordial, the stock needed to be but small. The fourth door-way is at the bottom of a steep flight of steps leading to a suite of small chambers, seemingly destined for the reception of guests and retainers. Nothing can convey a more complete idea of the ancient modes of living than a survey of these offices, connected with the hall at Haddon.

The great hall on the right hand of the entrance from the great court has at the upper end the remains of the raised floor for the lord's table. On one side of the hall, and over the screen, at the lower end, is a gallery supported by pillars, where the hospitable host and his courtly guests might occasionally behold the revels, and, according to the old distich,

> " Made it merry in the hall, when beards wagged all."

At the upper end of the hall at Haddon are two passages, one opening on a terrace in the garden, the other leading to a staircase formed of large blocks of stone, at the top of which, on the right hand, is an entrance to a chamber, hung with arras, called the dining-room; a large bay window at one corner is the only light; a door behind the arras in another corner opens upon the gallery round two sides of the hall. At the head of the staircase, on the left hand, is an ascent by five or six semicircular steps, formed of solid timber, to the great gallery, one hundred and ten feet in length by seventeen feet in width, which is panelled with oak, the frize below the cornice enriched with boars' heads, roses, &c., armorial badges; below it the arms of Manners impaling Vernon, and the date 1589. Besides a square recess in the midst of the gallery, fifteen feet by twelve, there are also several large bay windows. From the gallery is a short passage, with an ascent of four or five steps, leading to the lord's parlour. The frize of this room is enriched with peacocks, and boars' heads, the badges of the families of Manners and Vernon, alternately, executed in plaster work: behind the arras are folding-doors opening upon a passage to a flight of stone steps down to the chief terrace in the garden. The lord's parlour opens on a second apartment, the frize of which is also of plaster, representing the arms and badges of Vernon and Manners; and over the chimney-piece is a large bas-relief of Orpheus charming the Beasts. Through this room is another, out of which is a winding staircase, in a turret from the top of the house to the bottom. All these rooms, except the gallery, were hung with arras, the doors being entirely concealed by it; so that the hanging was to be lifted up to pass in or out. In many places are the large iron hooks by which it was held back. The oldest tapestry, about the age of Edward IV., is dark blue, thickly covered with small bunches of flowers of various colours. In the centres are the royal arms within the garter, with helmet, crest, and mantling; in other parts are the royal arms within the garter only. The doors are of very rude workmanship, seldom fit close, and have wooden bolts and iron hasps only for fastenings. The state chambers are few in number, as in all ancient mansions, where the provision of officers and attendants of the household were so great. Besides the gallery, the dining-room, and the three chambers mentioned, there are only two other small ones that can be said to belong to the principal suite; these were the ladies' chambers, and are entered through a sort of closet at the corner of the dining-room; the furthermost of these chambers has a deep frize of plaster enriched with a running foliage of four bands one above another; the room is hung with arras, behind which is a door opening upon a steep flight of stone steps down to the great court. All the rest of this very interesting pile of building contains only lodging rooms for dependants, retainers, and servants, which at a late period were here very numerous. The first Duke of Rutland, in the reign of Queen Anne, is said to have maintained a household consisting of seven score of servants.

The chapel at the south-western angle of the great court is entered by a low pointed arch, through an ante-chapel, also very low. The chapel has two aisles, formed by pillars and pointed arches. In one of the aisles are many long oaken benches for the household; the other contains the pulpit, the desk, and the organ-loft. The organ has been removed, but the panelled loft, with its gilt edges, the pulpit, desks, and seats for the family, remain. The family pews, large and high, are placed on each side of the body of the chapel, reaching from the middle nearly to the altar, over which are remains of painted glass.

The second or east court of Haddon Hall has a gate-house tower with an arched entrance, and, as well as the first, is difficult of access to a carriage or horse. The garden of this great mansion is but small, consisting entirely of terraces one above another, each having a stone balustrade. At the end of one of these terraces is an arbour: upon another a small bowling-green; and from the lowermost terrace, which runs along the western front of the building, is a steep descent of some hundred steps to the river Wye. There was another great bowling-green at a distance in the park, which, together with the park, has been entirely destroyed; the whole having been ploughed up about 1770. The ancient furniture had been previously removed to Belvoir Castle, now the principal seat of the Duke of Rutland. Although uniform in its outward appearance, Haddon Hall has certainly been built at different periods. There is a date of 1427 on some glass in the chapel; and it is not improbable that the eastern parts were built by Sir Richard Vernon, who was constituted treasurer of Calais by King Henry VI., and who died in 1452. Sir Henry Vernon, his grandson, was governor and treasurer to Prince Arthur, the eldest son and heir-apparent of King Henry VII.; and there is a tradition that the prince frequently lived with Sir Henry at Haddon. Sir George Vernon, the son and successor of Sir Henry, was so much distinguished by his hospitality as to acquire the name of the King of the Peake. He erected some part of the edifice. In the old drawing-room is carved E P, with the prince's badge of the feathers, and the date 1545. Sir George Vernon died in 1566, and was buried in Bakewell church, leaving two daughters coheiresses, Margaret and Dorothy; the last married Sir John Manners, ancestor of the Duke of Rutland, and by him the south front was built in the reign of Elizabeth. The northern front was erected by

* Observations on Ancient Castles.

John Earl of Rutland, who died in 1679. The descendants of this noble family continued to reside at Haddon Hall more than a century in the same hospitable style which had been kept up from its very foundation.

The hamlets of Upper Haddon and Great Rowsley lie on the south of Bakewell. Hassop is on the north-east. Hassop Hall is the seat of the Earl of Newburgh. The family of Eyre have resided at Hassop ever since the reign of Henry VII. The gardens and green-houses are much admired, as containing a greater number of exotics than any other in this part of the country.

CASTLETON, 5 miles N. from Tideswell, 13 miles N. from Bakewell, and 15 miles W. from Sheffield in Yorkshire, contains 210 houses, and 993 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. It formerly belonged to the monastery of Vale Royal in Cheshire, and was granted to the see of Chester by Henry VIII. This town undoubtedly derived its name from its situation, at a short distance from Peveril or Peake Castle. It was originally fortified, being surrounded by a rampart and fosse on every side, excepting that on which the castle stood, which quarter was left open that a free communication might be maintained with the garrison. The very ancient and curious remains of Peveril Castle stand on the elevated summit of the almost inaccessible rock impending over the mouth of the Peake Cavern. This castle, in the opinion of the late Edward King, a very learned antiquary *, was an Anglo-Saxon royal residence; but its structure is more generally referred to the Anglo-Norman æra, and is supposed to have been erected by William, natural son of William the Conqueror by the wife of Ralph Peveril. He certainly obtained very considerable possessions by the gift of his father, and this is expressly mentioned at the head of his manors in Domesday Book as The Castle in the Peke Forest. The only ascent to this fortress is towards the north, by a winding path, so steep that a small force might easily defend it. On the very top of the hill is the Ballium, or castle-yard, formerly encompassed by a wall, which had a gate-house on the eastern side; on the western side, opposite to the gate-house, is the Donjon Keep or principal tower, one side of which stands upon the very verge of the precipice. The court-yard is spacious, and besides the principal gate-house on the east, which is now destroyed, there is another gate-house on the north, nearly entire. The Duke of Devonshire is the Constable of Peake Castle. How long the castle has been in ruins is not exactly known, but it appears that the records of the Miners' Court were kept here until the reign of Elizabeth, when they were removed to Tutbury Castle in Staffordshire. The Peake Cavern, at the foot of the rock upon which the castle stands, is the most striking and remarkable amongst the numerous caves in this county. It is situated in a deep glen, part of the valley in which the town of Castleton stands. On each side, and near the end of this glen, two large faces of rock rise to a vast height; the summit being crowned by Peake Castle, which stands close to the edge of a perpendicular precipice two or three hundred feet above the mouth of the cavern. The arched entrance of Peake Cavern, or the Devil's Cave, is very regularly formed, being above forty feet high, and not less than one hundred and twenty feet in width, and the cave extends in a direct line nearly three hundred feet, with an effect singularly impressive. At the mouth it is tolerably light, and persons employed in the manufacture of twine inhabit small dwellings on the spot, carrying on their work in the cave, and occasionally acting as guides to the visitors of this romantic cavity. Beyond the first turning is a gentle declivity, and at the distance of about four hundred feet from the mouth, a door prevents the further progress without a guide. The cavern now gradually contracts to a low passage almost full of water, and the visitor passes under the rock in a small boat to a cave more spacious than the former, called here the Grand Saloon, said to be above two hundred feet wide, and one hundred and twenty feet high. The only light in this part is obtained from candles, purposely carried by the guide, the faint glimmering of which imparts a degree of horror to the darkness of the scene. But upon a proper disposition of numerous lights, the perfect shape and size of the cavern may be easily discerned. A steep ascent leads to a projecting rock called the Chancel, where a rustic choir, previously assembled, produce a remarkable echo. Afterwards the cave becomes low and narrow. Its total length is said to be two thousand two hundred and fifty feet; a small stream, a branch of the Derwent, runs through it, which is crossed several times, but after heavy rains is sometimes impassable: many singular cavities are shown, each having its particular name, and all noted for some peculiarity of form. The northern part of this county, distinguished by the number, height, and extent of its hills, is no less remarkable for the great depth and width of its valleys, and the beauty and variety of its dales. The valleys are generally in proportion to the ridges and mountains by which they are bounded, and the broadest and deepest are found in the High Peake. The most striking valley in this district is that in which Castleton stands. The immediate approach to the town from Chapel-en-le-Frith is by a steep descent, called the Winnets or Windgates, from the stream of air that always sweeps through the chasm, and which road, nearly a mile long, is carried in a winding direction, so as to render the natural declivity passable for carriages. The road has a sudden and abrupt turning along the edge of a high and steep precipice down into the town. The valley, at least eight hundred feet deep, is in many parts nearly two miles wide, extending eastward to the distance of five or six miles. A number of lesser dales from the north and south, at various distances, open into it, and the steep sides of the valley are rendered very beautiful by well-cultivated inclosures, which rise one above another to its very edge. The village of Hope, at the distance of two miles from Castleton, has a very pleasing appearance; while on the northern side the country boldly swells into hills terminating in two high points at considerable distance from each other. Descending from this elevated situation, other objects no less striking and picturesque present themselves; at the bottom is the town of Castleton, where on a very high and steep eminence the ruins of Peake Castle attract the attention; and directly beyond the town, Mam Tor raises its lofty head, overlooking this scene of beauty and grandeur. The valley does not extend beyond the town, but here forms a noble amphitheatre, its back rising in many parts one thousand feet, and the diameter of its front extending nearly two miles. In the course of this valley the views are extremely diversified; in some places it becomes narrow, its sides thickly clothed with wood, and then gradually opening, presents a wide and extended prospect. Every step produces fresh objects and scenes, some of them grand, beautiful and romantic; and following the course of the river Derwent as far as Derby for nearly forty miles, the scenery is highly varied. Mam Tor, the loftiest of the eminences that surround the town of Castleton, rises one thousand three hundred feet above the valley, and is regarded as one of the wonders of the Peak. It is composed of micaceous grit and shale, which on being decomposed by the atmosphere, falls down the face of the Tor, and from this circumstance it is called The Shivering Mountain. On the summit are some remains of an encampment, partly destroyed by the falling away occasioned by decomposition. On the south side of Mam Tor, near the bottom, is the ancient mine of Odin, supposed to have been worked in the Anglo-Saxon æra. Amongst other objects in the neighbourhood which attract particular notice is Elden Hole, an immense chasm, reckoned one of the wonders of the Peake, and concerning the depth of which various reports are circulated, some having represented it as not two hundred and ten feet deep; while others have asserted that a line two thousand seven hundred feet in length did not touch the bottom. It is walled round to prevent accidents.

Edale is a chapelry of the parish of Castleton. On the summit of a hill on Nethermoor, about a mile north-east of Nether Booth in Edale, was formerly a heap of stone supposed Druidical, now destroyed. Heaps of stone of a similar appearance are common in this part of the county: on Stanwich Top are three.

CHAPEL EN LE FRITH, on the borders of Cheshire, 39 miles N.W. from Derby, and 20 miles S.E. from Manchester, contains 608 houses, and 3234 inhabitants, including the townships of Bowdens Edge, Bradshaw Edge and Coombs Edge, which constitute the parish. The town stands on the acclivity of an eminence, which rises in the centre of a large hollow formed by the mountains in this part of the county; it is irregularly built, but contains some very good houses, having a small cotton-manufactory, and a market on Thursday. Fairs are held Thursday before February 13, March 24, March 29, Thursday before Easter, April 30, Holy Thursday, and three weeks after for cattle, July 7 for wool, Thursday before August 24 for cheese and sheep, Thursday after September 29, and Thursday before November 11 for cattle. The market-house was built in 1700 by John Shalcross, Esq., of Shalcross. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy. It was erected in the reign of Henry III. in the beginning of the fourteenth century, and was consecrated by Alexander de Savensby, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield. Bank Hall, about a mile south westward of the town, is the seat of S. Frith, Esq.; and Stodart is the seat of J. Bennett, Esq. At the distance of two miles south-west are some entrenchments near the northern extremity of Coombs Moss.

DARLEY DALE, on the Derwent, 6 miles S.W. from Bakewell, and 4 miles N.W. from Matlock, contains 227 houses, and 1175 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The hamlets of Winsley and Snitterton, both in Wirksworth hundred, are in this parish.

EDENSOR, 3 miles N.E. from Bakewell, contains 80 houses, and 509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. It formerly belonged to the monastery of Rocester in Staffordshire. The hamlet of Pilsley is in this parish, and also Chatsworth, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire, K.G. Lord Lieutenant of the county. It stands in a wide and deep valley, and near the foot of a high mountain covered with wood. The river Derwent winds gracefully through the park; and the approach to the mansion is over a bridge of three arches, erected by Paine, and ornamented with figures by Cibber. The house is built in the Ionic order, with a flat roof surrounded by a balustrade, and forms nearly a square of about two hundred feet, having four regular fronts, inclosing a quadrangular court, in the centre of which is a fountain and a statue of Orpheus. The principal entrance is on the west, by a noble flight of steps, to a terrace extending the whole length of the building. The front, which faces the gardens, is magnificent; under the cornice on the frieze is the family motto "CAVENDO TUTUS." The estate was purchased by Sir William Cavendish, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He began a noble mansion, that was not finished until after his death, which happened in 1557. A few years before the Revolution that structure was taken down, and the present splendid edifice raised by William Cavendish, the first Duke of Devonshire. The suite of rooms called Mary Queen of Scots' is thought to correspond in situation with those occupied by that unfortunate princess when she was kept a prisoner in the old house at Chatsworth, under the care of the Earl of Shrewsbury. Thirteen years of her captivity were passed here; and from this place she wrote her second letter to Pope Pius, bearing date the 31st of October, 1570. The hall is sixty feet by twenty-seven; the ceiling, the end, and one side, display representations of an Assembly of the Gods; Julius Cæsar sacrificing; and his Assassination at the foot of Pompey's statue, by Verrio and La Guerre. The dancing gallery, one hundred feet by twenty-two, is exceedingly splendid. A point-cravat, a woodcock, and a medal, carved in wood by Gibbons, presented by him to the Duke of Devonshire, on the completion of his work at Chatsworth, are here preserved in a glass case. In the dressing-room to the best bed-chamber is a small but beautiful collection of fossils, which was made by the late accomplished Duchess of Devonshire, the mother of the present duke. The scarlet-room was so named from containing the bed in which George II. expired, and which, with the coronation chairs of George III. and Queen Charlotte, became the perquisites of the late duke, as lord chamberlain. The chairs are preserved in another apartment. From the hall a double flight of steps and a long gallery conduct to the chapel, decorated with paintings by Verrio, and a variety of exquisite carvings by Gibbons. Cibber carved several ornaments in the chapel; and on each side of the altar the statues of Faith and Hope. The ceiling is covered with a painting of the Ascension. The south and east fronts of the mansion were rebuilt by Sir Jeffrey Wyattville, R.A. in 1829, when the whole was considerably enlarged. The park is nine miles in circumference, and is beautifully diversified with hill and dale, as well as by various plantations, which range in fine sweeping masses over the inequalities of the ground. The prospects from different parts are exceedingly fine; and one view, looking back from the south, possesses extraordinary grandeur. Immediately below the eye is the rich vale, animated by the meandering current of the Derwent; more distant is the house, with a fine back-ground of wood; and far beyond, the blue hills of Castleton skirting the horizon. Great alterations were made here by Brown, who modernized the park and grounds, improved the water, and destroyed the general formalities of the place. The water-works, of which a temple, that from a variety of statues &c. throws out water for a very large cascade; and a willow tree, made of copper, which drops water from every leaf, form a part,—yet exist. On the highest point of the mountain behind the house stands the hunting tower, ninety feet high. This edifice commands a most extensive view, and is supposed to have been erected for the convenience of ladies who might wish to partake of the diversion of hunting, without incurring its fatigues. On the extensive moor behind it is that vast natural reservoir, said to be sixteen acres in extent, which supplies the house and feeds the water-works. On the north side of the bridge, at a little distance from it, are the remains of an old square tower, moated round, which is called the Bower of Mary Queen of Scots. The present Duke of Devonshire is Lord Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household. His Grace was born at Paris, May 21st, 1790, and is eminently distinguished for his amiable character, his generosity, and his hospitality; his great estates, if not the first, are amongst the largest, possessed by any peer of the United Kingdom.

EYAM, 7 miles N. from Bakewell, contains 221 houses, and 1021 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The parish was greatly depopulated by the plague in 1665. It appears by the register that between the 7th September of that year, and the beginning of November 1666, there were two hundred and sixty deaths, who were all buried in a heathy hill above the village. Eyam occupies a waving line amongst the hills on a kind of natural terrace above three hundred yards broad, above which yet higher hills arise. Foolow is a hamlet, and Woodland Eyam a township of this parish. The Woodlands is an extensive tract, the upper parts displaying fine oak, fir, and larch trees; many acres have also been brought into cultivation.

GLOSSOP, in the northern part of the county, on the borders of Cheshire and Yorkshire, 10 miles N. from Chapel-en-le-Frith, contains 217 houses, and 1351 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*; it formerly belonged to the Abbey of Basingwark, in Flintshire, and contains a monument of Joseph Hague, Esq., of Park Hall, near Hayfield, by Bacon. The parish of Glossop is very extensive, and comprehends a large tract of mountainous country; it has several cotton-manufactories, which have lately increased in number; and in the northern parts a considerable quantity of fine woollen cloth is made. The townships of Chunat, Dinting, Great Hamlet, Hayfield, Ludworth and Chisworth, Padfield, Simondsley and Whitfield, with the hamlets of Beard, Charlesworth, Kinder, Olerset, Thornsett and Whittle; the liberty of Phoside, and the chapelries of Chinley-Bugsworth and Brownside and Mellor, on the banks of the Goyt, are all in this parish, which contains a total of 13,766 inhabitants.

Glossop Hall is the seat of Matthew Ellison, Esq. Park Hall, near Hayfield, was the seat of the late Joseph Hague, Esq., who, having acquired considerable property, bequeathed the interest of 1000*l.* towards clothing twenty-four poor men and women, out of the eight townships of Glossop Dale.

Kinder Scout, one of the highest eminences in the county, although surrounded by hills on every side, overlooks them all, and affords a most magnificent and delightful prospect. It is said that with the naked eye may be seen from it the towns of Stockport, Manchester, Bury, and Bolton, the range of hills near Darwent, Rivington Pike, the towns of Wigan and Warrington, and a hill near Liverpool, the city of Chester, and the mountains of North Wales. In Glossop parish are the remains of Melandra Castle.

HATHERSAGE, on the borders of Yorkshire, 10 miles N. from Bakewell, and 10 miles W. from Sheffield, contains 121 houses, and 658 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire; it contains a slab, inlaid with brass, in memory of Ralph Eyre of Offerton, ob. 1493. In the churchyard was buried Little John, Robin Hood's companion, and his bow is said to have been hung up in the church; the last is now preserved at Cannon Hall, in Yorkshire, the seat of Walter Spencer Stanhope, Esq. The bow is of yew, and measures six feet seven inches long, although both ends are broken off. This famous outlaw was a man of great stature, and called Little John ironically, a tradition confirmed by the great size of some bones found in his grave, when it was opened in 1784; a thigh bone taken out of the grave measured twenty-eight inches and a half in length, and is now in the possession of Sir G. Strickland, Bart., of Boynton, in Yorkshire. There are several places in this neighbourhood where the name of Robin Hood is preserved; a high ridge of hills, about two miles from the town, in the road to Sheffield, contains a recess called Robin Hood's Chair. Bamford and Outseats are hamlets, and Darwent and Stoney Middleton are chapelries of this parish. The chapel at Stoney Middleton is dedicated to St. Martin. Many persons are employed here in burning limestone, but the working of the lead-mines is the principal employment.

HOPE, 9 miles W. from Chapel-en-le-Frith, and 6 miles N. from Tideswell, contains 93 houses, and 518 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. Fairfield is a chapelry of this parish; to it also belong the townships of Fernilee, Grindlow, Highlow, and Stoke, and the hamlets of Abney, Aston and Thornton, Bradwell, Brough and Shatton, Great and Little Hucklow, Nether Padley, Offerton, Thornhill and Woodland Hope, together with the liberty of Hazlebadge. At Brough it is said that William Peveril had a castle; of Brough Castle John Earl of Warren was governor 20th Edward I.: it is also said to have been a Roman station, several Roman antiquities having been found in Hallsted's, two fields lying near the confluence of Bradwell and Noa brooks.

PEAKE FOREST, 5 miles N.W. from Buxton, contains 137 houses, and 680 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial. A chapel here, dedicated to Charles the Martyr, is said to have been built by Elizabeth Countess of Shrewsbury: both the chapel and the forest now belong to the Duke of Devonshire. The Peake Forest canal communicates with Ashton-under-Line.

TIDESWELL, 8 miles N.W. from Bakewell, and 32 miles from Derby, contains 324 houses, and 1543 inhabitants. The town is situated in a bottom, amidst the moors and hills, having a clear rivulet, a branch of the Wye, running through it, on each side of which the buildings are scattered. Most of the inhabitants are engaged in mining. There is a market on Wednesday, and fairs May 30, the first Wednesday in September, and October 18. The town was formerly celebrated for an ebbing and flowing well, whence it is reported to have received its name Tideswell; but it has long ceased to flow, and can hardly be remembered. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. In the chancel is a slab inscribed to the memory of Thomas Foljambe, ob. 1358, who is said to have contributed towards the building of the church: here are also tombs of Sampson Meuril, ob. 1388, and of Robert Pursglove, the last prior of Gisburne, ob. 1579; he was a native of Tideswell, and founded here a grammar-school, and a hospital for twelve poor people. The chapelry of Wormhill and the hamlets of Litton and Weston are in this parish. At Wormhill, on the banks of the Wye, was born J. Brindley, the engineer, who formed the navigable canals in Lancashire and Cheshire, at the expense of the Duke of Bridgewater. Monsal Dale, one of the most beautiful spots in the county, is near the road from Tideswell to Bakewell; here the river Wye winds through a rich and verdant valley, the sides of which are very steep, clothed with underwood, with here and there a large piece of rock starting from its surface. The views near the head of the valley are particularly pleasing: at this point Litton Frith opens into it; the high point of land between the dales has been improved by plantations, which now cover the rocks on this elevated spot: the view commands three beautiful valleys,—Monsal Dale, Litton Frith, and Miller Dale: near Wormhill, higher up the river, is Chee Tor, a large rock, nearly four hundred feet high; in some parts it overhangs considerably, and is beautifully fringed with wood; the rivulet at its foot is filled with large stones, and forms many natural cascades; beyond this the dale contracts towards Lover's Leap, about a mile from Buxton.

YOULGRAVE, on a branch of the Wye, 3 miles S. from Bakewell, contains 185 houses, and 955 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire; it formerly belonged to the Abbey of Leicester. The chapelries of Birchover, Stanton, Winster, Middleton, and Smerrill, the township of Elton, and the hamlet of Gratton, are all in this parish. At Rowtor, near Birchover, is a rocking stone; and a similar one is upon Bradley rocks.

In Cratcliff rock, about half a mile from Birchover, is a small cave, in which are remains of an altar and crucifix, cut out of the rock; the entrance to the cell from the south is by a natural arch. At the distance of four or five hundred yards from Cratcliff is Robin Hood's Stride, or Mock Beggar's Hall, a high perpendicular pile of rocks, upon which are two erections of rough huge stones, rising each to the height of twelve feet, and standing at the distance of nearly seventy feet from each other; when seen a few miles from the place where they are situated, the pile of rocks resembles a large house, and the two erections at the opposite extremities appear like chimneys belonging to it, whence the name of Mock Beggar's Hall.

On Stanton Moor is a small circular work, the diameter of which is forty-eight feet; on the eastern side are several single large stones, called Cat Stones, which stand on the edge of a steep declivity overlooking Darley Dale. Castle Ring is about a quarter of a mile from the little valley that separates Hartle moor from Stanton-moor; it is a circular work, in diameter from S.E. to N.W. one hundred and eighty-five feet, and from N.E. to S.W. one hundred and forty-three feet, and is supposed to have been a British encampment.

On Hartle Moor, near Winster, is part of a circle of stones, called the Nine Ladies; at a short distance from these is a single stone called the Musician; the diameter of the circle is about thirty-three feet: the present number of stones is six, three nearly upright, two leaning a little, and the other broken off near the ground; to complete the circle, one or two more seem to be wanting. The length of the largest stone above the surface of the ground is above seven feet, the other four are somewhat shorter. On Miningle-low near Winster, were formerly several stone erections, mostly destroyed in hopes of finding hidden treasure, although little, except bones, has been found; whence they are concluded to have been sepulchral monuments.

The village of Middleton is situated in a deep and narrow valley; and near it, on the west, is one of the most striking monuments of antiquity which is to be met with in the county; it is called Arbor Low, and is about a mile and a half eastward of Newhaven, in the road from Ashborne to Buxton. It is considerably elevated, and commands an extensive view, more especially towards the east; whence it is supposed to have been a Druidical temple: the remains consist of a circular area encompassed by a broad ditch, bounded by a high mound or bank; on the north and south are openings; within the area are several large stones of different size; about thirty lie round the border of it, and generally point with the narrower end towards the centre; they are rough and unhewn, and are for the most part about five feet long, three broad, and one foot thick.

3. Morleston and Litchurch Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Searsdale hundred; on the east by Nottinghamshire; on the south by Repton and Gresley hundred and Leicestershire; and on the west by Appletree hundred.

ALLESTREY, on the river Derwent, 2 miles N. from Derby, contains 67 houses, and 361 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy; it formerly belonged to Derby Abbey.

ASTON UPON TRENT, 6½ miles S.E. from Derby, contains 116 houses, and 552 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 15*s.*; it contains monuments of the Holden and Shuttleworth families. The Trent and Mersey canal passes on the south-eastern side of the village.

BARROW, on the river Trent, 6 miles S. from Derby, contains 54 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*; it contains some painted glass in the windows, the arms of benefactors, and a monument of John Bothe, ob. 1382. The liberty of Synfin and Arleston and the chapelry of Twyford and Stenson are in this parish. On Synfin Moor is Derby race-course; the races are generally held in the middle of August. At Twyford is the seat of S. Bristow, Esq., pleasantly situated on the banks of the Trent.

CRICH, 5 miles W. from Alfreton, and the same distance E. from Wirksworth, contains 392 houses, and 2024 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* The township of Wessington and the hamlet of Tansley are in this parish.

DALE ABBEY, or Stanley Park, 7 miles E. from Derby, is extra-parochial, and contains 83 houses, and 418 inhabitants. Serlo de Grendon founded a convent of Black Canons in Depe Dale, whom he invited from Calke Abbey; they did not continue long here, but were succeeded by Premonstratensians from Tupholm and Welbeck. At length William Fitz Ralph and Geffery de Saucemere founded Dale Abbey in 1204 for monks of the Premonstratensian Order, and dedicated it to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. It is said that the abbey was inclosed with a stone wall, with a gate-house on the west; and that all travellers who passed this way were lodged and entertained for one night, and in the morning furnished with supplies necessary to assist them on their journey. The church at Dale is also said to have been a magnificent building; an arch is yet standing. At the Dissolution the revenue was 144*l.* 12*s.*, when the site was granted to Francis Poole.

DENBY, 8 miles N.E. from Derby, contains 169 houses, and 1073 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. In the eighth year of the reign of Edward III., Richard Lord Grey of Codnor obtained a charter for a market at this place, with a fair on the eves and nativity of the Virgin. John Flamsteed, the eminent astronomer, was born at Denby in 1646.

DERBY, 126 miles N.W. from London, contains 3381 houses, and 17,423 inhabitants. This town is in general well built, containing many fine streets with modern houses, &c. It is pleasantly situated on the west bank of the Derwent, over which it has a handsome stone bridge of three arches. By the last charter of incorporation, granted by King Charles II., the government of the town is vested in a mayor, nine aldermen, fourteen brethren (out of whom the aldermen are elected), fourteen common-councilmen, a recorder, high steward, and town-clerk. The mayor, aldermen, recorder, and town-clerk, or any three of them, are empowered to hold a court of record every second Tuesday, have the sole return of writs, keep quarterly sessions, two courts leet, and six annual fairs; are toll-free throughout the kingdom, and receive toll from all but the Duchy of Lancaster, which is to pay only half the sums charged on the inhabitants of other places. The arms of the town are, Argent, on a mount vert, a stag lodged within park-pales and gate, all proper. The seal, which is very ancient, has not any park-pales, and the stag is there represented as lodged in a wood. In Derby are several public buildings, a county- and a town-hall, a county- and a town-gaol, two assembly-rooms, and a theatre. The County-hall, which is situated in St. Mary's Gate, was built in the reign of King Charles II.; it was finished in the year 1660. In it are held the assizes and sessions, and all the meetings for transacting the public business of the county. Here is a bust by Chantrey of Francis Noel Clarke Mundy, Esq. who died in 1815. The Town-hall was erected in 1731 and the County-gaol about the year 1756. The Ordnance depôt was built by James Wyatt in 1805. Derby maintains a good trade in corn and malt, and the town has been long famed for ale, of a very superior strength and flavour. But the chief business of the place is twisting silk, which was introduced in the year 1719 by Sir Thomas Lombe, a merchant of London, and his brother, who here erected the first twist-mills in England, made from a model obtained in Italy. There are twelve of these mills in Derby, and three cotton-mills. The first successful attempt to establish the manufacture of calicoes in this kingdom was made at Derby by Jedediah Strutt, Sir Richard Arkwright, and Samuel Need. The machine for making ribbed stockings was invented by Jedediah Strutt, about the year 1755. There is also, a paper-mill, a machine for spinning wool, a mill for slitting and rolling iron, a furnace for smelting copper ore, a machine for battering and rolling it into sheets, a manufactory for polishing marble and making ornaments of the Derbyshire fluor spar, established by Henry Watson, and a porcelain manufactory, established about 1750 by Mr. Dewsbury, which is carried on by a process precisely similar to that at Worcester, except that the ware here is said to be rather lighter and more transparent than at the latter place. The biscuit pieces, or white ware, made at Derby, surpass in beauty and delicacy any of the same kind. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs January 25, March 21 and 22, Friday in Easter-week, Friday after May-day, Friday in Whitsun-week, St. James, July 25, September 27, 28 and 29, and Friday before Old Michaelmas. Derby returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred 23rd of Edward I.; who vested the right of election in the corporation, freemen, and sworn burgesses, amounting at present to about seven hundred voters. The present members are Henry Frederick Compton Cavendish, Esq. and Edward Strutt, Esq.

Derby contains five parishes: All-Saints is a curacy; this church is the principal ornament of the town, yet displays one of many instances of architectural incongruity, by the addition of a Palladian edifice to an ancient and remarkably fine tower. This tower was erected in the reign of King Henry VIII., and its upper part is richly ornamented with tracery, high pinnacles, crockets, and battlements; to which the body of the church was added in 1725, after drawings furnished by Gibbs, of chaste proportion and classical design. It is large and handsome; a light iron screen at the east end incloses the vault of the Cavendish family on the south side of the chancel, in which, excepting the first earl, all the Earls and Dukes of Devonshire, of the Cavendish family, with most of the junior branches, have been interred. The principal monuments are those of the second Earl and Countess of Devonshire and Elizabeth of Hardwick, the famous Countess of Shrewsbury, who built the houses of Chatsworth, Hardwick, and Oldcotes, highly distinguished by their magnificence, and died on the 13th February, 1607. She founded an alms-house near this church, which has been rebuilt at the expense of the Duke of Devonshire. On the north side of the church is a monument to the memory of Richard Croshaw, a great benefactor to this town, who died in June, 1631. St. Alkmund, a vicarage, to which belong the townships of Little Chester and Darley Abbey, and the chapelry of Little Eaton. Darley, or Derley Abbey, was founded by Robert Ferrers, second earl of Derby, about the reign of King Stephen, and dedicated to St. Helen; but in the next reign the greatest part of the endowment was translated to Little Derby on the river Derwent, which was given to the canons by Hugh Dean of Derby, whereon an abbey of that order was built. The abbey was at the Dissolution valued at 285*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*: part of the estates was granted by Queen Mary to the bailiffs and burgesses of Derby, particularly the advowson of the churches of St. Peter and St. Michael in Derby, the school and several messuages and parcels of land in the town and its neighbourhood. Part of Darley Abbey is yet standing. The site of the building was granted 32 Henry VIII. to Sir William West. A building called the Chapel has been converted into a dwelling-house. The remaining parishes are St. Michael, a vicarage, value 4*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the King; it includes the township of Alvaston: St. Peter, a vicarage, value 8*l.*, to which belong the township of Boulton and the hamlet of Litchurch; and St. Werburgh, a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the King. There was a priory of Benedictine nuns founded at Derby in the reign of Henry II., and a priory of Dominican friars, which at the Dissolution was valued at 18*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* There was also a hospital, founded in the time of Henry II., called Maison de Dieu: and before the year 1140, there was a cell of Cluniac monks, dedicated to St. James, belonging to the Abbey of Bermondsey, in Southwark. It was protected as a poor hospital in the fourteenth year of Henry III., and in the next reign reckoned amongst the alien priories: however, it continued to the general Dissolution, when the King was accounted founder, and the yearly value thought to be about 10*l.* The Derby Canal begins at the Trent, and running through Swarkestone, joins the Trent and Mersey Canal, and commences its course through Synfin Moor, between Boulton and Osmaston, to the east side of Derby, where it crosses the river Derwent. From Derby a cut passes Chaddesden, Spondon, Burrowash, and Breason, and joins the Erwash Canal, between Long Eaton and Sandiacre; from Derby there is also a cut to Little-Eaton, with railways to Smalley Mills and Smithey Houses.

EGGINTON, on the river Dove, 8 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 64 houses, and 319 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Sir Simon Every of Egginton was created baronet 26th May 1641. Egginton Hall is now the seat of Sir Henry Every, Bart. The greater part of the house was consumed by an accidental fire in the year 1736; after which it was rebuilt on an enlarged scale. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Dove.

ELVASTON, 4 miles S.E. from Derby, contains 97 houses, and 493 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Harrington; it formerly belonged to the priory of Shelford in Nottinghamshire; it contains several monuments of the Stanhopes, lords of the manor from Henry VIII. Elvaston Hall, the seat of the Earl of Harrington, is approached by a fine avenue above a mile in length. The mansion has been partly rebuilt from designs by the late James Wyatt, in the ancient style. The entrance hall contains a complete suit of tilting-armour of the time of Elizabeth; and in the dining-room, part of the old mansion, is a chimney-piece bearing the arms and quarterings of the family of Stanhope, with the crest in an upper compartment. In the servants' hall is another fine old chimney-piece, carved with armorial decorations, which good taste has preserved. The drawing-room is hung with tapestry, representing the story of Don Quixote. The gardens are chiefly laid out in the old style, with statues and vases interspersed amidst the foliage of the plantations. There is a very fine collection of pictures in the various apartments. William, third son of Sir John Stanhope, of Elvaston, was created Lord Harrington in 1729, and Earl 9th February, 1742. Charles, third Earl of Harrington, Constable of Windsor Castle, and colonel of the first regiment of Life Guards, died 15th September 1829, æt. 76, when he was succeeded by Charles, fourth earl.

WEST HALLAM, 8 miles N.E. from Derby, contains 131 houses, and 706 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, is a rectory, value 8*l.*

HEANOR, 9 miles N.E. from Derby, contains 423 houses, and 2364 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The townships of Codnor, Loscow and Shipley are in this parish. The remains of Codnor Castle, the ancient baronial seat of the Lords Grey, are situated two miles and a half northward of Heanor. The castle stood on high ground, with an extensive prospect eastward into Nottinghamshire, which is here separated from this county by the river Erwash. From the ruined walls yet remaining, and the foundations of others that may be traced, it appears to have been a very large building. Henry Lord Grey of Codnor died without issue, when his estate devolved to his aunt Elizabeth, wife of Sir John Zouch, and was held by that family under the King, as of the honour of Peveril: the last who resided here was John Zouch, Esq., who sold his estates about 1612. The castle has long been a ruin, but in 1712 Sir Strensham Master inhabited it. The park was very extensive, comprehending about three thousand two hundred acres, which are now divided into farms. Codnor Castle and Park Liberty are extra-parochial. There are collieries in the neighbourhood, which employ many families. Shipley Hall is the seat of Edward Miller Mundy, Esq.

HORSLEY, on a branch of the Derwent, 6 miles N. from Derby, contains 121 houses, and 624 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. Here was formerly a castle called Horestan Castle, built as early as the beginning of the thirteenth century, when William Ferrers Earl of Derby was constituted governor. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth it was held by Thomas Stanhope, in whose family the site remains. A very small portion of the ruins exists. The townships of Horsley, Woodhouse and Kelbourne are in this parish.

ILKESTON, 9 miles N.E. from Derby, and about the same distance W. from Nottingham, contains 672 houses, and 3681 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland; it formerly belonged to Dale Abbey. The parish contains the hamlets of Cotmenhay and Little Hallam.

KIRK HALLAM, on a branch of the Erwash, 9 miles E. from Derby, contains 15 houses, and 95 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*; it formerly belonged to Dale Abbey. The township of Mapperly is in this parish.

KIRK LANGLEY, 5 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 97 houses, and 552 inhabitants, including the township of Meynell Langley. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* It contains monuments of the Meynell and Beresford families.

MACKWORTH, on a branch of the Derwent, 3 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 72 houses, and 392 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 3*s.* Here was formerly a castle, said to have belonged to the Mackworth family, and to have been destroyed in the civil war. The gate-house on the south still remains. Some high ground in the neighbourhood is called Cannon Hills, here it is reported the cannon were planted at the siege. The site is now the property of Lord Scarsdale. Markeaton, or Marton, is a hamlet of this parish. Markeaton Hall is the seat of Francis Mundy, Esq. M.P. for the county. The estate has been in possession of the family of Mundy from an early period. Sir John Mundy was Lord Mayor of London in 1522; he died in 1537, at which time he possessed not only the manors of Markeaton, Mackworth, and Allestrey, but a considerable estate at Little Chester, a Roman station in this county, and at Findern, about four miles and a half south-west from Derby.

MICKLE OVER, 3 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 116 houses, and 631 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* Little Over and Findern are townships of this parish. Little Over Hall is the seat of Bache Heathcote, Esq. It stands high and in a pleasant situation, commanding views, particularly on the south-east, very distant and extensive.

MORLEY, 4 miles N.E. from Derby, contains 51 houses, and 273 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The edifice was built by Richard Statham about the year 1303. In the chancel are several monumental inscriptions to the memory of the Stathams and Sacheverells, anciently lords of the manor. Smalley is a township of this parish. Stainsby House is the seat of Edward Sacheverell Sitwell, Esq.

OCKBROOK, 5 miles S.E. from Derby, contains 237 houses, and 1203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. Here is a considerable society of Moravians, originally formed in 1750, who are distinguished by the singularity of their mode of worship and manner of life. The brothers of this society are chiefly employed in the stocking-manufactory, and the sisters in needlework and embroidery.

PENTRICH, or Pentridge, 3 miles S. from Alfreton, contains 82 houses, and 508 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. An insurrection took place here in 1817, in consequence of which the Duke of Devonshire's agents destroyed many of the houses, when the population decreased one-third since the census in 1811. Risley is a township of this parish; it is very populous, containing 291 houses, and 1635 inhabitants. Here are fairs, Wednesday in Easter-week, and 23rd October for horses, horned cattle, and pedlary. Butterley Hall near here is the seat of J. Jessop, Esq.

QUARNDON, 3 miles N.W. from Derby, contains 83 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church here is a curacy, in the presentation of the mayor and aldermen of Derby.

SANDIACRE, on the river Erwash, which here divides the county from Nottinghamshire, 8 miles E. from Derby, contains 114 houses, and 587 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Sandiacre in the cathedral of Lichfield. Part of the township of Risley is in this parish.

SAWLEY, on the river Trent, 9½ miles S.E. from Derby, contains 185 houses, and 958 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. Here are cotton-mills, and a number of hands are employed in the stocking-manufactory. A fair is held 12th November for young colts. This parish is extensive, comprising the liberties of Hopwell, Draycott and Wiln, and the townships of Breason, Long Eaton, and part of Risley. Wood Hall, in Risley Park, was anciently the seat of the Lords Sheffield, ancestors of the Dukes of Buckinghamshire of that family. The estate was purchased of them by the Willoughbys, in 1587. Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Henry Willoughby of Risley, and wife of Anchitel, son of Henry Lord Grey of Groby, founded a free-school at Risley. Hopwell Hall is the seat of Thomas Pares, Esq.; it stands in an elevated situation, westward of Risley.

STANTON BY DALE, 8 miles E. from Derby, contains 83 houses, and 458 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. The township of Weston under Wood is in this parish.

WESTON UPON TRENT, 7 miles S. from Derby, contains 80 houses, and 397 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* The Trent and Mersey Canal furnishes ample employment to the inhabitants.

WILLINGTON, on the river Trent, 7 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 64 houses, and 411 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Master of the Hospital of Etwall.

WILN, or Great Wilne, on the river Derwent, 7 miles S.E. from Derby, contains 163 houses, and 993 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Shardlow. The church is a curacy. The Trent and Mersey Canal, which passes over the river Dove, on its entrance into this county near Egginton, finally communicates with the Trent near Wiln, ninety-three miles from the Mersey, where the river is also joined by the Derwent. About a mile eastward of the village is Cavendish Bridge, erected about 1750, by Sir M. Lambe, at the expense of the Duke of Devonshire, in the room of a ferry which crossed the Trent near this spot. It is of three arches, of free-stone, and unites this county with Leicestershire. Hence is a fine view of the hanging woods on Donnington Cliff verging on the river Trent. Shardlow Park is the seat of Leonard Fosbrooke, Esq.

4. Repton and Gresley Hundred

Is situated in the southern part of the county, and is bounded on the north by Morleston and Litchurch hundred, and a detached portion of Appletree hundred; on the south and east it is bounded by Leicestershire, a detached portion being also entirely surrounded by that county; and on the west it is bounded by the river Trent, and Staffordshire.

APPLEBY, partly in Leicestershire, is 6 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, and contains in this county 115 houses, and 596 inhabitants. The church stands in Leicestershire.

CAULK, or Calke, on the borders of Leicestershire, 4 miles N. from Ashby De La Zouch, and 10 miles S. from Derby, contains 10 houses, and 63 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir George Crewe, Bart. A convent of regular canons of the order of St. Augustin was founded here before the year 1161. It was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Giles, and received endowments from various benefactors, but chiefly from Ranulph Earl of Chester, Matilda his widow, and their son Hugh. The convent became afterwards a cell to the priory at Repton, and as parcel of the possessions of Repton was at the Dissolution granted by Edward VI. to John Earl of Warwick. Caulk Abbey, the seat of Sir George Crewe, Bart., is a large ancient quadrangular house, with a court in the centre. It is situated in a bottom, and being surrounded with rising ground on almost every side, the prospects are very confined. Sir Henry Harpur of Caulk, third son of Sir John Harpur of Swarkestone, was created baronet by King Charles I. 8th Sept. 1626. Sir Henry Harpur, the seventh baronet, assumed the name and arms of Crewe 11th April 1808, being the lineal descendant of Thomas Lord Crewe of Stene, in Northamptonshire.

CHELLASTON, 5 miles S. from Derby, contains 64 houses, and 338 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. It formerly belonged to Dale Abbey.

CHURCH GRESLEY, on the borders of Leicestershire, 5 miles W. from Ashby De La Zouch, and the same distance E. from Burton-on-Trent in Staffordshire, contains 60 houses, and 306 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of H. Meynell, Esq. The church contains a monument of the Alleyne family, several of whom have been interred here. The inscription consists of a genealogical account of the family from the time of Henry VIII., by which it appears to be descended from Sir John Alleyne, twice Lord Mayor of London in that king's reign, and a privy councillor. Near this is another monument to the memory of Sir Thomas Gresley, who died in 1699.

A priory of canons, of the order of St. Austin, was founded here by William, son of Nigel Gresley, in the reign of Henry I. It was dedicated to St. Mary and St. George, and at the Dissolution was endowed with a revenue of 39*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.*, when it was granted to Henry Cruche.

The hamlets of Castle Gresley, Swadlincote, Oakthorpe, and Donisthorpe, and the townships of Drakelow and Linton, are all in this parish. Castle Gresley derives its name from a baronial castle which formerly stood here, belonging to the Gresleys. Thomas de Gresley was summoned to Parliament from the first to the fourth year of Edward II. inclusive, and died without issue.

Drakelow Hall is the seat of Sir Roger De Tonei Gresley, Bart. It is situated on the banks of the Trent, two miles south from Burton, and has been nearly rebuilt by Potter of Lichfield. In the large window of the Hall is a whole-length portrait of King James I., with the royal arms; and a portrait of Sir George Gresley of Drakelow, created baronet 29th June 1611, with the arms of the family, beautifully executed in stained glass by Willement. In the library window are also portraits of Sir George Gresley, created a knight of the bath at the coronation of Anne Boleyn, and his wife Katharine, daughter of Edward Lord Dudley, K.G. in stained glass; and in the window of the lady's room the armorial bearings and initials of the present baronet and his lady, tastefully arranged by Willement.

The township of Winshill, and the chapelry of Chilcote in this county, are in the parish of Burton-on-Trent.

CROXALL, on the borders of Staffordshire, 8 miles S.W. from Burton-on-Trent, contains 29 houses, and 185 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Catton is a township of this parish. Catton Hall is the seat of Eusebius Horton, Esq.; and Croxall, of the Rev. S. Holworthy.

FOREMARK, on the banks of the Trent, 7 miles S. from Derby, contains 11 houses, and 62 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Saviour, is a curacy, in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. It was built and endowed by his ancestor in 1662. Foremark Hall, the seat of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. M.P., was built by his grandfather Sir Robert Burdett, who died in 1797. Anchor church, near this mansion, is reported to have been a hermitage; the situation is romantic and beautiful, the eminence in which the cavern is formed overhangs the river, which here winds its course through a reach of picturesque and fertile meadows. The township of Ingleby is in this parish.

Derby Hills, 9 miles S. from Derby, an extra-parochial district, contains 14 houses, and 76 inhabitants.

HARTSHORN, 11 miles S. from Derby, contains 172 houses, and 870 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*

LULLINGTON, on the borders of Leicestershire, 8 miles S.W. from Ashby De La Zouch, and 7 miles S. from Burton-on-Trent in Staffordshire, contains 57 houses, and 301 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Coton in the Elmes is a township of this parish.

MEASHAM, in a detached portion of this hundred, 3 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 271 houses, and 1404 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy. It has a market-house, although there is not a regular market. Measham Field is the seat of Edward Abney, Esq.

MELBURN, or Melbourn, on the borders of Leicestershire, 8 miles S. from Derby, and 6 miles N. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 412 houses, and 2027 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle, which was in the possession of Thomas Earl of Lancaster in the reign of Edward III. John Duke of Bourbon, who was taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, was confined in it for nineteen years, in the custody of Nicholas Montgomery the younger. In 1460, the castle was destroyed by order of Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI. Melbourn Hall is the seat of Viscount Melbourn. Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart., of Brocket Hall in Hertfordshire, married Charlotte, sister and heiress of George Lewis Coke, Esq., of Melbourn, whose son Peniston Lambe, created Lord Melbourn of Ireland 24th May, 1770, and viscount 12th December 1780, was advanced to the English peerage of Lord Melbourn, 18th July 1815. Melbourn is remarkable for a great variety of religious sects, who have each a place of worship. King's Newton is a hamlet of this parish.

NEWTON SOLNEY, on the borders of Staffordshire, 3 miles N.E. from Burton-on-Trent, and 9 miles S.W. from Derby, contains 56 houses, and 261 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

NORMANTON, 2 miles S. from Derby, contains 53 houses, and 294 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir Willoughby Wolston Dixie, Bart.

OSMASTON, 2 miles S.E. from Derby, contains 26 houses, and 159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. Osmaston Hall is the seat of Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart. It was erected in the year 1696. The grounds are well wooded, and command several interesting views of the surrounding country. Sir Robert Wilmot of Osmaston was created baronet 10th Sept. 1772.

PACKINGTON, partly situated in Leicestershire, 2 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 51 houses, and 256 inhabitants, in this county. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

RAVENSTONE, or Raunston, partly in Leicestershire, 4 miles S. from Ashby De la Zouch, contains 60 houses, and 189 inhabitants, in this county. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

REPTON, or Repington, 8 miles S.W. from Derby, and 4 miles N.E. from Burton-on-Trent, contains 336 houses, and 1802 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wyston, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir George Crewe, Bart. The edifice is remarkable for its spire, sixty-six feet high, which, as it rises above the woods and hills of the surrounding country, forms a beautiful object. The town is of great antiquity, and is situated on the declivity of a hill, consisting principally of one street, extending from north to south, above a mile in length, and has a brisk trout stream running by it, which flows into the Trent. Here is a free-school, which was largely endowed by Sir John Port in the reign of Queen Mary. Before the year 660 there was at Repton a noble monastery, which was destroyed by the Danes. About 1172, Maud, widow of Ranulph Earl of Chester, built a priory of Black Canons of the Order of St. Augustine, and dedicated it to the Honour of God, the Blessed Mary, and the Holy Trinity. At the Dissolution it was endowed with 167*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* per annum. In 1540 Mr. Thacker came into possession of the edifice, and, according to Fuller*, being alarmed with a report that Queen Mary would re-establish the abbeys, hired all the carpenters and masons of the neighbouring country, and in a single day took down the church, saying he would destroy the nest for fear the birds should settle therein again.

Bradby, or Bretby, is a hamlet of this parish. Here was formerly a castle, which was held by Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk in the reign of Richard II.; the site is now only to be discovered by the unevenness of the ground. Bradby Park is the seat of the Earl of Chesterfield. The mansion was rebuilt by the late earl about 1814.

ROSLISTON, 4 miles S. from Burton-on-Trent, contains 59 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

SMISBY, on the borders of Leicestershire, 2 miles N. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 62 houses, and 322 inhabitants; it is a curacy. In the church are several monuments of the Kendals, formerly lords of the manor. Part of their large old manor-house remains.

STANTON BY BRIDGE, 7 miles S. from Derby, contains 32 houses, and 190 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*

STAPENHILL, on the river Trent, 1 mile S. from Burton in Staffordshire, contains 117 houses, and 535 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Marquis of Anglesey; it formerly belonged to the abbey of Burton. The hamlet of Cauldwell and the township of Stanton and Newhall are in this parish. Cauldwell is the seat of Hans Winthrop Mortimer, Esq.

STRETTON EN LE FIELDS, in a detached portion of this hundred, 6 miles S.W. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 20 houses, and 116 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

SWARKESTONE, on the Trent, 6 miles S. from Derby, contains 48 houses, and 243 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 5*l.* Swarkestone was the original seat of the Harpurs in this county. Richard Harpur, Judge of the Common Pleas, resided here in the reign of Elizabeth.

TICKNALL, 9 miles S. from Derby, contains 274 houses, and 1274 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy.

WALTON ON TRENT, 4 miles S.W. from Burton, contains 78 houses, and 416 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

WILLESLEY, in a detached portion of this hundred, 2½ miles S.W. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 8 houses, and 62 inhabitants; it is a curacy. Willesley Hall is the seat of Sir Charles Abney Hastings, created a baronet 28th Feb. 1806. The family of Abney resided here as early as the reign of Henry VI.

5. Scarsdale Hundred,

On the eastern side of the county, is bounded on the north by Yorkshire; on the east by Nottinghamshire; on the south by Morlestone and Litchurch hundred; and on the west by the High Peake and Wirksworth hundreds.

ALFRETON, 15 miles N. from Derby, 11 miles S. from Chesterfield, and 139 miles from London, contains 811 houses, and 4689 inhabitants, including Alfreton Outscats. This town is supposed to have been built by, and to have derived its name from King Alfred. The spot is even shown where the house stood in which he lived. The manufactures consist of stockings and brown earthenware, and the neighbourhood abounds with collieries. It has a considerable market for corn, particularly for oats. The weekly markets are on Monday and Friday; and fairs July 31 for horses and horned cattle, and November 22 by statute. Here is a free-school at Halfield-gate. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*; it is an ancient edifice, with an embattled tower.

At Swanwick, a hamlet of this parish, Elizabeth Turner founded a school in 1740; and at Greenhill-lane, an urn, containing a large collection of Roman coins was discovered about 1780.

ASHOVER, 7 miles N.W. from Alfreton, contains 500 houses, and 2506 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* In it is a very ancient font, containing in the whole circumference twenty figures in the attitude of devotion; these are cast in lead, and are in small compartments. Here are also several monuments of the ancient family of Babington. The hamlets of Dethick, Lea and Holloway are in this parish. Dethick was long the seat of the Babingtons. Anthony, the principal actor in the conspiracy, formed in 1586, against the life of Queen Elizabeth, resided here. Lea Hall is the seat of P. Nightingale, Esq.

* Church History.

AULT HUCKNALL, or Hault Hucknall, 7 miles S.E. from Chesterfield, contains 113 houses, and 605 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. In the chancel is a flat stone, in memory of Thomas Hobbes of Malmsbury, who during many years served two Earls of Devonshire, father and son; he died 4th December, 1679, æt. 90. Here is also a monument of Anne first Countess of Devonshire, ob. 1598. This parish includes the hamlets of Rowthorn, Stainsby, Astwood, Arstaff, and Hardwick. Hardwick Hall, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire, stands in a fine park adorned by venerable oaks, and upon a very high ridge of ground, which affords a distant view into the western part of the county; its situation is exceedingly striking and noble. In the front of the house is a very spacious quadrangular court, surrounded by a high stone wall. At each extremity of the house is a lofty tower, and in the parapet are the initials E · S. It was built in 1570, by Elizabeth Countess of Shrewsbury, daughter of John Hardwick, Esq.; she had been married twice before she became the wife of the Earl of Shrewsbury, viz. to Robert Bailey, Esq. and Sir William Cavendish; and she did not raise this stately mansion till after the death of her first two husbands. In the hall is the history of patient Grizel in tapestry; and ascending the staircase the chapel is on the right hand, hung with tapestry, the subjects from Scripture history, Acts ix. 13, 26 & 28. In the dining-room are several family portraits, and over the chimney-piece the arms of the Countess of Shrewsbury, the initials E · S · 1597, and this inscription, THE · CONCLVSION · OF · ALL · THINGS · IS · TO · FEAR · GOD · AND · KEEP · HIS COMMANDMENTS· Hardwick Hall is said to have been furnished for the reception of Mary Queen of Scots, and on account of the intended visit of Queen Elizabeth; there is no doubt that Mary was some time confined here under the care of the Earl of Shrewsbury; and the house, by the singular good taste of its possessors, remains in its primitive state with the original furniture to this day. There are now very few such stately mansions which give so clear and complete an idea of the architecture, taste, and manners of the times in which they were built. The gallery at Hardwick extends the whole length of the east front, one hundred and twenty-five feet, with deep bay windows, forming recesses; it is adorned with a curious collection of portraits of many royal and distinguished characters. The roof of the mansion is covered with lead; and from this elevated situation there is a most extensive and delightful prospect into the adjacent country, more especially towards the west.

In the old hall at Hardwick, part of which is still remaining, Cardinal Wolsey lodged one night in his way from York to Leicester Abbey, where he died in 1536. William Cavendish, afterwards first Earl of Devonshire, was created Lord Cavendish of Hardwick 4th May 1605.

BARLBOROUGH, on the borders of Yorkshire, 8 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, contains 125 houses, and 675 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of C. H. Rodes, Esq. Barlborough Hall is the seat of Cornelius Heathcote Rodes, Esq. It was built in the year 1583 by Francis Rodes, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, and has four fronts, the principal of which, facing the south, is most enriched. In the central compartment are sculptured the arms of Queen Elizabeth, the arms of the Earl of Shrewsbury, to whom the founder was seneschal, and the arms of the founder. The porch, of the Doric order, opens upon the hall, retaining many features of the original design; and the staircase window contains the figures of the founder and his wife, with armorial accompaniments in brilliant stained glass by Willement. The arrangement of the interior of the mansion has been somewhat changed to correspond with modern ideas of comfort and convenience, of which it affords a large share. In the great chamber is a magnificent stone chimney-piece highly enriched with figures, and a variety of ornaments in bas-relief. The offices of the mansion, and the stables which surround a court upon the western side, have been rebuilt in a corresponding style with the house.

Sir Francis Rodes of Barlborough, grandson of the Judge, was created a baronet 14th August 1641, but the title became extinct about 1730.

BEAUCHIEF ABBEY, 8 miles N. from Chesterfield, and 5 miles S. from Sheffield, is extra-parochial, and contains 15 houses, and 97 inhabitants. An abbey of Premonstratensians or White Canons was founded in 1183 by Robert Fitz Ranulph, Lord of Alfreton, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket; at the Dissolution it was valued at 157*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and was granted 28 Hen. VIII. to Sir Nicholas Strelley, who died about 1560. Gertrude the descendant, and at length heiress of Sir Nicholas Strelley, married in 1648 Edward Pegge, Esq., in whose family the abbey still remains. The chapel of the convent was restored and fitted up by Edward Pegge, Esq. the first proprietor of that name, and is now used as a church; it is a donative. Beauchief, the seat of Sir Christopher Pegge, was built about 1671; it is situated upon a gentle descent on the brow, at the top of the hanging wood, the Beau Chef, whence the abbey received its name.

BEIGHTON, on the Rother, 10 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, and 7 miles S.W. from Sheffield, in Yorkshire, contains 167 houses, and 856 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* The hamlets of Hackenthorp, Southwell and Berley are in this parish.

BLACKWELL, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 3 miles N.E. from Alfreton, contains 87 houses, and 457 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire.

BOLSOVER, 6 miles E. from Chesterfield, contains 228 houses, and 1245 inhabitants. This town is situated on the side of a very steep hill, which commands an extensive prospect, and is surrounded by an entrenchment that extends about half a mile, and at the end of the town near the church is double. It is governed by a constable and two headboroughs, and a copyhold court is held under the Duke of Portland every three weeks. Here is a market on Friday, which is well supplied with all kinds of provisions; and a fair on Easter Monday. The only manufacture is one for tobacco-pipes, which are considered the best in England. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* It contains a monument to the memory of Sir Charles Cavendish, the father of the first Duke of Newcastle, who died 4th April 1617. Bolsover Castle was part of the inheritance of the Peverils. William Ferrers Earl of Derby was governor in the reign of Henry III., and in 1514 it was granted by the Crown to the Earl of Norfolk, after whose attainder it was granted to George Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury. Sir Charles Cavendish purchased the estate in the reign of James I., but the castle was then in ruins. The present building was founded in 1613, and completed about two years afterwards. The castle stands upon the verge of a steep hill, and on a point which in a small degree projects into the valley. The entrance is by a flight of steps on the east side. The whole edifice is of brown stone, square and lofty, embattled and having towers at the angles, one of which in size and height considerably exceeds the rest. King Charles I. visited the Earl of Newcastle here in 1633, when he went into Scotland to be crowned; and the King and Queen afterwards visited the Earl, when the entertainment is said to have cost 14,000*l.* After the Restoration the Earl of Newcastle built a gallery and other rooms at the east end of the castle, with large stables and a riding-house. In the front was a fine terrace commanding a magnificent prospect. This range of buildings is now mostly in ruins.

Bolsover Castle is the seat of the Duke of Portland, to whom it descended through the families of Hollis and Harley. Glapwell is a hamlet of this parish. Glapwell Hall is the seat of B. Hallows, Esq.

BRAMPTON, 3 miles W. from Chesterfield, contains 393 houses, and 2317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean of Lincoln. It contains several ancient monuments of the family of Clarke of Somersal, and one for the family of Milward of Eaton Dove Dale. The parish is very extensive and populous, owing to the iron-works that lie between the town and Chesterfield. Cutthorpe is a hamlet of the parish.

CHESTERFIELD, 24 miles N. from Derby, and 150 miles N.W. from London, contains 1048 houses, and 5077 inhabitants. It is situated on the western side of the river Rother, is clean and well built, and contains many good modern houses, a free grammar-school, founded by Queen Elizabeth, considered the largest in the north of England; a town-hall, built by Carr in 1790, in which the petty sessions for the hundred are held, a gaol for debtors, five hospitals, six alms-houses for widows, a workhouse, and house of correction. The government of Chesterfield is, by the last charter granted by King Charles II., vested in a mayor, six aldermen, a town-clerk, and a common-council of twenty-four of the principal inhabitants. The arms of the town are a lozenge on a fesse. The manufactures consist of carpets, shoes, stockings, and woollen stuffs; and here also are silk- and cotton-mills. In the neighbourhood are iron foundries, and potteries for coarse earthenware; with a navigable communication to all parts of England. The market is on Saturday, and the fairs are on the 27th January, 28th February, first Saturday in April, 4th May, 4th July, 25th September, and the last Saturday in November. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 0*s.* 2½*d.* It is very ancient, and is said to have been dedicated in the year 1232. The edifice is cruciform in plan; the spire rises to the height of two hundred and thirty feet, and is of such curious construction that it appears to lean in whatever direction it is approached. In the chancel is the burial place of the ancient family of Foljambe of Walton, with several monuments. This town became a borough in the reign of King John, and is particularly distinguished in our national annals as the scene of a severe battle, which was fought in the reign of Henry III. between the forces of Henry, the King's nephew, and those of Robert de Ferrers last Earl of Derby, in which the former were victorious. Here likewise a severe conflict took place in the time of the civil war, when the Parliamentarian troops were defeated by the Earl of Newcastle. Lord Stanhope of Shelford was created Earl of Chesterfield 4th Aug. 1628. The manor of Chesterfield by inheritance now belongs to the Duke of Portland.

The townships of Birmington, Hasland, Temple Normanton, Tapton and Walton, and the hamlets of Calow, Newbold, Dunstan and Pilsley, are in this parish. At Walton and Newbold are large iron foundries. The Chesterfield canal begins at this town, and proceeds by Staveley town and coal works to a tunnel at Hartshill in Yorkshire. It communicates with the Trent near Stockwith in Lincolnshire.

CLOWN, 8 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, contains 132 houses, and 616 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DRONFIELD, 6 miles N. from Chesterfield, contains 301 houses, and 1522 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated in a valley, formed by a branch of the Rother, and remarkable for its salubrity. Here is a market on Thursday, and a fair 25th April for cattle and cheese. A free grammar-school was founded in 1567, by H. Fenshaw, Remembrancer in the Exchequer, and a native of Dronfield. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; it formerly belonged to Beauchief Abbey. Coal Aston, Holmesfield and Unstone are townships, and Dore is a hamlet of this parish.

ECKINGTON, on a branch of the Rother, 7 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, contains 199 houses, and 1013 inhabitants: here are potteries, and a manufacture of sickles. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 40*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* It contains a monument of the Sitwell family; the date is 1658. The townships of Mosborough, Renishaw and Troway are in this parish. Renishaw is the seat of Sir George Sitwell, Bart. Sir Sitwell Sitwell of Renishaw, was created baronet 24th Sept. 1808.

ELMTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 8 miles E. from Chesterfield, contains 65 houses, and 352 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* Jedediah Buxton, an extraordinary calculator, was born here about 1705.

HEATH, 5½ miles S.E. from Chesterfield, contains 77 houses, and 411 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire.

KILLAMARSH, on the borders of Yorkshire, 9 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, contains 137 houses, and 779 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy. The Chesterfield canal passes the town in its course to the coal-works at Hartshill in Yorkshire.

LANGWITH, or Over Langwith, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 10 miles E. from Chesterfield, and 6 miles N. from Mansfield, contains 34 houses, and 153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. Nether Langwith is a hamlet of this parish.

MORTON, 4 miles N. from Alfreton, contains 22 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* Brackenfield is a township of this parish. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

SOUTH NORMANTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 2½ miles E. from Alfreton, contains 201 houses, and 1056 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* Here is a stocking-manufactory, and a colliery in the neighbourhood.

NORTON, on the borders of Yorkshire, the most northern part of the county, whence its name, 9 miles N. from Chesterfield, and 4 miles S. from Sheffield, contains 328 houses, and 1697 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Jeffery Blythe, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, who died in 1534, built a tomb for his parents; there are also monuments of the family of Eyre, of Bradway, &c. It appears from the Court Rolls that the inhabitants of this parish were obliged to keep in repair two butts to shoot at, and to provide their sons and servants with bows and arrows, as late as 30th Eliz. The manufacture of scythes is now carried on to a great extent. The parish contains the hamlets of Bradway, Greenhill, Hemsworth, Little Norton, Norton Leys, Over and Nether Woodseats. Little Norton Hall is the seat of Samuel Shore, Esq., and the Oaks, of W. C. Bagshaw.

PINXTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 4 miles E. from Alfreton, contains 120 houses, and 681 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*

PLEASELEY, on the river Meden, a branch of the Idle, which here divides the county from Nottinghamshire, 10 miles S.E. from Chesterfield, and 4 miles N.W. from Mansfield, contains 96 houses, and 529 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* A dell near Pleaseley Forge, about half a mile eastward of the village, is said to be equal to Dove Dale or Matlock.

SCARCLIFF, 8 miles S.E. from Chesterfield, contains 103 houses, and 494 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It contains a curious ancient monument of a lady, supposed to be one of the family of Freschevile. The hamlet of Palterton, is in this parish.

SHIRLAND, 2 miles N. from Alfreton, contains 124 houses, and 614 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* Higham is a hamlet of this parish.

STAVELEY, on the Rother, 4 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, contains 409 houses, and 2051 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. It contains several monuments of the Freschevile, and in the east window are the arms and quarterings of the family in 1676.

Staveley Hall, the seat of the Rev. F. Foxlow, was built by Sir Peter Freschevile, who died, according to his monument, in 1634: his son, John Freschevile, garrisoned his house for the King, but was obliged to surrender, upon articles of agreement, soon after Bolsover Castle. John Freschevile was also Governor of York during the civil war, and by King Charles II. was created Lord Freschevile, of Staveley, 6th March, 1664. He dying in 1682, the manor passed into the Cavendish family, who resolved to pull down the Hall; but its total dilapidation was prevented, and the present mansion, a wing of a large quadrangular building, was suffered to remain at the instance of the Rev. James Gisborne, then rector of Staveley. The parish contains the hamlets of Nether Thorpe and Wood Thorpe, with Nether, Over, and West Handley, three other small hamlets.

SUTTON CUM DUCKMANTON, or Sutton-in-the-Dale, 4 miles S.E. from Chesterfield, contains 119 houses, and 685 inhabitants, including the united parish of Duckmanton. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 0½*d.* Sutton Hall, formerly the seat of the Marquess of Ormond, was purchased by Richard Arkwright, Esq., in the year 1824.

TIBSHELF, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 4 miles N.E. from Alfreton, contains 131 houses, and 711 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*

WHITTINGTON, 2 miles N. from Chesterfield, contains 128 houses, and 680 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Dr. Samuel Pegge, who died in 1796, æt. 91, was buried here. A public-house, the sign of the Cock and Pynot, is here celebrated as the Revolution-house, where it is said that in 1688 a meeting took place privately between the Earl of Devonshire, the Earl of Danby, Lord De La Mere, and the Honourable John Darcy, son of the Earl of Holderness.

WHITWELL, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 11 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, and 5 miles W. from Worksop, contains 172 houses, and 873 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

WINGERWORTH, 2½ miles S. from Chesterfield, contains 92 houses, and 459 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean of Lincoln. Wingerworth Hall is the seat of Sir Henry Hunloke, Bart. Nicholas Hunloke, Esq., who purchased this estate from Richard Curzon, died in 1552, and was buried in the church. Sir Henry Hunloke, of Wingerworth, was created baronet by Charles I. 29th Feb. 1642. The old house, being a large stone building, was garrisoned during the civil war. The present mansion, seated on high ground, was built in 1730.

NORTH WINFIELD, 4 miles S. from Chesterfield, contains 55 houses, and 290 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* The townships of Claylane, Stretton, Tupton, and Wood Thorpe, are all in this parish.

SOUTH WINFIELD, on the Amber, a branch of the Derwent, 2½ miles W. from Alfreton, contains 119 houses, and 1051 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. South Winfield Manor House, one of the most stately residences in this part of the kingdom, was built by Ralph Lord Cromwell, in the reign of Henry VI., Treasurer of England; its situation is bold and majestic, with the advantage of beautiful prospects in almost every direction. The house contained two courts with a gate-house on the eastern front, on which are sculptured the bags or purses, emblems of the office of the founder. Mary Queen of Scots was confined here in 1569.

6. Wirksworth Hundred

Is bounded on the north by High Peake hundred; on the east by Scarsdale hundred; on the south by Appletree hundred; and on the west by the river Dove and Staffordshire.

ASHBORNE, 13½ miles N.W. from Derby, and 139 miles from London, beautifully situated in a rich valley, watered by a branch of the Dove, contains 457 houses, and 2188 inhabitants. The river Henmore divides the town into two parts, the principal street being disposed on the sides of the road from Wirksworth to Leek. The manufacture of cotton has been introduced in the neighbourhood, and a considerable trade is carried on by means of the Trent in butter and cheese; for which last the town has been long celebrated. The market is on Saturday, and the fairs on 13th February, 3d April, 21st May, 5th July, 16th August, 20th October, and the 29th November. The manor of Ashborne was for many generations the seat of the family of Cokayne, and was afterwards in the possession of the family of Boothby. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. It was built in the year 1241, by Hugh de Pateshull, Lord Bishop of Coventry; and, together with the chapels, lands, tithes and other appurtenances which belonged to it in the time of Edward the Confessor, was given by William Rufus to Lincoln Cathedral. In this church are several monuments in memory of the family of Boothby; one particularly beautiful is that of Penelope, daughter of Sir Brooke Boothby, sculptured by T. Banks, R. A. There are also ancient memorials of the ancient family of Cokayne. Sir William Boothby of Ashborne was created baronet July 13, 1660.

The township of Eaton and Alsop-le-Dale, and the liberties of Newton Grange, Offcoat and Underwood, are in this parish, with the townships of Hulland, Hulland Ward Intacks, the hamlets of Hulland Ward, Sturston, and Yeldesley in Appletree hundred, and the townships of Clifton and Compton in Morleston and Litchurch hundred.

BENTLEY, or Fenny Bentley, 2 miles N. from Ashborne, contains 49 houses, and 242 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. It contains monuments of the family of Beresford.

BONSALL, or Bonteshall, 3 miles N. from Wirksworth, contains 302 houses, and 1396 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln.

BRADBORNE, situated on an eminence, 5 miles N.E. from Ashborne, and 6 miles W. from Wirksworth, contains 39 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The townships of Aldwark, Ballidon and Brassington, and the hamlet of Lea Hall, are in this parish.

CARSINGTON, 2 miles W. from Wirksworth, contains 53 houses, and 270 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln.

HARTINGTON, on the borders of Staffordshire, 10 miles N. from Ashborne, and the same distance S.W. from Bakewell, contains 74 houses, and 518 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The parish extends along the western boundary of the county about twelve miles, and comprehends all the tract of land between Buxton and Thorpe. It is divided into the Hartington Town quarter, the Middle quarter, including the chapelry of Earl Sterndale, the Nether quarter and the Upper quarter. Upon Hartington Common, extending ten miles in the direction of north and south, are many Lows, generally situated on the highest points of ground, on the west side of the road from Ashborne to Buxton.

HOGNASTON, 5 miles S.W. from Wirksworth, contains 62 houses, and 292 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln.

KIRK IRETON, 3 miles S.W. from Wirksworth, contains 130 houses, and 661 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. Ireton Wood is a township of this parish.

KNIVETON, 3 miles N.E. from Ashborne, contains 78 houses, and 394 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

MAPPLETON, 1 mile N. from Ashborne, contains 37 houses, and 201 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

MATLOCK, 11 miles N.E. from Ashborne, and 17 miles N. from Derby, contains 605 houses, and 2920 inhabitants. It is delightfully situated on the eastern bank of the river Derwent. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln; it stands on the verge of a romantic rock. Here are fairs 25th Feb., 9th May, 16th July, and 24th Oct. for cattle and horses. Matlock Bath is about one mile and a half south-west from the village, on the western side of the Derwent. The original bath was built in 1698, to which were subsequently added two commodious buildings, with stables, &c.: a second spring having been discovered, a new bath was formed about a quarter of a mile from the first; a third bath at a still later period was erected. These buildings are of stone, and are respectively named the Old Bath, the New Bath, and the Hotel. The romantic and picturesque scenery of Matlock Dale is viewed to most advantage when approached from the bridge, in the Chesterfield road, near its northern extremity. Its beauties then succeed each other in a gradation which renders their grandeur and effect more impressive. The eminences particularly deserving attention are the High Tor, three hundred and fifty feet above the level of the neighbouring country, Masson Hill, and the romantic cliff forming the eastern boundary of Matlock dale.

PARWICK, 6 miles N. from Ashborne, contains 97 houses, and 551 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. At Lombards Green, half a mile northward, is a Roman encampment.

THORPE, 3 miles N.E. from Ashborne, contains 28 houses, and 203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The entrance to Dove Dale is near Thorp Cloud, a hill conspicuous for many miles round by its singular form, a perfect cone, being detached from the chain of surrounding hills by the river Dove, which in its course forms an angle at the base of the hill. About a mile from this point, up the Dale, is a fine natural arch at least forty feet high, in a line of rock extending along the edge of a precipice. After passing through this arch are two remarkable caverns, named Reynard's Hall and Kitchen, in a situation which affords a very beautiful but confined view of Dove Dale; the rocks on the opposite side adorned with hanging woods. In the midst of this wooded scenery rises a grand solitary pointed rock, called Dove Dale Church. The wildness of this celebrated valley produces a striking effect from its contrast to the extreme fertility and richness of the environs of the town of Ashborne. The Dove in its quality and appearance has been compared to the rivers of Wales, which derive their source from a mountainous origin; in the earlier part of its course it forms a beautifully romantic glen. It springs from the base of Axe Edge near the town of Buxton, and proceeding southerly, divides the county from Staffordshire. The dell winds between almost perpendicular hills fringed with coppice-wood, and abounding with bold projecting rocks of the most irregular and extraordinary appearance, which are in some places detached from the sides of the valley, and in others hang over the bed of the river, threatening destruction to those who venture along the steep and craggy paths on its bank.

TISSINGTON, 4½ miles N. from Ashborne, contains 74 houses, and 496 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, and was formerly appropriated to the priory of Tutbury. In it are some fine old monuments of the Fitz Herberts. At the foot of the eminence on which the church stands, is the Hall Well, under a large alcove of stone, remarkable for a custom, which has long continued. Every Holy Thursday or Ascension Day, the well is decorated with boughs of trees, garlands of flowers, &c. placed in various fanciful devices.

Tissington Hall is the seat of Sir Henry Fitz Herbert, Bart. The entrance gate to this ancient mansion is about four miles from the town of Ashborne, on the road thence to Buxton, and opens to a remarkably fine avenue, more than half a mile in length, but which is not continued quite up to the house. On the left of this avenue is a clump of trees, under which it is said Congreve wrote one of his comedies. The mansion was most probably erected in the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth; a few alterations in the windows are evident, but it otherwise preserves its original character; the whole is of stone. Sir William Fitz Herbert, of Tissington, was created baronet, December 10, 1783.

WIRKSWORTH, 13 miles N.W. from Derby, and 140 from London, contains 774 houses, and 3787 inhabitants. The town is situated in a low valley, nearly surrounded by hills at the southern extremity of the mining district, and consists of four streets formed by the roads from Mansfield to Ashborne, and from Derby to Bakewell. The sessions for the hundred are held here, and in the Moot Hall, erected in 1773, all causes respecting the lead mines within the hundred are tried. Here is also deposited the ancient brass dish, the standard for measuring the ore. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs Shrove Tuesday, May 12, September 4, and October 4 & 5. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 42*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The principal part of the county where the lead ore is found in considerable quantities, is known by the name of the King's Field, which in this hundred is divided into eight liberties, to each of which belong a steward and bar master. The townships of Cromford, Hopton and Ible, and the hamlets of Callow and Middleton, are in this parish. Cromford is distinguished by extensive cotton-works.

Willersley Castle, the seat of Richard Arkwright, Esq., stands on the south side of a commanding eminence, which runs from west to east, and terminates the extensive range of rocks forming the eastern boundary of the Derwent in its course through Matlock Dale. Round the foot of the hill the river flows in a grand sweep for some distance to the east, but afterwards resumes its former direction to the south, and pursues its way through a more open country. Immediately opposite the front of the house, rises a prodigious perpendicular rock, the western barrier of the dale, through which a passage has been cut to admit the road from the south. From this spot the view is highly impressive. The mansion consists of a body, which is embattled; and the walls are of white free-stone. The spot on which it stands was originally occupied by a large rock, in the removal of which about 3000*l.* were expended by the late Thomas Hallet Hodges, Esq., in the year 1782. The architect was W. Thomas of London. This edifice was covered in 1788; but before it was inhabited it was set on fire by a stove that was over-heated, and all that was combustible in it was consumed; this accident occurred on the 8th of August, in the year 1791. Here are several excellent family portraits by Wright, of Derby, particularly a whole-length of Sir Richard Arkwright; some smaller pieces by the same artist, as well as the view of Ullswater Lake, one of his best performances. Sir Richard Arkwright was born in the year 1732, at Preston, in Lancashire, and early directed his thoughts to the improvement of the mode of spinning, which had probably been conducted for ages by the same process. He received the honour of knighthood in 1786, and died on the 3rd of August, 1792. The grounds of Willersley possess great variety and beauty. Between the house and the Derwent is a verdant lawn, which slopes somewhat precipitously from the house, but afterwards inclines more gently to the river. The east end of the lawn extends to Cromford Bridge, about a quarter of a mile distant, near the entrance to the grounds. The summit of Cromford Rock, which has been noticed as rising directly in front of Willersley, is beautifully fringed with trees and underwood; and though towering to a considerable height, it does not terminate the prospect from the house, which being elevated in situation almost as high as the top of the rock, commands a view of the hill that rises beyond it to a great height above the village of Cromford. The hill behind the mansion rises to a considerable height, and is covered with wood to its summit, as is also that portion of it which extends eastward. In the midst of the wood are several romantic rocks, round which, and on the acclivity of the hill, the principal walk winds in a circuit of nearly a mile. The walk leading from the house on the west gradually turns to the north, taking a direction parallel to the course of the river, and passes under some perpendicular rocks, though yet elevated to a great height above the stream. Advancing up the walk, towards the point called Wild Cat Tor, the eye is delighted by one of the finest scenes that nature ever produced. It consists of the long rampart of rocks opposite Matlock; the wood that clothes the declivity from their bases to the river; and the tall trees on the opposite side, that stretch their branches down to the water, which appears dark, gloomy, and almost motionless, till it reaches a weir, down which it rushes in an impetuous torrent, almost immediately under the feet. The Baths, the Heights of Abraham, the body of Masson Hill, and the summit of the High Tor, are also seen from this part of the grounds; through which various other walks extend in different directions, and lead to a diversity of scenery that can hardly be paralleled within a similar extent in any part of the country.

The Cromford canal forms a junction with the Erwash canal at Langley Bridge.

LEICESTERSHIRE.—Midland Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire; on the east by Lincolnshire and Rutlandshire; on the south by Northamptonshire and Warwickshire; and on the west by Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire. Its limits are in some places marked by nature; on the north the rivers Trent and Soar form part of its boundary. The old Roman road called Watling-street, and the river Anker are its limits on the Warwickshire side, and the rivers Avon and Welland separate the county from Northamptonshire. Its greatest length is about forty-five miles, and its breadth thirty-five, being about one hundred and fifty miles in circumference. The inhabitants were distinguished by the Romans as Coritani, the British name being Guritani, and it formed part of the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis. The Roman roads which pass through this county are the Watling-street, the Foss, and the Via Devana, a road which led across the island from Colchester to Chester. The known and fixed Roman stations are Ratæ, Leicester; Benonæ, High Cross near Hinckley; Vernometum, on the borders of the county, near Willoughby in Nottinghamshire; and Manduessedum, Manceter, also on the borders of the county, near Atherstone in Warwickshire. These stations are mentioned in the first, fourteenth, and eighteenth Itineraries of Richard of Cirencester, and in the second, sixth, and eighth of Antoninus. Part of a large Roman miliary, with an inscription, was found in 1791, near Thurmaston, about three miles from Leicester, on the Foss road; this singularly curious column has been carefully removed to the Belgrave Gate, Leicester. The Jewry wall, or Temple of Janus, at Leicester, is another very remarkable Roman remain in this county. During the Saxon Heptarchy Leicestershire formed part of the kingdom of Mercia; and according to the fabulous Geoffrey of Monmouth, Leir, a British monarch, the King Lear of Shakspeare was the founder of Leicester, 844 years before Christ, and was buried there. The castles of the earlier lords of this county were at Leicester, Ashby, Belvoir, Grooby, Hinckley, Mountsorrel, Seagrave, Saubey and Whitwick; and there were formerly monasteries at Grace Dieu, Launde, Charley, Ulvescroft, Belvoir, Croxton, Garendon, Bredon, Ouston, Hinckley, Bradley, Kirkby Bellers, and Leicester. This county contains one county town, Leicester, eleven market-towns, 192 parishes, 34,775 houses and 174,571 inhabitants. It returns four members to Parliament,—two for Leicester; and two for the county: the present members for the county are Lord Robert Manners, brother of the Duke of Rutland, and George Anthony Legh Keck, Esq. of Stoughton Grange. Leicestershire is in the province of Canterbury, and in the diocese of Lincoln. The soil of this county is various, and affords a great extent of rich grazing land, and is peculiarly fitted for the culture of beans and wheat, for which it is proverbially noted. The proportion of pasture and meadow land through the whole county much exceeds that of arable; there are few open fields now left, and the quantity of waste ground is proportionably very small; the surface is in most parts varied and uneven. Towards the north-west the Bardon hills rise to a considerable height, and in their neighbourhood is Charnwood or Charley Forest, a rough and open tract: further to the north-west are valuable coal-mines, which supply the country round to a great distance. The north-eastern part of the county feeds great numbers of sheep, a principal article of the wealth of its inhabitants. The Leicestershire sheep are of a very large size, without horns, and covered with thick long flakes of soft wool, particularly suited to the worsted manufactory. The eastern and south-eastern is a rich grazing tract, which breeds numbers of cattle of large size to supply the London and other great markets. The county indeed has long been famous for its large black horses and horned cattle, as well as its sheep. The new Leicester breed of sheep, created by Mr. Bakewell at Dishley near Loughborough, is now dispersed through most parts of the kingdom. A great quantity of cheese is made on the western side of the county, about Leicester Forest, and in some other parts: the rich kind, called Stilton, is made at the villages round Melton Mowbray. Leicestershire is an agricultural county, and manufactures have comparatively made but little progress in it, excepting one connected with its great product of wool, the stocking trade; the chief seat of which is the county town; where, and at Loughborough, the manufacture of lace by machinery has also of late years been carried on to a considerable extent. The principal rivers of Leicestershire are the Soar and the Wreke: the first rises on the south-western border of the county and flows to Leicester, after which it receives the Wreke from the north-east, and then turns to Mountsorrel and Loughborough, watering in its course meadows of uncommon beauty and fertility, and falls into the Trent near Cavendish-bridge, on the borders of Derbyshire. The Soar has been made navigable by art from Leicester to Loughborough, and thence to its junction with the Trent; and the Wreke has been also made navigable to Melton Mowbray. The other rivers of less note in the county are the Anker, Avon, Blackbrook, Deane, Eye, Scalford, Sence, Snite, Swift, and Welland. The last rises in a range of hills between Lutterworth and Market Harborough, and divides this county from Northamptonshire, where it traverses a fine plain between Market Harborough and Rockingham, and after meeting the Glen from Bourne, the mouths of those two rivers form Fossdyke Wash. The inland navigation of the county, besides the rivers already mentioned, are the canals of Ashby De La Zouch, the Grand Union, the Leicester and Melton Mowbray, the Leicestershire Union, Loughborough, and Oakham. The principal eminences are Bardon Hill, the highest in the county, Markfield Knoll, Beacon Hill, Old John in Bradgate Park, Belvoir Castle, Bredon Church, Billesdon Coplow, Carlton Spinney, Mountsorrel Hill, Barrow Hill, and Croft Hill. The limestone obtained from Barrow forms an excellent cement in water, and was used in the building of Ramsgate Pier. Belvoir Castle is the seat of the Duke of Rutland K.G., the Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Framland Hundred

Is bounded on the north-west by Nottinghamshire; on the north-east by Lincolnshire; on the south-east by Rutlandshire; and on the south-west by East Goscote hundred. A small detached portion of the last is situated in the very centre of this hundred.

AB KETTLEBY, 3 miles N.W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 41 houses, and 187 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* The township of Holwell is in this parish.

BARKSTONE, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 11 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 60 houses, and 341 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

BELVOIR, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 11 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, and 7 miles W. from Grantham, contains 2 houses, and 88 inhabitants, chiefly servants of the Duke of Rutland, occupying the detached offices of Belvoir Castle, excepting only an innkeeper and his family. Belvoir is partly in the soke of Grantham in Lincolnshire, and is extra-parochial; a priory, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded here in the reign of William the Conqueror by Robert de Todeni, and was annexed by him to the abbey of St. Albans in Hertfordshire. At the Dissolution it was valued at 129*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per annum; and was granted by Henry VIII. to Thomas Earl of Rutland. Belvoir Castle, the seat of the Duke of Rutland, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the county, is situated on the summit of a lofty hill overlooking a beautiful valley, whence originated its name. The castle was founded by Robert de Todeni, a noble Norman, who had a grant of the lordship of Belvoir from William the Conqueror. In the reign of Henry III. it devolved to Robert de Roos, and from the Lords Roos this ancient seat came to Sir Robert Manners of Etall in Northumberland, by marriage with Eleanor sister and heiress of Edmund Lord Roos, in the reign of Henry VIII., and Belvoir Castle has remained in the possession of the noble family of Manners ever since that time. Thomas Manners Lord Roos was created Earl of Rutland in 1520, and to him is attributed the restoration of the castle, which had been attacked and partly demolished by William Lord Hastings during the civil war betwen the houses of York and Lancaster. Henry the second Earl of Rutland made great additions to the castle, and it became a noble and princely residence; but during the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the castle was occasionally garrisoned by the King's and Parliament's army, and materially suffered from both. After the Restoration the castle was again repaired, and restored in 1668; the first Duke of Rutland resided almost entirely here, where he kept up the old English hospitality, and for many years before his death never went to London. Very great alterations were made, and an entirely new arrangement was projected in the interior of this noble mansion, by the present Duke of Rutland, chiefly under the direction of the late James Wyatt. On January 2, 1814, His Majesty George IV., then Prince Regent, visited the castle. His Royal Highness's entry was announced by a royal salute from cannon on the battlements, and at the same time the royal standard was displayed on the Staunton Tower. The Duke of Rutland received the Prince Regent at the gate of the castle, and soon after his arrival, the key of the Staunton Tower, the strong hold of the castle, was presented to the illustrious guest on a velvet cushion in the great chamber, by the Rev. Dr. Staunton, according to custom when any of the Royal Family have honoured Belvoir Castle with their presence. The Staunton Tower is an outwork defence, and the family of that name have long held the manor of Staunton by tenure of castle guard, by which they were required to appear with guards for the defence of this strong part, when called upon by the lord of the castle. During the visit of His Royal Highness at Belvoir, the Marquess of Granby, His Grace's eldest son, since deceased, was baptized by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the great gallery; and previously to leaving the castle, His Royal Highness named one of the towers the Regent Tower, in remembrance of his visit, and was pleased to signify his pleasure that his bust should be placed in it. On 26th October, 1816, before the alterations were completed, an accidental fire nearly destroyed this splendid seat; the grand staircase and picture-gallery were entirely consumed, including many very fine family portraits, and the celebrated Nativity by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The Regent's gallery escaped: this room is one hundred and twenty-seven feet long, and is fitted with the choicest productions of art. A massive golden salver entirely composed of tributary tokens of royal and public respect, for services performed by the noble family of Manners, and bearing an inscription expressive of the several causes and dates of these honourable donations, was preserved from the fire, but a valuable service of communion plate was lost. The alterations and reparations have been recently completed under the direction of Matthew Wyatt; but it is to the taste of the late Duchess of Rutland that the castle is indebted for its present appearance. Her Grace, it is said, selected all the plans for its erection, and her active exertions were not confined to the castle alone; the pleasure-grounds, the cottages, the roads in its vicinity, and even the general aspect of the country, were improved through her agency. What many individuals would have required a century to execute, her perseverance in a few years achieved. Immediately previous to her death in 1825, Her Grace was engaged in the completion of the grand drawing-room, which it was intended should have been first opened on the occasion of the Duke's approaching birth-day. The mausoleum at Blackberry Hill, where Her Grace's remains are deposited, was designed by the late Duchess. At the east end is a monument to her memory, erected by Matthew Wyatt.

BOTTESFORD, on the borders of Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire, 14 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, and 7 miles N.W. from Grantham, is situated on the river Devon, and contains 224 houses, and 1070 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Normanton, a mile northward. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 51*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland: it contains several monuments of the noble family of Manners, and others removed at the Dissolution from Belvoir priory.

BRANSTON, or Braunston, 8 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 48 houses, and 282 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlake, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

NETHER BROUGHTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 6 miles N.W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 80 houses, and 435 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*

BUCKMINSTER, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 9 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, and 10 miles S. from Grantham, contains 61 houses, and 327 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. Sir William Manners of Buckminster was created baronet 5th January 1793, and in 1821 succeeded to the title of Lord Huntingtower as presumptive heir of the Earldom of Dysart. Buckminster Park is the principal seat of Lord Huntingtower. Sewstern is a chapelry of this parish.

BURTON LAZARS, 2 miles S.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 45 houses, and 249 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy. Roger de Mowbray, in the reign of Stephen, founded here a hospital, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Lazarus, said to be the chief of all the lazar-houses in England, but dependent upon the hospital of St. Lazarus without the walls of Jerusalem: at its dissolution the revenue was 265*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and the house itself was granted to John Dudley Lord Lisle, in 1544.

CLAXTON, or Long Clawson, 5½ miles N.W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 136 houses, and 678 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Remigius, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Here is an endowed school.

COLD OVERTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 7 miles S.E. from Melton Mowbray, and 5 miles W. from Oakham, contains 22 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* Cold Overton Hall was the seat of John Frewen Turner, Esq., who died in 1829.

COSTON, 6 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, on a branch of the river Eye, contains 28 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Coston Hall is the seat of Captain Burton.

CROXTON KEYRIAL, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 9 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 98 houses, and 518 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. An abbey of Premonstratensian canons was founded here in 1162 by William Porcarius de Linus, in honour of St. John the Evangelist: at the Suppression it was valued at 458*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, and was granted in 1538 to Thomas Earl of Rutland. Croxton Park is a seat of the Duke of Rutland. Beskaby Place is in this parish.

LITTLE DALBY, 4 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 31 houses, and 185 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* Little Dalby Hall is the seat of Edward Hartopp, Esq.

EASTWELL, 7 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 24 houses, and 109 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

EATON, on the river Devon, 8 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 57 houses, and 284 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

EDMONDTHORPE, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 7 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 34 houses, and 148 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Sir Edward Smith, of Edmondthorpe, was created baronet 20th March, 1661; the title is now extinct. Edmondthorpe Hall is the seat of Charles Manners, Esq. The Oakham canal passes the village on the south.

GARTHORPE, on a branch of the river Eye, 5 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 20 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*

GOODBY MARWOOD, or Goadby Maureward, 5 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 36 houses, and 171 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 16*l.* Francis Peck, the Stamford antiquary, was rector here, and at his death, 13th August, 1743, was buried in the chancel. Goadby Hall was the seat of Edward Manners, Esq.; near it is White Lodge.

HARBY, or Herdeby, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, in the Vale of Belvoir, 8 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 80 houses, and 457 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

HARSTON, or Hareston, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 10 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 33 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

HOSE, in the Vale of Belvoir, 7 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 59 houses, and 325 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. Hose Grange is about half a mile northward of the village.

KIRBY BELLARS, or Kirkby Beler, on the banks of the Wreke, 3 miles S.W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 42 houses, and 203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. In 1315, Roger Beler began the foundation of a chantry near his manor-house, which was made a priory of the order of St. Augustine in 1359: at the Dissolution it was valued at 178*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*, and the site was granted, in 1533, to Charles Blount Lord Mountjoy.

KNIPTON, on the river Devon, 9 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 56 houses, and 310 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The Rev. William Peters, R.A. was rector here.

MELTON MOWBRAY, situated in a vale on the banks of the river Eye, 105 miles from London and 15 miles N.E. from Leicester, contains 537 houses, and 2815 inhabitants. The town principally consists of four streets in the form of a cross, on the roads from Oakham to Nottingham, and from Leicester to Grantham. The petty sessions are held here, and the markets and fairs have been long noted as the greatest marts for cattle in the kingdom. The market is on Tuesday; and the fairs the first Tuesday after 17th January, with a show of horses on the preceding day; Holy Thursday, Whit Tuesday for horses, horned cattle, and sheep; and 21st August for horses, horned cattle, and swine. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*; the edifice is remarkably large, with a tower in the centre, and a handsome porch at the western end. It is more beautifully lighted perhaps than any parish church in the kingdom, and the interior is maintained in a state of the utmost neatness and reparation: amongst many interesting monuments is a slab to the memory of Thomas Daffy, A.M., master of the high school in this town about forty years, ob. 1716; he was rector of Redmile in this county, and inventor of the famous Elixir Salutis. Over the river Eye are two bridges, and the Oakham canal passes the town, over which is also an excellent bridge. By the river Wreke, which is navigable to its junction with the Soar, there is a communication with Leicester; and by the last river, which joins the Trent near Loughborough, a constant traffic is maintained. Amongst the public characters to which this town has given birth, was the celebrated John Henley, known by the name of Orator Henley, who was born 3rd August 1692; his father, the Rev. Simon Henley, was vicar of this parish and he himself after his return from Cambridge was master of the school here. A large hunting establishment is kept in this town and neighbourhood.

Freeby is a chapelry, and Welby is a township of this parish. The cheese, called Stilton from having been first sold at an inn there, is made at Melton Mowbray and the villages in the neighbourhood.

MUSTON, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 14 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, and 6 miles N.W. from Grantham, contains 54 houses, and 242 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

PLUNGAR, or Plungarth, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 12 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 41 houses, and 203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

REDMILE, in the Vale of Belvoir, 13 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, and 7 miles N.W. from Grantham in Lincolnshire, contains 79 houses, and 411 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

SALTBY, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 8 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 44 houses, and 234 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

SAXBY, 4 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 31 houses, and 153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.*; it was rebuilt by Robert Earl of Harborough, who died in 1799.

SCALFORD, on a branch of the river Wreke, 3 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 95 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Egelwin the Martyr, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

SOMERBY, in a detached portion of this hundred, 6 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 81 houses, and 384 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

SPROXTON, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 7 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 70 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. In May, 1811, an urn containing exactly one hundred Roman silver coins, was found while digging for the purpose of widening the road.

STAPLEFORD, 4 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 36 houses, and 218 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 13*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Harborough. It was rebuilt by the Right Honourable and Reverend Robert Earl of Harborough about 1789. The family of Sherard have been in possession of the manor of Stapleford, which is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster, ever since the beginning of the fifteenth century, when Robert Sherard married Ann, the daughter and heiress of Sir Lawrence Hawberk. Stapleford Hall is the principal seat of the Earl of Harborough, who is also Viscount Sherard of Stapleford.

STATHERNE, 8 miles N. from Melton Mowbray, contains 88 houses, and 456 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlake, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, in the presentation of Peter House College, Cambridge.

STONESBY, 6 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 45 houses, and 246 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

SYSONBY, or Sixtenby, one mile W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 12 houses, and 67 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Sir John Pate of Sysonby was created baronet 28th October 1643; and Brabazon Ponsonby Earl of Besborough in Ireland was created Lord Ponsonby of Sysonby 12th June 1749.

THORPE ARNOLD, 2 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 23 houses, and 109 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

WALTHAM ON THE WOULDS, 6 miles N.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 99 houses, and 622 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland.

WITHCOTE, in a detached portion of this hundred, 8 miles S.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 6 houses, and 51 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The castle of Saubey, of which Reginald Mohun was governor in the reign of Henry III., was situated within the precincts of this parish; and in the windows of the church is some ancient stained glass.

WYFORDBY, or Wyverby, on the river Eye, 3 miles E. from Melton, contains 22 houses, and 126 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Brentingby. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.*

WYMONDHAM, 6 miles E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 112 houses, and 624 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is an old town, and the inhabitants possess an exemption originally granted to the Duchy of Lancaster. Sir Henry Berkeley, of Wymondham, was created baronet 29th June 1611, but the title is now extinct.

2. Gartree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by East Goscote hundred; on the east by Rutlandshire; on the south by Northamptonshire; and on the west by Guthlaxton hundred.

BILLESDON, 8 miles E. from Leicester on the road to Uppingham, contains 135 houses, and 624 inhabitants, and has a market on Friday, and a fair 23rd April for pewter, brass, and toys. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 10*s.* Billesdon is a place of great antiquity, and near it are the remains of a Roman encampment of eighteen acres, which appears to have been fortified with a high rampart and deep ditch. Billesdon Coplow is an eminence of sporting celebrity. Goadby and Rolleston are chapelries of this parish. Rolleston Hall is the seat of Henry Green, Esq.

BLASTON, 14 miles S.E. from Leicester, and 7 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 11 houses, and 58 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy.

GREAT BOWDEN, one mile N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 219 houses, and 961 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. Market Harborough is a township of this parish.

MARKET HARBOROUGH, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 14½ miles S.E. from Leicester and 83 miles from London, is a township of the parish of Great Bowden, and contains 310 houses, and 1873 inhabitants. It is situated near the river Welland, and chiefly consists of one long street, whence two smaller ones branch off. The manufacture of velvet is carried on here, and there is a market on Thursday. The market-house was erected by Robert Earl of Harborough. The petty sessions for this hundred are occasionally held here, and fairs 6th January, 16th February, 29th April, and 31st July, for cattle, and on 19th October, which last fair is noted for its sale of cattle, leather, cheese, and all sorts of merchandize; it lasts nine days. The church, dedicated to St. Dionysius, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford; it is a large and ancient edifice with a lofty spire. Here is a free school, founded in 1614. Bennet Lord Sherard was advanced by King George I., 19th October 1714, to the titles of Lord Harborough; 6th September 1718, Viscount Sherard of Stapleford; and 8th May 1719, Earl of Harborough.

BRINGHURST, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 8 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, and 1½ mile W. from Rockingham, contains 21 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 15*s.* Drayton, situated on the banks of the Welland, is a township, and Easton Magna is a chapelry of this parish.

BURROUGH, or Burrough on the Hill, in a detached portion of this hundred, 5 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 33 houses, and 183 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* Burrough Hill is one of the highest eminences in the county.

CARLTON CURLIEU, 9 miles S.E. from Leicester, and 7 miles N. from Market Harborough, contains 6 houses, and 49 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John Palmer. Sir John Bale of Carlton Curlieu was created baronet 9th November 1643; his monument is in the church, but the title is now extinct. Carlton Curlieu Hall, the seat of Sir John Palmer, Bart., of Carleton in Northamptonshire, was built in 1636; it is of stone from the quarry at Ketton near Stamford: the house stands high, with the principal front to the west; a clump of fir-trees at a short distance from it is seen nearly thirty miles off. It is now the residence of the Rev. Henry Palmer, brother of Sir John. The country round it is chiefly rich pasture-ground. Illston on the Hill, a mile and a half northward, is a chapelry of this parish, but is partly situated in that of King's Norton.

CHURCH LANGTON, 4 miles N. from Market Harborough, contains 214 houses, and 932 inhabitants, including the township of East Langton, and the chapelries of West Langton, Thorp Langton, and Tur Langton, which form the parish. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 48*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Langton Hall, the seat of the Rev. James Ord, is situated on rising ground, and commands extensive views of the richly cultivated country towards the south and west: on the north and east sides the house is sheltered by lofty oak- and elm-trees. It is an ancient structure, but has been considerably altered, and was for some time tenanted by Mr. Meynell, owner of a celebrated pack of fox-hounds, and also by the Duke of Orleans, who acquired the name of Egalité.

CRANOE, or Cranehoe, 5 miles N. from Market Harborough, contains 20 houses, and 101 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

EVINGTON, 3 miles E. from Leicester, contains 52 houses, and 257 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

FLECKNEY, 7 miles N.W. from Market Harborough, contains 89 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy.

The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* Great Glen is the seat of Robert Haynes, Esq. Stretton Magna is a chapelry of this parish. Stretton Hall is the seat of Sir George Robinson, Bart., of Cransford in Northamptonshire.

GLOOSTON, 5 miles N. from Market Harborough, contains 35 houses, and 142 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory, value 8*l.*

GUMLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Market Harborough, contains 63 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. Gumley Hall was the seat of the late Joseph Cradock, Esq., who died in 1827, and who made considerable improvements in the plantations and pleasure-grounds; nature has been bountiful in the formation of the place, and taste is everywhere conspicuous. The views hence are picturesque and striking, and from a hill near the house is an extensive prospect to Atherstone on the west, and to the extremity of the vale beyond Rockingham Castle on the east. Gumley is famous for its fox earths.

HALLATON, on a branch of the Welland, 7 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 152 houses, and 644 inhabitants. It has a market on Thursday, and fairs on Holy Thursday, and Thursday three weeks after. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

HOLT, 7 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, and 4 miles W. from Rockingham in Northamptonshire, contains 9 houses, and 53 inhabitants, including the township of Bradley on the borders of Rutlandshire. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. A mineral spring was discovered here in 1728. Sir Thomas Nevile, of Holt, was created baronet 25th May 1661. Holt Park is now the seat of Cosmas Nevile, Esq.

HORNINGHOLD, 8 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 20 houses, and 97 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

HOUGHTON ON THE HILL, 6 miles E. from Leicester, contains 89 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

HUSBAND BOSWORTH, 6 miles S.W. from Market Harborough, and 7 miles E. from Lutterworth, contains 187 houses, and 817 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* The edifice was damaged by a dreadful storm 6th July 1755. Husband Bosworth Hall is the seat of Francis Turville, Esq.

KIBWORTH BEAUCHAMP, or Lower Kibworth, 6 miles N.W. from Market Harborough, in the road to Leicester, whence it is distant 8 miles, contains 123 houses, and 588 inhabitants. Here is a free school, and the petty sessions for the hundred are held here occasionally. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfred, is a rectory, value 39*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of Merton College Oxford. Upper Kibworth, or Kibworth Harcourt, and Smeeton Westerby, are townships of this parish. Sir William Halford, Bart. in right of his manor of Kibworth Harcourt, preferred a claim to the office of panneter at the coronation of George II. in 1727.

KNOSSINGTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 9 miles S.E. from Melton Mowbray, contains 37 houses, and 193 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

LUBENHAM, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 2 miles W. from Market Harborough, contains 112 houses, and 531 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* Lubenham Hall is the seat of Francis Paul Stratford, Esq. Thorpe Lubenham township is partly in this parish, but chiefly in that of Marston Trussel in Northamptonshire. Pampillon Hall is the seat of — Bosworth, Esq.

MEDBOURNE, on a branch of the Welland and the borders of Northamptonshire, 6 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 107 houses, and 514 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. A tessellated pavement was discovered here, which was drawn by Fowler of Winterton in Lincolnshire, in 1801.

KING'S NORTON, 7 miles E. from Leicester, contains 13 houses, and 71 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* Stretton Parva is a chapelry of King's Norton; and Illston on the Hill, another chapelry, is partly in this parish and partly in that of Carlton Curlieu.

NOSELEY HALL, or Gnousale, 7 miles N. from Market Harborough, the seat of Sir Arthur Heselrigge, Bart., is extra-parochial, the chapel of the manor-house having been founded in the reign of Edward I. by Sir Anketill de Mortival and his son Roger, who was afterwards Bishop of Salisbury. It contains several monuments of the Heselrigge family, particularly one of Thomas Heselrigge, Esquire of the body to Henry VIII., ob. 1515. Sir Thomas Heselrigge, of Noseley, was created baronet 21st July 1622: his son, Sir Arthur Heselrigge, Bart., was one of the most considerable and active friends of Cromwell; he died in 1660, and a monument to his memory is in the chapel.

OUSTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 8 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 42 houses, and 212 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Newbold. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy. Sir Robert Grimbald, in the reign of Henry II., founded and endowed a small abbey here, for canons regular of the order of St. Austin. At the Dissolution it was valued at 173*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1538 to Sir John Harrington.

PICKWELL, in a detached portion of this hundred, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 6 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 25 houses, and 167 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Leesthorpe. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 16*l.*

SADDINGTON, 6 miles N.W. from Market Harborough, contains 53 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* The hamlet of Bushby, and the chapelry of Stoughton, are in this parish. Stoughton Grange is the seat of George Anthony Legh Keck, Esq. M.P. for the county.

Sir Thomas Beaumont, who possessed the estate of Stoughton Grange, in right of his mother Katherine, daughter and heiress of Thomas Farnham, of Stoughton, was created baronet 21st Feb., 1661; he was the ancestor of the late Sir George Beaumont, Bart., of Cole Orton. In the chapel of Stoughton are several monuments of the Beaumont family.

WELHAM, or Welland Ham, so called from its situation, on the river Welland, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 4 miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 14 houses, and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Sir William Halford, of Welham, was created baronet 27th June 1706.

WISTOW, 7 miles S.E. from Leicester, contains only 2 houses, and 9 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wistan, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Wistow Hall, the seat of Sir Henry Halford, Bart., has belonged to the loyal and ancient family of Halford for nearly two centuries. Sir Richard Halford, of Wistow, was created baronet 18th Dec. 1641. King Charles I. made this house his headquarters more than once during the civil war, and slept here the night before the fatal battle of Naseby; a sword and saddle belonging to the King, which were left here when he proceeded to the field, are still preserved; the stirrups are enamelled. The house is surrounded by plantations, which have been greatly extended by the present possessor. It contains some very good pictures, and some busts brought from Italy; a beautiful avenue leads to the church, whence is one of the most picturesque views in the county. Sir Henry Halford, M.D. was created baronet 27th Sept. 1809; he succeeded to this estate on the death of Sir Charles Halford, Bart., in 1780. Newton Harcourt is a township of the parish of Wistow.

3. East Goscote Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Nottinghamshire; on the east by Framland hundred and Rutlandshire; on the south by Gartree hundred; and on the west by West Goscote hundred.

ALLEXTON, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 15 miles E. from Leicester, and 4 miles W. from Uppingham, contains 17 houses, and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Allexton Hall is the seat of Col. Crump.

ASHFORDBY, or Asfordby, on the river Wreke, 3 miles W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 94 houses, and 424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

BARROW UPON SOAR, 3 miles S.E. from Loughborough, contains 306 houses, and 1568 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* The chapelries of Mountsorrel, Quorndon and Woodhouse, are in this parish.

MOUNTSORREL is situated on the river Soar, over which it has a bridge, and consists chiefly of one long street in the road from Leicester to Loughborough; it contains 298 houses, and 1422 inhabitants, and has a market on Monday, and a fair on 29th July for pedlery and toys. The chapel here is dedicated to St. Peter: the village stands partly in the parish of Rothley, which is separated from Barrow by Barn-lane, at the end of which formerly stood a cross, removed, in the year 1793, into the grounds of Swithland Hall. Sir John Danvers, Bart., erected the present market-house on its site. This place was originally called Mount Soar Hill, from a steep craggy hill, on the banks of the river Soar, presenting singularly romantic features; a ridge of high hills extending hence through the midst of Charnwood Forest into Derbyshire, terminates on the western side of the town. On the highest part, almost overhanging the town, stood a castle, supposed to have been built by Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester. Saer de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, defended it against King Henry III., but it was taken and razed to the ground by Ranulph Earl of Chester in 1217. Mountsorrel Hill is a rock of reddish granite, of which many of the houses are built, and the street paved; this stone is of great durability. From this hill is a pleasant view towards Quorndon and Loughborough. At Quorndon is a lace manufactory. Quorndon Hall is the seat of George Osbaldeston, Esq. The Quorndon Hunt has long been famous; it was established by Hugh Meynell, Esq. The Earl of Sefton has a hunting seat near here.

BEEBY, on a branch of the river Wreke, 6 miles N.E. from Leicester, contains 26 houses, and 120 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

HUNGERTON, 7 miles E. from Leicester, contains 37 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* Baggrave is a liberty, and Ingarsby and Quenby are hamlets of this parish. Quenby Hall is the seat of P. L. Story, Esq. It is situated on an eminence, which is finely wooded. Around the house is a terrace, commanding a great variety of prospects; on one side, it is very extensive over a hilly country, and even to the mountains of the Peake; on the other side, a beautiful landscape of hanging woods shelving down to a winding valley. Quenby is an old house, and was long the seat of the Ashbys.

LAUNDE ABBEY, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 14 miles E. from Leicester, a district containing 6 houses, and 36 inhabitants, is extra-parochial. Richard Basset, and Maude his wife, founded here a priory of canons of the order of St. Austin, in honour of St. John the Baptist, in the reign of Henry I. At the Dissolution it was valued at 510*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, and the site was granted in 1539 to Thomas Lord Cromwell. Sir Clement Clarke, of Launde Abbey, was created baronet 18th June, 1661. Launde Abbey is now the seat of John Finch Simpson, Esq.

LODDINGTON, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 14 miles E. from Leicester, contains 34 houses, and 148 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Whatborough is a liberty of this parish. Loddington Hall is the seat of John Adams, Esq.

EAST NORTON, 13 miles E. from Leicester, contains 27 houses, and 120 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy.

PRESTWOULD, 3 miles N.E. from Loughborough, contains 13 houses, and 72 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of Charles James Packe, Esq. In the chancel are several monuments, amongst others that of Sir Christopher Packe, a conspicuous character during the Protectorate of Oliver Cromwell; and one of Major Packe, who fell at the battle of Waterloo, by Rossi. Prestwould Hall, the seat of Charles James Packe, Esq., is beautifully situated in an amphitheatre of plantation, open on the western side towards the wild scenery of Charnwood Forest; the hedgerows on the estate are also so thickly filled with trees, that the mansion has the effect of being embosomed in one entire wood. The family settled here on the destruction of the old hall at Coates by fire. Burton on the Woulds and Coates are townships, and Hoton is a chapelry of this parish.

QUEENIBOROUGH, on a branch of the Wreke, 6 miles N.E. from Leicester, contains 110 houses, and 469 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

RAGDALE, or Rakedale, 6 miles W. from Melton Mowbray, contains 19 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of Earl Ferrers. Ragdale Hall, built by the late Earl Ferrers in 1785, and standing on an eminence near the old Foss Road, is now the residence of — Joliffe, Esq. The old house, built in 1629, is still standing; over the porch are the arms of Shirley, with no less than fifty quarterings.

RATCLIFFE ON THE WREKE, 7 miles N. from Leicester, contains 22 houses, and 124 inhabitants. TWYFORD, on a branch of the Wreke, 6 miles S. from Melton Mowbray, contains 69 houses, and 313 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* The hamlet of Thorpe Satchville is in this parish.

WALTON ON THE WOULDS, 4 miles E. from Loughborough, contains 59 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 15*l.*

WIMESWOULD, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 5 miles N.E. from Loughborough, contains 222 houses, and 1061 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge.

4. West Goscote Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire; on the east by the East Goscote hundred; on the south by Sparkenhoe hundred; and on the west by Derbyshire.

ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH, 17 miles N.W. from Leicester, and 116 miles from London, contains 756 houses, and 3937 inhabitants. The town is situated in a fertile vale, watered by the river Mease, over which is a bridge. It is governed by a constable and two headboroughs, who are annually chosen in October; the petty sessions for the hundred are held here occasionally. The trade in malt is very considerable, and the town has long been noted for its fine ale; there are manufactories of woollen and cotton stockings, and hats. It has a market on Saturday; and fairs Easter Tuesday, Whit Tuesday, for horses, cows and sheep; 4th Sept., and 8th Nov. for horses and cows. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Hastings. It contains several monuments of the Earls of Huntingdon. The town of Ashby received its additional appellation from Alan le Zouch, who possessed the manor in the reign of Henry III. Sir William Hastings, Lord Chamberlain to Edward IV., created Lord Hastings of Ashby de la Zouch, 26th July, 1461, and afterwards elected Knight of the Garter, built the castle in 1474, the ruins of which now form a principal object of attention in the south side of the town, having been remarkable as the temporary prison of Mary Queen of Scots. It was originally environed by three extensive parks, all beautifully wooded;—the Great Park, which was ten miles in circumference; Brostepp Park for fallow deer, and the Little Park for red deer. The structure, which continued to be for two hundred years the residence of his family, was composed partly of brick and partly of stone, and contained spacious apartments, and a chapel adjoining. Two stately towers formed the grandest ornaments: one contained the hall, chambers, &c.; the other, called the Kitchen Tower. Mary Queen of Scots was entrusted to the custody of Henry, third Earl of Huntington, at Ashby Castle, and a room now remaining in the ruins is distinguished by the name of Mary Queen of Scots' room. Anne, the Queen of James I., and Henry Prince of Wales, visited the castle, as also the King, who with his Court were frequently here for many days together: on these occasions the dinner was served by thirty poor knights. The castle was garrisoned and ably defended for King Charles I., but was at last evacuated and dismantled by capitulation; the ruins are highly interesting. Blackfordby is a chapelry of the parish of Ashby de la Zouch.

BEAUMANOR, 3 miles N.W. from Mountsorrel, contains 15 houses, and 96 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial. Beaumanor Park is the seat of William Herrick, Esq. It was erected in 1725 on the site of an older mansion, the seat of the Beaumont family, and is situated in a valley on the eastern side of Charnwood Forest. Robert Herrick, a poet of very considerable merit in the reign of Charles I., was descended of this family.

BELTON, 6 miles N.E. from Ashby de la Zouch, contains 134 houses, and 664 inhabitants, including the liberty of Grace Dieu. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Hastings. At Grace Dieu, Roesia de Verdon founded here a priory for nuns of the order of St. Austin, in honour of St. Mary and the Holy Trinity, in the reign of Henry III. At the Dissolution it was valued at 101*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.*, and the site was granted in 1538 to Humphry Foster.

BREEDON ON THE HILL, on the borders of Derbyshire, 5 miles N.E. from Ashby de la Zouch, contains 215 houses, and 1044 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Tongue and Willson. At Tongue is the seat of Miss Colleshaw. The church of Breedon, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Hardulph, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford. It contains several monuments of the Shirley family. In the reign of King Stephen, this church, together with some lands, was granted by Robert Ferrers, Earl of Nottingham, to the priory of St. Oswald at Nostell in Yorkshire; and a cell of Black Canons, subordinate to that monastery, was very early established here. At the Dissolution it was valued at 25*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*, and as parcel of St. Oswald's was granted to John Lord Grey, by Edward VI., in 1553.

Staunton Harold a township, Worthington a chapelry, and Newbold a liberty, are all in this parish. Staunton Harold is the principal seat of Earl Ferrers. It is large, and was rebuilt about 1780: the architecture is Palladian, and is light and elegant; and the edifice is backed by a fine wood, and surrounded by a variety of delightful scenery. The park consists of about one hundred and fifty acres of land, with about one hundred head of remarkably fine deer, and a fine sheet of water adorns the park. In the library are the works of Confucius in sixteen volumes. Sir George Shirley, of Staunton Harold, was created baronet 22d May 1611; and his grandson, Sir Robert Shirley, Bart. Master of the Horse and Steward of the Household to Queen Katherine, was created Lord Ferrers, of Chartley 28th Jan. 1678, and by Queen Anne was advanced to the titles of Viscount Tamworth and Earl Ferrers, 3rd Sept. 1711. Sir Robert Shirley, Bart., rebuilt the chapel at Staunton Harcourt in 1653. It is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and consists of an embattled tower, a body, two aisles, and a very handsome chancel. When it was reported that Sir Robert Shirley had built a church, an order in council was immediately issued to him to fit out a ship, with this observation, that "he that could afford to build a church, could no doubt afford also to equip a ship." Washington Shirley, the present peer, is eighth Earl Ferrers of this noble family.

BRADGATE PARK, or Broadgate, 4 miles N.W. from Leicester, is an extra-parochial district, on the borders of Charnwood Forest. A noble mansion was built here by Thomas Grey, second Marquess of Dorset and K.G. in the reign of Henry VIII.; his son Henry, the third Marquess, afterwards Duke of Suffolk, was father of the unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, who was born at this seat in 1537; she was the great-granddaughter of Henry VII., her mother, Francis Marchioness of Dorset, being the eldest daughter and co-heiress of Mary Tudor, sister of King Henry VIII. Her claim to the Crown of England was founded on the pretended illegitimacy of the Princesses Mary and Elizabeth, on account of the annulment of Henry's marriages with Katherine of Arragon and Anne Boleyn, by Act of Parliament, and on an instrument, executed by the King and privy council, in favour of Lady Jane Grey. The attempt to raise her to the throne was founded on the unpopularity of Mary's attachment to the Roman Catholic religion, and her projected marriage with Philip of Spain; but it was premature and badly managed, and in consequence the Duke of Suffolk, Lady Jane, and her husband were beheaded in 1555. The family of Grey continued to reside here, and Henry, the first Earl of Stamford, obtained a grant of lands in the forest adjoining this estate, for the purpose of enlarging the park. About 1642 the house was plundered and the horses and cattle driven away, but in 1645 an order in council declared that the Countess of Stamford should have the protection of the House of Parliament, and that no soldiers should be quartered at Bradgate. The mansion was destroyed by fire about the year 1694, and has remained a ruin ever since. It was constructed of brick, and was square in plan, with a turret at each angle: the garden walls and terrace, and vestiges of the mansion still exist. The chapel, which has ceased to be used since the demolition of the house, contains a handsome monument of Henry Lord Grey of Grooby, and his lady, and a vault in which the two first Earls of Stamford and their ladies were interred. The park, which is very extensive, is walled round and abundantly stocked with deer: it is famous for its fine fern. A trout-stream, which runs through the park, terminates in a narrow winding glen. The approach to Bradgate Park from Thurcaston, particularly at the keeper's lodge, is very picturesque, and the prospects are unusually romantic from the intermixture of venerable trees and rugged rocks. One of the highest eminences in the park is Old John, whence is a most extensive prospect.

COLE ORTON, 2 miles E. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 180 houses, and 883 inhabitants, including Over Town or Cole Orton Saucey, and Nether Town on Overton Quatermains. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.*

Cole Orton Hall is the seat of Sir George Howland Willoughby Beaumont, Bart. The mansion was commenced in 1804, and completed in 1808, from designs by George Dance, R.A. It is built of the stone of this county, and is decorated with small turrets. In the centre of the house is a polygonal hall and staircase, much admired. A collection of valuable pictures by the old masters, which formerly adorned the well-disposed apartments here, were presented by the late Sir George Beaumont, Bart. to the National Gallery. As a patron of art, and as an amateur practitioner of painting, he greatly distinguished himself; many specimens of his performance have been exhibited at the Royal Academy. Sir George Beaumont died at this seat 7th February 1827, æt. 73, and was succeeded in his title and estates by the present baronet, his first cousin once removed. Cole Orton came into the possession of the Beaumont family in 1426, by the marriage of Philippa, the daughter and heiress of Thomas Maurward of Overton Quarter Marsh and Cole Orton, with Sir Thomas Beaumont, Lord Basqueville, Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Governor of Dover Castle, who died in 1457. Francis Beaumont, the dramatic poet, was of this family. The coal-mines in the neighbourhood of Cole Orton are very extensively and profitably worked.

DISEWORTH, 6 miles N.W. from Loughborough, contains 108 houses, and 718 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Haberdashers' Company, London.

CASTLE DONINGTON, on the borders of Derbyshire, 8 miles N.W. from Loughborough, and 9 N.E. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 539 houses, and 2560 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* Here was formerly a religious house, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, which appears to have been founded by John Lacy, Constable of Chester, in the reign of Henry II. One of the Bellamonts, Earls of Leicester, built here a large castle, which becoming ruinous, Eustace Constable of Chester, a descendant of John Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, rebuilt it. Afterwards it was in the possession of Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Leicester, Lancaster, and Derby. In 1594 the manor was purchased by George, Earl of Huntingdon, who soon after demolished the castle, and erected a handsome manor-house, which continued the principal residence of the Earls of Huntingdon after the desecration of Ashby Castle. Donington Hall is now the seat of the Marquess of Hastings. In 1789 the estate was bequeathed by Francis Hastings, Earl of Huntingdon, to the Earl of Moira, who erected the present mansion from designs by W. Wilkins of Cambridge, in a castellated style of architecture. It is a quadrangular edifice surrounding a court, with the principal front towards the south, extending about a hundred and thirty feet. In the centre of the front is a lofty portal of entrance with the following inscription: TO · THE MEMORY · OF · HIS · VNCLE · FRANCIS · EARL · OF · HVNTINGDON · FROM WHOSE · AFFECTION · HE · RECEIVED · THE · ESTATE · THIS · EDIFICE IS · GRATEFVLLY · DEDICATED · BY · FRANCIS · RAWDON · HASTINGS MDCCXCIII. On each side of the porch the main building extends about fifty feet, two stories in height, terminated at the angles by embattled turrets. At the western end of the mansion is the library, seventy-two feet by twenty-six, in which is preserved a collection of royal and noble letters, carefully arranged; and extending beyond the edifice is the chapel, with its high pointed roof and mullioned windows; the buttresses terminate in pinnacles and produce a beautiful effect, serving at the same time to conceal the domestic offices of the building, which are upon the north side. The principal apartments contain a collection of ancient portraits of the Hastings family and their relatives, together with several choice cabinet pictures by old masters, and some fine old painted glass, brought from the chapel of Stoke Poges in Buckinghamshire. The scenery of Donington Park is remarkable for picturesque beauty, abounding in variegated swells of the finest verdure, and adorned with a profusion of noble trees, old majestic oaks, and full spreading hawthorns. The house is situated in a plain formed by the union of three delightful valleys, but is notwithstanding considerably above the level of the surrounding country, over which it commands many highly interesting prospects. At the northern extremity of the park is Donington cliff, verging on the river Trent; this eminence is luxuriantly clothed with a fine hanging wood, while the river beneath winds its silvery stream through fertile meadows for many miles within view.

GARENDON PARK, 2 miles W. from Loughborough, in the road to Ashby De La Zouch, is an extra-parochial district. Robert Bossu, called the Good Earl of Leicester, a very potent man of his time, founded an abbey here in 1133, for Cistercian monks from Waverley, and dedicated it to the Virgin Mary. At the time of the Dissolution it was valued at 186*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1540 to Thomas Earl of Rutland. The estate was purchased in 1683 by Ambrose Phillips, Esq. Garendon Park is now the seat of Thomas March Phillips, Esq. An entrance to the park is built after the manner of the ancient triumphal arch, and in the park is a temple of Venus, which contained a fine statue brought from Rome; this statue was destroyed by a riotous assemblage of the populace in 1811.

HATHERN, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 3 miles N.W. from Loughborough, contains 235 houses, and 1144 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.*

KEGWORTH, 6 miles N.W. from Loughborough, on the banks of the Soar, contains 333 houses, and 1607 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here occasionally. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Christ's College Cambridge. Isley Walton is a chapelry of this parish.

LANGLEY PRIORY, 7 miles N.E. from Ashby De La Zouch, is extra-parochial. It was founded by William Pantulf, one of the rebel barons who held Belvoir Castle against King John, and Bergia his wife, in the reign of Henry II., for Benedictine nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. It was valued at the Dissolution at 34*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*, and the site was granted in 1543 to Thomas Grey.

LEICESTER, nearly in the centre of the county, 96 miles from London, contains 6085 houses, and 30,125 inhabitants. The town is situated on the river Soar, and is principally disposed in three parallel streets, intersected by several smaller ones. It was incorporated by King John, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, steward, bailiff, twenty-four aldermen, forty-eight common councilmen, a town-clerk, and other officers. The freemen of Leicester are exempt from paying toll at any of the markets or fairs in England, and the assizes are always held in the sessions-house, formed out of part of its once magnificent castle. In the town-hall are held the sessions for the town, all corporate assemblies, &c. The arms of the town are gules, a cinquefoil ermine, pierced of the field. The borough of Leicester sends two members to Parliament; the mayor is the returning officer. The right of election is vested in the freemen not receiving alms, and in the inhabitants paying scot and lot; but persons living in the borough by certificate, not having gained a settlement by renting ten pounds per annum, or serving in an annual office, are not entitled to vote, although paying scot and lot. The present number of electors is about 1103, and the members returned at the last election were Sir Charles Abney Hastings, Bart., of Willesley Hall in Derbyshire, and W. Evans, Esq. The chief business of the town of Leicester is the combing and spinning of wool, and manufacturing it into stockings and other hosiery articles. In these manufactures the Leicestershire wool is in part consumed, the remainder being sent into Yorkshire for making woollen stuffs. The markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays are plentifully supplied with provisions, and here a great deal of business is usually transacted. The fairs are held 4th January, 2nd March, Palm Saturday, Saturday in Easter week, 12th May, 1st June, 5th July for horses, cows, and sheep; 1st August, 13th September, 10th October for horses, cows, sheep, and cheese; 2nd November and 8th December for horses and cows. At these fairs the number of cattle brought for sale exceeds that of any other place in England. During the Anglo-Saxon æra Leicester was most probably of some consequence; after the Conquest it became a part of the royal demesne, and a castle was erected for the purpose of ensuring the submission of the surrounding country. In 1173 it became the chief refuge of the adherents of the young King Henry in his rebellion against Henry II., and was taken and destroyed by Richard Lucy, Chief Justiciary of the kingdom. 30th April 1414, a Parliament assembled at Leicester granted a subsidy of 300,000 marks to Henry V., to enable the King to assert his title to the throne of France, and ordained death to the maintainers of the doctrines of Wicliff, and to the readers of the Scriptures in English. 18th February 1426, another Parliament assembled at Leicester, at which the Duke of Gloucester and Beaufort Bishop of Winchester, afterwards Cardinal, were ostensibly reconciled; and the young King Henry VI. was knighted by his uncle the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France.

Leicester consists of six parishes, All Saints, St. Leonard, with the abbey and Woodgate, St. Margaret, with Bishop's Fee and Knighton chapelry (this is considerably the largest parish in Leicester), St. Martin, St. Mary, and St. Nicholas: there are also two extra-parochial districts, the Black and White Friars, and the Liberty of Newark. All Saints is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Leonard is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Margaret is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the prebendary of St. Margaret in Lincoln Cathedral: a new church was erected in this parish in 1820. St. Martin is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Nicholas is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A college within the castle was founded in 1107, by Robert Earl of Mellent and Leicester, for a dean and twelve prebendaries, and dedicated to St. Mary. The greatest part of the lands and tithes belonging to this college was annexed to the abbey of St. Mary de Pratis, but at the Dissolution the college of St. Mary the Less was valued at 24*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* per annum. Near the castle Henry Earl of Leicester founded in 1330 an hospital, in honour of the Annunciation, which was augmented by Henry Duke of Lancaster, and in 1355 became a noble college, called Newark, or Collegium Novi Operis, which was afterwards endowed by John of Ghent and his executors. This house was much favoured by King Henry IV. and his successors of the Lancasterian line: its possessions were valued at the Dissolution at 800*l.* per annum, and some part of it was granted in 1548 to John Beaumont and William Guyse. The corporation of Leicester having purchased some of the estate belonging to the dissolved colleges and hospitals, and the site of St. John's hospital, about 1588, built the town gaol upon part of it, and on the other part founded an hospital for poor widows. A bede-house or hospital, for a master, confrater, and twenty-four poor people was founded here by William Wigston, merchant of the staple, in the latter part of the reign of Henry VI. It was dedicated to St. Ursula, and had the good fortune to escape the general dissolution of hospitals in the reign of Edward VI., and there are now twenty-four poor people in it, with a confrater and master; the last are presented by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Here was also an hospital dedicated to St. Leonard, and four religious houses of Austin friars, Black friars, Grey friars, and friars de Pœnitentia.

Leicester Abbey was founded by Robert Bossu Earl of Leicester, in honour of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for Black canons in 1143. This monastery, besides being largely endowed with most of the churches in and about the town, and estates at Burton, Seagrave, Aserby, &c., had liberty of procuring fuel and keeping cattle in divers other manors. Amicia, wife of the founder, gave two bucks annually to this convent, one on the Assumption, and the other on the Nativity of the Virgin Mary. Margaret de Quincey gave also a buck annually out of Charnwood Forest, and land at Sheepshead. Robert de Quincey her husband confirmed these grants, and added the tenth of all hay sold in Acle and Wyffeley, and the right shoulders of all the deer killed in the park of Acle. It was here that the unhappy Cardinal Wolsey rested on his journey from York to London; on reaching the abbey at night he was met at the gate by the abbot and monks with torches, and received with great reverence. The first ejaculation of Wolsey on greeting these holy persons indicated his inward sense of his approaching death: "Father Abbot," said he, "I am come hither to lay my bones among you;" and with much difficulty he was carried upstairs and laid upon his death-bed. The very next day the abbot was summoned to administer the fifth sacrament of the Roman Catholic church, called extreme unction, and the guard were desired to witness his last moments. The superstitious notions of the age caused the spectators of the scene to regard as a circumstance of some moment the coincidence of Wolsey's words with the hour of his death. He expired as the clock struck eight, saying, "If I had served God as diligently as I have done the King, he would not have given me over in my gray hairs." Wolsey was buried in the Abbey church; and a stone coffin, said to have contained his bones, was afterwards used as a horse-trough at an inn in the neighbourhood. At the Dissolution, the endowments of the abbey were valued at 1062*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*; and the site was granted in 1551 to William Marquess of Northampton. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the Earl of Huntingdon was in possession of it; but in the succeeding reign it belonged to the Cavendish family, and was the seat of the Countess of Devonshire, till the period of the civil war, during which a party of Royalists from Ashby De La Zouch, under the command of Henry Hastings, afterwards Lord Loughborough, came and burnt it, leaving only the walls standing. In 1645, the town of Leicester, under Colonel Thomas Grey, on the 31st May, was stormed by Charles I. and Prince Rupert, with great slaughter.

Castle View, an extra-parochial Liberty containing 27 houses and 149 inhabitants, adjoins the Borough of Leicester.

The Leicester and Loughborough canal commences at the town of Leicester, and joins the river Soar near Belgrave, whence that river is navigable to the commencement of the Loughborough canal, a little below Grace Dieu brook. By the Leicester and Melton Mowbray canal, the rivers Wreke and Eye form a communication with the Soar; and the former rivers, by the addition of cuts and deviations where necessary, are made navigable to Melton Mowbray, where the Oakham canal commences.

LOCKINGTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 6 miles N.W. from Loughborough, contains 41 houses, and 206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* Lockington Hall is the seat of John Story, Esq. Hemington is a populous township of this parish, about a mile westward from Lockington.

LOUGHBOROUGH, on the borders of the county, 12 miles N. from Leicester, and 109 miles from London, contains 1492 houses, and 7365 inhabitants. This town, the second in the county in point of size and population, is situated on a branch of the river Soar, and on the side of a navigable canal communicating with that river; it consists chiefly of one principal street on the road from Leicester to Derby, and smaller ones intersecting it at right angles. The chief manufacture of the town is preparing wool for and knitting and weaving stockings; there is also a considerable trade in coals, which are sent by the canal into the interior of the county. The petty sessions for the hundred of West Goscote are held here occasionally, and a court leet is annually held in the month of October, in the court chamber, by the steward of the lord of the manor; at which a jury of twelve, two constables, two headboroughs, street-masters, field-reeves, pinders, parish beadle, common crier, &c. are chosen. The market is on Thursdays, and the fairs are 28th March, 25th April, Holy Thursday, 12th August, 13th Nov. for horses, cows and sheep; 24th March, and 30th Sept. meeting for cheese. The market-house was erected in 1742, on the removal of the ancient cross. Here is a free-school. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 40*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Emanuel College Cambridge. It is very large, with a remarkably fine tower at the western end; this is said to have been erected by subscription, about the close of the sixteenth century. In the deep cavetto of the arch of the western window are sculptured numerous arms, badges, and other devices, indicative of the benefactors of this really noble structure. Henry Lord Beaumont had a grant of the manor of Loughborough, part of the possessions of Hugh le Despenser, Earl of Winchester, attainted in the reign of Edward II. Sir Edward Hastings, K.G. Lord Chamberlain of the Household to Queen Mary, was by her created Lord Hastings of Loughborough, in 1557; but the title became extinct at his death. In the reign of Charles I. it was revived in the person of Henry, second son of the Earl of Huntingdon, who was created Lord Hastings of Loughborough, 23d Oct. 1643, having given manifest proofs of his sincere attachment to his sovereign during the time of the unhappy civil war. He lived to witness the Restoration, but died unmarried in 1666. Alexander Wedderburne was created Lord Loughborough, 14th

June 1780; but the patent was afterwards altered, and the title, which has descended to the Earl of Rosslyn, has no reference to this county. Knightthorpe is a township, and Woodthorpe a hamlet of this parish.

The Loughborough canal commences at the river Soar, a little below Grace Dieu brook, and takes a straight course to the Bushes at Loughborough. This canal, about a mile in length, perfectly level, has been very beneficial to the town of Loughborough in bringing a regular supply of coals to the town at less expense than formerly. By means of the river Soar it has a connection with the Trent, and by that river it has conveyance to Leicester, Melton Mowbray, &c. with all the various and important canals in the interior of the kingdom.

NEWTOWN LINFORD, on the borders of Bradgate Park, 6 miles N.W. from Leicester, contains 73 houses, and 549 inhabitants. After the enclosure of Charnwood Forest, a church was erected in this parish, under the patronage of the diocesan, and land set out in the forest for its endowment.

OSGATHORPE, 5 miles N.E. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 75 houses, and 352 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* Here is a free-school.

PACKINGTON, partly situated in Derbyshire, 2 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 89 houses, and 446 inhabitants, in this county, including the hamlet of Snibston. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Hastings.

RAVENSTONE, or Raunston, partly situated in Derbyshire, 4 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 87 houses, and 255 inhabitants, in this county. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

ROTHLEY, or Rodeley, on a branch of the Soar, 1½ mile S. from Mountsorrel, contains 201 houses, and 948 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 0*s.* 5*d., in the patronage of Thomas Babington, Esq., who is lord of the manor and soke of Rothley, which not only extends through the lordships of Rothley and Rothley Temple, and the chapelries of Caldwell, Gaddesby, Grimston, Keyham, Mountsorrel superior, Wartnaby, and Wycomb, but to several other parts of the county, in which it is the most extensive manor. It had anciently, and still enjoys a peculiar jurisdiction in ecclesiastical matters, exempt and free from all other ecclesiastical courts. It has the privilege also of marrying within itself; the commissary, who derives his authority from the lord of the manor, granting licence; and is exempt from the jurisdiction and visitation of the bishop of the diocese, who still, however, grants institution to the vicarage. The soke of Rothley has privileges of court leet, court baron, &c., oyer terminer, and gaol delivery, independent of the county; the custom of gavel-kind also prevails throughout the soke.

King Henry III. granted the manor and church of Rothley to the Knights Templars, who settled a commandery of their order here, which, with other lands belonging to them, came afterwards into the possession of the Knights Hospitallers, who enjoyed it till the Dissolution, when it was valued at 87*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, per annum. It was granted in 1543 to Henry Cartwright. Rothley Temple is the seat of Thomas Babington, Esq. The chapelries of Keyham, Wartnaby, Wycomb and Caldwell are in this parish, and also the south end of Mountsorrel chapelry. Rothley Temple liberty is extra-parochial.

NETHER SEALE, on the borders of Staffordshire, 6 miles S.W. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 223 houses, and 1160 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Over Seale. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* Part of the hamlet of Donethorpe is in this parish. At Over Seale, Grange Wood End House is the seat of — Wright, Esq.

SHEEPSHEAD, or Shepeshead, 4 miles W. from Loughborough, contains 655 houses, and 3464 inhabitants, an extensive population, which is attributed to the enclosure of Charnwood Forest, and to the frame-work knitting trade, which is here carried on. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Charley, near here, and Sherman's Grounds, near Leicester, are both extra-parochial districts in the forest. Charnwood Forest is about ten miles in length, and six in breadth: some parts of it are elevated into considerable hills, bearing some resemblance to the High Peake in Derbyshire, particularly Beacon Hill, Barden Hill, Ives Head, Cliff Hill, &c. From the two former of these the views are very extensive, even to the mountains of Wales. In proceeding northward, these hills are the first part of the chain or ridge which at length constitutes the Peake of Derbyshire. The summits of many of these hills, particularly that of Beacon Hill, by some considered as the highest, consist of vast naked craggy rocks, the crags almost universally facing the west. They are composed of very hard gray stone, like the blue Elvan stone of Cornwall, but not so fissile. It is of an extremely close grit, gives fire with steel, whence quartz seems to predominate in its composition, and some parts of it are almost irresistible to the hammer. Others of these rocks are composed of an imperfect kind of granite, of which a much more complete sort abounds in the neighbourhood of Mountsorrel, where it is used in building and in the pavement of the street. In 1808 this forest was enclosed by Act of Parliament, and a chapel was erected about 1815, for the endowment of which about two hundred and twenty acres of land were appropriated. The appointment to this chapel is in the six lords of the forest: the Marquess of Hastings, the Earl of Stamford, Thomas March Phillips, Esq., William Herrick, Esq., the Rev. Thomas Bosvile, and Edward Dawson, Esq.

SWEEPSTONE, or Swebston, 5 miles S. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 125 houses, and 625 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Newton Burguland. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

SWITHLAND, 2¾ miles S.W. from Mountsorrel, contains 59 houses, and 335 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Swithland Hall is the seat of the Hon. Butler Danvers. Sir Joseph Danvers, of Swithland, a younger branch of the family of Danvers, of Culworth in Northamptonshire, was created baronet 4th July 1746. His son, Sir John Danvers, the second baronet, died 21st Sept. 1796, leaving his estate to his only child, the wife of the Hon. Augustus Butler, son of the Earl of Lanesborough, who assumed the name of Danvers. In the church is a handsome monument to the memory of Sir John Danvers, Bart., erected in his life-time, with an inscription recording his ancestry, written by himself.

THORPE ACRE, on a branch of the Soar, one mile N.W. from Loughborough, contains 70 houses, and 351 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Dishley. It is a curacy. Dishley Grange was formerly the residence of Mr. Bakewell, who here bred and improved every species of domestic quadruped to the greatest perfection: in various experiments he contrived to produce new breeds of these animals, in which, with perfect symmetry of shape, was united the greatest quantity of flesh with the smallest possible proportion of bone and offal.

THURCASTON, on a branch of the river Soar, 3 miles S. from Mountsorrel, contains 53 houses, and 277 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here is a free-school. Hugh Latimer, afterwards Bishop of Worcester, and one of the reformers of the Church of England, was born at Thurcaston, 1470. In one of his court sermons, in King Edward VIth's time, he tells his congregation, in his familiar way, that "upon a farm of four pounds a-year at the utmost, his father tilled as much ground as kept half-a dozen men; that he had it stocked with a hundred sheep, and thirty cows; that he found the King a man and a horse, himself remembering to have buckled on his father's harness when he went to Blackheath: that he gave his daughters five pounds a piece at marriage; that he lived hospitably amongst his neighbours, and was not backward in his alms to the poor." Latimer's sermons, written in a quaint and familiar style, contain, say his biographers, more ample materials for a history of the manners and morals of the time than any volume of that period; and the number of anecdotes brought forward to illustrate his subjects, must have contributed greatly to his popularity. Anstey is a chapelry, and Cropston is a township of the parish of Thurcaston.

* Nichols's History of Leicestershire, vol. iii.

ULVESCROFT, an extra-parochial liberty, 6 miles W. from Mountsorrel, contains 14 houses, and 87 inhabitants. A priory of Canons Regular of the order of St. Austin was founded here in the reign of Edward II. by Roger de Quincey, Earl of Winchester, and was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. At the Dissolution it was valued at 101*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1542 to Thomas Earl of Rutland, and afterwards about 1557 to Frideswide Strelley, widow. Ulvescroft Priory is the seat of W. Parkin Bosville, Esq.

WANLIP, or Onelep, on the river Soar, 3 miles S. from Mountsorrel, and 4 miles N. from Leicester, contains 24 houses, and 128 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Saint Nicholas, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*: it contains several monuments of the Palmers. Wanlip Hall is the seat of Sir George Joseph Palmer, Bart. It stands on the banks of the Soar amidst beautiful pleasure-grounds, which have been improved to their greatest extent. Sir Charles Grave Hudson of Wanlip, who had been sheriff of the county in 1784, was created baronet 21st June, 1791. He became possessed of this seat by his wife Katharine Susanna, daughter and heiress of Henry Palmer, Esq. of Wanlip, which was rebuilt by her father and completed with many additions by Sir Charles, who died in 1813, and was succeeded in the baronetcy by Sir Charles Thomas Hudson, who in the same year assumed the name of Palmer, under the will of his maternal grandfather. He died 30th April, 1827, and was succeeded by the present baronet. The Leicester canal passes near Wanlip.

LONG WHATTON, 4 miles N.W. from Loughborough, contains 151 houses, and 820 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Whatton House, the seat of Edward Dawson, Esq., is situated on an eminence in a picturesque part of the county, commanding views of great variety: on the north is the church of Kegworth, backed by the Derbyshire hills; on the east the spires of Sutton Bonnington and Normanton-on-Soar are both seen across that river, which here divides the county from Nottinghamshire: more southward is the very fine tower of Loughborough church and Mountsorrel rock, with the range of hills in Charnwood Forest, which terminate the view for several miles in a westerly direction. The outline of this range appears to peculiar advantage from the grounds at Whatton, and is broken in several points into highly picturesque forms, particularly in the direction of Whitwick rocks. The other most conspicuous points are Beacon Hill, Ives Head, and Bardon Hill. The house was built about 1802 from designs by J. Johnson, of Leicester, and is constructed of fine stone with a rusticated basement. The grass lands, which immediately surround the house, are thrown into a park-like form, by means of sunk fences, and are ornamented with many fine trees, amongst which the ash are remarkable for their size. Edward Dawson, Esq. is one of the six lords of Charnwood Forest, and is maternally descended from the family of Mould, of Appleby, in this county.

WHITWICK, on the borders of Charnwood Forest, 5 miles E. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 223 houses, and 1146 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown, as part of the Duchy of Lancaster. Swannington and Thringstone are townships of this parish.

5. Guthlaxton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by West Goscote hundred; on the east by Gartree hundred; on the south by Northamptonshire; and on the west by Warwickshire and Sparkenhoe hundred.

ARNESBY, 8 miles S. from Leicester, contains 91 houses, and 459 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

ASHBY MAGNA, 4 miles N. from Lutterworth, contains 56 houses, and 280 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

ASHBY PARVA, 3 miles N.W. from Lutterworth, contains 32 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

AYLESTONE, on the banks of the Soar, 3 miles S. from Leicester, contains 102 houses, and 540 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 31*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The chapelry of Lubbesthorpe and the township of Glen Parva are in this parish. The Union canal passes Glen Parva.

BITTESWELL, one mile N. from Lutterworth, contains 95 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 3*s.*, in the patronage of the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London, by turns. The edifice was thoroughly repaired and judiciously restored under the superintendence of the vicar in 1822.

BLABY, on a branch of the Soar, 4½ miles S. from Leicester, contains 197 houses, and 989 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Countess Thorpe is a chapelry of this parish.

BROUGHTON ASTLEY, on a branch of the Soar, 6 miles N. from Lutterworth, contains 47 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Prime Thorpe and Sutton on the Elms are townships of this parish.

BRUNTINGTHORPE, 5 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 76 houses, and 348 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, value 10*l.* 7*s.* 6d.

CALTHORPE, or Thorpe Thomas, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 4 miles S. from Lutterworth, contains 39 houses, and 164 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*

CLAYBROOKE, on the Watling Street, 4 miles N.W. from Lutterworth, contains 90 houses, and 458 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 30*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The parish is populous and extensive, containing Nether or Great Claybrooke, and Over or Little Claybrooke, the hamlet of Ullesthorpe, which is divided from Claybrooke by a serpentine branch of the Soar, and the township of Little Wigston. The manor of Claybrooke pays suit and service to the court of Weston in Arden, in the parish of Bulkington, in Warwickshire.

At Claybrooke is the seat of Thomas Dicey, Esq.; and at Ullesthorpe, the seat of John Goodacre, Esq.

At High Cross, in the present road from Lutterworth to Hinckley, six miles from Lutterworth, and four miles and a half from Hinckley two Roman roads cross each other; the one from Lincoln to Cardigan, called the Fosse; and the other from Dover towards Chester, called the Watling Street. The cross, marking the site of the ancient Benonis, was erected in 1712 at the expense of the Earl of Denbigh. It stands on an eminence, and originally consisted of four Doric columns, with a globe and cross on the summit: on the north side was placed this inscription, "Si veterum Romanorum vestigia quæras, hic cernas, viator. Hic enim celeberrimæ illorum viæ militares, sese mutuo secantes, ad extremos usque Britanniæ limites procurrunt. Hic stativa sua habucrunt Vennones & ad primum abhinc lapidem Castra sua; ad Stratam & ad Fossam Tumulum Claudius quidem Cohortis Præfectus habuisse videtur." The cross was partly destroyed by lightning in 1791. Cloudesly Bush, a tumulus, is in this parish.

COSBY, 7 miles S. from Leicester, contains 162 houses, and 883 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Little Thorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 15*s.*

COTTESBACH, 2 miles S. from Lutterworth, contains 21 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

DUNTON BASSETT, 4 miles N. from Lutterworth, contains 104 houses, and 460 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*

FOSTON, 6 miles S. from Leicester, contains 4 houses, and 24 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*

FROWLESWORTH, 5 miles N.W. from Lutterworth, contains 76 houses, and 301 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 10*s.*

GILLMORTON, 3 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 146 houses, and 718 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

KILBY, on a branch of the Soar, 6 miles S. from Leicester, contains 88 houses, and 409 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir Henry Halford, Bart. of Wistow Hall.

NORTH KILWORTH, or Kilworth Abbas, 5 miles E. from Lutterworth, contains 66 houses, and 391 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

SOUTH KILWORTH, on the river Avon and borders of Northamptonshire, one mile S. from the above, contains 97 houses, and 450 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

KIMCOTE, 3 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 103 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Willoughby de Broke. Cotes De Val is a hamlet of this parish.

KNAPTOFT, 7 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 6 houses, and 60 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 32*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland: the church is in ruins. The manor-house was probably built by John Turpin, in the reign of HenryVII., and enlarged by Sir William Turpin, in the reign of Elizabeth: a small part only of this remains near the ruined tower of the church. Shearsby is a chapelry, and Walton a hamlet of this parish.

LEIRE, 4 miles N.W. from Lutterworth, contains 88 houses, and 435 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

LUTTERWORTH, 13 miles S. from Leicester, and 89 miles from London, contains 444 houses, and 2102 inhabitants. The town is situated on the river Swift, and consists principally of three streets, leading to Leicester, Atherstone, and Coventry, the last of which is distant only 15 miles. The cotton-manufactory is carried on here to great extent. The market is on Thursday, and fairs are held 16th February, 2nd April and Holy Thursday, for horses, cows and sheep; and on 16th September, for cattle and cheese. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. Roesia de Verdon, and Nicholas, his son, in the reign of King John, built and endowed an hospital for a master and brethren, in honour of St. John the Baptist, which was valued at 26*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, per annum, and was in being in 1576, the 19th of Elizabeth, the mastership being then in the gift of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is a large and handsome structure, with a beautiful tower, and contains several ancient monuments. John Wicliff, a learned divine, and first champion of that cause which was afterwards called Protestantism, was patronized by the Duke of Lancaster, and by his favour presented to the living of Lutterworth, in the diocese of Lincoln, about 1370; and it was here that he advanced in his writings and sermons those opinions, which entitle him to the rank of reformer. He was here seized with a stroke of palsy, on Innocent's Day, 1384, while he was performing divine service in his church, and soon after expired in the 60th year of his age. His body was buried in the chancel, and there laid till his enemies violated the sanctuary of death. A decree of the Council of Constance pronounced him to have died an obstinate heretic; and his bones were ordered to be dug up, if they could be distinguished from the bones of the faithful: the sentence was not put in act till 1428, when Fleming Bishop of Lincoln, by command of Pope Martin V., executed the decree of the Council. His remains were accordingly disinterred, then burnt, and afterwards cast into the river Swift. It is not now possible to ascertain whether any monument was ever erected to his memory. If any memorial had once marked the spot of his interment, it doubtless was destroyed at the same time. It is here said that the gown which Wicliff wore now covers the communion-table; and the identical pulpit in which he is said to have preached is also preserved.

About two miles westward from Lutterworth, the Roman road, Watling Street, divides this county from Warwickshire; it crosses the Swift at Bensford bridge, and the Avon at Dow bridge, near Calthorpe. It also crosses the river Anker near Witherley on the western side of the county.

MISTERTON on the river Swift, one mile E. from Lutterworth, contains 100 houses, and 593 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Poultney and Walcote. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Misterton Hall is the seat of ——— Franks, Esq. At Poultney was born Sir John Poultney, four times Lord Mayor of London, who died in 1349, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral.

OADBY, 3½ miles S.E. from Leicester, contains 182 houses, and 856 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

PEATLING MAGNA, 6 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 46 houses, and 228 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* Peatling Hall is the seat of John Clarke, Esq.

PEATLING PARVA, 4 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 30 houses, and 173 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SHAWELL, on the borders of Warwickshire, near the Watling Street, 3 miles S. from Lutterworth, contains 44 houses, and 209 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SWINFORD, 4 miles S. from Lutterworth, contains 95 houses, and 450 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Thomas Otway Cave, Esq. The church and lands at Swinford having been granted to the Knights Hospitallers, by Robert Rivell, before the first year of the reign of King John, a preceptory of that order was established here.

Westrill, an extra-parochial liberty, includes the hamlet of Stormore; and Stanford Hall, the seat of Thomas Otway Cave, Esq. originally situated in the parish of Stanford, in Northamptonshire, but has been rebuilt on the north side of the river Avon, which here divides the counties. The present mansion was completed by Sir Thomas Cave, Bart., about the year 1770. It stands in a fine park enlivened by the Avon, the banks of which have been extended in front of the house. Sir Thomas Cave of Stanford was created baronet 30th June, 1641. Sir Charles Cave, Bart., the last male representative of this ancient family, died in 1810: the principal part of the estates had previously passed by marriage, of the only sister of Sir Thomas Cave, Bart., who died in 1792, to Henry Otway, Esq.

WHETSTONE, 5 miles S. from Leicester, contains 173 houses, and 883 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a curacy.

WIGSTON MAGNA, 4 miles S. from Leicester, contains 437 houses, and 2089 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Company of Haberdashers, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London, alternately. Several fragments of antiquity have been discovered in this neighbourhood, and some petrifactions have also been found in the adjacent lime- and gravel-pits.

WILLOUGHBY WATERLESS, or Water Leys, 8 miles N.E. from Lutterworth, contains 67 houses, and 322 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

6. Sparkenhoe Hundred

Is bounded on the north by West Goscote hundred; on the east by Guthlaxton hundred; and on the south and west by Warwickshire.

APPLEBY, 6 miles S.W. from Ashby De La Zouch, contains 229 houses, and 1185 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Appleby Parva. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 9*s.* 4½*d.* In the chancel is a monument to the memory of the Rev. Abraham Mould, M.A., rector and patron of this church, ob. 1683. The advowson of the living continued in this family till 1736, when it passed by an heiress to that of Dawson of Long Whatton. This This parish is partly situated in Derbyshire. The free-school at Appleby Parva was founded by Sir John Moore, alderman of London, in 1699. It was built from a design by Sir ChristopherWren. The thirteen Governors meet on St. Barnabas-day.

ASTON FLAMVILLE, 2½ miles S.E. from Hinckley, contains 12 houses, and 80 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 12*s.* 8½*d.* In the chancel is a monument of Sir William Turvile, ob. 1549. Sketchley, a chapelry belonging to this parish, is very populous, containing 286 houses, and 1504 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Burbage or Burbach. The chapel is dedicated to St. Katherine.

BARDON PARK, in Charnwood Forest, 9 miles N.W. from Leicester, contains 10 houses, and 69 inhabitants. It is extra-parochial. In this park is Bardon Hill; the base, which is an extensive circumference, gradually rises to a great height. It is covered with underwood, and contains quarries of a hard stone, something like limestone. The prospect hence is very extensive, and the hill has been seen at the distance of fifty miles. Burton, the historian of the county, calls it the most noted land-mark of this country, and standing at the west end of a long tract of hills which lie almost east and west. Marshall, in his Agricultural Survey of Leicestershire, thus notices the hills of Charnwood: "Like the Malvern Hills, their style is singular; but the style of one is very different from that of the other. The Malvern Hills seen from a distance bear a most striking resemblance to the Atlantic Islands, towering up high and ragged, and on a near view appear as one large mountain fragment. The Charnwood Hills, on the contrary, seen obscurely, appear as an extensive range of mountains, much larger and of course much more distant than they really are. When approached, the mountain style is still preserved; the prominences are distinct, sharp, and most of them pointed with ragged rock. One of these prominences, Bardon Hill, rises above the rest; and though far from an elevated situation, comparatively with the more northern mountains, commands in much probability a greater extent of surface than any other point of view in the island. It is entirely insulated, standing every way at a considerable distance from lands equally high. The horizon appears to rise almost equally on every side: it is quite an ocean view, from a ship out of sight of land; at least more so than any other land view I have seen. The midland district is almost every acre of it seen lying at its feet. Lincoln Cathedral, at the distance of nearly sixty miles, makes a prominent object from it. With a good glass, the Dunstable hills, at little less than eighty miles, may, it is said, be distinctly seen. The Malvern Hills, May Hill, and the Sugar Loaf, in Monmouthshire, are distinctly in view. Enville, the Wrekin, and other hills in Shropshire and North Wales, are equally distinguishable: and the Derbyshire Hills, to the highest peak, appear at hand. An outline described from the extremity of the views would include nearly one-fourth of England and Wales. It may be deemed one of the most extraordinary points of view in nature." Bardon Park was formerly the inheritance of the Lords Beaumont. It afterwards, on the attainder of its possessor Francis Lord Lovell, came to King Henry VIII., who in 1528 granted it to Thomas Grey Marquess of Dorset. On the attainder of Henry Duke of Suffolk, in 1552, it again becamc the property of the Crown. In 1569, Bardon Park was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Henry Hastings and Henry Cutler, from whom it was alienated to the family of Hood, who were originally settled at Wilford near Nottingham, but became resident at Bardon in the time of Henry VIII., though not seised thereof till the reign of Elizabeth. The estate is now the property of William Hood, Esq., Bardon Park is the residence of his brother Edmund Hood, Esq. The lordship contains about 1300 acres.

BARWELL, 2 miles N.E. from Hinckley, contains 223 houses, and 1095 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 10*s.* 7½*d.* The hamlets of Potter's Marston and Stapleton are in this parish.

Bassett House is extra-parochial.

CADEBY, 1½ mile S.E. from Market Bosworth, contains 34 houses, and 167 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.* 2½*d.* The township of Osbaston is partly in this parish. Osbaston Hall is the seat of Mrs. Twisleton.

CONGERSTON, 3 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 32 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 6½*d.*

CROFT, 6 miles N.E. from Hinckley, contains 53 houses, and 297 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

DESFORD, 5 miles E. from Market Bosworth, contains 158 houses, and 864 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* The hamlet of Barron's Park is in this parish.

ELMSTHORPE, 2½ miles N.E. from Hinckley, contains 4 houses, and 46 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

ENDERBY, 5 miles S.W. from Leicester, contains 234 houses, and 1143 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

FENNY DRAYTON, 6 miles N.W. from Hinckley, contains 25 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 5½*d.* George Fox, founder of the Society of Quakers, was born at this place in 1624. Here also resided the ancestors of the poet Drayton.

GLENFIELD, 4 miles N.W. from Leicester, contains 88 houses, and 430 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 9½*d.* At the time of Domesday survey it was part of the possessions of Hugo de Grentumainell. From him it came by marriage to Robert Bossu, and was held in demesne by the Earls of Leicester; but Robert FitzParnel granted a great part of it to a family who assumed the name of the place, and continued residents here many years. George Henry, Earl of Stamford and Warrington, is the present lord of the manor, as parcel of his manor, and ecclesiastical peculiar, exempt jurisdiction of Groby. The church consists of a small tower, the upper part being wood, covered with slate; a nave; two small transepts, separated from the nave by low pointed arches; and a chancel. On the south side of the chancel are four stone seats; and on the north side of the altar is a piscina. The chapelries of Braunstone and Kirby Muxloe, and the liberties of Frith Braunstone, Glenfield Frith, and Kirby Frith, are in this parish.

Braunstone Hall, the seat of —— Winstanley, Esq., formerly the property of the Hastings' family, was early in the 17th century purchased by an ancestor of the present proprietor. The mansion was erected about the year 1775, and is situated in a finely wooded part of the county. At Kirby Muxloe are ruins of the castellated mansion of the Hastings, consisting of part of the gate-house, and an embattled stair-case turret. The gate-house is covered with bushes and ivy, and is much reduced in height. It was constructed with brick, with stone dressings, the stone of which is supposed to have been procured from the Dane Hills, about two miles distant, between Kirby and Leicester. The remains of the walls, extending on each side of the gate-house, have a deep moat in front, close to the building. On the spandrils of some of the arched doorways are the initials W. H., for William Hastings. In 1474, Sir William Hastings obtained license to impark 2000 acres of land, of his manor of Kirby Muxloe, and to build a castellated mansion; and there can be no doubt that this building was erected in consequence of this grant. Lord Hastings devised Kirby Muxloe to his widow, and in 1608 the mansion appears to have been inhabited by Walter Hastings, son of Francis Earl of Huntingdon. From the Hastings family the manor came by purchase into the possession of Sir Robert Bannaster, and was afterwards bought by William Woollaston, of Shenton, one of whose descendants sold it in 1778 to Clement Winstanley, Esq. of Braunstone, the father of the present owner. There is a tradition that the unfortunate Jane Shore resided at Kirby Muxloe, under the protection of Lord Hastings.

GOPSALL Liberty, 4 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, is extra-parochial. Gopsall Hall, the seat of Earl Howe, was built in the year 1765 by Alderman Westly of Leicester. It was afterwards occupied by the late Charles Jennens, Esq., who dying without issue in 1773, left Gopsall to his nephew Penn Assheton Curzon, Esq., who had married a niece of Mr. Jennens. This gentleman beautified the interior of the mansion with a large collection of pictures, and ornamented the grounds with temples, &c. In one of these is a statue, by Roubiliac, of Religion, holding in one hand the Book of Life, and in the other a cross. This temple is consecrated to Edward Holdsworth, author of Muscipula, and Remarks and Dissertations on Virgil. In accordance with the design of the building is a cenotaph, on which is a a figure of Genius, represented in a pensive attitude, Virgil's bust, and a Latin inscription, complimentary to the talents of Holdsworth. The mansion at Gopsall has recently undergone many internal alterations by the present noble owner. Amongst other apartments of large dimensions, is a very handsome private chapel, fitted up with cedar-wood, and the front of the altar made out of the famous Boscobel oak. In this chapel is a fine picture of the crucified Christ, by Vandyke. The park belonging to this mansion, and the estate, have been much enlarged by Lord Howe, and improved by planting, &c. The family of Curzon, is of great antiquity, being descended from Geraldine de Curzon, who came over with the Conqueror. Penn Assheton Curzon married Sophia Charlotte, daughter and co-heiress of Richard, late Earl Howe, K.G., who, on the death of her father, became Baroness Howe, and died, leaving two sons and one daughter. Richard William Penn, the only surviving son, is the present Earl Howe, who took the name and arms of Howe by royal sign manual in 1821.

HEATHER, 5 miles N. from Market Bosworth, contains 82 houses, and 411 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* Here was formerly a preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers, founded by Ralph de Greseley as early as the reign of King John: it was valued at the Dissolution at 39*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, and as part of the preceptory of Dalby, was granted 7th of Edward VI. to Oliver St. John and Robert Thornton. A coal-pit has been opened in this parish, which has increased the population.

HIGHAM ON THE HILL, 3½ miles N.W. from Hinckley, contains 106 houses, and 533 inhabitants, including the chapelry of Lindley. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 4½*d.* Lindley Hall is the seat of the Rev. — Hemings.

HINCKLEY, near the Watling Street, on the borders of Warwickshire, 13 miles S.E. from Leicester, and 99 miles from London, contains 1169 houses, and 5835 inhabitants, including the township of the Bond. It is an ancient and irregularly built town, said to be situated in the middle and on the highest common surface in England. Hence fifty churches may be clearly distinguished. The principal trade is the manufacture of stockings, which is carried on to a very considerable extent; the goods are of the commoner description, and the production furnishes employment for a vast number of persons in the adjacent villages. The town, under its ancient lords the Earls of Lancaster, certainly enjoyed the privileges of a borough, but having taken a decided part in favour of the House of Lancaster in the civil war, its privileges were forfeited to the conquering monarch of the House of York. The civil government is now vested in the mayor, constables, and headboroughs. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here occasionally: the market is on Monday; and on the 26th August is an annual fair, which is mentioned by Shakspeare, in the second part of King Henry IV. The other fairs are third Monday after Epiphany, Easter Monday, Monday before Whit Monday, and Whit Monday in the morning for horses, cows and sheep; and in the afternoon for pedlery and toys; and 28th Oct. for cheese and pedlery. An alien priory, founded by Robert Earl of Leicester, was given to Lyra, in Normandy, before 1173; it was afterwards annexed to Mount Grace, in Yorkshire; and at the dissolution of that priory it was granted to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The castle at Hinckley is said to have been inhabited by John of Ghent, but how long it has been demolished is not with certainty known. The walks and views about the town are pleasing and extensive: near the Bond end is a distant view of King Richard's field and Charnwood Forest: from Beacon Hill, about a mile in the road to Leicester, the woods extending from Burbach on the south and the opposite fields towards Barwell, form a pleasant rising. From the Lawns and Priest Hill, Coventry may be distinctly seen.

Dadlington and Stoke Golding are chapelries, and Wykin is a hamlet of this parish, which also includes the hamlet of Hydes pastures, in Warwickshire.

IBSTOCK, or Ibotstoke, 5 miles N. from Market Bosworth, contains 201 houses, and 1058 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester, is valued at 19*s.* 8*s.* 11½*d.* The chapelries of Hugglescote and Donnington on the Heath are in this parish. An ancient building of stone at Donnington is now used as a farm-house.

KIRKBY MALLORY, 4½ miles N. from Hinckley, contains 56 houses, and 296 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* It consists of an embattled tower, surmounted by a light and handsome pinnacle, a long nave, and a chancel. The parsonage, situated on a beautiful spot, commanding one of the finest views in the county, was built by the Rev. Clobery Noel; and it was altered and enlarged by his successor, the Rev. Rowney Noel, D.D., Dean of Salisbury. Kirkby Mallory is so called, from the Malorys, formerly lords of the manor; and their residence is supposed to have been at the Moats, the ruins of which are still remaining, being a few hundred yards from the village. The area in the centre, as well as the square canals of water that encircle it, are tolerably perfect; the whole being surrounded with majestic trees. From the Malorys the estate descended to the Noels; and Sir Verney Noel was created a baronet July 6th, 1660. Sir Edward Noel succeeded to the barony of Wentworth, of Nettlested, on the death of Lady Wentworth, 1745, and was created Viscount Wentworth, of Whellesburgh, 1762. On the death of Thomas Noel Viscount Wentworth, 17th April, 1815, the viscounty became extinct; but the barony descended to his sister Lady Milbanke, whose daughter Lady Byron is the next in inheritance.

The chapelry of Earl Shilton is in this parish, containing 339 houses, and 1771 inhabitants.

LEICESTER FOREST, 5 miles E. from Market Bosworth, and the same distance W. from Leicester, containing 11 houses, and 71 inhabitants, is extra-parochial.

MARKET BOSWORTH, 12 miles W. from Leicester, and 106 miles from London, contains 190 houses, and 1117 inhabitants. This town is situated on an eminence, in the midst of a country exceedingly fertile in corn and grass. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 55*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*; in the chancel is a fine monument of the Dixie family. Here is a free-school; and the petty sessions for the hundred are occasionally held here. The market, whence the town is distinguished, was obtained by Richard Harcourt, in the reign of Edward I., and is on Wednesday; the fairs are on 8th May, and 10th July. Sutton Heath, about two miles to the south-east of Bosworth, has obtained historical celebrity from having been the scene of the important battle between King Richard III. and Henry Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., where Richard lost his life and crown, on the 23rd August, 1485, after a most sanguinary conflict, which put an end to the long contention between the houses of York and Lancaster. In this battle were slain on the side of Richard, the Duke of Norfolk, Lord Ferrers of Chartley, Sir Richard Radcliffe, and Sir Robert Brackenbury. The principal person of Richmond's army that was slain was Sir William Brandon, his standard-bearer. The exact spot is ascertained by several pieces of swords, heads of lances, barbs of arrows, pieces of pole-axes, &c. said to have been found on the field. Sir Wolstan Dixie, of Bosworth, was created a baronet July 14th 1660. The chapelries of Barleston, Carlton, Shenton and Sutton-Cheney, and part of the townships of Barton in the Beans and Osbaston are in this parish. Bosworth House is the seat of Colonel Featherstone.

MARKFIELD, 7 miles N.W. from Leicester, contains 218 houses, and 1078 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Mayor of Hastings.

NAILSTONE, 4 miles N.E. from Market Bosworth, contains 73 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The chapelry of Normanton le Heath is in this parish.

NARBOROUGH, 5½ miles S.W. from Leicester, contains 141 houses, and 775 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*
Huncote is a hamlet of this parish.

NEWBOLD VERDON, 3 miles E. from Market Bosworth, contains 120 houses, and 576 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk.

NORTON JUXTA TWYCROSS, on the borders of Warwickshire, 6 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 70 houses, and 326 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.
Bilstone is a township of this parish.

ORTON ON THE HILL, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles N. from Atherstone, contains 76 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford.

PECKLETON, 6 miles N.E. from Hinckley, contains 52 houses, and 359 inhabitants, including the township of Tooley. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.*
Tooley Park is extensive.

RATBY, 5 miles W. from Leicester, contains 106 houses, and 614 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford. The township of Botcheston and Newton, and the chapelry of Grooby are in this parish, also Whittington Grange. William de Ferrers, brother of Robert Earl of Derby, had by gift of Margaret his mother, daughter and heiress of Roger de Quincey Earl of Winchester, the manor of Groby, and became the founder of the baronial families of Ferrers and Grey of Groby, now represented by the Earl of Stamford. The Castle of Groby is said to have been destroyed in 1176. In 1338, 12th of Edward III., Henry Lord Ferrers procured the grant of a weekly market for his town of Groby, which has long been disused. Grooby Hall is a seat of the Earl of Stamford; and at Grooby is also the seat of John Pares, Esq.

SAPCOTE, 4 miles E. from Hinckley, contains 133 houses, and 797 inhabitants. A house of industry for fifteen neighbouring parishes is here established. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* It was built by Simon Basset in the reign of Henry III., and a chantry was here founded by Sir Ralph Basset. The baronial family of Basset were formerly lords of the manor.

SHACKERSTONE, on the river Sence, 4 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 59 houses, and 270 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* Odestone is a hamlet of this parish.

SHARNFORD, on a branch of the Soar, 4 miles S.E. from Hinckley, contains 99 houses, and 460 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SHEEPY MAGNA, on the river Sence, 4 miles N.E. from Atherstone, contains 84 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 9½*d.* The chapelry of Ratcliffe Culey is in this parish.

SHEEPY PARVA, 6 miles S.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 17 houses, and 87 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 9½*d.*

SIBSON, or Sibbesdon, 4 miles S.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 56 houses, and 237 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 18*s.* 11½*d.* The township of Upton is in this parish.

SNARESTONE, or Snarkestone, 7 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 75 houses, and 356 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Batholomew, belongs to the rectory of Swepston.

STONEY STANTON, 4 miles E. from Hinckley, contains 95 houses, and 533 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* The soil of this parish consists of clay and iron-stone in due proportion for dairy, tillage, and sheep pasture; it was enclosed in 1764.

TEMPLE HALL, 4½ miles S.W. from Market Bosworth, containing 10 houses, and 105 inhabitants, is an extra-parochial district in Leicester Forest.

THORNTON, 6 miles N.E. from Market Bosworth, contains 71 houses, and 405 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* The chapelries of Bagworth and Bagworth Park, and the townships of Stanton-under-Bardon and Horsepool, are in this parish.

THURLASTON, 6 miles N.E. from Hinckley, contains 101 houses, and 513 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* The liberty of Newparks and the hamlet of Normanton Turville are in this parish.

TWYCROSS, 5 miles N.W. from Market Bosworth, contains 64 houses, and 373 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

WITHERLEY, 8 miles N.W. from Hinckley, contains 89 houses, and 396 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.* The hamlet of Atterton is in this parish.

LINCOLNSHIRE.—Midland Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Yorkshire; on the east by the German Ocean; on the south by Cambridgeshire Northamptonshire, and Rutlandshire; and on the west by Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, and Yorkshire. Its greatest length is about seventy-five miles, and its breadth forty-five miles, being in circumference about two hundred and sixty miles. The inhabitants were called Coritani by the Romans, and it formed part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis. The Roman stations are considered to have been Ad Abum, Winterton; Aquis, Aukborough; Bannovallium, Horncastle or Ludford; Causennæ, Ancaster, or Great Ponton; Lindum, Lincoln; and Vainona, Wainfleet. A Roman road to Wragby and Newcastle ran through the north-western part of the county. During the Saxon Heptarchy, Lincolnshire formed part of the kingdom of Mercia. The castles of its earlier lords were at Bourne, Bolingbroke, Caistor, Horncastle, Scrivelsby, Somerton, Sleaford, Stamford, Tattershall and Torksey. This county contains one city and county town, Lincoln; thirty-one market towns; six hundred and thirty parishes; 53,813 houses, and 283,058 inhabitants; and returns twelve members to Parliament; two for Boston, two for Grantham, two for Grimsby, two for Lincoln, two for Stamford, and two for the shire; the present members for which are Sir W. A. Ingilby, Bart., and C. Chaplin, Esq. of Blankney Hall. Lincolnshire is in the province of Canterbury, and in the diocese of Lincoln. It is divided into three separate districts, called Lindsey, Kesteven, and Holland; of these, Lindsey is much the largest, and occupies nearly one half of the county; extending from the sea, on the east, to Nottinghamshire on the west; and from the river Witham, which intersects the county from east to west, to the river Humber on the north. The soils are much varied, and its geographical features marked by many inequalities. High lands, called the Wolds, occupy a long ridge of the county from Spilsby to the Humber, having a rich tract of marsh-land to the east, between it and the sea; Lincoln Heath, another ridge of high land, extends up the western side of this division from Lincoln to Brigg. The greater part of the last district, formerly appropriated almost solely to the breeding of rabbits, has within the last few years been enclosed, and brought into profitable cultivation. At the north-western extremity of the county is the river island of Axholme, a low tract of land, which by the operations of embanking and draining has been made one of the most fertile spots in the kingdom. The river Trent bounds the eastern side of this island, whilst the rivers Idle, Don, and Torn, environ the southern and western sides. The district of Kesteven is bounded on the north and north-east by the river Witham, which separates it from Lindsey; on the east by the division of Holland; on the south by the river Welland, which divides it from Northamptonshire; and by parts of Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, and Rutlandshire, on the west. The features of this district are very diversified, and the soils greatly varied: the western part is fine arable, as well as grazing land, and parts of it are well wooded. The variations of soil are nearly all in a longitudinal direction from north to south. The south-western part contains some fine parks, abounding with woods and was at a former period denominated a forest, in which state it continued till the time of King Henry III., when it was disafforested. The eastern side of the division is low land, partaking of the nature of the adjacent marshes in the district of Holland. Kesteven having been enclosed, drained and cultivated, contains much rich and valuable land. Holland constitutes the south-eastern side of the county, and is bounded by parts of Cambridgeshire and Northamptonshire on the south; the division of Lindsey on the north; on the east by the German Ocean; and on the west by part of Kesteven. Nearly the whole of this tract of country appears to have been once inundated by the sea, being preserved solely by its vast embankments: the pools also have been drained by means of deep canals with sluices. Most of the drains or dykes of this district communicate with, and empty themselves into the rivers Welland and Witham; the channels of which have been widened and altered in various places. Holland is divided into Upper and Lower; both of the divisions consisting entirely of fens and marshes, intersected by numberless dykes and canals, and crossed by raised causeways, called Droves. The lower or southern division is only preserved by its mounds from constant inundations. The air of these tracts is not considered wholesome, and the water is of a brackish nature; whence the inhabitants are obliged to make reservoirs for rain-water; yet their industry has produced comfort and opulence, by forming excellent pasture-land out of the marshes, which are found capable of yielding large crops of corn. Prodigious flocks of geese are bred in the fens, and here the principal decoys in England for wild ducks, teal, widgeon, and other aquatic birds, which afford the chief supply to the metropolis. Wild geese, grebes, godwits, whinibulls, coots, ruffs and reeves, avosets or yelpers, knots, and dottrels, and a great variety of other species of water-fowl, breed here in amazing numbers. The general period for working in the decoys lasts from October to February. Lincolnshire may be said to present four great natural features, each of which has a specific and nearly uniform character: these are the heaths and sandy lands, the wolds, the marshes and the fens. The heaths, north and south of Lincolnshire, are calcareous hills, which from their brows command many very fine views. Lincoln heath, now almost entirely enclosed, is a tract of high country, in which the soil is a good sandy loam, and excellent turnip and barley land. This hill slopes sharply to the west, the declivity of the same nature, but generally good: and this extends some distance in the valley, where the soil is rich loam, containing much pasturage. Between Gainsborough and Newark, for twenty-five miles, is a large tract of flat sandy soil, which has been enclosed and drained. The wolds extend from Spilsby, in a north-westerly direction, for about forty miles to Barton on the Humber. They are, on an average, nearly eight miles in breadth, and consist of sand and sandy loam, upon flinty loam, with a substratum of chalk, particularly about Louth, and in the extensive rabbit-warrens between Gayton and Tathwell; but rich upland pastures are seen, pleasingly intermixed.

From Binbrook to Caistor, with the interruption of Caistor Moor, a sandy soil prevails; and thence sand, with an intermixture of clay, till they change into the rich loam, of which Barton Field, a space of 6000 acres, principally consists. Beneath this line, and parallel with the eastern shore, lies an extensive tract of land at the foot of the wolds, reaching from

Barton to Wainfleet, of various breadth, from five to ten miles, called the Marsh, which is secured from the encroachments of the sea by embankments of earth, and is agriculturally divided into north and south marshes, by a difference in the soil, called Middle Marsh. The first occupies a large extent of rich salt lands; the second, clay of inferior value; and the intervening land is a rich brown loam, stretching across from Beelsby to Grimsby. The Fens form one of the most prominent features of this county, and consist of lands, which, at a distant period, have been inundated by the sea, and by human art have been recovered from it. In the summer season they exhibit immense tracts, chiefly of grazing land, intersected by wide deep ditches, which answer the end both of fences and drains. These are accompanied generally by parallel banks, upon which the roads pass, and are intended to keep the waters, in flood time, from overflowing the adjacent lands. They not only communicate with each other, but also with larger canals, called dykes and drains, which in some instances are navigable for boats and barges. At the lower end of these are sluices, guarded by gates, termed Gowts. During the summer, numerous flocks and herds are seen grazing over this scene, where the pastures afford a rich and luxuriant herbage. Many of the fens actually lie below the level of the sea; some are lower than the beds of the rivers; and all are beneath the high water of their respective drains. In winter these fens are mostly covered with water; but during the summer the inhabitants are greatly distressed for it. Some of what are called the fens are in a state of waste, and serve for the breeding and rearing of geese, which are considered the fenman's treasure, a highly valuable stock. They breed numerous young, which quickly become saleable; the feathers and quills of a large flock amount to a very considerable sum. The rabbit-warrens of this county were formerly much more extensive than at present, and have gradually yielded to the plough. Lincolnshire has been long famous for a fine breed of horses, although the adjoining county, York, has now the credit for rearing many really bred in this county. The neat cattle are remarkably large, but not peculiarly famed for their fine symmetry. The sheep are also very large, and perhaps the most profitable stock; as vast numbers are bred and fattened, and large quantities of wool are obtained to supply the demand of the manufacturing districts. Within these few years great numbers of spinning schools have been established. Rabbits are esteemed highly advantageous in situations unfit for the plough. Few manufactures are in this county; but rabbits' fur and goose feathers are objects of considerable merchandize. The eminences and views most remarkable in the county are, Aukborough Cliff, Yarborough Camp, Brocklesby Mausoleum, Lincoln Cathedral, Belmont Tower, Boston Church Tower, Gonerby, Thunnington, Leadenham, Skirbeck, and Tathwell Hills. The principal rivers in the county are the Ancholme, Bain, Don, Glen, Humber, Idle, Limb, Lud, Mowbeck, Nen, Rasen, Slea, Torn, Trent, Waring, Welland, and Witham. The Ancholme is a small river, rising in the Wolds, near Market Rasen, and flowing northward by Brigg, whence it is navigable to the Humber, and falls into it some miles below the junction of the Trent. The Witham derives its source near South Witham, a village about ten miles north of Stamford, and pursues a line deviating but a little from the north by Grantham to Lincoln; it then turns eastward, and joined by a stream from the wolds in the north, proceeds southward through the Fens to Tattershall, where it is met by the Bain from Horncastle, and afterwards to Boston, soon falling into the great bay between Lincolnshire and Norfolk, at the mouth of Foss Dyke Wash. Foss Dyke is an artificial trench, extending about seven miles in length, from the Great Marsh, near the city of Lincoln, to the river Trent, in the vicinity of Torksey. This, which is the first canal of its kind in England, was made by King Henry I. in 1121, for the purpose of bringing vessels from the Trent to the city, as well as for making a general drain for the adjacent level; but it has since that period been many times altered and improved. The other canals are those of Caistor, Grantham, Grimsby, Horncastle, and Louth. Belton Park, near Grantham, is the seat of Earl Brownlow, the Lord Lieutenant of the County.

1. Elloe Wapentake, in Holland,

Is bounded on the north by Kirton Wapentake and Foss Dyke Wash; on the east by the German Ocean and Cross Keys Wash; on the south by Cambridgeshire and Northamptonshire; and on the west by Aveland Wapentake and Ness Wapentake.

COWBITT, 5 miles N. from Crowland, contains 99 houses, and 511 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Peakhill. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. It is situated in the midst of the fens.

CROWLAND, or Croyland, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 16 miles E. from Stamford, and 13 miles from Peterborough, contains 403 houses, and 2113 inhabitants. The town, formerly of great celebrity, now consists of three streets, on the banks of the river Welland, and a water-course called Catwater, having a communication with each other by a very ancient triangular bridge, which is regarded as an object of great curiosity. From the steep ascent of this bridge it is not used by carriages, which circumstance arises from the situation in which it is placed; and in times of flood had it not been considerably raised on the abutments, it would have been liable to be swept away by the torrent. The chief trade of the town consists in fish and wild fowl. By draining, a great improvement has been effected in the lands round Crowland; most of the ponds, with which this country formerly abounded, have been converted into corn-fields, producing grain of the best quality. Here are some curious engines for raising water, one in particular, throwing up 2400 tons an hour, which is moved by twelve sails. The market formerly held on Saturday is now disused. The fair, which used to continue for twelve days, is still held on St. Bartholomew's-day, 4th September, for cattle, hemp, and flax. Ethelbald, King of Mercia, founded here an abbey for Black Monks, in honour of St. Mary, St. Bartholomew, and St. Guthlac, in the year 716, which was burnt by the Danes in 870. King Edred, by the persuasion of Turketel, his chancellor, rebuilt the abbey about the year 948, which also was destroyed by fire in 1091. It was again rebuilt in 1112, under Abbot Joffred. The monastery from this period rapidly rose in fame, and the celebrity of its monks for their learning and piety procured for it most ample benefactions, when it progressively increased in wealth and splendour. Ingulphus, who had been made abbot by William the Conqueror, wrote a very curious and valuable history of this monastery from its foundation to 1091. He governed this abbey with great prudence, and protected its possessions from the rapacity of the neighbouring barons by the favour of his royal master, and here he died 1st Dec. 1109. The manor and estates belonging to the convent are said to have been bounded by certain stone crosses, most of which are now destroyed. One alone, called St. Guthlac's Cross, remains; it is of square pyramidical shape, tapering upward, but the top of the shaft is broken off. One of its faces bears an almost illegible inscription, in Roman capitals, which may be read thus: ALPHA · OMEGA —— HANC · PETRAM · GVTHLACVS · HABET · SIBI · METAM · which, connected with the symbol of the cross, and in allusion to Revelations, i. 8. conveys a sentiment like the following translation:

Christ the beginning and the end we own,
Though Guthlac here has placed his boundary stone*.

At the Dissolution the annual revenues of the abbey were valued at 1217*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*, and the estate was granted in 1550 to Edward Lord Clinton. The only remains at present, of the buildings connected with the monastery, is part of the abbey church, which is highly interesting to the architect and antiquary. The choir, central tower, transept, and the whole of the east end are down, but there are fine remains of the nave, west front, and the north aisle which is used as the parish church. It is dedicated to St. Bartholomew and St. Guthlac, and is a rectory, value 100*l.* The conventual buildings were situated on the southern side of the church, on land now growing hemp. The portion of the abbey church now used is said to have been built by Abbot Bardney in 1247. The nave is 144 feet by 28. The great western entrance has a pointed archway, and over it are the remains of the large western window. On the southern side of this front, part of the elevation shows the original architecture of the abbey, wherein the pointed forms are mixed with the Anglo-Norman character, by the intersection of the semicircular arches, and in the upper story the pointed arch is independent of the semicircular. The nave and aisles are said by some authors to have been erected by William de Crowland, master of the works in the time of Abbot Upton, between 1417 and 1427.

DEEPING FEN, 6 miles S.W. from Spalding, is an extra-parochial district, containing 53 houses, and 398 inhabitants. There is no church in the district, which consists of a tract of ground inclosed from the fens belonging to several parishes, partly in the hands of several adventurers for draining, and partly held by persons who are free from drainage expenses by the nature of their tenure; all the land is free from every other charge of assignment, and from land-taxes and ecclesiastical demands.

FLEET, or Flete, 2 miles E. from Holbeach, contains 137 houses, and 776 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 15*l.* The tower of this church, which is crowned with a spire, is distant about twenty feet from the western end of the nave.

GEDNEY, 3 miles E. from Holbeach, contains 286 houses, and 1442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 30*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The edifice is the lightest and most airy, and perhaps the loftiest of any in this part of the county. In the north aisle are considerable remains of ancient painted glass, and on the south door is a very curious lock, with an inscription. Over the door also is carved in oak,

Pax·Christi·sit·hvic·domvi·et·omnibvs·inhabitantibvs·
in·ea.—hic.reqvies.nostra.

and under four blank shields the words in.hope.

In the nave is a monument to Adlard Welby, ob. 1576, and Cassandra his wife. Gedney Hill, or Fen end, is a chapelry of this parish. Several Roman remains have been found here; and in the neighbourhood are three encampments, forming a triangle, within view of each other, supposed to have been Roman castellæ.

HOLBEACH, 47 miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 699 houses, and 3621 inhabitants. The town is chiefly disposed in one long irregular street, with two smaller ones branching from it. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs 17th May, second Tuesday in September, for horses, pedlary and toys. Amongst the ancient foundations of this town was a hospital, endowed by Sir John de Kirketon, in honour of All Saints, about 1351, for a warden, chaplain, and fourteen poor persons. A grammar-school was also founded here by license from Edw. III. A free-school was established here about 1669, by George Farmer, Esq., the revenues of which have been much increased by subsequent bequests. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. It is a large and handsome structure, the tower surmounted by an octangular ornamented spire. The northern porch is curious from its having two circular towers, with embattled parapets at its extreme angles. Within the church are monuments of the Irby and Littlebury families. Henry Rands, or, as he was called, Holbeach, Bishop of Lincoln, in the reign of Edward VI., was born here. William Stukeley, D.D., an antiquary of much celebrity, was also born here, 7th Nov. 1687, and had the first part of his education at the free-school, under Edward Kelsal. He died in 1765, æt. 77.

* Hamper's Observations on Hoar-stones.

MOULTON, 4 miles W. from Holbeach, contains 324 houses, and 1629 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 28*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

PINCHBECK, 2 miles N. from Spalding, contains 419 houses, and 2099 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 40*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* Pinchbeck, or Otway Hall, is an ancient Tudor edifice, surrounded by a moat. The chimneys are singularly lofty, and the gables are enriched with pinnacles; it is now occupied by a farmer.

SPALDING, on the river Welland, 41 miles S.E. from Lincoln, and 101 from London, contains 1070 houses, and 5207 inhabitants. This very ancient town consists of four principal streets, formed by the roads to Market Deeping, Crowland, Holbeach and Boston. The Welland is navigable to Spalding for sloops of 50 tons burden, and smaller craft convey goods to the adjacent towns. It is a member of the port of Boston. Fat cattle form the chief trade of the town, and are bred in the neighbouring marsh-lands. Yorkshire and Norfolk long wool is also an article of commerce. The market on Tuesday is very considerable for grain and cattle, and fairs are held 27th April, for hemp and flax, horned cattle and sheep; 29th June, 28th Aug., 28th Sept., and 6th Dec., for cattle, sheep, and pedlary. The market-place is spacious, and at the north-west side is the court-house, where the petty sessions for the Wapentake are held once a week, the courts-leet and baron, and the court of sewers. It was built at the expense of John Holstan, and the under part is appropriated to shops, the rents of which are applied to the use of the poor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of trustees. It was built in 1284, and has a fine spire, and a beautiful porch, added about the end of the fifteenth century.

Thorold de Brokenhale founded here a priory, which he made a cell to Crowland Abbey, in 1052. This house in succeeding times became a monastery of great consequence. It was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, and at the Dissolution it was valued at 1217*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* The estate was granted in 1539 to Sir John Cheke. The site of the abbey extended over part of the town westward of the market-place, but a few walls are the only remains; a gravel road across the fens was the communication between the abbey and the manor-place of Thetford, near the Glen river, ten miles S.W. A grammar-school was endowed here in 1588 by John Blanche, and another, called the petty school, was founded in 1682 by Thomas Wellesby. Near this town is the greatest heronry in England.

LONG SUTTON, or Sutton St. Mary, 5 miles E. from Holbeach, contains 467 houses, and 2390 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 40*l.* Sutton Bourn, or Sutton St. Nicholas, is a hamlet; and Sutton St. Edmund and Sutton St. James are chapelries of this parish. At Long Sutton, the nearest road from Boston to Lynn is continued over Cross Keys Wash, about three miles eastward from the Wash House to the Cross Keys House in Norfolk: the Wash can only be passed at stated times, and a guide is required, as it is considered dangerous. In 1216, King John lost his baggage in passing it on his march from Lynn to Swineshead; the precise spot is still called King's Corner.

TYDD ST. MARY, 9 miles S.E. from Holbeach, contains 149 houses, and 776 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It is situated on the banks of the Nen, which here separates this county from Norfolk.

WESTON, 4 miles N.E. from Spalding, contains 96 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 50*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WHAPLODE, 2 miles W. from Holbeach, contains 249 houses, and 1204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. At the west end of the south aisle is a monument of Sir Anthony Irby and Elizabeth his wife; there is no date to the inscription, but he died in 1623. Aswick Grange, formerly a residence of the abbot of Crowland, and Whaplode Drove, a chapelry, are in this parish.

2. Kirton Wapentake, in Holland,

Is bounded on the north by Horncastle Soke and Bolingbroke Soke; on the east by Aveland Wapentake and the German Ocean; on the south by Elloe Wapentake; and on the west by Langoe, Aswardhurn, and Aveland Wapentakes.

ALGARKIRK, 9 miles N. from Spalding, contains 105 houses, and 602 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 50*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*

BICKER, 8 miles W. from Boston, and 9 miles N.E. from Folkingham, contains 135 houses, and 627 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Gantlet. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

DONINGTON, 8 miles N.E. from Falkingham, and about the same distance S.W. from Boston, contains 343 houses, and 1638 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Norththorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and Holy Rood, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Here is a market on Saturday; and fairs, 26th May, 17th Aug. 6th Sept., and 16th Oct. for horses, cattle, flax and hemp. The town is noted for a large sale of hemp and hemp-seed, and enjoys a considerable corn trade. A free-school was founded and endowed here by Thomas Cowley, in 1718.

FOSS DYKE, 8 miles S. from Boston, contains 79 houses, and 424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy. The church is modern, but the font is ancient and very curious; it is sculptured with a representation of St. Michael and the Dragon, (Rev. chap. xii.) and has a handsome lofty cover. At Foss Dyke Wash a bridge of oak was built by Pacey and Colly, of Boston, in 1813, leading to the opposite side of the estuary, in the road to Holbeach.

FRAMPTON, 3 miles S. from Boston, contains 120 houses, and 688 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Sandholme. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

GOSBERTON, 8 miles N. from Spalding, contains 339 houses, and 1618 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Cheal, Rightbolt and Westthorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 45*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. Rightbolt was a cell to Semperingham Abbey.

KIRTON, 4 miles S. from Boston, contains 324 houses, and 1692 inhabitants. Here are fairs, 18th July and 11th December, for all sorts of cattle and merchandise. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Mercers' Company of London. The church was mostly rebuilt in 1805. The font is octangular in plan, and is inscribed, Orate pro aīa Alani Burton qui fontem istum fieri fec. A.D. MCCCCV. Brothertoft, 6 miles northward, on the banks of the Witham, is a chapelry of this parish. North Forty Foot Bank, or Fen Corner, Coppin Sike, and Ferry Corner, are extra-parochial places, arising from the improved drainage.

QUADRING, 8 miles S.W. from Boston, contains 131 houses, and 704 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

SURFLEET, on the river Glen, 4 miles N. from Spalding, contains 142 houses, and 812 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* Here is a free-school, founded by Lady Fraizer, and an alms-house, endowed in 1641, by Zachary Burton, Thomas Briggs, William Briggs, and Richard Searle, yeomen of this town. A copy of the grant of Sir Philip de Rey, of the Common Marsh to this parish, about the reign of Henry I., is printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1791.

Cressy Hall, formerly the seat of the Heron family, was rebuilt by Sir Henry Heron, K.B., who died in 1695, and is buried in the church. Here is one of the largest heronrys in the kingdom.

SUTTERTON, 6 miles S. from Boston, contains 196 houses, and 1014 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SWINESHEAD, 6 miles W. from Boston, contains 345 houses, and 1696 inhabitants. The town consists of one principal street in the road to Spalding, and several smaller ones branching from its eastern side. Here is a market on Thursday, and fairs on the first Tuesday in June, and 2nd October, for horses, beasts, and sheep. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. It is a handsome spacious building, with a lofty chancel, in which is a monument of Sir John Lockton, ob. 1610. Robert de Greslei founded here an abbey of Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, in 1134. This abbey was the resting-place of King John, 11th Oct. 1216, after he had lost his baggage, in crossing the marshes in his progress from Lynn to Sleaford Castle, whence he was removed to Newark Castle, where he died. Gilbert de Holland, Abbot of Swineshead, was contemporary with, and the particular friend of, St. Bernard, whose life he wrote. He died in 1280. At the Dissolution, this abbey was valued at 175*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1551 to Edward Lord Clinton. There are no remains now left of this once elegant and magnificent building. Near its site is erected a considerable mansion, the residence of —— Calthorpe, Esq. The abbey was situated about half a mile eastward of the town; the moated areas cover a large space of ground, which with a considerable quantity of land adjoining forms the abbey farm. Harts Grounds, or Gibbet Hills, an extra-parochial district, is adjacent to Swineshead parish.

WIGTOFT, 6 miles S.W. from Boston, contains 135 houses, and 637 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

WYBERTON, 2 miles S. from Boston, contains 86 houses, and 487 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leodegar, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

3. Skirbeck Wapentake, in Holland,

Is bounded on the north by Bolingbroke Soke and Candleshoe Wapentake; on the south and east by the German Ocean; and on the west by Kirton Wapentake.

BENNINGTON, 5 miles N.E. from Boston, contains 87 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*

BOSTON, the chief town of Holland division, 34 miles S.E. from Lincoln, and 117 miles from London, contains 2176 houses, and 10,330 inhabitants. It is situated near the mouth of the river Witham, over which is an elegant iron-bridge, erected by Rennie, in 1806, and is a large well-built town. The market-place is spacious. Markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, which are well supplied with all kinds of provisions, especially sea and river fish. The fairs are 4th May, for sheep chiefly; 12th Aug. the town fair; 30th Nov. for horses, lasting four days; and 11th Dec. for beasts. All the neighbouring country is marsh land, which is extremely rich, feeding vast numbers of sheep and oxen. The port of Boston, anciently famous as a staple of wool, has a considerable foreign and coasting trade in corn, particularly oats. Barges navigate the Witham as far as Lincoln; and the enclosure of the waste lands, which are extra-parochial, have very much contributed to the prosperity of the town. Over the Market Cross is a chamber, appropriated to the purposes of the public business, where the petty sessions for the Wapentakes of Kirton and Skirbeck are held every Wednesday. The Corporation consists of a mayor, who is chief clerk of the market and admiral of the liberties, a recorder, deputy recorder, 12 aldermen, 18 common councilmen, a town-clerk, judge advocate, coroner, and other officers. Arms, crests and supporters were allowed and confirmed to the Corporation, 1st Dec. 1568. Arms, Sable, three ducal crowns, in pale, or. Crest, on a woolpack, a ram couchant, argent. Supporters, two mermaids ducally crowned, proper.

The borough of Boston returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon it in the reign of Edward VI., and is vested only in the mayor, aldermen, common council, and freemen of the borough resident therein, paying scot and lot, and claiming their freedom by birth or servitude. The present members are J. Malcolm, Esq. and J. Wilks, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a vicarage, value 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the mayor and burgesses. The edifice is supposed to be the largest parochial church, without cross aisles, in the kingdom; being 300 feet long within the walls, and 100 feet wide. The ceiling is of oak. The chancel has stalls on each side, the seats of which are enriched with grotesque carvings. The altar-piece, of the Corinthian order, contains a copy of Rubens' celebrated picture, "The Descent from the Cross," by P. Mequignon, the gift of Richard Smith, Esq. The tower of this church may be considered as one of the most lofty and highly decorated in England. It is stated to have been begun in 1309, on the authority of Dr. Stukeley, and the first stone of the edifice to have been laid by Dame Margery Tylney. The architectural style, however, does not correspond with that of the period to which it is ascribed; a circumstance which has been accounted for by supposing that the edifice was many years in progress, and that the superstructure was much posterior to the foundation, and that the style corresponds with that prevailing when the building was completed. It is also said to have been designed on the model of that of the great church at Antwerp; but the arrangement of the different stories more resembles that of Louth, which was erected at the commencement of the 16th century. The tower is divided into four stories above the basement. In the lower story is the arch, opening into the body of the church, and the great west window. The next story has two pointed windows, in each face, with ogee caps and finials; and in the story above is a single window in each face. This part of the tower is surmounted by an embattled parapet, and the whole is terminated by an octangular lantern, connected with the square portion of the tower by flying buttresses. The parish library is over the south porch of the church; it was founded by Anthony Tuckney. There were formerly several guilds at Boston, as those of St. Botolph, Corpus Christi, the Blessed Mary, St. Peter and St. Paul, St. George, and the Holy Trinity. The guild of the Blessed Mary was the most flourishing, and had a chapel in the church. In 1510 it supported a grammar-school. The possessions of this guild were granted to the Corporation in 1554, who now use its Guildhall for their corporate and judicial proceedings. A Dominican or Black friary was founded here in 1221; a Carmelite friary in 1301; an Augustine friary, by one of the Tylney family, about the year 1307; and a Franciscan or Gray friary, by the Easterling merchants, in 1332; but of a priory said to have been dedicated to St. Mary, nothing certain is known. The commercial importance of Boston was much reduced at the Dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII., who, however, raised the town to the rank of a free borough. Queen Mary endowed a grammar-school in 1554, and it was erected by the mayor and burgesses in 1567. In 1643, Boston being a place of considerable importance was strongly fortified for the King, from whom it was soon wrested, when it was styled by Fairfax, the Key of the Associated Counties, and made the headquarters of Cromwell's army. John Fox, the martyrologist, was born here in 1517,—the very year that Luther began to oppose the errors of the Church of Rome. Kyme Tower, about 2 miles eastward from Boston, is sometimes called Richmond Tower, from its being situated on land belonging to that honor; and has the name of Rochford Tower, from having belonged to that family. The estate appears to have passed to the Kyme family in the 15th century, and the tower does not seem from its style of architecture to be older than the reign of Elizabeth. The whole is of brick, and quadrangular, having an octagonal turret at the south-east angle. It was formerly moated, the remains of which may be traced; but the fine avenue of trees on the road to Boston has been destroyed.

BUTTERWICKE, 4 miles E. from Boston, contains 78 houses, and 482 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

FISHTOFT, 3 miles S.E. from Boston, contains 87 houses, and 456 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlake, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

FRIESTON, 3 miles E. from Boston, contains 180 houses, and 862 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* Upon laying the foundation of the new abbey church, at Crowland, in 1114, Alan de Croun granted the advowson of this church to it. The convent placed here a prior and some black monks in a cell, dedicated to St. James, which was subordinate to that great monastery. Frieston was the head of the barony of Alan de Croun, who held sixty-one lordships, all or most of them in this county. Upon the sea-shore, three miles distance, are bathing-houses.

LEAKE, 8 miles N.E. from Boston, contains 288 houses, and 1417 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Oakham-school, in Rutlandshire.

LEVERTON, 7 miles N.E. from Boston, contains 105 houses, and 544 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SKIRBECK, on the river Witham, 1½ mile S.E. from Boston, contains 206 houses, and 982 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 34*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* Here was formerly an hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, which was granted with the manor, by Sir Thomas Multon, in 1230, to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, when some of that order settled here. It was granted as parcel of the preceptory at Malteby to Charles Duke of Suffolk, in 33 Hen. VIII. Skirbeck Quarter, in Kirton Wapentake, is a hamlet of this parish.

WRANGLE, 9 miles N.E. from Boston, contains 172 houses, and 995 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

4. Aswardhurn Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Flaxwell and Langoe Wapentakes; on the east by Kirton Wapentake; on the south by Aveland Wapentake; and on the west by Winnibriggs and Threo Wapentake.

ASGARBY, 3 miles S.E. from Sleaford, contains 12 houses, and 55 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

ASWARBY, 3½ miles N. from Falkingham, contains 20 houses, and 116 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The edifice has a very handsome tower and spire, and the font is curious, being of the age of Henry III. Aswarby Hall is the seat of Sir Thomas Whichcote, Bart. The park is spacious. Sir Jeremy Whichcote, Solicitor-General to the Elector Palatine, was created baronet by King Charles II., at Brussels, 2nd April, 1660; and the present possessor of Aswarby is the seventh baronet of the family.

AUNSBY, 6 miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 19 houses, and 105 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*

BURTON PEDWARDINE, 6 miles N.E. from Falkingham, contains 21 houses, and 124 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* Roger de Pedwardine rebuilt the church, and St. Mary's chapel on the north side; but the south aisle and St. Nicholas's chapel were built at the expense of the parish. The site of the mansion of the Pedwardines is called the Parks; and at Marham's, part of the estate of Orby Hunter, Esq. is a square moated area of about ten acres in extent, with vestages of buildings upon it.

EVEDON, on the river Slea, 2 miles N.E. from Sleaford, contains 13 houses, and 89 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*

EWERBY, 4 miles E. from Sleaford, contains 54 houses, and 315 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

GREAT HALE, 7 miles N.E. from Falkingham, contains 119 houses, and 577 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The tower is Norman, but exterior of the north aisle of this church, together with the south porch, are good specimens of the architecture of the reign of Richard II. Little Hale is a township of this parish.

HECKINGTON, 5 miles S.E. from Sleaford, contains 316 houses, and 1438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* It is a large and magnificent edifice, built about the reign of Edw. III. In the chancel are very highly enriched stalls and a piscina. Here is also a sepulchre, and a tomb of an ecclesiastic, of equally fine character; from these, as well as from the font, the thick coats of lime-wash, by which they were formerly covered and disfigured, have been removed through the good taste of the vicar. A part of this parish, formerly covered with water, having been drained and enclosed, now produces fine crops of grain.

HELPRINGHAM, 6 miles N.E. from Falkingham, contains 145 houses, and 693 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* It is a fine specimen of architecture of about the time of Edward III.; the spire more modern. In the chancel are three stalls and a piscina, and the font is rudely sculptured.

HOWELL, 5 miles S.E. from Sleaford, contains 12 houses, and 67 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.*

INGOLDSBY, 5½ miles W. from Falkingham, contains 58 houses, and 360 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Christ's College Cambridge. Near the village is a circular encampment, which comprehends an area of about 500 feet in diameter, and also several tumuli, called the Round Hills.

KIRKBY LE THORPE, 2 miles S.E. from Sleaford, contains 33 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, one mediety of which is valued at 5*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, and the other mediety, value 4*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

QUARRINGTON, 2 miles S.W. from Sleaford, contains 23 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*

SCREDINGTON, 3 miles S. from Sleaford, contains 56 houses, and 256 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

SILK WILLOUGHBY, 3 miles S.W. from Sleaford, contains 37 houses, and 197 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* The font is curiously enriched with interlaced semicircular arches; and there are some remains of an old manor-house.

OLD SLEAFORD, one mile S. from New Sleaford, contains 45 houses, and 215 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 10*s.* The ancient castle of Sleaford is now wholly levelled with the ground. John, eldest son of Sir William Hussey, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, in the reign of Henry VII., was created Lord Hussey, of Sleaford, by King Henry VIII. in 1529. He built here a noble house, but engaging in the common insurrection, when the feuds and differences about religion first broke out in the kingdom, he was attainted of treason, when his manor of Sleaford, and estates adjacent, were confiscated, and he himself beheaded at Lincoln in 1537. The attainder was afterwards reversed in Parliament, in the reign of Elizabeth, but neither the estate nor the honour were granted to his heirs. Lord Hussey's mansion is now a farm-house.

SOUTH KYME, 7 miles N.E. from Sleaford, contains 88 houses, and 516 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Newcastle. In the chancel is a slab, to the memory of Lord Talboys. Philip de Kyme built here, in the reign of Henry II., a priory for Black Canons, of the order of St. Augustine, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. At the Dissolution it was valued at 138*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1541 to Thomas Earl of Rutland and Thomas Tyrwhitt. Sir Gilbert Talboys was created Lord Talboys of Kyme, by summons to Parliament in 1536. At his death, the title became extinct. His wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Blount, of Kinlet, in Shropshire, afterwards married Edward Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, but by King Henry VIII. had a natural son, Henry Fitz Roy, who was created Duke of Richmond in 1525. North Kyme, in Langoe Wapentake, is a township of the parish.

SWARBY, 4 miles S. from Sleaford, contains 27 houses, and 143 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*

5. Aveland Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Aswardhurn Wapentake; on the east by Elloe and Kirton Wapentakes; on the south by Ness Wapentake; and on the west by Beltisloe, and a small part by Winnibriggs and Threo Wapentakes.

ASLACKBY, or Aslaby, 2 miles S. from Falkingham, contains 67 houses, and 318 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* A commandery of the Templars was founded here by John de Mareschal, in the reign of Richard I., which was afterwards given to the Knights Hospitallers; and as part of their possessions was granted in 1541 to Edward Lord Clinton, and Ursula his wife. An embattled square tower remains, which is of two stories. The lower story is vaulted with groined arches, having in the centre eight shields of arms. It adjoins a farm-house, now called the Temple. Here also formerly stood a castle, said to have been built by one of the Wakes. It is entirely destroyed, but the earth-works on the western side are nearly entire. The area within the outer moat is about eight acres in extent. The hamlets of Graby and Milthorpe are in this parish.

BILLINGBOROUGH, 3 miles E. from Falkingham, contains 162 houses, and 745 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

BOURNE, on the river Bourne, 35 miles S. from Lincoln, and 98 miles from London, contains 404 houses, and 2029 inhabitants. It is situated near Bourne Well Head, a spring remarkable for its purity and quantity, which is the source of the river running through the town. The tanning and woolstapling business is here very considerable, bnt there is no manufacture of importance. By the canal, hence to Boston, some trade is carried on with that port. The market is on Saturday, and annual fairs are held on 7th March, 6th May, 29th October, and 30th November, for horses and horned cattle. In the centre of the market-place is the town-hall, upon which are the arms of Cecil. The petty sessions for Kesteven are held here at Michaelmas and Christmas. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* The edifice had formerly two large square towers at the west end, one of which is nearly down. The western front of the church displays some fine remains of architecture as early as the reign of Edward I., with insertions made during a later period; and it deserves an attentive examination by the antiquary, on account of the alterations which it has undergone. The north and south aisles have Anglo-Norman arches. The font is octagonal, of plain design, with the following words in seven of the panelled compartments:—

Sup. oñe. nom̃. IHS. est. nom̃. qde.

It stands under the westernmost of the south aisle arches. An abbey was founded here by Baldwin Fitz Gislebert, about 1138, for monks of the order of St. Austin. It was dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, and the site was granted in 1538 to Richard Cotton. The abbey stood near the church, and the seat of Mrs. Pochin at Bourne Park occupies the site; some of the walls indeed appear to have been part of the original building. The late Sir Thomas Trollope, Bart. left this estate to his nephew George Pochin, Esq., by whom the present edifice was erected in 1764. There are no remains of the castle, the seat of the Wakes. William Cecil Lord Burghley was born at the house of his grandfather David Cecil, Esq., in this town, in the year 1520. At Bourne is the seat of Mrs. Digby. Cawthorpe and Dyke are hamlets of this parish. In the town is a medicinal spring.

DEMBLEBY, 5 miles N.W. from Folkingham, contains 11 houses, and 58 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lucia, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

DOWSBY, 6 miles N. from Bourne, contains 35 houses, and 201 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

DUNSBY, 4 miles N. from Bourne, contains 31 houses, and 190 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Governors of the Charterhouse, London.

FALKINGHAM, or Folkingham, 9 miles N. from Bourne, and 107 miles from London, contains 122 houses, and 759 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity adjoining a steep hill, and has a market on Thursday, and annual fairs on Ash Wednesday and Palm Monday for horses and sheep; 12th May for the same, and all sorts of shop goods; 19th June for horses and horned cattle; 3rd July for hemp, hardware, and pedlary; Thursday after Old Michaelmas, 10th and 22nd November, for horses, horned cattle, shop goods, and pedlery. The quarterly sessions are held here. The castle, supposed to have been built by Henry de Bellomonte, on the summit of the hill, immediately above the town, was destroyed by the Parliamentary forces during the civil wars. The new gaol, now called Falkingham Castle, has become the House of Correction for Kesteven. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*; it stands on the north-western side of the town, and consists of a nave, with north and south aisles, and a chancel. The south porch has a groined ceiling, with a chamber above it, and the western tower is handsome, crowned with eight crocketed pinnacles. South-eastward of the town is a large encampment, with a deep foss and lofty vallum, within the area of which is a square of raised earth, defended also by a foss, capable of being filled with water from an adjoining brook; and without the area, at the north-eastern angle, is a small enclosure, intended as an advanced work to secure the water for the use of the garrison.

HACEBY, 5 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 11 houses, and 65 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

HACCONBY, or Hackenby, 4 miles N. from Bourne, contains 50 houses, and 263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The hamlet of Stainfield is in this parish.

HORBLING, 4 miles N.E. from Falkingham, contains 91 houses, and 491 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The plan of the edifice is cruciform, with a tower at the intersection. The north aisle and north transept are good specimens of the architecture of the reign of Edward III., the last having in it a very rich corbel. The western front exhibits some remains of Anglo-Norman architecture, and a fine window, of the period of Henry VI. Some parts of the chancel also are Anglo-Norman, of which the piscina deserves particular notice. The font in this church is decorated with shields, charged with the emblems of the Crucifixion,—a frequent ornament on fonts.

KIRKBY UNDERWOOD, 5 miles N. from Bourne, contains 33 houses, and 167 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

LAUGHTON, or Loughton, one mile S. from Falkingham, contains 11 houses, and 76 inhabitants. The church is a ruin.

MORTON, 3 miles N. from Bourne, contains 111 houses, and 511 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Hanthorpe, or Harmthorpe, is a hamlet of this parish.

NEWTON, 4 miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 34 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 10*l.*

OSBOURNBY, 3 miles N. from Falkingham, contains 91 houses, and 428 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* The edifice has some fine architecture of about the period of Edward III. Nearly the whole of the old open seats in the church are still in existence; they are very richly carved, and scarcely two of them are alike. Over the screen, between the chancel and nave, are the remains of an ancient rood-loft, which has been enlarged, and is used as a gallery. The original staircase is still in use. The chancel contains some ancient stalls. The font is Anglo-Norman, and is ornamented with pillars and interlaced semicircular arches.

PICKWORTH, 2½ miles W. from Falkingham, contains 39 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*

RIPPINGALE, 5 miles N. from Bourne, contains 117 houses, and 611 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, in three parts, two of which are valued at 14*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, and the third part at 7*l.* 3s. 9*d.*

SCOTT WILLOUGHBY, 4 miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 2 houses, and 12 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Brownlow.

SEMPERINGHAM, 3 miles S.E. from Falkingham, contains 6 houses, and 43 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 2*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* This edifice is only part of the abbey church, the south transept and chancel having been destroyed. Gilbert de Semperingham founded the abbey about 1139 for a new order of canons, called after him Gilbertines. This monastery was the head of the order where the general chapters were held. It was valued at the Dissolution at 359*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1538 to Edward Lord Clinton. The monastery covered a large space westward of the church, now a moated area. Birthorpe and Pointon are townships of this parish.

SPANBY, 3½ miles N. from Falkingham, contains 13 houses, and 73 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy.

SWATON, or Swayton, 4 miles N.E. from Falkingham, contains 50 houses, and 298 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* The edifice is cruciform in plan, with a tower at the intersection. The nave and its side aisles are fine examples of the architecture of the reign of Edward III., particularly the western window, which is very large. The tower, raised on arches of an earlier period, is groined at the second story. The southern transept is partly destroyed, but the northern transept has a very fine window. The chancel presents a good specimen of the architecture of the reign of Henry III., and the eastern window is worthy of observation. The font is very curious, and is in excellent preservation.

THRECKINGHAM, 2 miles N. from Falkingham, contains 39 houses, and 202 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Stow. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. It is a large edifice, with a lofty spire, and the architecture is well worthy of examination. The font also is deserving of attention. In the church are several curious ancient monuments, one of the Fisher family, and one to Edward Dawson. Indications of Roman roads are found in the neighbourhood.

WALCOT, 2 miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 28 houses, and 152 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart. Here is a mineral spring. Walcot Hall is the seat of Thos. Golton, Esq.

6. Beltisloe Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Winnibriggs and Threo Wapentake; on the east by Aveland Wapentake; on the south by Ness Wapentake and Rutlandshire; and on the west by Grantham Soke and Leicestershire.

BASINGTHORPE, 3 miles N.W. from Corby, contains 21 houses, and 115 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Westby. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

BITCHFIELD, 2 miles N. from Corby, contains 29 houses, and 144 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

BURTON COGGLES, 2 miles N.W. from Corby, contains 44 houses, and 245 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

CASTLE BYTHAM, 5 miles S. from Corby, contains 99 houses, and 577 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop and the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral, alternately. The castle here was long held by the baronial family of Colville. The hamlet of Counthorpe, and the chapelry of Holywell, with Awnby, are in this parish.

LITTLE BYTHAM, one mile E. from the above, contains 49 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Medard, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop and the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral, alternately.

CAREBY, 7 miles N. from Stamford, contains 12 houses, and 51 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*

CORBY, 33 miles S. from Lincoln, and 8 miles S.E. from Grantham, contains 107 houses, and 581 inhabitants. The market here is on Thursday, and there are fairs on the 26th of August, and the Monday before the 10th of October, for horses and horned cattle. Here is a grammar-school, founded for the education of poor clergymen's sons. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*

CREETON, 3 miles S. from Corby, contains 11 houses, and 51 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

EDENHAM, 5 miles S.E. from Corby, contains 67 houses, and 394 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of Lord Willoughby de Eresby. This church was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Valle Dei, or Vaudey. It consists of a nave with aisles, and a chancel with a handsome square tower on the western front. The font is circular, and is surrounded by eight attached pillars with ornamented capitals, supporting small arches, and seems more ancient than the church, which may be assigned to the reign of Henry VI. chiefly; but some parts are certainly of an earlier date. The seats in the church are of oak, open at the ends, which are perforated in small quatrefoil compartments. In the aisles and chancel are several very fine monuments of the Bertie family. Robert Bertie Earl of Lindsey, ob. 1642; Montacute Bertie his son, ob. 1656; Richard Bertie Earl of Lindsey, ob 1686; Robert Lord Willoughby de Eresby, ob. 1701; Robert Duke of Ancaster and Kesteven, ob. 1728, by Scheemakers and Cheere; Peregrine Duke of Ancaster, ob. 1741; Peregrine Duke of Ancaster, ob. 1778, by Harris; and Robert Duke of Ancaster, ob. 1779. Grimsthorpe, Ellsthorpe and Scottlesthorpe are hamlets of the parish of Edenham.

Grimsthorpe Castle is the seat of Lord Willoughby de Eresby. The south-eastern tower of this mansion is ancient; within it is a stone staircase, leading to a chamber that has the appearance of having been erected as early as the time of Henry III.; but the principal part of the house was built, and the park laid out, in the reign of Henry VIII., by Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, who married the heiress of the Willoughby family. Fuller, speaking of Grimsthorpe, calls it an extempore structure, raised suddenly to entertain King Henry VIII. during one of his progresses through this part of the kingdom. The great hall built at this time was then hung with tapestry, which had come into the possession of the Duke by his first wife Mary Queen of France. About the same time the eastern and southern fronts were erected; these have embattled turrets at the angles; but the principal front of this mansion was built about the year 1723, from a design, and under the direction, of the celebrated Sir John Vanbrugh. This elevation is towards the north, and consists of a noble centre and two lofty wings, with a large court in front, which is guarded by two lodges, and entered by iron gates; hence is an avenue extending nearly a mile in length. On the south are the gardens and pleasure-grounds, and on the west a beautiful sloping lawn descends to the lake, beyond which is a rising ground, terminated by a grove of forest trees. The park, which is said to be 16 miles in circumference, is beautifully varied with noble and very spacious woods. In a valley within the park, about a mile from the house, is the site of Valle Dei, a Cistercian abbey, founded about 1251 by William Earl of Albemarle; three or four large sculptured stones are all the remains. The vicinity abounds with that inequality of surface, that diversified interchange of hill and dale, wood and lawn, which constitutes the picturesque in natural scenery. This estate descended to the late Lord Gwydir, in right of his wife Priscilla Barbara Elizabeth Lindsey, Lady Willoughby de Eresby, daughter and coheiress of Peregrine Duke of Ancaster.

GUNBY, on the borders of Leicestershire, 2 miles S.W. from Colsterworth, contains 29 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

IRNHAM, 2 miles N.E. from Corby, contains 30 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* On the north side of the chancel hath been a very ancient monument, with a canopy, but without inscription or arms. In the body of the church is a slab inlaid with brass, in memory of Andrew Luttrell, of Irnham, ob. Sept. 6, 1390. Irnham Hall, the seat of Lord Clifford, of Chudleigh, was built by Richard Thimelby, Esq., who became possessed of the estate by marriage with Elizabeth, the heiress of Godfrey Hilton, and died in 1531. It is of stone, in the form of the letter L, facing the south and east. On the eastern front a porch, of more modern date than the Tudor arch of the doorway, opens upon a lofty hall, 52 feet 10 inches by 29 feet 3 inches. The principal rooms contain a numerous series of portraits of the families of Thimelby, Markham, Conquest, &c.; amongst them is a fine full length of Thomas, first Lord Darcy, of Chich, Lord Chamberlain to Edward VI. A.D. 1551; painted by Gerbicius Flick; a whole length of Thomas Savage, first Earl Rivers; John Thimelby, Esq., 1688, by J. M. Wright; Benedict Conquest, Esq., by Romney; Henry VIII; Lord Arundell, by Romney; Mary Christina Lady Arundell, by Romney; and a portrait of Sir Francis Crane, exquisitely wrought in Tapestry; and also St. George and the Dragon, of the same manufactory, which was established at Mortlake, in the reign of James I. An ivory crucifix is also preserved here, which the tradition in the family asserts to have been the very same held by Mary Queen of Scots at her execution. Irnham Hall was devised to Lord Clifford by Lady Arundell, who died in 1813. The hamlets of Bulby and Hawthorpe are in this parish.

LAVINGTON, or Linton, 4½ miles N.E. from Corby, contains 20 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart. Hanby and Keisby are hamlets, and Osgodby is a township in this parish.

SKILLINGTON, on the borders of Leicestershire, 3 miles N.W. from Colsterworth, contains 67 houses, and 364 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral.

STAINBY, on the borders of Leicestershire, 2 miles S.W. from Colsterworth, contains 28 houses, and 158 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Harborough.

SWAYFIELD, one mile and a half S. from Corby, contains 44 houses, and 206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SWINSTEAD, one mile and a half S.E. from Corby, contains 54 houses, and 319 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WITHAM ON THE HILL, 5 miles W. from Bourne, contains 44 houses, and 246 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 1*s.* Manthorpe, Toft, and Lound, are hamlets of this parish.

NORTH WITHAM, 2 miles S. from Colsterworth, contains 35 houses, and 174 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Lebthorpe is a hamlet of this parish.

SOUTH WITHAM, on the borders of Rutlandshire, one mile and a half S. from the above, contains 59 houses, and 345 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, founded as early as the year 1164, to which Margaret Percy and Hubert de Rie were great benefactors. It came afterwards to the Knights Hospitallers, and as part of their possessions, called the Great Temple, was granted in 1562 to Stephen Holford. The edifice stood about half a mile northward of the village, and its site is now called Temple Hill, at the foot of which runs the river Witham, which has its source scarcely half a mile from the spot. The foundations of the building only remain, and they extend over several acres.

7. Boothby Graffo Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Lawress wapentake; on the east by Lincoln liberty and Langoe wapentake; on the south by Loveden wapentake; and on the west by Nottinghamshire. It is separated into high and low divisions.

HIGH DIVISION.

BOOTHBY, 8 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 30 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* Somerton Castle, in this parish, was built in 1305, by Anthony Bec, Bishop of Durham; the remains are now occupied as a farm-house. It appears that an outer and inner moat enclosed a rectangular area, the dimensions of which are about 251 feet by 200 feet. At the angles of this area are the ruins of four circular towers, which it is probable were formerly connected by intermediate buildings; the south-eastern tower is nearly entire. In this castle Sir Saier de Rochford, in 1359, engaged to keep the King of France a safe prisoner, for which service he was to be allowed two shillings a day. The castle is situated two miles westward of the village.

COLEBY, 7 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 54 houses, and 322 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Oriel College Oxford. Coleby Hall, the seat of Charles Mainwaring, Esq., stands upon Cliff-row, a high ridge of land near the High-street, an old Roman road, now used as a summer road to Lincoln; it is an old house, but has received many modern additions, and is surrounded by plantations. The grounds are entered by an arch, and the gardens contain a Doric temple, dedicated to the memory of the great Earl of Chatham; and another constructed on the model of the Temple of Romulus and Remus at Rome, by Sir W. Chambers, said to be his chef d'ouvre.

HARMSTON, 6 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 63 houses, and 333 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Harmston Hall is the seat of Benjamin Hart Thorold, Esq.

MORTON, consisting of only one house, is extra-parochial.

NAVENBY, 9 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 123 houses, and 625 inhabitants. Here are annual fairs, on the 18th of August, for horses, and on the 17th of October, for sheep and swine. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Christ College Cambridge.

SKINNAND, one mile westward from the above, contains 3 houses, and 14 inhabitants. The church is in ruins, but is a rectory, value 5*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*

SWINETHORP, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 8 miles W. from Lincoln, contains 7 houses, and 55 inhabitants. It is an extra-parochial hamlet.

WELBOURN, 9 miles N.W. from Sleaford, contains 93 houses, and 489 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 16*s.*

WELLINGORE, 10 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 141 houses, and 727 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral. Wellingore Hall is the seat of Colonel Neville.

LOW DIVISION.

AUBORN, on the banks of the river Witham, 8 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 39 houses, and 22 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* Haddington is a township of this parish, but is partly situated in that of South Hyckham.

BASSINGHAM, on the river Witham, 9 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 123 houses, and 613 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford.

BOULTHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 12 houses, and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

CARLTON LE MOORLANDS, 10 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 72 houses, and 294 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*

DODDINGTON, 6 miles W. from Lincoln, contains 20 houses, and 159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* Whisby is a township of this parish.

EAGLE, 7 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 56 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* A commandery of the Knights Templars was established here, by grant of the manor from King Stephen; it afterwards came to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and was valued at the Dissolution at 124*l.* 2*s.* per annum. It was granted in 1541 to Thomas Earl of Rutland, and Robert Tyrwhitt. The religious house, called Eagle Wood House, is extra-parochial; it stood on a rising ground, where are now two farm-houses; large banks and ditches are about the site. Eagle Hall is a hamlet of this parish.

NORTH HYCKHAM, on the river Witham, 5½ miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 51 houses, and 296 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SOUTH HYCKHAM, on the Witham, 2 miles S.W. from the above, contains 17 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Lincoln.

NORTON DISNEY, 11 miles S.W. from Lincoln, and 6 miles N.E. from Newark, in Nottinghamshire, contains 36 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* In the chancel is an ancient monument, with this inscription:—

Ici gist Joan que fust la femme mounsire Gillam Disni et file mounsire Nicolas de Lanceforte, Deu eit merci de sa alme. Amen.

In the church is also a slab, inlaid with brass, to the memory of William Disney, sheriff of London, 1532, and Richard Disney, his eldest son and heir, burgess for Grantham, 1554, and sheriff of this county, 1557 and 1566.

NORTH SCARLE, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 10 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 95 houses, and 434 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*

SKELLINGTHORPE, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 7 miles W. from Lincoln, contains 70 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

STAPLEFORD, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 6 miles N.E. from Newark, contains 35 houses, and 213 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

SWINDERBY, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 8 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 69 houses, and 365 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

THORPE ON THE HILL, 6 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 48 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

THURLBY on the Witham, 9 miles S.W. from Lincoln, contains 17 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. German, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Carleton cum Thurlby, in the cathedral of Lincoln.

8. Flaxwell Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north and east by Langoe wapentake; on the south by Aswardhurn wapentake; and on the west by Loveden wapentake.

ANWICK, 4 miles N.E. from Sleaford, contains 50 houses, and 246 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*

ASHBY, 6 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 25 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Hybald, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*

BLOXHAM, or Bloxholme, 4 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 18 houses, and 109 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

BRAUNCEWELL, or Branswell, 3 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 8 houses, and 77 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

CRANWELL, 4 miles N.W. from Sleaford, contains 26 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

DIGBY, 5 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 50 houses, and 277 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

DORRINGTON, 4 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 56 houses, and 284 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart.

LEASINGHAM, or South Lessingham, 2 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 50 houses, and 259 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Roxholm, or North Lessingham, is a hamlet of this parish.

NORTH RAUCEBY, 3 miles W. from Sleaford, contains 23 houses, and 252 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.*

SOUTH RAUCEBY, 2 miles W. from Sleaford, and 1 mile S. from the above, contains 47 houses, and 255 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ROULSTON, or Rowston, 5 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 19 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*

RUSKINGTON, 3 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 131 houses, and 678 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NEW SLEAFORD, 16 miles S. from Lincoln, and 116 miles from London, contains 436 houses, and 2094 inhabitants. The town is situated on the Slea, a rivulet which rises in the vicinity and joins the Witham at Chapel Hill, and consists of three principal streets, formed by the roads from Grantham to Tattershall, and from Market Deeping to Lincoln. The market is on Monday, and the fairs are on Plough Monday, Easter Monday, Whitsun Monday, the 13th of August, and 20th of October. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Sleaford, in Lincoln Cathedral, which is in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The edifice was built in 1271, by Roger Blunt, and Roger Brickham, merchants, of Sleaford; it consists of a chancel, nave, transept, and north and south aisles, with a tower, surmounted by a spire, 144 feet in height. The western front of the church is elegant in its design and enrichments, and in the chancel are several monuments of the family of Carr. Joseph Carr founded and liberally endowed a free-school here, in 1603, and also a hospital for twelve poor men. Holdingham is a hamlet of this parish. The Sleaford navigation, by means of which a communication is formed with Boston, commences from the river Witham, near Chapel Hill, passes along the river Kyme Eau, and Sleaford mill-stream, to New and old Sleaford. About four miles eastward from Sleaford is Haverholme Priory, the seat of Sir Jenison William Gordon, Bart. The grounds occupy an area of about 300 acres, constituting an island formed by two branches of the Slea. Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, granted the manor to the Cistercian monks of Fountain's Abbey, in Yorkshire, about 1137, who, however, soon removed to Louth Park; and the Bishop afterwards granted the island to the Gilbertines of Semperingham, who settled here in 1139. At the Dissolution the priory was valued at 88*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1538 to Edward Lord Clinton. Sir Jenison William Gordon, of Haverholme, was created baronet 24th August, 1764. Many additions were made to the remains of the ancient priory in 1788 by Sir J. W. Gordon, Bart.

TEMPLE BREWER, or Temple Bruern, 7 miles N. from Sleaford, is the site of a preceptory of Knights Templars, founded before the year 1185. At the Dissolution it was valued at 184*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and was granted in 1541 to Charles Duke of Suffolk. The district, containing 5 houses, and 52 inhabitants, is extra-parochial.

9. Grantham Soke

Is bounded on the north by Winnibriggs and Threo wapentake in a very irregular manner; on the east by the same, and Beltisloe wapentake, which last bounds it on the south; on the west it is bounded by Leicestershire, but extends to Belvoir Castle.

BARKSTON, 4 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 81 houses, and 416 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Grantham, in Salisbury Cathedral. Here is a free-school, founded by one of the Newton family.

BELTON, 2½ miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 30 houses, and 178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The chancel was rebuilt by Lady Brownlow, who died in 1721. In a south window is some painted glass, representing subjects in scriptural history; it is modern. It contains several monuments of the Brownlow and Cust families. The font is rudely sculptured with figures, in compartments; one of which alludes to the name Bell Town. Belton Park is the seat of Earl Brownlow, lord-lieutenant, custos rotulorum, and vice-admiral of the county. The estate, which is very extensive, devolved to Richard Brownlow, prothonotary of the court of Common Pleas, in 1620; he rebuilt the tower of the church in 1637. His son Sir John Brownlow, of Belton, was created a baronet the 26th of July, 1641. The mansion was rebuilt in 1685, from a design by Sir Christopher Wren; and the founder, Sir John Brownlow, the third baronet of the family, had licence in 1690 to form a park of his lands in Belton, Londonthorpe, and Telthorpe, which he inclosed with a wall, five miles in circumference; and having made numerous plantations, it was considered one of the most beautiful seats in the county. King William III., in his progress through the northern counties, after the death of the Queen, was entertained at Belton House, October 29, 1695. Sir John Brownlow, the fifth baronet, was created Viscount Tyrconnel and Lord Charleville in 1718; and amongst other improvements here, laid the foundation of a valuable library, and formed gardens of great extent and magnificence. The straight walks and clipped hedges, it has been found necessary to alter, and the grounds have since received every embellishment that taste can confer on the natural beauties of the situation, which is picturesque, and abounds with a diversified interchange of wood and dale, hill and lawn. The estate descended to Sir John Cust, Bart., in 1754, from his mother, Anne, sister of Viscount Tyrconnel; and his son Sir Brownlow Cust was created Lord Brownlow, of Belton, May 20, 1776. The late James Wyatt made several alterations in the mansion for this nobleman. Lord Brownlow was created Viscount Alford and Earl Brownlow September 30, 1815; his lordship is colonel of the South Lincoln militia, recorder of Boston, F.R.S., &c. In the neighbourhood of Belton, considerable remains of buildings, tesselated pavements, and other indications of a Roman station, have been discovered. From Belmont Tower are fine views; Lynn and the Norfolk cliffs are visible, as well as Nottingham Castle, the vale of Belvoir, &c.

BRACEBY, 5 miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 23 houses, and 97 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

COLSTERWORTH, 8 miles S. from Grantham, contains 147 houses, and 703 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of South Grantham, in the cathedral of Salisbury. On the south side of the embattled tower of the church is this inscription: "Thomas de Somerbi & fit 1305." The arches on the northern side of the nave are of Anglo-Norman architecture, but all the others are pointed. Sir Isaac Newton was born in the manor-house of Woolsthorpe, a hamlet of this parish, on Christmas-day, 1642. This house was repaired in 1798, and a marble tablet fixed in the room where he was born, with the lines by Pope:

> " Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night,
> God said, Let Newton be, and all was light."

Newton's study, several dials made by him on the wall, and the apple-tree which suggested his system of gravity, are still remaining. Twyford is also a hamlet of this parish.

DENTON, on the borders of Leicestershire, 6 miles S.W. from Grantham, contains 103 houses, and 557 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Grantham, in the cathedral of Salisbury. It contains several monuments of the Welby family, who have resided at Denton from the time of King Henry VIII., whence they came from Gedney, near Holbeach. In the village is an almshouse, endowed by William Welby, Esq., in 1653, and also a school, maintained at the charge of the family. Sir William Earle Welby, of Denton, was created baronet 27th June, 1801. Denton House, the seat of Sir William Earle Welby, Bart., stands on a fine elevation, in a park much admired for its beautiful undulations. It is adorned with fine woods and most luxuriant plantations, and is not deficient in water. On the estate is St. Christopher's well, a spring much frequented on account of the medical virtue ascribed to its water, which is pure, and similar to that at Malvern. In 1727 a mosaic pavement was discovered in Denton fields, extending 30 feet; it was composed of white, red, and blue tessellæ, and is supposed to indicate the site of a Roman villa, near which is an ancient via, now called Salter's Road.

GREAT GONERBY, or Gunnerby, 2 miles N. from Grantham, contains 174 houses, and 743 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Sebastian, is a curacy; it has a beautiful stone spire, and contains a monument of Robert Tyling, ob. 1500. Here is an ancient building, said to have been a religious house.

GRANTHAM, situated on the western side of the river Witham, 25 miles S.W. from Lincoln, and 110 from London, contains 730 houses, and 4148 inhabitants. The castle formerly stood near the point where the Mow beck joins the Witham, but no remains exist, and the only trace of it is found in the name of the adjoining street, Castlegate. The three other principal streets of the present town are Westgate, Watergate, and Swinegate. The town is governed by an alderman, a recorder, twelve common burgesses, a coroner, an escheator, twelve second men, who are the common council, and six constables. The arms of the borough are, Chequy or and azure, within a border sable, charged with eight trefoils slipped argent. The general sessions of the peace for the town and soke are held by warrant of the alderman, directed to the bailiff of the liberties, who acts as sheriff of the town and soke, the sheriff of the county having no authority within this district. Grantham sends two members to Parliament, which privilege was conferred by Edward IV., and the right of election vested in the freemen of the borough not receiving alms or charity, who at present consist of about 400. The members returned for the existing Parliament are Sir M. J. Cholmeley, Bart., and G. E. Welby, Esq. There is a market on Saturday, which is abundantly supplied with corn, and provisions of all sorts; and annual fairs on Monday before Palm Sunday, called Caring fair, for horses, horned cattle and sheep; on Ascension-day, called Holy Thursday fair, for horses and sheep; on 10th July, St. Peter's day; 26th October, St. Wolfran's day; and 17th December, St. Nicholas's day, for horses and horned cattle. The church, dedicated to St. Wolfran, is a vicarage, value in medieties, the north, 19*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, and the south, 17*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the prebendaries of North and South Grantham, in the cathedral of Salisbury. This venerable structure is much admired for the height and elegance of its spire, and is built throughout of incomparable workmanship; the total height of the steeple is said to be 273 feet. It contains many fine monuments; and the font, which is octagonal, is richly sculptured with the seven sacraments in relievo, and saints on the pedestal. It has been engraved in the Archæologia, to illustrate Gough's Account of Ancient Fonts. Here was a convent of Franciscan or Gray friars, founded in 1290; the site of which was granted in 1546 to Robert Bocher and David Vincent. A commandery of Knights Templars is now the Angel Inn, which takes its sign from the figure sculptured on its front.

Manthorpe, Little Gonerby, Harrowby and Spittlegate, are townships of the parish of Grantham.

The Grantham canal begins on the eastern side of the town, and passes Harlaxton, the point at the foot of Woolsthorpe hill, Stainwith, Redmile, Belvoir Vale, Barkstone, Plungar, Harby, Long Clawson to Hickling; thence it passes through Kinmoulton, Colston Basset, Cropwell Bishop, and joins the Trent between Holme Pierrepoint and Radcliffe, in Nottinghamshire. From Grantham to the Trent by this canal is 30 miles, with a fall of 148 feet.

HARLAXTON, 3 miles S.W. from Grantham, contains 74 houses, and 389 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Peter, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of South Grantham, in Salisbury Cathedral. Harlaxton Hall is the seat of William Gregory de Ligne Gregory, Esq.; it is an ancient mansion, but is about to be rebuilt after a chaste and elegant design, in the early Tudor style, by Salvin.

LONDONTHORPE, 3 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 37 houses, and 195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

GREAT PONTON, or Paunton-on-the-Witham, 3½ miles S. from Grantham, contains 72 houses, and 418 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Grantham, in Salisbury Cathedral. The tower of the church was built in 1519, at the expense of Anthony Ellys, Esq., whose arms and motto, "Thynke and Thanke God of all," are sculptured in various parts of it. For air the country hereabouts has always and deservedly been reckoned the Montpellier of England; for water, wood, heath, and prospect, it may be thought the Frascati.—Phil. Trans.

SAPPERTON, 4½ miles N.W. from Falkingham, contains 14 houses, and 55 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Sir William Earle Welby, Bart.

SOUTH STOKE, or Stoke Rochford, 6 miles S. from Grantham, contains 13 houses, and 94 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew and St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of South Grantham, in the cathedral of Salisbury. It contains some very curious and ancient monuments. Stoke Park, the seat of Edmund Turnor, Esq., was built in 1655. North Stoke and Easton are hamlets of this parish. Easton Hall the seat of Sir Montagu John Cholmeley, Bart., was nearly rebuilt in 1805; the staircase window, containing armorial and emblematical subjects, was painted by Willement. The house stands in a beautiful valley, near the great north road. Sir Montagu Cholmeley, of Easton, was created baronet 25th Feb. 1806.

10. Langoe Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Lawress wapentake and Wraggoe wapentake; on the east by Gartree wapentake; on the south by Flaxwell and Aswardhurn wapentakes; and on the west by Boothby Graffo wapentake and Lincoln liberty. It is separated in two divisions.

First Division.

BILLINGHAY, 7 miles N.E. from Sleaford, contains 158 houses, and 851 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 14*s.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. At Catley, or Catteley, about a mile westward from the village, Peter de Billinghay founded a priory, in the reign of Stephen, for nuns and brethren of the Semperingham order, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary. It was valued at 38*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1539 to Robert Carr, of Sleaford. There are no remains of the building, but its site is perceptible. A brook of excellent water runs by the close in which the priory stood. Dogdyke is a township, and Wallcot a hamlet, of this parish.

KIRKBY GREEN, 7 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 14 houses, and 68 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

TIMBERLAND, 8 miles N.E. from Sleaford, contains 79 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. Martin is a hamlet, and Thorpe Tinley a township, of this parish.

Second Division.

BLANKNEY, 9 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 71 houses, and 495 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Charles Chaplin, Esq. Blankney Hall is the seat of Charles Chaplin, Esq. M.P. for the county. At the Green Man on Lincoln Heath, three miles westward from the village, the Lincoln club, consisting of the most distinguished gentlemen of the county, was established about 1741. The busts of the principal members, with their armorial ensigns, were placed in the club-room, which was built at the time by Thomas Chaplin, Esq. of Blankney.

DUNSTON, 7½ miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 77 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. About 2½ miles W. from the village is Dunston pillar, about 100 feet high, erected by D. F. Dashwood, Esq., in 1751, for the purpose of directing travellers over Lincoln Heath. From the lantern on its summit is a very extensive prospect. When the heath was a wide waste, the roads were intricate, and it was then of great utility; but the enclosures and improvements since made have rendered it unnecessary, and it must now be considered as a monument of the public spirit of the founder. Dunston hospital, anciently founded for leprous persons, was situated on the heath by a valley, a little southward of the pillar. Even the marks of the foundation scarcely remain, the whole having been cleared, when the site was made arable; it occupied about three acres in extent.

METHERINGHAM, 10 miles N. from Sleaford, and 8½ miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 94 houses, and 626 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfred, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NOCTON, 6½ miles S.E. from Lincoln, and 12 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 68 houses, and 376 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Nocton Park is the seat of Viscount Goderich. Here Robert D'Arcy, in the reign of Stephen, built a priory of Black Canons, in honour of St. Mary Magdalen. At the Dissolution it was valued at 52*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk, and again in 1569 to Sir Henry Stanley Lord Strange. By the Stanley family the priory was converted into a residence; but it was afterwards taken down, and not any part now remains, besides the foundation. The present mansion was built by Sir William Ellys, Bart., in the 17th century. The prospects from the grounds are varied and extensive, and near the house is a chesnut-tree, one of the finest in England.

POTTER HANWORTH, 6 miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 56 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SCOPWICK, 8 miles N. from Sleaford, contains 41 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

WASHINGBOROUGH, on the river Witham, 3 miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 100 houses, and 478 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Heighington is a township of this parish.

11. Lincoln Liberty, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Lawress wapentake, in Lindsey; on the south and east by Langoe wapentake; and on the west by Boothby Graffo wapentake.

BRACEBRIDGE, 3 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 22 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* Heyning's Nunnery is near Lincoln bargate toll-bar, in this parish; the foundation only remains.

BRANSTON, 4 miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 135 houses, and 702 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

CANWICK, 3 miles S.E. from Lincoln, contains 35 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the trustees for the Mercers' Company, London. Canwick Hall is the seat of C. D. Sibthorpe, Esq., M.P.; it is a modern mansion, having been built by the late possessor Colonel Coningsby Waldo Sibthorpe, M. P., who died 9th March, 1822.

THE CITY OF LINCOLN, 131 miles from London, contains 1743 houses, and 8466 inhabitants. It is situated on the side of a high hill, which slopes with a steep descent on the south, where the river Witham flows at its base. The city chiefly consists of two large streets, through one of which passes the road to Boston from Newark, and through the other, the road from Wragby to Louth. Great improvements have been made in the approaches to the city, and a new market-house was erected within the last thirty years. It has a great trade in corn and wool with Yorkshire, whence is obtained coal. The market is on Friday, and the annual fairs are held on Friday in the Easter week; Tuesday, after 11th April, for sheep and pedlery; 5th July, last Wednesday in July, and every alternate Wednesday, for cattle and sheep; 6th October, and 28th November, for horses, cattle, sheep and pedlery. A commodious hall is appropriated for the purpose of holding the assizes, and a town-hall for the transaction of the business of the Corporation, which consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, two sheriffs, twenty-eight common councilmen, and four chamberlains, who have a recorder, deputy recorder, steward of the courts of Borough Mote, town clerk, four coroners and inferior officers. The arms of the Corporation are Argent, on a cross gules, a fleur de lis or. Their seal represents a castle with five towers, and the arms placed above the gate. The city is a county of itself, having subject to it four townships in the neighbourhood, called the Liberty of Lincoln. This was granted in the third year of George I.; its jurisdiction, extending twenty miles round, a privilege unequalled by that of any city in the kingdom. It returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred by Edward I., the right of election being vested in the citizens and freemen, amounting to about 1188. The present members are C. D. Sibthorpe, Esq., and J. Fardell, Esq. Lincoln contains the following parishes:—St. Benedict, a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of North Kelsey; the church, a little southward of High Bridge, is ancient, and contains a monument of Alderman Becke, of 1620. St. Botolph, a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of St. Botolph. St. John, in Newport, a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Dunholm; the church in ruins. St. Margaret in the Close, a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Haydor. St. Mark, a curacy, in the presentation of the Precentor of Lincoln. St. Martin, a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of St. Martin: the tower of this church was rebuilt in the last century by Alderman Lebsey; on the north side of the chancel is a monument of Sir Thomas Grantham and his Lady, of the date 1618. St. Mary le Wigford, a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Gretton: the tower of this church is of Anglo-Norman architecture; other parts show the style of the reigns of John and Henry VII. St. Michael on the Mount, a curacy, in the presentation of the Precentor of Lincoln. St. Nicholas, in Newport, a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter. St. Peter, at Arches, a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Peter, in Eastgate, a curacy, in the presentation of the Precentor of Lincoln, and Prebendary of Haydor. St. Peter, in Gowts, a curacy, in the presentation of the Precentor of Lincoln; this church has a lofty tower of Anglo-Norman architecture, with a rude figure of St. Peter on its western front: the font also is of high antiquity. St. Swithin, a curacy, in the presentation of the Precentor of Lincoln. The diocese of Lincoln was formerly two sees, Sidnacester in this county, and Dorchester in Oxfordshire. The first was united to Dorchester, and afterwards removed to Lincoln about the year 1075. This diocese is the largest in the whole kingdom, notwithstanding that the dioceses of Ely, Oxford, and Peterborough, were formerly parts of this see. At present it comprehends all Lincoln, Leicester, Huntingdon, Bedford, and Buckinghamshires and a part of Hertfordshire, in which are 1255 parishes, of which 577 are impropriations. It has six archdeaconries, Lincoln, Leicester, Bedford, Buckingham, Stow, and Huntingdon, and is computed to be worth 3200*l.* per annum. The cathedral, or minster, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints, is the pride and glory of the city, and possesses a situation of commanding eminence; it covers the summit of the hill, and rises in three lofty towers, which were originally surmounted by spires. The centre spire, higher than Salisbury, was blown down in 1547, and the spires of the two western towers were removed in 1808. The Rood tower, 300 feet to the top of the pinnacles, exceeds in height that of any tower in the kingdom, rising from the centre of the church, and not having a spire. It is a conspicuous object at the distance of 20 miles. The east end of the cathedral is seen to very great advantage; the principal window at this end was most probably the first of such large dimensions ever erected in England; none at least exist now, of so great a size and so early a date. Of all the ancient edifices of this description remaining in the kingdom, no one deserves the attention of a curious inquirer more than this. A great part of the cathedral is of Anglo-Norman architecture; while the nave and transept exhibit a very fine example of the lancet or acutely pointed style. The great western front was built by Bishop Remisius, and finished by Hugh of Burgundy. In 1254, Bishop Lexington added five arches beyond the upper transept. The central tower and choir were the work of Bishop Grostête, and the whole structure was completed by Bishop D'Alderby in 1306. The font, of Anglo-Norman style, is particularly worthy of observation. The cathedral was repaired about the year 1780, by Essex, at the expense of the chapter. Branching from the north side, are the cloisters, which communicate with the chapter-house; a decagon in plan, and has the roof supported by a single clustered pillar. To this cathedral belong, besides the bishop, a dean, precentor, chancellor, sub-dean, fifty-two prebendaries, four priests'-vicars, eight lay-vicars, an organist, seven clerks, eight choristers, and seven Burghurst chanters. The arms of the see are Gules, two lions passant gardant in pale or, on a cheif azure the Virgin Mary seated, with the infant Jesus, and a sceptre all or. There was also a Gilbertine priory, dedicated to St. Katharine; a Benedictine cell, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen; the priory of St. Bartholomew; Cantelupe College, &c. &c. Few places in the kingdom exhibit so many ancient remains as Lincoln; the dilapidated ruins of buildings appear in every direction, and there are still fragments of its castle.

WADDINGTON, 4 miles S. from Lincoln, contains 140 houses, and 701 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Lincoln College Oxford. Meer Hospital, 2½ miles E. from the village, is extra-parochial. The site of the ancient hospital is not exactly known; the modern stone built farm-house is on the estate of J. Manby, Esq. At the foot of the eminence on which it stands is a fine pond and spring of water.

12. Loveden Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Boothby Graffo wapentake; on the east by Flaxwell wapentake; on the south by Winnibriggs and Threo wapentake, and Grantham soke; and on the west by Nottinghamshire.

ANCASTER, on the river Witham, 7 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 86 houses, and 439 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The font is curious, it is circular, and is ornamented with attached pillars and interlaced arches. This village is situated on the Roman road Ermine Street, which is here called High Dyke; and it is said to have been a Roman station. Great quantities of coins of various emperors are found in the vicinity. Robert Bertie Marquess of Lindsey was created Duke of Ancaster and Kesteven 29th June, 1715. He was hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain of England.

BECKINGHAM, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 5 miles E. from Newark, contains 98 houses, and 430 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 41*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

LONG BENNINGTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 8 miles N.W. from Grantham, contains 150 houses, and 881 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. Here was founded a priory of Cistercian monks, about 1175, which was subordinate to the abbey of Savigny in Normandy; during the wars with France it was seized by Richard II., and granted to the Carthusians of St. Anne's, near Coventry. After the suppression of that order, it was given by Henry V. in 1421 to the priory of Mount Grace, and as part of the possessions of that monastery, was granted in 1542 to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

BROUGHTON BRANT, or Brent Broughton, on a branch of the Witham, 7 miles E. from Newark, in Nottinghamshire, contains 126 houses, and 596 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Richard Sutton, Bart. The edifice consists of a nave, with a clerestory, north and south aisles, and a chancel, with a tower at the west end, surmounted by a beautiful slender spire, about 170 feet in height; the architecture of the whole about the period of Edward III.'s reign. It contains an ancient monument of James De Aubeney.

Warburton, Bishop of Gloucester, was rector, and wrote his "Divine Legation" here.

CARLTON SCROOP, 6 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 21 houses, and 148 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* The lower part of the tower of this church is of Anglo-Norman architecture, and there is a large plain bold arch of that style opening into the nave. The font is curious from the ingenuity displayed in the form, which is square at the base, with an octagonal bowl. The east window of the chancel is a good specimen of the architecture of Edward III.'s reign, and has in its head some fine painted glass.

CAYTHORPE, 9 miles N. from Grantham, contains 111 houses, and 567 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Friston. The church, dedicated to St. Vincent, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*

CLAYPOLE, on the river Witham, upon the borders of Nottinghamshire, 5 miles S.E. from Newark, contains 114 houses, and 605 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, in two medieties, valued at 16*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, and the south, valued at 15*l.* 15*s.*

DRY DODDINGTON, situated on an eminence, 9 miles N.W. from Grantham, contains 38 houses, and 227 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

FENTON, on the borders of Nottinghamshire, 7 miles S.E. from Newark, contains 22 houses, and 99 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy.

FOSTON, 6 miles N.W. from Grantham, contains 80 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

FULBECK, 10 miles N. from Grantham, contains 99 houses, and 555 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* Hence to Leadenham is a very rich prospect over the vale of Trent to the distant lands that bound it.

HOUGH ON THE HILL, 8 miles N. from Grantham, contains 105 houses, and 533 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Brandon and Gelston. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the reign of Henry II., about the year 1164, here was founded a priory of Austin canons, subordinate to the abbey of St. Mary, de voto, at Cherburgh in Normandy, which was seized by Richard II., and granted first to the priory of Spittle on the Street, in this county, and afterwards to the Carthusians of St. Anne's near Coventry. It was restored to Cherburgh in 1399, but with other alien priories was suppressed in the reign of Henry V., and granted to the priory of Mount Grace in Yorkshire. In 1541 the estate was granted to John Lord Russell.

HOUGHAM, 7 miles N. from Grantham, contains 60 houses, and 290 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan.

LEADENHAM, or Long Ledenham, 9 miles N.W. from Sleaford, contains 116 houses, and 574 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* The petty sessions are held here.

MARSTON, 6 miles N. from Grantham, contains 72 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

NORMANTON, 7 miles N.E. from Grantham, contains 40 houses, and 189 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

STRAGGLESTHORPE, on a branch of the Witham, 8 miles S.E. from Newark in Nottinghamshire, contains 18 houses, and 100 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy.

STUBTON, 9 miles N.W. from Grantham, and 8 miles S.E. from Newark in Nottinghamshire, contains 34 houses, and 174 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The edifice was rebuilt about the year 1800. Stubton Hall is the seat of Sir Robert Heron, Bart.

WESTBOROUGH, on the river Witham, 8 miles N.W. from Grantham, contains 45 houses, and 227 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, in medieties, one value 20*l.*, the other, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

13. Ness Wapentake, in Kesteven,

Is bounded on the north by Aveland and Beltisloe wapentakes; on the east by Elloe wapentake, in Holland; on the south by Northamptonshire; and on the west by Rutlandshire.

BARHOLM, 5 miles N.W. from Market Deeping, and 6 miles E. from Stamford, contains 31 houses, and 154 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the trustees of Oakham and Uppingham schools.

BASTON, 4 miles N. from Market Deeping, contains 133 houses, and 682 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

BRACEBOROUGH, 7 miles N.W. from Market Deeping, contains 30 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

CARLBY, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 6 miles N. from Stamford, contains 35 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

DEEPING ST. JAMES, or East Deeping, on the Welland, one mile N.E. from Market Deeping, contains 316 houses, and 1385 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The church displays some fine remains of the architecture of Henry III.'s reign, and the font is more ancient. South-eastward of the church stands a large cross, and before the enclosures there were as many as four or five crosses in this parish. A small priory of Black monks was founded here in 1139, by Baldwin Fitz Gislebert, which was granted to Thorney Abby, and as a cell to that monastery was granted in 1540 to Thomas Duke of Norfolk. The present manor-house, a large stone built edifice, near the church, is said to be the remains of the priory. It belongs to Sir Thomas Whichcote, Bart.

MARKET DEEPING, 45 miles S.E. from Lincoln, and 90 miles from London, contains 150 houses, and 1016 inhabitants. This old town is situated on the northern side of the river Welland, and has a weekly market on Thursdays; and annual fairs on second Wednesday after 11th May, Wednesday before the 1st August, 10th Oct. and 22d Nov. for horses, live stock of all sorts, and timber. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlake, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here also was a priory, of which the parsonage-house, near the church, is said to be the remains. The entrance is groined and vaulted, but the other part of the house is comparatively modern.

WEST DEEPING, one mile westward from Market Deeping, contains 51 houses, and 302 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It has a fine tower and crocketed spire; and in the nave are some piers and arches of early date. The font is octagonal, of about the age of Edward III.; from the arms with which it is enriched, it was probably given to the church by one of the Wake family, after their intermarriage with the Beauchamps.

GREATFORD, 6 miles N.E. from Stamford, contains 35 houses, and 258 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Wilsthorpe is a chapelry of this parish. Greatford Hall is the seat of Dr. Willis.

LANGTOFT, 2½ miles N. from Market Deeping, contains 97 houses, and 485 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart.

STAMFORD, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 47 miles S. from London, contains 892 houses, and 5050 inhabitants. This town is situated on the northern bank of the river Welland, and is disposed in the form of a cross; its principal streets being built on the sides of the great north road, and on the road leading from Uppingham to Market Deeping, which here intersect each other at right angles. By the Welland, which is navigable to the town, there is a considerable trade in malt and free stone, and the neighbouring district is supplied with coals, and other articles. The Corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, town clerk, 12 aldermen, 24 capital burgesses, and other officers. The arms of the borough are, Gules, three lions passant gardant or, impaling chequy or and azure. The civil business of the town is transacted in the town-hall, a large structure built in 1776. Stamford possesses extensive privileges, is exempt both from the jurisdiction of the lord-lieutenant and the sheriff, and the inhabitants are not obliged to serve on juries out of the town, the mayor being the King's lieutenant of the town and its liberties. The custom of Borough English prevails here; and a custom called bull-running is held on the festival of St. Brice, six weeks before Christmas; after the sport is over, the bull is killed, and the price for which he is sold divided amongst the society of butchers who procured him. This town returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the 23rd year of Edward I. The right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms or public charity, who at present amount to about 500. The members now are Lord Thomas Cecil, brother to the Marquess of Exeter, and Thomas Chaplin, Esq. Stamford contains five parishes:—All Saints is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; this church, one of the principal ornaments of the town, was built at the expense of John Browne, merchant of the staple, at Calais, who died in 1442, and is buried in the north aisle. St. George's is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter; the church was rebuilt in 1450, at the expense of William Bruges, Garter King of Arms; in the chancel windows were originally numerous portraits in stained glass: here was buried David Cecil, grandfather of the great Lord Burghley. St. John the Baptist, a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter; the church was rebuilt about 1452; it consists of a nave and chancel, with north and south aisles: the roof has been highly enriched with carvings, and the windows were filled with stained glass. St. Mary is a rectory, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter; the church appears to have been built at the latter end of the 13th century, and is considered the mother church: in the chancel is the monument of Sir David Philips, who distinguished himself at Bosworth-field in 1485. St. Michael's is a rectory, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster; this church is probably the most ancient in the town, part of it having been built prior to the year 1230; the tower was rebuilt in 1761; the windows of the church, formerly ornamented with painted glass, are much mutilated. A Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Leonard, was founded in 1082, by Bishop Carileph, who made it a cell to Durham; it was valued at 36*l.* 17*s.* per annum, and granted in 1551 to Sir William Cecil. The priory is now a farm-house, belonging to the Marquess of Exeter, and the manor is called St. Cuthbert's Fee. A White or Carmelite friary, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is said to have been founded by Henry III.; it was used for the reception of several monarchs in their progresses to and from the North. The west gate still remains on the road to Uffington. A convent of Gray friars, or Franciscans, was also founded by Henry III.; and a monastery of Black friars, or dominicans, was founded about 1220 by William Earl of Albemarle: it stood between St. George's Gate and Tenter Meadow. An Austin friary was founded about 1380 by Fleming, Archdeacon of Richmond. Robert Luttrel, rector of Irnham, gave in 1291 a house on St. Peter's Hill to the priory of Semperingham, who settled here a convent of Gilbertine canons, students in divinity and philosophy,—the earliestaccount of the university at Stamford. A bede-house, founded by William Browne, merchant of the staple, in 1493, is yet standing, and is a very curious and highly interesting edifice; in the windows of the chapel is some ancient painted glass. St. Peter's Hospital was erected about 1770; and Truesdale's Hospital is situated in Scogate. The theatre in St. Mary-street was built in 1768. St. Martin's, part of the town, is in Northamptonshire.

STOWE, 3 miles N.W. from Market Deeping, contains 2 houses, and 21 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the trustees of Oakham and Uppingham schools.

TALLINGTON, on the Welland, 4 miles W. from Market Deeping, contains 46 houses, and 240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*

THURLBY, 6 miles N. from Market Deeping, contains 112 houses, and 622 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Northorpe and Obthorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Firmin, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College.

UFFINGTON, 2 miles E. from Stamford, contains 93 houses, and 466 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* Uffington Hall is the seat of the Earl of Lindsey; and Caswick Lodge, situated about a mile north-eastward of the village, is the seat of Sir John Trollope, Bart. Newstead priory was situated in this parish, half a mile westward from the village, but there are no remains of the building.

CAMMERINGHAM, 8 miles N. from Lincoln, contains 27 houses, and 142 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Lord R. Spencer. An alien priory subordinate to the Premonstratensian abbey of Blanche Lande, in Normandy, was founded here by Richard de Haya, and Maud, his wife, early in the reign of King Henry II. About 1395, Elizabeth, widow of Sir Nicholas Audley, purchased this priory of the foreign monastery; and, by the King's license, settled it on the abbey of Hulton in Staffordshire, and as parcel of the possessions thereof, the manor and church here were granted in 1545 to Robert Tyrwhitt.

COATES, 10 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 8 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

FILLINGHAM, 10 miles N. from Lincoln, contains 39 houses, and 279 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 22*l.*, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford. Here are fairs on the Thursday after Easter, and November 22nd.

GLENTWORTH, 12 miles N. from Lincoln, contains 45 houses, and 275 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough; in it is a monument of Sir Christopher Wray, lord chief justice to Queen Elizabeth. Sir William Wray, of Glentworth, was created baronet Nov. 25, 1612. Glentworth House is the seat of the Earl of Scarborough; and Summer Castle is the seat of Lady Wray.

HARPSWELL, 8 miles E. from Gainsborough, contains 18 houses, and 79 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Chad, is a curacy, yearly value 11*l.* 9*s.*, in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart.

HEMSWELL, or Helmeswell, 7½ miles E. from Gainsborough, contains 65 houses, and 271 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, yearly value 17*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the city of Lincoln.

INGHAM, 9 miles N. from Lincoln, contains 50 houses, and 287 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* This parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster.

WILLOUGHTON, 8 miles E. from Gainsborough, contains 72 houses, and 409 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here is said to have been an alien priory, but it is not certain. The Empress Maud gave the church, or a moiety of it, to the abbey of St. Nicholas, by Augiers, and that abbey had a pension out of it. A manor in Willoughton lately belonging to that abbey, was granted by King Henry VI. to King's College Cambridge. Roger de Buslei and Simon de Canci, in the time of King Stephen, gave the moiety of the church here, and the greatest part of the town, to the Knights Templars, from whom it came afterwards to the Hospitallers; and here was a preceptory of that order, valued in 1534 at 174*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, which was granted in 1545 to John Cock and John Thurgood.

16. Bolingbroke Soke, in Lindsey,

SPILSBY, 33 miles E. from Lincoln, contains 215 houses, and 1,234 inhabitants. This town stands on an eminence, overlooking, towards the south, a large tract of marsh and fen land that is bounded by Boston Deeps and the German Ocean; it consists of four streets or lanes uniting at the market-place, which forms a spacious square, intersected in the centre by a row of houses, having the market-cross, and town-hall, which was built in 1764, at the east and west end. The market-cross consists of a plain octagonal shaft, with a quadrangular base terminated with a modern fane, the whole elevated on five steps. Spilsby is the chief town in the southern part of Lindsey; and the general quarter sessions have been held here for upwards of a century: the petty sessions are also held here. It has a small free-school, with a market on Monday; and fairs, Monday before Whit Monday, Monday after Whit Monday, Monday fortnight after Whit Sunday if it fall in May,—if not, there is not any fair,—second Monday in July, and Sept. 6, for all sorts of cattle. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy; it is an ancient structure, situated on the western side of the town, containing some handsome sepulchral monuments, and one to the memory of Katherine Duchess of Suffolk, who died the 19th of September 1580. A chapel at Eresby, in the parish, which was made collegiate for a master and twelve priests, by Sir John Willoughby in 1348, was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and granted in 1550 to the Duchess of Suffolk.

LITTLE STEEPING, 4 miles S.E. from Spilsby, contains 50 houses, and 278 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

TOYNTON ST. PETER'S, 3 miles S. from Spilsby, contains 66 houses, and 394 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Willoughby de Eresby.

* The townships of Carrington, East Ville, Mid Ville, Frith Ville, and West Ville; also Langrick Ville, and Thornton-le-Fen, in Horncastle soke, were created by Act of Parliament, in 1812, on occasion of a very extensive drainage of fen lands, and are not dependent on any parish.

WEST DIVISION.

ASGARBY, 6 miles W. from Spilsby, contains 15 houses, and 77 inhabitants. The church is a curacy, value 12*l.* 10*s.*, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Asgarby, which is in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

BOLINGBROKE, 4 miles W. from Spilsby, containing 153 houses, and 753 inhabitants, is seated at the spring head of a rivulet which falls into the Bain. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*; it was formerly very large, but the greater part of it, together with the steeple, was demolished by Cromwell. The site of the ancient castle is on the south side of the town, and is now only distinguished by the traces of its foundation, encompassed by a moat: it was built in the early part of the reign of King Stephen, by William de Romara, Earl of Lincoln, and was an important station in the early periods of British history. At this castle was born Henry of Bolingbroke, afterwards King Henry IV., son of John of Gaunt, who married Blanche the daughter of Henry Earl of Lancaster. On Bolingbroke's accession to the throne, the whole patrimony of the manor, through the line of Lancaster, was vested in the Crown. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the castle was considerably enlarged, and it was the theatre of many sanguinary contests betwixt Charles I. and his Parliament; but after the defeat of the Royal army at Winceby, the castle was compelled to yield to the Parliamentarians, by whom it was entirely dismantled. Being subsequently unoccupied, it silently fell to decay under the mouldering influence of time. A circular tower remained standing for many years, said to be part of the gate-house of the castle. In 1815, the last fragment of this formidable structure was levelled with the ground. This ancient town gives the name to the soke, and has an annual fair, and also a market on Tuesday. This place also gives the title of Viscount to the family of St. John of Lydiard Tregoze in Wiltshire.

FRITH VILLE contains 38 houses, and 272 inhabitants. See note.

HAGNABY, 5 miles S.W. from Spilsby, contains 14 houses, and 91 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* Hagnaby Hall is the seat of T. Coltman, Esq.

HAREBY, 4½ miles W. from Spilsby, contains 13 houses, and 71 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*

WEST KEAL, 3 miles S.W. from Spilsby, contains 90 houses, and 502 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

EAST KIRKBY, 6 miles S.W. from Spilsby, contains 63 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*

MININGSBY, 6 miles W. from Spilsby, contains 22 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 6½*d.*, in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster.

REVESBY, 7 miles S.E. from Horncastle, contains 111 houses, and 572 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy. A quarter of a mile south of the village of Revesby, near the edge of the great West Fen, are the ruins of its ancient abbey, founded in the year 1142, by William de Romara Earl of Lincoln, for Cistercian monks, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Lawrence, and endowed at the Suppression with 349*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* per annum. In 1538 the site was granted to Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk. Revesby Abbey, the seat of Lady Banks, was built by Craven Howard, Esq., but has been much enlarged by the family of Banks: part of the abbot's lodging forms the offices.

SIBSEY, 6 miles N.E. from Boston, contains 255 houses, and 1354 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 11*s.* 3*d*, in the patronage of the Crown.

STICKFORD, 5 miles S.W. from Spilsby, contains 71 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

STICKNEY, 7 miles S.W. from Spilsby, situated on the borders of the East Fen, contains 154 houses, and 763 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

WEST VILLE contains 15 houses, and 102 inhabitants. See note, page 203.

ASHBY, 6 miles S. from Grimsby, contains 46 houses, and 191 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Fenby. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

AYLESBY, 4 miles W. from Grimsby, contains 26 houses, and 142 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy.

BARNOLDBY LE BECK, 6 miles S.W. from Grimsby, contains 51 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Southwell College.

BEELSBY, 7 miles S.W. from Grimsby, contains 35 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 6*d*, in the patronage of Southwell College.

BRADLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Grimsby, contains 17 houses, and 78 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

BRIGSLEY, 6 miles S. from Grimsby, contains 22 houses, and 94 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the College of Southwell.

CABOURN, 9 miles S.W. from Grimsby, contains 16 houses, and 105 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

CLEE, 2 miles S.E. from Grimsby, contains 104 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity and St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln: it is of Anglo-Norman architecture, and one of the massive pillars bears a Latin inscription, stating that it was dedicated by Hugh Bishop of Lincoln in 1192. Cleethorpe is a township of this parish, much resorted to for sea-bathing. Northward of the village of Clee are Blow Wells, which are deep circular pits, with a continued flow of water in a considerable stream: and southward of the village is the beacon, on an elevated ridge.

GREAT COATES, 3 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 36 houses, and 237 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

LITTLE COATES, one mile W. from Grimsby, contains 13 houses, and 47 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge.

CUXWOLD, or Cokeswold, 3 miles E. from Caistor, contains 5 houses, and 60 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

FULSTOW, 7 miles N.E. from Louth, contains 85 houses, and 389 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.*

GRAINSBY, 7 miles S. from Grimsby, contains 15 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

GRIMSBY, or Great Grimsby, 20 miles N.E. from Lincoln, and 165 from London, contains 687 houses, and 3064 inhabitants. There is a tradition that this ancient town was founded by Gryme, a merchant, who obtained great riches in consequence of having brought up Havloc, a Danish prince, whom he saved from shipwreck: this happened in the 9th century, and the legend is countenanced by the impression of an ancient seal of the town, which, however, has not been used by the Corporation for a century. The same legend is now upon that adopted by the Grimsby Haven Company. It was a port of some consideration before the Conquest, and is governed by a mayor, high-steward, recorder, eleven aldermen, twelve common-council men, two coroners, two bailiffs, two chamberlains, a town clerk, and three sergeants at mace. The arms of the borough are Argent, a chevron, between three boars' heads couped, sable. It returns two members to Parliament, the right of election being vested in the freemen, consisting of about 150; the present members are C. Wood, Esq., and G. Harris, Esq. The mayor and two senior aldermen are justices of the peace, and the mayor and bailiffs hold courts every Tuesday and Friday. The market is on Wednesday, and annual fairs are held on 17th June for sheep, and 15th September for horses. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Middleton: the steeple, a fine specimen of architecture, was built by John Empringham, a considerable benefactor to the church, in the reign of Henry VI. In the church are many ancient monuments, some of which appear to have been removed from the monasteries that were formerly in the town. At Wellow, or Wellhove, within the liberty of Grimsby, King Henry I. built and endowed an abbey, in honour of St. Augustine, for Black canons, which at the Dissolution was valued at 152*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1544 to Sir Thomas Heneage. A Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to St. Leonard, was also founded here before 1185, valued at 12*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, which was granted first to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, and in 1546 to the master and fellows of Trinity College Cambridge: here was also a house of Gray friars. Dr. John Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury, an eminently distinguished prelate, was born at Grimsby in 1536. Grimsby Hall is the seat of Miss Borrell.

HATCLIFFE, 7 miles S.W. from Grimsby, contains 17 houses, and 99 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Southwell College.

HAGNABY, 2½ miles N.E. from Alford, contains 15 houses, and 106 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Hannay. The church is a ruin. Herbert Fitz Alard of Orreby, and Agnes his wife, founded here in 1175 a Premonstratensian abbey, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, valued at 97*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, per annum. The site is now a rich grazing close near Hannay but the foundations of the building only remain: it was granted in 1538 to John Freeman of London, and now belongs to J. Grant, Esq.

MALTBY LE MARSH, 3 miles N. from Alford, contains 43 houses, and 199 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* Southward of the village stood a preceptory; there is a moat about the site, but scarcely any other trace can be discovered: it is near Beesby.

MARKBY, 2 miles N.E. from Alford, contains 14 houses, and 94 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. Ralph Fitz Gilbert, founded here a priory, dedicated to St. Peter, for Black canons, before 1203: it was valued at 163*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk.

BURGH IN THE MARSH, 7 miles E. from Spilsby, contains 189 houses, and 903 inhabitants. The town is pleasantly situated on an acclivity, commanding an extensive view over the rich tract of marsh land in which cattle and sheep are fattened for the London market. It has a market on Thursday, and annual fairs, 12th May, for horses, cattle and sheep; and 2nd Oct. for cattle and clothing of all sorts. Being only 4 miles from Skegness on the coast, coals and other articles are easily obtained. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Burgh is supposed to be the site of a Roman Castrum for the protection of the coasts. Near it are two tumuli; one called Cock Hill is very high.

CROFT, 2 miles N. from Wainfleet, contains 82 houses, and 483 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Monson.

GREAT CORRINGHAM, 4 miles E. from Gainsborough, contains 102 houses, and 479 inhabitants, including the township of Little Corringham. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Corringham. Somerby Park is about a mile westward of the village.

GAINSBOROUGH, on the river Trent, 18 miles N.W. from Lincoln, and 167 miles from London, contains 1284 houses, and 5893 inhabitants. The town consists principally of one long street, on the eastern bank of the river, over which is a bridge of three arches, built in 1791, at the south end of the town. The Trent is navigable up to the town for ships of considerable burden, although it is nearly forty miles from its communication with the Humber: it carries on a great trade in corn and other commodities to and from the coast, and participates with Hull in the trade to the Baltic. The petty sessions are held here. The market is on Thursday, and here are annual fairs on Easter Tuesday and 20th October, for cattle, pedlery and toys. The town-hall in the market-place is a brick building. The old hall, or palace of John of Ghent, as it is commonly called, is a timber-framed edifice, forming three sides of a quadrangle, open to the south with a chapel on the northern side; it was once moated round, and had large gardens and fish-ponds attached: in 1742 it was inhabited by Sir Nevile George Hickman, Bart., descendant of Sir Willoughby Hickman of Gainsborough, created baronet 16th Nov. 1643, and in whose family the manor still remains; but the title is extinct. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 22*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln: it is a modern structure, built in 1748. Morton, East Stockwith and Walkerith are hamlets of this parish. About half a mile southward of the town are the Castle Hills, situated on a ridge that runs along the eastern bank of the Trent; these embankments are supposed to have been occupied by the contending armies, during the civil wars in the time of Charles I. The Readey canal unites the Trent and the Don, and the Chesterfield canal joins the Trent at Stockwith.

GRAYINGHAM, 10 miles N.E. from Gainsborough, contains 24 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Radegund, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

KIRBY UPON BAIN, 6 miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 53 houses, and 256 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Tumby is a township of this parish. About two miles north-westward of Kirby is the Moor Tower, an octangular brick building of considerable height, supposed to have been an advanced watch-tower of Tattershall Castle, but is now in a dilapidated state.

KIRKSTEAD, situated on the river Witham, 8 miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 23 houses, and 132 inhabitants. Here was a Cistercian abbey founded by Hugh Fitz Eudo, of Tattershall, in 1139, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary: it was valued at 338*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, and was granted in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk. The church, formerly the chapel of the monastery, is a curacy: it was held by Dr. John Taylor, of Norwich, who here composed his Hebrew Concordance, published in 1754, in two volumes, folio.

LANGTON, 4 miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 20 houses, and 100 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

MARTIN, 2½ miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 8 houses, and 55 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

MINTING, 6 miles N.W. from Horncastle, contains 50 houses, and 270 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* Here was a Benedictine priory, founded by Ralph de Meschines Earl of Chester, before 1129, which was subordinate to the abbey of St. Benedict at Leyr, in France: it was granted by Henry V. to the priory at Mountgrace, and afterwards given in exchange to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

SCRIVELSBY, 2½ miles S. from Horncastle, contains 24 houses, and 153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. Champion Dymoke: in the chancel are monuments of Sir Robert Dymoke, and of Lewis Dymoke, who died in 1760, æt. 91. This manor anciently belonged to the Marmions, and came into the family of Dymoke, in the reign of Richard II. It is held by the performance of the noble service of King's Champion, the most striking relique of feudalism that has come down to us from the ages of chivalry.

STIXWOULD, on the river Witham, 7 miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 38 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq. Lucy, relict of Ivo Talbois, Roger de Romara, and Ranulph Earl of Chester, founded here a Cistercian monastery in the reign of Stephen, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin: it was valued at 163*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*, and was granted in 1540 to Robert Dighton. The site of the monastery covered several acres on an eminence, but not a vestige except foundation mounds remains on the spot.

TATTERSHALL, 9 miles S.W. from Horncastle, contains 115 houses, and 627 inhabitants. This town, situated near the junction of the rivers Bain and Witham, consists of three principal streets, formed by the roads leading to Lincoln, Sleaford, and Horncastle, and has a market on Friday, and annual fairs 11th May, and 25th September, for cattle and sheep. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having been a Roman military station; traces of two encampments being still visible at Tattershall Park, a short distance from the town. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Newcastle: it is a beautiful and spacious structure, in the form of a cross, consisting of a square tower, a nave, transept, and a choir. On the north side is a porch charged with the arms of William of Wainfleet, Bishop of Winchester. The windows of the choir were once enriched with beautiful stained glass, of which it was despoiled by the Earl of Exeter in 1754; it afterwards remained for fifty years with unglazed windows, but has since been repaired by Earl Fortescue. The windows of the nave and transept were also glazed with the legendary histories of St. Guthlake, St. Katherine, and other saints, a few fine fragments of which are preserved. In the chancel are the remains of the monument of the Lord Treasurer Cromwell, and Margaret his wife. On the south-west side of the town stands the castle, erected by the Lord Treasurer Cromwell about 1440: it was originally surrounded by two fosses, the inner one faced with brick, great part of which is now remaining. Formerly it was of great extent, but was dilapidated in the civil wars in the time of Charles I. The part now remaining is a rectangular brick tower, of exquisite workmanship, about one hundred feet in height, divided into four stories and flanked by four octagonal turrets; the windows are pointed and contain mullions; those on the south, west, and north sides are large. Between the castle and the church stands an ancient brick building, which appears to be coeval

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, LANGTON, NEAR HO
Sept 1847 CASTLE.

THE erection of this edifice presents a very interesting, as well as portant, instance of Church Extension, which we have much satisfa in commemorating in our columns, in the assurance that the wider
"good works" are known, the more beneficial will be the result t ciety in general. There are, also, some peculiarities in this struction which call for special notice ; it has, indeed, been rais many hands, and contributed from the individual wealth o district.

The new Church has been erected from the designs of Mr. St
Lewin, architect. It is beautifully situate in the parish of La near Horncastle, not far from Woodhall Spa. The locality po some romantic interest; the spot called the Tower on the Moo ancient ruins of Kirkstead Church, lying at a short distance.

The building was commenced in March, 1845; Sir Henry Dy

CONINGSBY, on the river Bain, 8 miles S. from Horncastle, contains 339 houses, and 1651 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 39*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Dyer the poet was rector, and died here 24th July 1758; but there is no monument to his memory.

HALTHAM UPON BAIN, 5 miles S. from Horncastle, contains 37 houses, and 196 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

HORNCASTLE, 22 miles S.E. from Lincoln, and 139 miles from London, contains 651 houses, and 3058 inhabitants. This town is situated at the foot of the Wolds, in a valley on the banks of the river Bain, and chiefly consists of three large and one smaller street, forming the roads to Wragby, Louth, Tattershall and Alford. Tanning constitutes the chief branch of trade here. The market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs 22d June and 21st August, for horses and cattle: the horses brought to the fairs here are well known to all the dealers in England for their superior excellence. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. In an angle formed by the confluence of the rivers Bain and Waring formerly stood a castle, which occupied an area of nearly twenty acres, and derived its name from its situation on the horn, or hyrn, in Saxon signifying an angle or corner. The manor formed, at a very early period, part of the possessions of the see of Carlisle, and it still belongs to the bishopric. On the south-western side of the town is the Julian Bower close, the site of a maze, of Roman origin, long since effaced by cultivation. The Horncastle navigation communicates with the Tattershall canal, where it unites with the old Witham river, and through Lincoln to the river Trent by means of the Foss Dyke.

LANGRICK VILLE contains 36 houses, and 195 inhabitants; and Thornton le Fen contains 23 houses, and 141 inhabitants: these two townships were created by Act of Parliament in 1812, and are not dependent on any parish.

MAREHAM LE FEN, 6 miles S. from Horncastle, contains 125 houses, and 609 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The drainage and inclosure of Wildmore Fen has contributed to the prosperity of this village.

MAREHAM ON THE HILL, 2 miles S.E. from Horncastle, contains 22 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Carlisle.

MOORBY, 4 miles S.E. from Horncastle, contains 21 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle.

HIGH TOYNTON, 2 miles E. from Horncastle, contains 32 houses, and 159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Carlisle.

LOW TOYNTON, one mile N. from the above, contains 15 houses, and 95 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

WILKSBY, 4 miles S.E. from Horncastle, contains 8 houses, and 58 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

WOOD ENDERBY, 4 miles S. from Horncastle, contains 31 houses, and 183 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Carlisle.

24. Lawress Wapentake, in Lindsey,

Is bounded on the north by Aslacoe and Walshcroft wapentakes; on the east by Wraggoe wapentake; on the south by Lincoln liberty and Langoe wapentake; on the south-west by Boothby Graffo wapentake; and on the west by Well wapentake.

AISTHORPE, or East Thorpe, 7 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 12 houses, and 70 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.* West Thorpe, or Thorpe in the Fallows, is about 2 miles westward of the village.

BARLINGS, on the banks of the river Langworth, 6 miles N.E. from Lincoln, contains 33 houses, and 245 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a curacy, in the presentation of Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq. Here was a Premonstratensian abbey, dedicated to St. Mary, founded by Ralph de Haye in 1154: it was afterwards removed to Oxeney, also in this parish. Dr. Mackerel, who headed the Lincolnshire rebels, under the name of Captain Cobbler, was Abbot of Barlings: he was executed 29th March 1537. The monastery was valued at 307*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and the site was granted to Charles Duke of Suffolk: it stood on a sort of island surrounded by fenny ground; but an arch and part of a strong stone wall are the only remains.

GREETWELL, on the river Witham, 2 miles E. from Lincoln, contains 5 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

NETTLEHAM, 3 miles N.E. from Lincoln, contains 95 houses, and 572 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Chancellor of the bishopric of Lincoln. Sir Francis Barnard of Nettleham was created baronet 5th April 1769.

REEPHAM, 4 miles E. from Lincoln, contains 48 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Mercers' Company, London.

RISEHOLME, 5½ miles N.E. from Lincoln, contains 10 houses, and 73 inhabitants, including Grainge de Ligne, an extra-parochial district. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford.

SAXELBY, 7 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 110 houses, and 561 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Ingleby. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

SCAMPTON, 6 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 33 houses, and 238 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*: in the chancel are several monuments of the Bolles family. Sir John Bolles of Scampton was created baronet 24th July 1628. Scampton Hall, their seat, was erected on the site of West Grange, belonging to the abbey of Kirkstead, about the reign of James I. The gate-house yet remains. Some very curious Roman antiquities were discovered here in 1795: one pavement has been engraved by Fowler.

SCOTHERN, 5½ miles N.E. from Lincoln, contains 77 houses, and 366 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. German, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SNARFORD, 6 miles S.W. from Market Rasen, contains 8 houses, and 64 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Sub-Dean of Lincoln.

SUDBROOKE, or Sudbrooke Holme, 5 miles N.E. from Lincoln, contains 12 houses, and 103 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln: it is a modern edifice, but in the churchyard is a fragment of an ancient cross. Sudbrooke Hall, the seat of Richard Ellison, Esq. M.P., was erected by the late R. Ellison, Esq.

WEST THORPE, or Thorpe in the Fallows, 9 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 8 houses, and 69 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

TORKSEY, locally situated in Well wapentake, on the eastern bank of the river Trent, 7 miles S. from Gainsborough, contains 50 houses, and 267 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Harwick. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. On the eastern side of the village was formerly a priory of Black Canons, founded by King John in honour of St. Leonard, which at the Dissolution was valued at 27*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* per annum: it was granted in 1543 to Sir Philip Hoby. The site is called the Abbey Yard, but not a vestige of the building remains; but there are ruins of a castle near the river. About a mile above Torksey the Foss Dyke joins the Trent. Brampton is a township of this parish.

LOUTH, 26 miles N.E. from Lincoln, and 148 miles from London, contains 1217 houses, and 6012 inhabitants. This town is situated in a fertile valley at the eastern extremity of the wolds, and on the banks of the river Ludd. The principal streets are formed by the road from Market Rasen to Saltfleet, by the road to Spilsby on the south, and by that to Horncastle on the south-west. Here is a carpet manufactory, a large soap manufactory, and a mill for making coarse paper. The markets on Wednesday and Saturday are amply supplied with provisions; and there are annual fairs on 30th April, third Monday after Easter, 5th and 17th August, for horses, and 22nd November for cattle. The Corporation consists of a warden, six assistants, a high steward, and a town-clerk. In the town-hall, at the end of the principal street leading to the market-place, the petty sessions are held. The free grammar-school, founded in the reign of Edward VI., has this significant motto on the common seal: QVI · PARCIT · VIRGE · ODIT · FILIV· 1552. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Louth, in the cathedral of Lincoln: this is a large and handsome edifice, with a very elegant tower and spire at the west end; the tower was begun, under the direction of John Cole, master mason, in 1501, and was completed in 15 years, under the management of Lawrence and William Lemyng, with Christopher Scune. The height of the spire was originally 360 feet; it was blown down in 1634, when the present one was erected under the direction of Thomas Turner in 1635: its total height is 288 feet, and the whole is much admired for its beautiful workmanship. Here was formerly another church, dedicated to St. Mary, now demolished; but its churchyard is the place of sepulture for the town. Louth Park, now a hamlet of this parish, is the site of a Cistercian abbey, founded by Alexander Bishop of Lincoln in 1139: it was valued at 169*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, and was granted by Henry VIII. in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk, and by Q. Elizabeth in 1569, to Sir Henry Stanley and Margaret his wife. St. Helen's Well, near the town, supplied Louth Park Abbey by means of a cut called Monk's Dyke. The Louth canal, formed in 1761, commences about half a mile from the town, and continues parallel with the banks of the Ludd, which supplies it with water: it leaves the course of the river about four miles from the town, and turning northward joins the north sea at Tetney Lock, being upwards of eleven miles in length.

MUCKTON, 6 miles S.E. from Louth, contains 17 houses, and 131 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Corporation of the city of Lincoln. At Hyrst, or Hurst, was a cell belonging to Nosteil Priory, in Yorkshire, to which it was given by Nigel de Albini, in the reign of Henry I.: it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and was valued at 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1547 to John Earl of Warwick. Sir John Ferne, author of "The Blazon of Gentrie," was born at Temple Belwood, the seat of his family: he died about 1610, leaving several sons, of whom the youngest, Henry, became Bishop of Chester in 1661. Temple Belwood is now the seat of William Johnson, Esq.; and Hyrst Priory is the seat of Mrs. Stovin. Sandtoft is on the banks of the Don, on the borders of Yorkshire. Beltoft was the ancient seat of the Sheffields.

CROWLE, on the old river Don, 17 miles N. from Gainsborough, and 5 miles E. from Thorne, in Yorkshire, contains 295 houses, and 1729 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Ealand. The petty sessions are held here; and here is a market on Saturday, and annual fairs on 4th Sept. and 22nd Nov. for cattle, hemp, and flax. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 10*s.*: the edifice presents a fine specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture. Eastoft is a township of this parish: here is a bridge over the old river Don; another channel crosses the Isle of Axholme, and joins the Trent at Althorpe.

EPWORTH, 10 miles N.W. from Gainsborough, and 10 miles S.E. from Thorne, in Yorkshire, contains 383 houses, and 1763 inhabitants. It is the principal town in the Isle of Axholme: great quantities of flax and hemp are grown in this part of the county, and many persons in this neighbourhood are engaged in spinning: here is also a manufacture of sacking and bagging. The market is on Thursday, and there are annual fairs on the first Thursday after the first of May, and on the first Thursday after Michaelmas-day. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. This was the living of the Rev. SOUTH KELSEY, 6 miles S.W. from Caistor, contains 120 houses, and 623 inhabitants. It contains the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Nicholas. St. Mary is a rectory, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; and St. Nicholas is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* At Wyngall, in this parish, was a priory, dedicated to St. John, subordinate to the abbey of Sees in Normanby: it became part of the endowment of Trinity College Cambridge, but was exchanged with Sir Thomas Monson.

KINGERBY, on a branch of the river Ancholme, 6 miles N.W. from Market Rasen, contains 11 houses, and 84 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*

NEWTON, by Toft, 4½ miles W. from Market Rasen, contains 13 houses, and 70 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough.

NORMANBY, on the Wold, 4 miles N. from Market Rasen, contains 16 houses, and 96 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

OSGODBY, 5 miles N.W. from Market Rasen, contains 40 houses, and 214 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Kirkby. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Monson.

OWERSBY, 6 miles N.W. from Market Rasen, contains 66 houses, and 408 inhabitants, including the north and south ends. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Monson.

WEST RASEN, 3 miles W. from Market Rasen, contains 37 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

THORNTON LE MOOR, 7 miles N.W. from Market Rasen, contains 13 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely.

TOFT, by Newton, 4½ miles W. from Market Rasen, contains 12 houses, and 65 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

USSELBY, 3 miles N.W. from Market Rasen, contains 11 houses, and 75 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

Eastern Division.

BINBROOKE, 9 miles N.E. from Market Rasen, and 11 miles

N.W. from Louth, contains 153 houses, and 790 inhabitants, including Orforth, which is extra-parochial. It is situated in a low valley on the river Anklam, near the centre of the wolds, and was formerly a place of more importance. It has an annual fair on Easter Tuesday. There are two parish churches: St. Gabriel is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Milton, county of Oxford; and St. Mary is a rectory, value 10*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A priory of nuns of the Premonstratensian order was founded at Irford, or Urford, by Ralph De Albini, in the reign of Henry II.: it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and at the Dissolution was valued at 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per annum. In 1539 the site was granted to Robert Tyrwhitt.

CROXBY, 5 miles S.E. from Caistor, contains 6 houses, and 67 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

LINWOOD, 2 miles S.E. from Market Rasen, contains 26 houses, and 138 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cornelius, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

MARKET RASEN, on the Rasen, a branch of the river Ancholme, 15 miles N.E. from Lincoln, and 149 miles from London, contains 243 houses, and 1166 inhabitants. The town consists of one long street disposed on the sides of the road leading from Louth to Gainsborough, which is intersected at right angles by two smaller streets in the road from Wragby to Caistor. The market is on Thursday; and the fairs are on every other Tuesday after Palm Sunday, for horned cattle, horses, and sheep, and on 25th Sept. The inhabitants of the town being chiefly engaged in agriculture, derive considerable advantage from the cattle-shows and fairs. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The windows of the tower of this church are similar to those of Yarborough; and on the southern side of the tower of each is a representation of Adam and Eve, with the tree of forbidden fruit.

MIDDLE RASEN, 1½ mile W. from Market Rasen, contains 101 houses, and 508 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Drakes. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The edifice is a curious specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture.

STAINTON LE VALE, 6 miles N.E. from Market Rasen, contains 24 houses, and 121 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

TEALBY, 5 miles N.E. from Market Rasen, contains 167 houses, and 755 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough.

THORESWAY, 4 miles S.E. from Caistor, contains 19 houses, and 116 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

THORGANBY, 6 miles S.E. from Caistor, contains 17 houses, and 102 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Thorganby House, an ancient seat of the Willoughby's, now belongs to Lord Middleton: it stands on an eminence, and commands a fine view towards Swinthorpe, over the vale, through which runs a small trout-stream.

WALESBY, 3 miles N.E. from Market Rasen, contains 47 houses, and 239 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*

NORTH WILLINGHAM, on the south-western side of the wolds, 4 miles E. from Market Rasen, contains 37 houses, and 211 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of A. Boucherett, Esq. Willingham House is the seat of Ayscough Boucherett, Esq.; it was erected in 1790 two miles westward of the site of the old mansion.

29. Well Wapentake, in Lindsey,

Is bounded on the north by Coningham wapentake; on the east by Aslacoe and Lawress wapentakes; on the south by Nottinghamshire; and on the west by the river Trent, which here separates this county from Nottinghamshire.

BURTON GATE, or Gate Burton, 6 miles S.W. from Gainsborough, contains 15 houses, and 110 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Burton House is the seat of William Hutton, Esq.: the grounds are terminated on the west by the river Trent.

KETTLETHORPE, 9 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 35 houses, and 201 inhabitants, including the township of Laughterton. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 28*l.* Fenton is a hamlet of this parish. Kettlethorpe Park is the seat of — Waddington, Esq.

KNAITH, on the banks of the Trent, 4 miles S. from Gainsborough, contains 9 houses, and 59 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Abingdon. The estate was formerly the property and residence of the Lords Darcy, and afterwards of Lord Willoughby, of Parham: it gave birth in 1532 to Thomas Sutton, the munificent founder of the Charterhouse London. Knaith Park was lately the seat of H. Dalton, Esq.

MARTON, on the banks of the Trent, 6 miles S. from Gainsborough, contains 81 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. A bridge over the Trent has been proposed hence to Littleborough, in Nottinghamshire, on the opposite bank, which was the site of a Roman ferry.

NEWTON UPON TRENT, 11 miles N.W. from Lincoln, contains 57 houses, and 295 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

STOW, 9 miles S.E. from Gainsborough, contains 61 houses, and 334 inhabitants, including Stow Park. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Corringham two turns, and the Prebendary of Stow one. Here was formerly a monastery, founded by Godiva, wife of Leofric Earl of Mercia, and built by Eadnotus Bishop of Lincoln. Stow, which is supposed to be the ancient Sidnacester, was the seat of the Bishop from the time of Leofwin, under whom, in the year 949, it was transferred hither from Dorchester in Oxfordshire, and remained thus till Remigius, about 1052, removed the see to Lincoln. Hence the church of Stow is traditionally called "The Mother Church of Lincoln." It is cruciform in plan, and the chancel is of Anglo-Norman architecture, having probably been built about the time of Remigius: it contains monuments of Thomas Holbeck, of Stow Park, ob. 1591, and Richard Burgh, of Stow Hall, ob. 1627. The font is very curious, and coeval with the oldest part of the church. Stow Park, the former residence of the Bishops of Lincoln, who continued to occupy the mansion till the 14th century, is about a mile south-eastward of the village. There are moats and foundations left, but no other trace of former magnificence. Stow Park is now the seat of —— Landell, Esq. Between it and the village is a Roman road leading from the High Street to Nottinghamshire, over the Trent, by Littleborough Ferry. Bransby, Normanby, and Sturton are townships of this parish.

UPTON, 5 miles S.E. from Gainsborough, contains 39 houses, and 221 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Kexby is a township of this parish.

WILLINGHAM, 6 miles S.E. from Gainsborough, contains 61 houses, and 292 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St Helen, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

30. Wraggoe Wapentake, in Lindsey.

Is bounded on the north by Walshcroft wapentake; on the east by Gartree wapentake and Louth Eske hundred; on the south by Langoe wapentake; and on the west by Lawress wapentake. It is separated into eastern and western divisions.

Eastern Division.

EAST BARKWITH, 5 miles N.E. from Wragby, contains 36 houses, and 195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Middleton.

WEST BARKWITH, 3 miles N.E. from Wragby, contains 14 houses, and 93 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.*

BENNIWORTH, or Benningworth, 6 miles E. from Wragby, contains 47 houses, and 346 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Julian, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Middleton.

LUDFORD, 8 miles E. from Market Rasen, contains 84 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of A. Boucherett, Esq. About a mile westward of the village is the head of the river Bain.

PANTON, 5 miles E. from Wragby, contains 14 houses, and 83 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq. Panton House, a seat of Edmund Turnor, Esq., of Stoke Rochfort, was built by Hawksmoor in 1724, and additions have been made by Carr, of York. The adjacent country has been much improved by plantations.

SIX HILLS, 5 miles S.E. from Market Rasen, contains 23 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Middleton. A Gilbertine priory, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was endowed here in the reign of Stephen by Albert de Greslei. In this monastery King Edward I. confined Mary, the wife of Christopher Seton, and sister of Robert Bruce, in 1306. At the Dissolution its revenue was valued at 178*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* per annum, and the site was granted to Sir Thomas Heneage in 1538.

SOTBY, 5 miles E. from Wragby, contains 20 houses, and 128 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SOUTH WILLINGHAM, 6 miles N.E. from Wragby, contains 39 houses, and 202 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of G. R. Heneage, Esq.

Western Division.

APLEY, 2 miles S. from Wragby, contains 29 houses, and 139 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy, in the presentation of — Tyrwhitt, Esq.

BARDNEY, on the river Witham, 8 miles W. from Horncastle, contains 161 houses, and 954 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Bardney Abbey was founded before the year 697: Etheldred, king of Mercia, was a benefactor, and afterwards abbot. King Oswald, a martyr and saint, was first buried here; but his remains, except his right hand, were removed by his niece Ostrith to the church of Gloucester, in 699. The monastery was destroyed by the Danes in 870, and rebuilt by Gilbert de Gaunt, the devout Earl of Lincoln, in the reign of William the Conqueror, for Benedictine monks, and dedicated to St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. Oswald. The revenue was valued at 429*l.* 7*s.*; and after the Dissolution the site was granted to Sir Robert Tyrwhitt.

BULLINGTON, 2 miles W. from Wragby, contains 7 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy. A priory of Gilbertines was founded here by Simon Fitzwilliam, or de Kyme, in honour of the Virgin Mary, valued at 187*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* per annum, which was granted in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk. Some vestiges of the building remain.

FULNETBY, 3 miles N.W. from Wragby, contains 8 houses, and 52 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

GOLTHO, one mile S. from Wragby, contains 14 houses, and 95 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Goltho Hall, of which there are some remains, was formerly the residence of the Grantham family.

HOLTON, 2½ miles N. from Wragby, contains 26 houses, and 142 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Beckering. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq. Holton Lodge is the seat of R. Burton, Esq.

STAINFIELD, 3 miles S. from Wragby, contains 18 houses, and 103 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Henry Percy, in the reign of Henry II., founded here a priory of Benedictine nuns, which at the Dissolution was valued at 112*l.* 5*s.* per annum. Their possessions, with the site of the monastery, was granted in 1537 to Robert Tyrwhitt. Sir Philip Tyrwhitt, of Stainfield, was created baronet 29th June, 1611. The title is now extinct.

STAINTON, by Langworth, on a branch of the Witham, 5 miles W. from Wragby, contains 35 houses, and 182 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Newball and Reasby. The church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough.

EAST TORRINGTON, 3 miles N.E. from Wragby, contains 18 houses, and 89 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq.

WEST TORRINGTON, 5 miles N.E. from Wragby, contains 24 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 4*l.*

TUPHOLME, 6 miles W. from Horncastle, contains 11 houses, and 71 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 2*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln; but the church has been long since demolished: the village is extra-parochial. In the reign of Henry II. an abbey of Premonstratensian canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was founded here by Alan de Nevile, and Gilbert his brother. The revenue was 119*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1538 to Sir Thomas Heneage. A wall of the refectory is now only remaining.

WICKENBY, 3 miles N.W. from Wragby, contains 24 houses, and 125 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

WRAGBY, 10 miles N.E. from Lincoln, and 144 from London, contains 93 houses, and 633 inhabitants. The principal street is formed by the road from Lincoln to Horncastle. It has a weekly market on Thursday, and fairs on Holy Thursday and 29th September, which are well frequented. Here is a free-school, founded in 1633 by William Hansard, and an alms-house, endowed by Sir Edmund Turnor, lord of the manor, the chapel of which was consecrated by Bishop Gardiner, 18th July 1697. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq.

31. Yarborough Wapentake, in Lindsey,

Is bounded on the north by the river Humber; on the east by Bradley Haverstoe wapentake; on the south by Walshcroft wapentake; and on the west by Manley wapentake. It is separated into eastern, northern, and southern divisions.

Eastern Division.

CROXTON, 9 miles N.E. from Brigg, contains 15 houses, and 87 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Yarborough. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Yarborough Camp, a large entrenchment on a ridge of the downs, is one of the highest eminences in the county, and affords an extensive view, particularly towards the east: quantities of Roman coins have been found here. Charles Anderson Pelham of Brocklesby was created Lord Yarborough 13th August 1794.

HABROUGH, 9 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 50 houses, and 286 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

EAST HALTON, 11 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 102 houses, and 468 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

KEELBY, 6 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 94 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*

NORTH KILLINGHOLME, 10 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 89 houses, and 438 inhabitants, including South Killingholme. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Yarborough.

KIRMINGTON, 8 miles N. from Caistor, contains 47 houses, and 243 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Yarborough.

GREAT LIMBER, or Lymbergh, 5 miles N. from Caistor, contains 73 houses, and 421 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here was an alien priory, a cell to the abbey of Avency in Normandy, which afterwards belonged to the Carthusians of St. Anne, near Coventry: at the Dissolution it was granted in 1544 to John Bellow and others.

LITTLE LIMBER, 8 miles N. from Caiston, contains 16 houses, and 256 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Brocklesby. Brocklesby Park, the principal seat of Lord Yarborough, is extensive, and diversified by numerous plantations and swelling grounds. In the park is a chapel and mausoleum, commenced in 1787 under the direction of James Wyatt. The chapel, consecrated by the Bishop of Lincoln in 1794, is a circular Doric building surmounted by a dome; the elevation on which it stands is a tumulus, supposed to be Roman. The mansion has been extended upon the south front by a gallery, erected in 1807 from designs by C. H. Tatham, to contain a valuable collection of pictures bequeathed to his lordship by George Aufrere, Esq. of Chelsea. The gallery is 67 feet, 6 inches, by 27 feet, 6 inches, and 21 feet in height: besides the pictures it contains some antiques, and a colossal bust of Niobe in Parian marble.

RIBY, 5½ miles W. from Grimsby, eontains 20 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

STALLINGBOROUGH, 6 miles N.W. from Grimsby, contains 63 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

Northern Division.

BARROW UPON HUMBER, 3 miles E. from Barton, contains 297 houses, and 1307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. About a mile westward of the village at the extremity of the Salt Marshes is a large earth-work called the Castles, probably an intrenched camp of the Britons; adjacent are several tumuli or long barrows. The battle of Brunnenbugh was fought on the banks of the Humber near this spot in the reign of Athelstan.

BARTON UPON HUMBER, 35 miles N. from Lincoln, and 168 from London, contains 543 houses, and 2496 inhabitants. This town is situated about half a mile from Waterside Inn on the banks of the river, whence is a regular mail packet to Hull across the Humber. It has a well-supplied weekly market on Monday, and another for fat cattle once a fortnight, and an annual fair is held on Thursday after Trinity for cattle. Here is a considerable trade in corn, there being several flour and other mills in the vicinity of the town. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the window of the chancel are two ancient figures in stained glass; one is said to be that of Lord Beaumont, to whom the manor was granted by King Henry II. There is also another church, dedicated to St. Mary, which is very large. The manor now belongs to the Crown: a court-leet is held half yearly for cognizance of offences committed within the town, and a court baron every three weeks.

BONBY, 7 miles N. from Brigg, contains 54 houses, and 275 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Here was formerly an alien priory, which was granted in 1402 to the Carthusians at Beauval in Nottinghamshire.

ELSHAM, or Ailesham, 5 miles N.E. from Brigg, contains 57 houses, and 383 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Here was a priory of Augustine canons, founded before 1166, and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Edmund: it was valued at 83*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1538 to Charles Duke of Suffolk.

SOUTH FERRABY, on the river Ancholme, at its junction with the Humber, 3 miles W. from Barton, contains 88 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The Humber is an estuary from three to six miles in breadth, which carries the united waters of the Trent, Ouse, and other streams into the German Ocean.

GOXHILL, 5 miles E. from Barton, contains 158 houses, and 736 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The church stands on an eminence, and may be considered an elegant structure: from the summit of the tower is a very fine view of the river Humber and the adjacent country. In the chancel is a monument to the memory of Edward Skynner, of Thornton College, ob. 1657, and his wife Anne, daughter of Sir William Wentworth, ob. 1707: there is also a monument with the effigies of a knight, supposed to be that of Walter de Vere, of Goxhill, or Gousle, in the reign of Richard I. In this parish is Burham chapel, now a farm-house, and Vere Court a manor-house. About four miles northward from the village is Goxhill ferry, to Hull.

HORKSTOW, on the Ancholme, 5 miles S.W. from Barton, contains 34 houses, and 200 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Maurice, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Horkstow Hall is the seat of Admiral Shirley: several mosaic pavements were found in 1796 in a close near the garden, which is within four miles of the Roman road leading from Lincoln to the Humber.

SAXBY, on the river Ancholme, 6 miles S.W. from Barton on Humber, contains 49 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

THORNTON CURTIS, or Thornton upon Humber, 5 miles S.E. from Barton, contains 60 houses, and 328 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Thornton Abbey was founded in 1139 by William Le Gros Earl of Albemarle for Augustine canons. King Henry VIII., his queen and court, visited the abbey in 1541; the revenue was valued at 730*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* It is now the property of Lord Yarborough, by whom its remains have the fairest chance of being preserved. The western gate-house is yet tolerably entire, part of the refectory, and remains of the abbey church and chapter-house. The abbot's lodging is now a farm-house.

ULCEBY, 7 miles S.E. from Barton, contains 93 houses, and 455 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WOOTTON, 5 miles S.E. from Barton, contains 80 houses, and 397 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

WORLABY, 5 miles N. from Brigg, contains 50 houses, and 262 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clements, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* John, second son of Thomas Lord Fauconberg, of Yarm, was created Lord Belasyse of Worlaby 27th January, 1645; he was captain of his Majesty's guard of gentlemen pensioners, and first lord of the treasury to King James II.: he died in 1689, when the title became extinct. There are some remains of the old seat of the family, with their punning motto, BONNE · ET · BELLE · ASSEZ · over the porch.

Southern Division.

BARNETBY LE WOLD, 7 miles N.E. from Brigg, contains 45 houses, and 316 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

BIGBY, 4 miles E. from Brigg, contains 29 houses, and 190 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

BRIGG, or Glandford Bridge, on the Ancholme, 24 miles N. from Lincoln, and 157 from London, is a chapelry of the parish of Wrawby, and contains 337 houses, and 1674 inhabitants. The river Ancholme has been made navigable from the Humber to Bishop Bridge, ten miles above the town, and by its means the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in corn, coals, and timber. The market is on Thursday, and the fair 16th August; and the petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of Clare Hall Cambridge. A free grammar-school was founded here by Sir John Nelthorpe, 1674. Here was an ancient hospital founded by Adam Paynell in the reign of John, and subordinate to the abbey of Selby in Yorkshire. Newstead Abbey, on the banks of the Ancholme, about a mile and a half above the town, was founded by Henry II. for Gilbertines, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity: it was valued at 55*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1539 to Robert Heneage, Esq. The remains constitute a farm-house, belonging to Lord Yarborough. At the south end of the building is a room said to have been the chapter-house; but an arched entrance to the chapel has been removed to Brocklesby. The site is extra-parochial.

CADNEY, 3 miles S. from Brigg, contains 49 houses, and 303 inhabitants, including the township of Housham. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

CAISTOR, or Thong Castor, is situated on the side of a hill overlooking an extensive tract, 25 miles N.E. from Lincoln, and 157 from London, and contains 228 houses, and 1253 inhabitants. It is a town of great antiquity. The petty sessions are held here; and it has a weekly market on Saturday, and annual fairs on Saturday before Palm Sunday, Saturday after 12th May, Saturday before Whit Monday, for sheep; Saturday after old Michaelmas for horned cattle and sheep, haberdashery, cutlery and pedlery. The soil hereabouts abounds with springs, one of which at the end of Duck-street, called Syfer, is very peculiar; its waters flow with violence in four directions between large stones laid flat. Castle Hill marks the site of its ancient castle of Anglo-Saxon origin. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Caistor in the Cathedral of Lincoln. Lands in the parish of Broughton are held by the singular ceremony of cracking a cart-whip three times in the porch of this church on Palm Sunday, and afterwards three times over the vicar's head during the service, who is presented with a purse containing thirty pieces of silver. The church contains several curious ancient monuments. Holton Le Moor is a chapelry, and Hundon, Fonaby, and Audleby are hamlets of this parish. Caistor canal forms a communication in a direct line from the town to the river Ancholme.

CLIXBY, 2 miles N.W. from Caistor, contains 12 houses, and 67 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Lands were held here by the service of presenting the King at Michaelmas with a night-cap and a falcon. —Blount.

GRASSBY, 4 miles N.W. from Caistor, contains 67 houses, and 299 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

NORTH KELSEY, 6 miles S.E. from Brigg, contains 121 houses, and 573 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Kelsey in the Cathedral of Lincoln.

MELTON ROSS, 6 miles N.E. from Brigg, contains 24 houses, and 126 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Melton Ross in the Cathedral of Lincoln.

NETTLETON, one mile S. from Caistor, contains 72 houses, and 353 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

SEARBY, 5 miles N.W. from Caistor, contains 39 houses, and 247 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Owmby. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral.

SOMERBY, 5 miles E. from Brigg, contains 13 houses, and 79 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WRAWBY, 2 miles N.E. from Brigg, contains 101 houses, and 456 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Kettleby. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Clare Hall Cambridge, and includes the chapelry of Brigg.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.—Midland Circuit.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE borders on more counties than any other shire in the kingdom. On the north it is separated from Leicestershire, Rutlandshire and Lincolnshire, by the rivers Avon and Welland; on the east it is bounded by Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire, and Bedfordshire; on the south by Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; and on the west, the river Leam divides it from Warwickshire. Its greatest length is about seventy miles, and its breadth thirty miles, being in circumference about two hundred miles. The British inhabitants were called Coritani by the Romans, and it formed part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis. The Roman stations were Benaventa (Daventry); Durobrivæ (Castor); and Lactodorum (Towcester). During the Saxon Heptarchy, Northamptonshire formed part of the kingdom of Mercia. The Watling-street, in proceeding from the south towards the north, enters the county near Stratford, and continuing in almost a direct line leaves it at Dove Bridge. There are encampments at Arbury Hill, Barrow Dyke, Borough Hill, Castle Dyke, Chester Burrow, Guilsborough, Huntsborough, Passenham, Rainsborough, Sulgrave, and Wallow Bank. There were formerly abbeys at Northampton, Pipewell and Sulby; and the castles of its earlier lords were Barnwell, Fotheringhay, Rockingham, and Drayton. This county contains one city (Peterborough), one county town, twelve market-towns, three hundred and seven parishes, 32,503 inhabited houses, and 162,483 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury and in the diocese of Peterborough, excepting three parishes, Gretton, King's Sutton, and Nassington, in that of Lincoln. Northamptonshire returns nine members to Parliament; two for Brackley, one for Higham Ferrers, two for Northampton, two for Peterborough, and two for the county. The present members are Lord Althorp, and Lord Milton. At a former period the greater portion of Northamptonshire was occupied by the forests of Salcey, Whittlebury, and Rockingham, of which there are still some considerable remains. The highest ground in the county is in the neighbourhood of Daventry; about Towcester, in the south, the ground is also hilly. It is peculiarly celebrated for grazing land, that tract especially, from Northampton towards the Leicestershire border. Horned cattle and other animals are here fed to extraordinary sizes, and many horses of the large black breed are reared: much of the arable land is still open-field; and many sheep are grazed on the high grounds. The extreme point of this county, surrounded and intersected by rivers, is very liable to inundations, and forms the commencement of the Fenny tract extending to the Lincolnshire Washes. The rivers are the Avon, Cherwell, Ise, Leam, Nen, Tove, and Welland. Northamptonshire is singularly independent as to water, for all its rivers take their rise within its own boundaries; not a single stream, however insignificant, runs into it from any other districts; whilst there is not a county bordering upon it that is not in some degree supplied from its various and ample aquatic sources. The Nen, rising in the west, flows first across the county to the eastern side, and then turning more northward, accompanies the whole remaining length of it to Peterborough, where it leaves the county, and runs into Cross Keys Wash on the coast of Lincolnshire. The canals are the Grand Junction, Oxford, Leicestershire and Northamptonshire, and the Union. The manufactures are shoes, lace, woollen stuffs, whips, and earthenware. Apethorp Hall, near Wansford, is the seat of the Earl of Westmorland, K.G. Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Cleley Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wymersley hundred; on the south and east by Buckinghamshire; and on the west by Norton hundred.

ALDERTON, or Aldrington, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 4 miles S.E. from Towcester, contains 35 houses, and 177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

ASHTON, 7 miles S. from Northampton, contains 69 houses, and 341 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

COSGROVE, or Covesgrave, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 2 miles N.E. from Stony Stratford, and 7½ miles E. from Towcester, contains 106 houses, and 559 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Maynard. Cosgrove Hall is the seat of T. C. Mansell, Esq. Cosgrove Priory and Cosgrove Cottage are also in the vicinity.

EASTON NESTON, 1½ mile E. from Towcester, contains 30 houses, and 137 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Hulcote. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Pomfret: it contains several family monuments of the Fermors. Easton Neston House, the seat of the Earl of Pomfret, was built by William Lord Leominster, partly from a design by Sir Christopher Wren, and partly by Hawksmoor of Helmdon Stone. Sir William Fermor of Easton Neston was created Lord Leominster and Earl of Pomfret 21st Dec. 1721. Hulcote is a hamlet of this parish.

FURTHO, or Fortho, 2 miles N. from Stony Stratford, contains 2 houses, and 12 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford. The hamlet of Old Stratford is partly in this parish and partly in Cosgrove, Passenham, and Paulers Pury.

GRAFTON REGIS, on the river Tove, which here divides this county from Buckinghamshire, 5 miles S.E. from Towcester, contains 42 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It was here that King Edward IV. married Elizabeth, widow of Sir John Grey, on the 1st of May, 1464. King Henry VIII. built a palace here, and erected Grafton into an honour in 1541, when several jurisdictions, lordships and manors, were annexed to it by Act of Parliament. The house was destroyed in the civil wars in the time of Charles I., and the demesne now forms part of the estates of the Duke of Grafton. Henry Fitz Roy, son of Charles II. by the Duchess of Cleveland, was created Duke of Grafton 11th Sept. 1675. The Grand Junction canal passes the village.

HARTWELL, or Wold Hartwell, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 8 miles S.E. from Northampton, contains 84 houses, and 432 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 20*l.*

PASSENHAM, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 2 miles W. from Stony Stratford, contains 159 houses, and 753 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Denshanger and Powkesley in Whittlebury Forest. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlake, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Maynard. The chancel, erected by Sir Robert Banaster in 1626, contains thirteen stalls of carved oak. The Grand Junction canal passes the village.

PAULERS PURY, or Paveley's Pery, 3 miles S.E. from Towcester, contains 216 houses, and 1069 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford; it contains a curious ancient font, and a monument of Arthur Nicholas Throckmorton, with his effigies. There is also a monument of one of the Bathurst family, who formerly had a seat here. Edward Bernard, a learned mathematician and astronomer, was born here in 1638. Plumpton Park is partly in this parish.

POTTERS PURY, or East Pery, 5 miles S.E. from Towcester, contains 159 houses, and 845 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of Earl Bathurst. The village receives its name from a pottery, said to be the largest and most ancient in this part of the kingdom. Yardley Gobion is a hamlet of this parish.

ROADE, or Rode, 5½ miles S. from Northampton, contains 101 houses, and 480 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy: the porch and tower are very ancient.

STOKE BRUERN, 3½ miles N.E. from Towcester, contains 79 houses, and 424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of Brasen Nose College Oxford: in it is a monument of Francis Crane, Esq., servant to Queen Elizabeth, King James, King Charles I., and Chief of the Green Cloth to Charles II.; ob. 1703, æt. 82. About a mile southward from the village is Stoke Park, the seat of Leveson Vernon, Esq.; the mansion was built about 1630, by Sir Francis Crane, Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, who established a celebrated manufactory of tapestry at Mortlake in Surrey, under the patronage of Villiers Duke of Buckingham. Sir Francis was here visited by King Charles I. and his Queen, about the time of the completion of his mansion in 1636. Shutlanger is a chapelry of this parish.

WICKEN, or Wyke Dyve, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 3 miles S.W. from Stony Stratford, contains 88 houses, and 471 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Charles Mordaunt, Bart. Wicken consists of two parishes united, which from their former possessors were called Wyke Dyve and Wyke Hamon. Wicken Park is the seat of Lord Charles Fitz Roy.

2. Corby Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Rutlandshire; on the east by Willybrook and Polebrook hundreds; on the south by Huxloe and Rothwell hundreds; and on the west by Leicestershire.

ASHLEY, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 5 miles W. from Rockingham, contains 80 houses, and 367 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l.*

BLATHERWICK on the Willybrook, 8 miles N.E. from Rockingham, contains 35 houses, and 240 inhabitants, and comprises two parishes, which were united in 1448. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Stafford O'Brien, Esq. The church of St. Mary Magdalen is demolished. Blatherwick Hall, the seat of Stafford O'Brien, Esq., is an old mansion, and the gateway at the entrance of the park is decorated with statues.

BRAMPTON, 6 miles S.W. from Rockingham, contains 21 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Spencer.

BRIGSTOCK, 5½ miles N.W. from Thrapston, contains 187 houses, and 1037 inhabitants. There is a market on Thursday; and annual fairs, 25th April for horses and horned cattle, 4th Sept. for sheep, brass, and pewter, and 22nd Nov. for hats, shoes and pedlery. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Brigstock Park, within the limits of the forest of Rockingham, formerly belonged to the Duke of Montagu. Farming Woods, also part of the forest, is the seat of the Right Honourable the Ladies Anne and Gertrude Fitz Patrick.

BULWICK, or Bolewyke, on the Willybrook, 7 miles E. from Rockingham, contains 86 houses, and 471 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* The tower and spire of this edifice are models of their kind; simply elegant in their general appearance, they combine the most graceful proportions with a tasteful distribution of ornament.

EAST CARLTON, 3 miles S.W. from Rockingham, contains 17 houses, and 63 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart. Sir Geoffery Palmer, of Carlton, was created a baronet 7th June 1660. Carlton Curlieu Hall is the seat of Sir John Henry Palmer, Bart.

CORBY, 3 miles S.E. from Rockingham, contains 139 houses, and 707 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*

COTTINGHAM, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 2 miles S.W. from Rockingham, contains 116 houses, and 462 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Middleton is a township of this parish.

DEANE, or Deene, 5 miles E. from Rockingham, contains 43 houses, and 234 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan; it contains several ancient monuments of the Brudenell family. Here was a priory, which was a cell to the abbey of Westminster, but was suppressed shortly after the conquest. Deane Park, the seat of the Earl of Cardigan, is situated on the confines of the Royal Forest of Rockingham, and presents very beautifully diversified scenery. The mansion is an irregular structure, built entirely of stone, and with several embattled turrets. The hall has a timber-framed roof, and the windows contain the arms of the noble families of Brudenell, Montagu, and Bruce, with their alliances, &c. On the walls are portraits of the most distinguished members of the family of Brudenell, &c. In the library the windows are also of painted glass, exhibiting armorial subjects; and here is a collection of manuscripts relating to this county by Thomas first Lord Cardigan.—Deanethorp, or Deenthorpe, one mile S. from the above, on the Willybrook, is a hamlet of this parish.

DINGLEY, on the borders of Leicestershire, 3 miles E. from Market Harborough, contains 33 houses, and 150 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of H. Hungerford Holdich, Esq. Dingley Hall, the seat of Henry Hungerford Holdich, Esq., has been partly rebuilt; but on one front is a porch, with the date of 1558.

FINESHADE, or Fineshed, 7 miles W. from Wansford, contains 13 houses, and 76 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy. Here was anciently a castle, erected by one of the Engaine family, and demolished as early as the time of King John. Within the moat Richard Engaine founded a priory of Black Canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, valued at 62*l.* 16*s.* per annum, which was granted in 1541 to John Lord Russell. Fineshade Abbey, the seat of the Honourable John Monckton, contains some portions of the original structure.

GEDDINGTON, on the river Ise, 3½ miles N.E. from Kettering, contains 175 houses, and 751 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan; it is an ancient edifice, with a curious inscription on the steps of the altar. Here was formerly a royal palace, where a Parliament was held in 1188 for raising money to carry on a crusade: the site is called the Castle Close, which is within a chase, about five miles long and two broad. In the centre of the village stands one of the crosses erected by Edward I. in memory of his Queen Eleanor; the most perfect of those now remaining, and not encumbered with modern additions.

GRETTON, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 3 miles N.E. from Rockingham, contains 176 houses, and 687 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Gretton, in Lincoln Cathedral; it contains several ancient monuments of the Hatton family. Kirby Hall, the seat of the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, is a magnificent building, deriving interest as well from the splendid peculiarity of its structure, as from its founder Sir Christopher Hatton, K.G., a conspicuous character in the reign of Elizabeth. The hall was originally built about 1572, but the date of 1590 appears on the stables; so that it may be supposed to have occupied 18 years in its erection. The mansion consists of two courts, each displaying much grandeur in the architecture of the several fronts, although in different styles, it having received additions in 1638, of a superb character, by Inigo Jones, the leading architect in the reign of Charles I. On the eastern side of the second or inner courts is the great hall, 46 feet by 22, with an ancient oak roof.

HARRINGWORTH, on the river Welland and borders of Rutlandshire, 5 miles N.E. from Rockingham, contains 77 houses, and 350 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church Oxford.

LAXTON, 7½ miles N.E. from Rockingham, contains 27 houses, and 190 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, and is exempt from episcopal authority. Laxton Hall, the seat of George Freke Evans, Esq., was built after a design by J. H. Repton; it has a fine portico of the Ionic order: the vestibule, erected after a design by Dance, is nearly square, but rises in a spherical ceiling terminated by a circular lantern. At the end of the hall is an Ionic corridor communicating with the various apartments, which contain a good collection of pictures, chiefly by the old masters. At an early period of history this estate was the property of the baronial family of Engaine, from whom it has lineally descended to the present proprietor.

NEWTON, or Newton Willows, 4 miles N. from Kettering, contains 18 houses, and 94 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Earl of Cardigan. The village is situated on the brow of a hill descending to the river Ise.

GREAT OAKLEY, within the bounds of Rockingham Forest, 5 miles N. from Kettering, contains 33 houses, and 183 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir Richard Brooke De Capell Brooke, Bart., of Great Oakley Hall, a mansion erected in 1555. Amongst the family pictures is a portrait of Arthur Brooke, who was sergeant of the hart-hounds to Queen Elizabeth: he is represented in his official costume. At the distance of rather more than a mile from Great Oakley is the site of Pipewell Abbey, founded in 1143 by William De Boutvelein for Cistercian Monks, which was valued at 347*l.* 8*s.* per annum, and was granted to William Marquess of Northampton in 1547: the foundation of the abbey walls only remain. Near it is a mound, which has been planted; and at Great Oakley is the monks' well, the water of which is remarkably pure, and is supposed to have been applied to the use of the abbey. Sir Richard Brooke De Capell Brooke of Great Oakley was created a baronet 14th June 1803.—Little Oakley, one mile E. from the above, contains 28 houses, and 121 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

ROCKINGHAM, on the borders of Rutlandshire, 26 miles N.E. from Northampton, and 9 miles N. from Kettering, contains 57 houses, and 278 inhabitants. It has a market on Thursday, and an annual fair 25th Sept. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes. In the chancel are several fine monuments of the Watson family: one to Lewis Earl of Rockingham and Katherine his Countess, is by P. Scheemakers and L. Delvaux. The Forest of Rockingham, in which the town is situated, is one of the largest and richest in the kingdom. In the reign of Edward I. it is described as 30 miles long and 8 miles in breadth; it consists of 11,000 acres. Rockingham Castle, the seat of Lord Sondes, was built by William the Conqueror; and it was here that William Rufus his son assembled the Abbots and Bishops of England during the misunderstanding between him and Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury. The council was held in the chapel of the castle 11th March 1095; the result of which was, that the majority of the Bishops renounced Anselm for their Archbishop. The castle continued to be a frequent residence of our early Sovereigns, particularly of Henry III. and Edward III. In the reign of the latter monarch more than twenty despatches bear date hence. It afterwards belonged to the Earls of Albemarle, but from the time of Henry VIII. has been the principal seat of the family of Watson. The situation is commanding, on the summit of a hill, in the midst of the forest, the declivity of the same being occupied by the town. The castle had originally a large keep, strengthened with double embattled walls and numerous towers. It was garrisoned for the king in the civil war, and during a siege suffered considerably. The gate-house is the principal remain of the ancient castle, but the present residence within the court-yard is curious and interesting from its comparative antiquity. Sir Lewis Watson was created a baronet 23rd June 1621, and Lord Rockingham 28th Jan. 1644. His only son Edward married Anne daughter of Thomas Wentworth Earl of Stafford, and had issue, Lewis, created by King George I. Viscount Sondes and Earl of Rockingham in 1714; his descendant Thomas Watson Wentworth was created Marquess of Rockingham 19th April, 1746; but Lewis son of John Lord Monson, and Margaret daughter of the First Earl of Rockingham, succeeding to this estate, assumed the name and arms of Watson, and was created Lord Sondes 20th May, 1760.

STOKE ALBANY, 4 miles S.W. from Rockingham, contains 83 houses, and 363 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Alban or St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes.

STANION, or Staniern, 4½ miles S.E. from Rockingham, contains 57 houses, and 278 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

SUTTON BASSET, on the borders of Leicestershire, 3½ miles N.E. from Market Harborough, 6 miles W. from Rockingham, contains 32 houses, and 142 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

WAKERLEY, on the river Welland and borders of Rutlandshire, 8 miles N.E. from Rockingham, contains 39 houses, and 209 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter.

WEEKLEY, 2 miles N.E. from Kettering, contains 51 houses, and 255 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch. Boughton House, the seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, K.T., was originally erected by Ralph Duke of Montagu, who in the early part of his life had been ambassador at the Court of France. King William honoured the Duke with a visit at this seat 24th Oct. 1695, when His Majesty and the whole court were entertained with the greatest magnificence. The house contains a large collection of pictures: amongst which are two cartoons, by Raffaelle; Ezekiel's Vision; and a Holy Family, the last consisting of eight figures; a half-length portrait of Edward VI., in armour; and one of Thomas Wentworth Earl of Strafford. The gardens are said to have occupied above 100 acres of land, and were formerly ornamented by many large basins, with fountains, aviaries, wildernesses, terraces, &c., and were diversified by numerous statues, vases, &c., both of marble and metal, procured from France at a vast expense. Traces of the original grandeur of Boughton House are yet to be found in the noble terrace, on the principal front, where is also a canal nearly a mile in length; but great part of the mansion was rebuilt by John second Duke of Montagu. Sir Edward Montagu, Lord Chief Justice in the reign of Henry VIII., purchased this estate of the Burdons in 1528. His grandson Sir Edward was K.B. at the coronation of James I., by whom he was created Lord Montagu of Boughton, 29th June 1621, which title became extinct on the death of the last Duke of Montagu, in 1790, whose only daughter Elizabeth married Henry Duke of Buccleuch. Her Grace's second son Henry James Scott Montagu is now Lord Montagu of Boughton, a title revived in 1786.

GREAT WELDON, or Weldon in the Woods, 7 miles W. from Oundle, and 4½ E. from Rockingham, contains 69 houses, and 339 inhabitants. Here are annual fairs, on the first Thursdays in February, May, August, and November. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Winchilsea. In the vicinity are famous quarries of ragstone.—Little Weldon, half a mile westward from the above, contains 106 houses, and 480 inhabitants. Near this village a tessellated pavement was discovered in 1738, 96 feet long, and 10 feet broad, and other remains of buildings, amongst which were several Roman coins of the Lower Empire.

WESTON UPON WELLAND, on the borders of Leicestershire 4½ miles N.E. from Market Harborough, contains 50 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes.

WILBARSTON, 4 miles S.W. from Rockingham, contains 157 houses, and 697 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes.

3. Fawsley Hundred

Is bounded on the west and north-west by Warwickshire; on the north-east by Guilsborough hundred; on the east by Newbottle Grove and Towcester hundred; and on the south by Norton and Wardon hundreds.

ASHBY LEDGERS, or Ashby St. Ledgers, 4 miles N. from Daventry, contains 51 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leodegar, Bishop of Autun, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Joseph Ashley, Esq. Near the altar is a marble slab, inlaid with brass, in memory of William Catesby, the favourite of King Richard III., and his lady, ob. 1485, and several monuments of the Ashley family. Ashby Lodge, the seat of George Henry Arnold, Esq., was built in 1722: it contains an interesting collection of pictures by old masters; amongst which, is one of King William and Queen Mary going in state to Parliament, through the old Horse Guards, by Old Wycke. The grounds are enlivened by a fine expanse of water, on the banks of which are plantations opening upon Braunston Cleeves, whence is a beautiful view, including Edge Hill, the Malvern Hills, the Clee Hills in Shropshire, and even to the Welsh mountains.

BADBY, 2½ miles S. from Daventry, contains 120 houses, and 547 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford: the tower was rebuilt in 1707. Westward of the village is Arbury Hill, an earth-work commanding an extensive prospect; it is 804 feet above the level of the sea. Newnham is a chapelry of this parish. Thomas Randolph, a poet and dramatist, was born here in 1605.

BARBY, on the borders of Warwickshire, 6 miles N.W. from Daventry, contains 155 houses, and 645 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Onley. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 30*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. C. Williams. The Oxford canal passes on the western side of the village.

BRAUNSTON, or Brandestone, on the borders of Warwickshire, 3 miles N.W. from Daventry, contains 260 houses, and 1236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 31*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford; it forms a conspicuous object on the brow of the hill at the western entrance of the village. The Oxford canal here unites with the Grand Junction canal; and the road to Coventry near the village has been much improved under the direction of the Parliamentary Commissioners.

CATESBY, 3½ miles S.W. from Daventry, contains 20 houses, and 114 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Newbold. The church is now demolished, but it is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of John George Parkhurst, Esq., of Catesby House, which occupies the site of a priory, founded by Robert de Esseby in the twelfth century, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Edmund, for Benedictine nuns. Their seal is inscribed SIGILL . COE. SCE . MARIE . DE . CATESBY . AD . CAVSAS. It was endowed at the Dissolution with 145*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and granted to John Onley in 1536. Parochial duty is now performed in the chapel of the priory.

CHARWELTON, or Cherwelton, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles S. from Daventry, contains 49 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Charles Knightley, Bart.: in it are three fine brasses for the Andrew family, besides other monuments. The river Cherwell rises in this parish, and crosses the entrance to the village from Daventry.

DAVENTRY, or Daintree, 12 miles W. from Northampton, and 72 miles from London, contains 639 houses, and 3326 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Drayton. The town consists of two principal streets, High-street and Sheaf-street, the last being the road through Coventry to Chester. It has a weekly market on Wednesday, and nine annual fairs; on the first Monday in January, for cattle, horses, and sheep; the last Monday in February, Easter Tuesday, for cheese; Augustine's fair, on 6th and 7th of June, 3rd August, 1st Monday in September, 2nd, 3rd, and 27th October for sheep, and the last Wednesday in November for cattle and horses. The town is governed by a bailiff, 14 burgesses, and 20 of the commonalty, who have a seal, representing a man with an axe standing by a tree, allusive of the name of Dane Tree. It is dated 1595, and circumscribed SIGILLVM . COMVNE . BVRGI . DE . DANETRE, N . S. The Moot Hall formerly stood in the High-street, near Market Hill, but was removed in 1806. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford; it was rebuilt in 1752. The churchyard, with the addition made to it in 1816, forms a spacious cemetery, and no interment being permitted within the church, abounds with an unusual number of memorials. The priory, which formerly stood near the west end of the church, was originally an anterior foundation at Preston Capes, by Hugh de Leycester, which, in a few years, was translated here with the consent of Hugh de St. Liz Earl of Northampton. It was dedicated to St. Augustine, and was subordinate to St. Mary de Caritate: at the Dissolution its spiritualities were valued at 115*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and its temporalities at 120*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* per annum, when it was granted to Cardinal Wolsey. All remains of the conventual building have been lately taken down. About a mile eastward of the town is Borough Hill, the Benaventa of the Britons, and Isannavaria of the Romans, the largest earth-work perhaps in the kingdom. The summit presents an extensive panoramic view of the surrounding country, abounding with objects of historical interest, as Naseby, Holmby House, Northampton, Wedon depôt, the spires of Coventry; and immediately below it, the town of Daventry, and the reservoir of the Grand Junction Canal; the Watling-street passes within a short distance, and its course may be traced for many miles. The outer circumference of the ramparts is rather more than two miles and a quarter; the diameter from north to south one mile; from east to west, at the widest point, three furlongs; and the contents of the whole area about one hundred and fifty acres *.

DODFORD, on a branch of the river Nen, 3 miles S.E. from Daventry, contains 43 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of — Welshman, Esq.: it contains some interesting ancient tombs; one of Sir William Keynes, ob. 1344, with his effigy, and one of Sir John Cressy, ob. 1444.

EVERDON, 4 miles S. from Daventry, contains 122 houses, and 640 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Little Everdon and Snoscomb. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. Everdon House is the seat of General Doveton.

FARTHINGSTON, or Farraxton, 6 miles S.E. from Daventry, contains 48 houses, and 265 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Castle Dyke, an encampment a mile northward of the village, occupies about thirteen acres, in an elevated situation. Near it is another entrenchment.

FAWSLEY, or Falvesly, 4 miles S. from Daventry, contains 5 houses, and 22 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Virgin, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir

* Baker's History of Northamptonshire, where is a plan of the camp, accompanied by a very interesting elucidation of the position, and an account of his discovery of the Roman Prætorium, of which there is also a plan. To this work, unquestionably the best of County Histories, the editor has been indebted for much local information.

Charles Knightley, Bart., of Fawsley Park. The manor-house has been the residence of the Knightley family from the time of HenryV.: it is situated on a gently elevated lawn, commanding a rich expanse of wood and fertile pasturage, enlivened by two fine sheets of water. The east front, with the hall and its beautiful oriel window, presents a fine specimen of the Tudor style of domestic architecture. The windows of the breakfast-room are enriched with armorial bearings of the family, in painted glass; but the chief ornament of the mansion is the magnificent hall, 54 feet by 24, and 43 feet high, with an open timber roof. The windows are filled with painted glass, representing the arms of the alliances of the Knightleys; and at the southern end of the room is an achievement of 334 quarterings borne by this ancient family. In the rooms are some curious family portraits.

HELLIDON, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles S.W. from Daventry, contains 89 houses, and 408 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. The river Leam rises close to the entrance of the village; and from Rydon Hill is an extensive view.

KILSBY, or Kildesby, on the borders of Warwickshire, 6 miles N. from Daventry, contains 154 houses, and 690 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, annexed to the Precentorship of Lincoln Cathedral.

LITCHBOROUGH, or Lichborough, 6 miles N.W. from Towcester, contains 77 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. William Addington Taylor. Litchborough House is the seat of William Grant, Esq.: on the stair-case is a full-length portrait of Sir John Nedham, in armour, holding his staff of office as Gentleman-pensioner to Queen Elizabeth. He died in 1618.

NEWNHAM, or Newenham, 2 miles S. from Daventry, contains 121 houses, and 574 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage.—Newnham Wood is northward of the village.

NORTON, 2 miles N.E. from Daventry, contains 95 houses, and 474 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Muscote and Thorp. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of B. Botfield, Esq.: it contains a monument to Elizabeth daughter of Edward Duke of Somerset, the Protector, wife of Sir Richard Knightley, of Norton; she died 3rd June, 1602. Norton Hall, the seat of Beriah Botfield, Esq., sheriff of the county, 1831, was built in the reign of James I., with modern additions, by the late proprietor in 1808. The Watling-street passes through the grounds, and on the west is the reservoir of the Grand Junction canal.

PRESTON CAPES, or Preston on the Hill, 6 miles S. from Daventry, contains 82 houses, and 441 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Wood Preston. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Sir C. Knightley, Bart.

STAVERTON, or Stareton, on the borders of Warwickshire, 2 miles S.W. from Daventry, contains 104 houses, and 474 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford. Studbury Hill, one of the loftiest eminences in this part of the kingdom, is here called the highest spot of ground in all England. A branch of the Nen has its source at Hartwell Spring in this parish.

STOWE, Nine Churches, 5½ miles S.E. from Daventry, contains 76 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Rev. John Lloyd Crawley: it was repaired by the Earl of Danby in 1639. It contains several ancient monuments, particularly one of Elizabeth Lady Danvers, ob. 1630, by Nicholas Stone, a remarkably fine piece of sculpture; also one of John Daye, Esq. comptroller of the foreign post-office, ob. 1757. In the reign of Henry VII. it is said there were nine advowsons appendant to the manor, whence the addition to its name of Stowe.

WEDON, or Weedon Bec, 5 miles S.E. from Daventry, contains 247 houses, and 1178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of Thomas Reeve Thornton, Esq.; it is about to be rebuilt by subscription. Ethelred, King of Mercia, converted the palace of his brother Wulphere, at this place, into a monastery, under the superintendence of his niece Werburgh; and in consequence of her interdiction, it is reported that no wild geese are ever seen to graze on Wedon Common. It is said that this priory afterwards became a cell to the Abbey of Bec, whence the addition to the name; and that in the reign of Henry VI. it made part of the endowment of Eton College. The Royal Military Depôt was erected by Act of Parliament in 1803, for the ordnance department: it stands on the summit of a hill near the Chester road, and contains barracks for 500 men, a governor's house, store-houses, and magazines, capable of containing 200,000 stand of small-arms, besides field-ordnance and ammunition, a hospital, and work-shops. Whitewell Hill, in this parish, commands a view of twenty spires, and in a clear day it is said the prospect is extended to Higham Ferrers, above twenty miles distant. The Watling-street passes the village, whence it is sometimes called Wedon-on-the-street. The Grand Junction canal, beneath the hill, forms a ready communication, by other canals from this central spot, with all parts of the kingdom.

WELTON, 3 miles N.E. from Daventry, contains 123 houses, and 567 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Churchill House is the seat of Miss Clarke; and Welton Place, of John Plomer Clarke, Esq. The last is situated on the southern side of a bold abrupt hill, on a terrace, commanding a prospect of the town of Daventry and the adjacent country. The hill rising behind the house is planted with forest trees and shrubs of all sorts; and near its base is the Mickle Well, in a curious ancient vaulted cave, which is so called, perhaps, from its never-failing abundance. It feeds several fish-ponds, &c. within the grounds.

4. Guilsborough Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Leicestershire, and Rothwell hundred; on the east by Orlingbury hundred; on the south by Newbottle Grove and Fawsley hundreds; and on the west by Warwickshire.

COLD ASHBY, 3 miles S. from Welford, contains 73 houses, and 375 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*: in the south cross aisle is a monument of Sir John Langham, Bart., ob. 1671. Richard Knolles, author of "The History of the Turks," 1610, folio, was born here.

LONG BUCKBY, 5 miles N.E. from Daventry, contains 414 houses, and 1797 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Murcott is a hamlet of this parish.

COTON, or Clay Coaton, 4 miles S.W. from Welford, contains 27 houses, and 99 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

COTTESBROOK, 9½ miles N. from Northampton, and 7 miles S.E. from Welford, contains 62 houses, and 297 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 0*s.*10*d.*, in the patronage of Sir James Langham, Bart. Cottesbrook House, the seat of Sir James Langham, Bart., consisting of a center and two detached wings, is a brick edifice. Sir John Langham, of Cottesbrook, was created baronet 7th June 1660.

CREATON, or Creton, 8 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 108 houses, and 492 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

CRICK, 7 miles N. from Daventry, contains 221 houses, and 968 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford.

ELKINGTON, 2½ miles S. from Welford, contains 8 houses, and 56 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

GUILSBOROUGH, on a lofty eminence, 10 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 124 houses, and 671 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Nortoft. The church, dedicated to St. Etheldred, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Here is a free grammar-school, founded by Sir John Langham in 1668. Hollowell is a hamlet of this parish. A large encampment called the Burrows, or the Borough Hill, is supposed to have given name to the village. Guilsborough Hall, the seat of William Zouch Lucas Ward, Esq., commands delightful prospects.

WEST HADDON, 6 miles S. from Welford, and 12 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 134 houses, and 893 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of J. J. Whitfield, Esq. Nenmore spring in this parish is one of the sources of the river Nen; and Oster Hill is supposed to be a sepulchral tumulus.

LILBOURN, on the borders of Leicestershire, 7 miles S.W. from Welford, contains 60 houses, and 264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Watling-street leaves the county at Dove-bridge about a mile westward from the village: near it is the Round Hill, apparently artificial.

NASEBY, or Navesby, 4 miles S.E. from Welford, contains 126 houses, and 697 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it contains some ancient monuments of the Shuckburgh family. The village stands upon an eminence supposed to be the highest ground in England; and a field about a mile northward is celebrated in history for the battle which determined the fate of the Royal cause on 14th June 1645.

STANFORD, on the river Avon and borders of Leicestershire, 3½ miles W. from Welford, contains 6 houses, and 20 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Thomas Otway Cave, Esq. Stanford Hall, which has been rebuilt on the opposite side of the river, is in Westrill liberty, Leicestershire. See p. 183, col. 2. ante.

THORNBY, or Thurnby, 4 miles S. from Welford, contains 42 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 13*l.* Thornby Folly is near this village.

WATFORD, 5 miles N. from Daventry, is situated on a branch of the Nen near the Watling-street, contains 55 houses, and 331 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it contains several monuments of the Clarke family.

WELFORD, or Wellesford, on the river Avon and borders of Leicestershire, contains 221 houses, and 1005 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford: it formerly belonged to Sulby Abbey.

YELVERTOFT, 5 miles S.W. from Welford, contains 138 houses, and 654 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 0*s.*10*d.*

5. Hamfordsho Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Orlingbury hundred; on the east by Huxloe and Higham Ferrers hundreds; on the south by Wymersley hundred; and on the west by Spelhoe hundred.

GREAT DODDINGTON, 3 miles S.W. from Wellingborough, contains 79 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

EARLS BARTON, 4 miles S.W. from Wellingborough, contains 178 houses, and 976 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The tower of this church is very singular both in design and construction, and the southern porch is a specimen of highly ornamented Anglo-Norman workmanship; many parts of the interior are also entitled to the particular notice of the antiquary. It occupies part of the area of an ancient castle.

ECTON, 5 miles S.W. from Wellingborough, contains 111 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* Ecton House is the seat of Samuel Isted, Esq.

HOLCOT, 7 miles N.E. from Northampton, contains 88 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

MEARS ASHBY, 3½ miles W. from Wellingborough, contains 95 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*

SYWELL, 5 miles W. from Wellingborough, contains 47 houses, and 265 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*

WELLINGBOROUGH, 10 miles N.E. from Northampton, contains 905 houses, and 4454 inhabitants. This town is supposed to derive its name from the wells with which it abounds. The Red Well, a mineral spring at the foot of a hill about half a mile north-westward, was formerly of considerable celebrity for its medicinal effects. Here in 1626 it is said that King Charles and his Queen resided in tents during the season, for the benefit of drinking the water pure at its source. It is situated near the junction of the Ise and the Nen, and consists of four principal streets formed by the roads to Thrapston, Higham-Ferrers, Northampton, and Kettering. The chief articles of manufacture are lace and shoes; and the market on Wednesday is considerable for the sale of corn and lace: there are annual fairs on Easter Wednesday, and Whit Wednesday; 23rd Sept. for hiring servants, and 29th October. The petty sessions for Wellingborough division are held here. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Warwick.

WILBY, on a branch of the Ise, 2 miles S.W. from Wellingborough, contains 67 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

6. Higham Ferrers Hundred

Is bounded on the north-west and north by Huxloe and Navisford hundreds; on the east and south-east by Huntingdonshire and Bedfordshire; and on the west by Hamfordsho and Wymersley hundreds.

BOZEAT, on the borders of Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire, 6 miles S. from Wellingborough, contains 148 houses, and 754 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

CHELVESTON, or Chelston, 2 miles E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 65 houses, and 317 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Caldecot. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

EASTON MAUDIT, 6 miles S. from Wellingborough, contains 41 houses, and 178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford: it contains several very curious monuments of the Yelverton family; one to Thomas Morton Bishop of Durham, ob. 1659, and another to Charles Longueville Lord Grey of Ruthin, ob. 1643, &c. Here was formerly a large mansion of the Yelvertons, wholly destroyed after the death of the last Earl of Sussex; when the numerous ancient portraits it contained were disposed of by public sale. The estate now belongs to the Marquess of Northampton.

HARGRAVE, on the borders of Bedfordshire and Huntingdonshire, 5 miles E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 38 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

HIGHAM FERRERS, 16 miles E. from Northampton, and 65 miles from London, contains 153 houses, and 877 inhabitants. It is an ancient town, and irregularly built; with a market on Saturday, and annual fairs Thursday before 5th February, 7th March, Thursday before May 12th, and 28th June, Thursday before 5th August, Thursday after 15th August for horses and horned cattle, 10th October, for horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, and 6th December, for horses, cattle and sheep. In the market-stead opposite the town-hall is the shaft of an ancient cross. The government of the town is vested in a mayor, steward, recorder, 7 aldermen, 13 capital burgesses, and commonalty. Their seal represents a hand giving the benediction in chief, and in base nine men's heads. It returns one member to Parliament, the right of election being vested in the mayor, aldermen, burgesses and freemen, being householders and not receiving alms, who amount to about 100: the present member is Lord Viscount Milton, who is also returned for the county. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 33*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Earl FitzWilliam. The western front of the tower of this church is curious in its architecture; the porch or doorway contains two openings, the mouldings surrounding it are charged with sculpture; over these are ten circular compartments representing passages from the New Testament in bas-relief, and originally were painted. The aisles at the east end are divided from the chancel by carved screens, and on each side of the chancel are stalls with carved subsellæ. Under an arch, on the north side of the altar, is a slab, inlaid with brass, of Lawrence St. Maur, rector about the reign of Henry VI.; also a monument of the parents of Henry Chichele and of William Chichele, brother of the Archbishop. Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here, and founded a college for eight secular canons, one of whom was to be master, &c.; which in 1525 was found to have an annual revenue of 204*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* After the surrender, the building, which appears to have been quadrangular, was converted into an inn; and a portion of the revenue forms the endowment of the free-school, situated in the north-western side of the church. The bede-house, on the southern side of the church, was also founded and endowed by Archbishop Chichele: the senior pensioner was styled the Prior. At the east end was a chapel, now a ruin. Northward of the church is the castle-yard, the site of a castle supposed to have been erected by Thomas Earl of Lancaster.

IRCHESTER, 3 miles S.E. from Wellingborough, contains 132 houses, and 689 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* An encampment at Chester, near the village, now called the Burrow, was in form a parallelogram, containing about 18 acres, situated upon a declivity, the longest diameter parallel with the course of the river. The remains of a pavement, coins, &c. indicate a Roman origin.

NEWTON BROMSWOLD, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 3½ miles S.E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 24 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

RAUNDS, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 4 miles N.E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 252 houses, and 1301 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it is a curious ancient building, and displays some interesting architectural details. On the southern side is the shaft of an ancient stone cross. The south aisle of the church is divided from the chancel by a screen, on which is painted the History of Joseph and his Brethren, in eight compartments; there were inscriptions under each of these, taken from the Latin Vulgate, published by Sixtus V., but three of them are now obliterated.

RINGSTEAD, 2½ miles S. from Thrapston, contains 120 houses, and 583 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy.

RUSHDEN, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 2 miles S. from Higham Ferrers, contains 205 houses, and 1077 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The edifice is remarkably fine; it stands on a hill, and is surmounted by a lofty spire; near the altar are four canopied niches on the south side and one on the north: it contains a monument of Sir Goddard Pemberton, of Hartingfordbury Park, ob. 1st Aug. 1616; and of Robert Pemberton, gentleman-usher to Queen Elizabeth, ob. 18th April 1609. The manor-house, built in the reign of James I., is a curious specimen of architecture. Higham Park, southward from the village, once the seat of the Pemberton family, was originally formed in the reign of Henry II., but is now disparked; it is extra-parochial.

STANWICK, 2 miles N.E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 81 houses, and 424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. John Dolben Archbishop of York, and Richard Cumberland the dramatist, were born here.

STRIXTON, 5 miles S. from Wellingborough, contains 6 houses, and 56 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, or St. Romwold, is a rectory, value 7*l.*

WOLLASTON, 4 miles S. from Wellingborough, contains 163 houses, and 991 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

7. Huxloe Hundred.

Is bounded on the north by Corby hundred; on the east and south-east by Navisford hundred; and on the west by Orlingbury and Hamfordshoe hundreds.

GREAT ADDINGTON, 4 miles S.W. from Thrapston, contains 53 houses, and 256 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*—Little Addington, one mile S. from the above, contains 53 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.*

ALDWINKLE, ALL SAINTS, on the banks of the Nen, 3 miles N. from Thrapston, contains 48 houses, and 240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* John Dryden, poet-laureat to Charles II. and James II., was born here. Aldwinkle House is the seat of the Dowager Lady Lilford.—Aldwinkle, St. Peter's, half a mile southward from the above, contains 38 houses, and 116 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* Thomas Fuller, author of "The Worthies of England," was born here.

BARNWELL, ALL SAINTS, or King's Barnwell, in a detached portion of this hundred, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 3 miles S. from Oundle, contains 20 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

BARTON SEGRAVE, 2 miles S.E. from Kettering, contains 43 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.* Humphrey Henchman, Bishop of London, was born here in 1592, and John Bridges, the historian of this county, died here in 1724. Sir Nicholas de Segrave had license from King Edward II. to castellate his mansion here, of which no remains now exist, excepting the moat westward of the church. Barton Segrave Hall is the seat of Charles Tibbits, Esq.

BURTON LATIMER, 4 miles S.E. from Kettering, contains 174 houses, and 842 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 10*s.*

CRANFORD, on a branch of the Nen, 4 miles E. from Kettering, contains 91 houses, and 515 inhabitants. It has two parishes, on the opposite sides of the stream, St. Andrew, a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir George Robinson, Bart.; and St. John, a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Cranford House, the seat of Sir George Robinson, Bart., is a modern edifice, surrounded by an extensive lawn and pleasure-grounds.

DENFORD, on the river Nen, 1½ mile S. from Thrapston, contains 63 houses, and 310 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.*

FINEDON, or Thingdon, 3 miles N.E. from Wellingborough, contains 233 houses, and 1159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John English Dolben, Bart., of Finedon Hall. Sir Gilbert Dolben, eldest son and heir of John Dolben Archbishop of York, was created a baronet by Queen Anne 1st April 1704, and married Anne daughter and heiress of Tanfield Mulso, Esq. of Finedon.

GRAFTON UNDER WOOD, on the skirts of Rockingham Forest, 4 miles E. from Kettering, contains 57 houses, and 285 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*

IRTHLINGBOROUGH, on the river Nen, 2 miles N. from Higham Ferrers, contains 220 houses, and 1072 inhabitants. It consists of two parishes, All Saints and St. Peter. The church of the former is demolished. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* John Pyel, Lord Mayor of London in 1372, commenced the foundation of a college in the church of St. Peter, which being in the gift of the Abbot of Peterborough, he obtained the patronage of the canonries, alternately with the founder's heirs: it was valued in 1535 at 70*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, and was granted in 1580 to Edward Downing and P. Ashton. Of this building there are some remains between the tower and body of the church. The tower is square at the base, but at the height of two stories is octangular. On the south side of the chancel is an old monument with a canopy, &c., and near it another, supposed to be for John Pyel and his wife. On the north side of the chancel are also two ancient monuments. In the chancel are stalls with carved subsellæ; and at the upper end of each aisle is a chantry. In the middle of the village is a stone cross upon a graduated base; the shaft of the cross is 13 feet in height, and is the standard for adjusting the provincial pole, by which the doles or portions in the adjacent meadows are measured.

ISLIP, on the river Nen, one mile N.W. from Thrapston, contains 100 houses, and 551 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset.

KETTERING, 17 miles N.W. from Northampton, and 75 from London, contains 781 houses, and 3668 inhabitants. It is situated on the Ise, and has a market on Friday, and annual fairs Thursday before Easter, Friday before Whitsunday, Thursday before old Michaelmas, 10th Oct. for horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, pedlery and toys, and Thursday before 21st Dec.; also a cattle market every Friday fortnight. The petty sessions for Kettering division are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 34*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes. The edifice is a very fine specimen of ecclesiastical architecture. At the west end is an embattled tower, three stories in height, graceful in its enrichments and just in its proportions. Hence rises a beautiful crocketed spire, in which are several openings surmounted by tabernacles.

LILFORD, on the river Nen, in a detached portion of this hundred, 3 miles S. from Oundle, contains 17 houses, and 130 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Wigsthorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Lilford: it contains monuments of the families of Elmes and Powys. Lilford Hall, the seat of Lord Lilford, is situated in a beautifully diversified park, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country. It was built by Arthur Elmes in 1635, entirely of stone, and the principal front is tastefully preserved in its original state. Sir Thomas Powys, Attorney-General, purchased the manor and seat in 1711; and his grandson, Thomas Powys, M.P. for this county, was created Lord Lilford of Lilford, 26th Oct. 1797.

LOWICK, or Luffwick, on Harpers-brook, a branch of the Nen, 2 miles N.W. from Thrapston, contains 58 houses, and 419 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset. It is a large and handsome edifice, and contains several ancient brasses, and a tomb for Edward Lord Stafford, ob. 1499. Under the east window of the north aisle is a very sumptuous monument to Mary Lady Mordaunt, ob. 1705; near which is that of her husband Sir John Germaine, Bart., who obtained this estate by his marriage, and who died the 11th December 1718, having married, secondly, Lady Betty daughter of Charles second Earl of Berkeley, the Lady Betty Germaine, equally distinguished for her wit and amiable disposition in the early part of the last century. After her decease in 1769, she bequeathed this estate to Lord George Sackville, the youngest son of the Duke of Dorset. Drayton House, the seat of the Duke of Dorset, is an ancient mansion, of the Mordaunt family, the north front of which retains the highly characteristic features of the Tudor style of domestic architecture, and was erected in 1584: the entire building is of stone; but it has undergone great alteration, chiefly about the time of Queen Anne, and ranks as one of the finest houses in this county. In the hall are some excellent whole-length portraits, and a very good collection of pictures adorn the principal rooms. Little innovation has taken place in the gardens, which preserve the character of the style of the reign of Queen Anne, when they were originally formed.

SLIPTON, 3 miles W. from Thrapston, contains 23 houses, and 135 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset.

SUDBOROUGH, on Harpers-brook, a branch of the Nen, 3 miles N.W. from Thrapston, contains 53 houses, and 294 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Sudborough Lodge is near the village.

TWYWELL, 3 miles W. from Thrapston, contains 42 houses, and 200 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.*

WARKTON, 2 miles N.E. from Kettering, contains 50 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch: the chancel is remarkable for the very sumptuous monuments to the Montagu family; that of John Duke of Montagu, ob. 1749, is by Roubilliac; Mary Duchess of Montagu, ob. 1751, by Roubilliac; and Mary Duchess of Montagu, ob. 1775, by Peter Mathias Van Gelder.

WOODFORD, on the river Nen, 2 miles S.W. from Thrapston, contains 103 houses, and 572 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, in medieties, valued at 11*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*, and 11*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Lord St. John.

8. Nassaburgh Hundred,

Or Peterborough Liberty, is bounded on the north by Lincolnshire; on the east by Cambridgeshire; on the south by Huntingdonshire; and on the west by Willybrook hundred.

BAINTON, or Badington, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 5 miles N.E. from Wansford, contains 30 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. Bainton Hall is the seat of Robert Henson, Esq.

BARNACK, 4 miles N. from Wansford, contains 90 houses, and 379 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it is an exceedingly interesting edifice. From the stone quarries in the vicinity, many of the beautiful churches of this county have been erected. Pilsgate and Southorp are hamlets of this parish.

CASTOR, 4 miles W. from Peterborough, contains 86 houses, and 494 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Keneburgh, is a rectory, value 52*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, held with the see of Peterborough. The central tower of this building, which is of Anglo-Norman architecture, may be regarded as almost unique, and other parts are peculiarly interesting to the architectural antiquary: it is supposed to have been erected in 1123, the 10th of Henry I. Castor, as its name implies, is the site of a Roman station, the Durobrivæ of Antoninus; and many curious vestiges of the occupancy of the Anglo-Romans have been found here. Mr. Artis, of Milton, in 1820, devoted much research in exploring the vicinity, and has fortunately succeeded in bringing to light several interesting objects; as hypocausts, tessellated pavements, pottery, sculptured stones, coins, &c. In the Anglo-Saxon period a monastery was founded here by St. Keneburgh, daughter of Penda King of Mercia, which was destroyed by the Danes about 1010. Near Gunwade Ferry, over the Nen, about a mile eastward, are two upright stones called Robin Hood and Little John. Ailesworth is a hamlet, and Sutton and Upton are chapelries of this parish. Milton Abbey, the seat of Viscount Milton, formerly belonged to the Abbots of Peterborough: the present mansion was erected in the reign of Henry VIII., by Sir William Fitz William, sheriff of this county in 1521, and still retains characteristics of the magnificent period in which it was built. Amongst the pictures here preserved, is one of Mary Queen of Scots, painted in 1582, inscribed, "This Picture was given to Sir William Fitz William by Mary Queen of Scots, on the Morning of her Execution, for the humane treatment she had met with during her Imprisonment at Fotheringhay, whereof he was Governor."

ETTON, 7 miles N.W. from Peterborough, contains 20 houses, and 125 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Woodcroft. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitz William.

EYE, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 4 miles N.E. from Peterborough, contains 167 houses, and 747 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Peterborough.

GLINTON, 6 miles N. from Peterborough, contains 74 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, is a curacy.

HELPSTONE, 7 miles N.W. from Peterborough, contains 92 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Caius Col. Camb.

MARHOLM, or Marham, 4 miles N.W. from Peterborough, contains 20 houses, and 120 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlac, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam: it contains the monuments of Sir William Fitzwilliam, who died in 1534, and of his son, who died in 1599.

MAXEY, on the Welland, and borders of Lincolnshire, 8 miles N.W. from Peterborough, contains 74 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. Lolham Bridges, about a mile westward of the village, formed part of the Ermine-street, and carried the Roman road over the fens adjacent to the river Welland. Deeping Gate is a hamlet of this parish.

NEWBOROUGH, a parish, contains 31 houses, and 129 inhabitants; and Borough Fenn Ville, containing 27 houses, and 204 inhabitants, is an extra parochial district.

NORTHBOROUGH, 7 miles N. from Peterborough, contains 45 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough.

PASTON, 3 miles N. from Peterborough, contains 16 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Gunthorp, Walton and Werrington are hamlets of this parish.

PEAKIRK, or Peykirk, on the borders of Lincolnshire, 7 miles N. from Peterborough, contains 37 houses, and 180 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Pega, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The cell of St. Pega, originally established here in 817, was annexed to the abbey of Peterborough in 1048.

CITY OF PETERBOROUGH, 44 miles N.E. from Northampton, and 81 miles from London, contains 347 houses, and 2108 inhabitants. This city is situated on the river Nen, over which it has a bridge. It has a market on Saturday, and annual fairs on 10th July and 2nd October, for horses and farming stock of all kinds. The bailiff of the city is appointed by the dean and chapter. The jurisdiction of the liberty of the soke of Peterborough includes the hundred of Nassaburgh, and the civil magistrates appointed by commission from the Crown are invested with the same power as judges of assize, and hold their quarter-sessions here. The arms of the city are those of the deanery, the dean and chapter being lords of the manor; and the arms of the deanery are the same as those of the see. The borough returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred the 1st of Edward VI., when the right of election was vested in the inhabitants within the precincts of the minster, being householders not receiving alms, and in the other inhabitants within the city paying scot and lot, amounting to about 400. The bailiff is the returning officer. The present members are Sir Robert Heron, Bart., and John Nicholas Fazakerley, Esq. At an early period this place was called Medeshamsted, and was distinguished for its monastery, originally founded by Peada son of Penda, King of Mercia: it was dedicated to St. Peter, whence the town was afterwards called Peterburgh. After it had been destroyed by the Danes, Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, assisted by King Edgar and his chancellor Adulf, rebuilt the monastery in a more stately and magnificent manner, about the year 970, for monks of the Benedictine order; and it continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue was valued at 1972*l.* 7*s.* per annum. King Henry VIII. converted the conventual church into a cathedral, and on the erection of the see, endowed it out of the lands of the dissolved monastery. The diocese, wholly taken from that of Lincoln, contains the two counties of Northampton and Rutland, except three parishes in each, in which are 293 parishes: the see is valued in the King's books at 414*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, and is computed to be worth about 1700*l.* per annum. To the cathedral belong a dean, an archdeacon, six prebendaries, a treasurer, a chancellor, eight minor canons, and other officers. The style of architecture prevailing in the cathedral is the Anglo-Norman; and the plan consists of a nave with aisles, a transept, a choir terminating at the east end semicircularly, and environed by a continuation of the aisles of the nave, the whole terminated at the east by the new building. The restoration of the interior now in progress under Blore, an able architect, is deservedly admired; the arms introduced on the screen were painted by Willement. The length of the cathedral including the buttresses is 471 feet, the length of the transept is 180 feet, and the breadth of the western front is 156 feet. The minster close, westward of the cathedral, contains many of the conventual buildings still entire: on the north is the deanery, with a very highly enriched gate-house, built by Abbot Kirton about 1515. In 1536 Katherine of Arragon was interred in the abbey on the north side of the choir near the altar; and in 1587 the funeral of Mary Queen of Scots was solemnized in the cathedral. The parish church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 49*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop: the parish includes the hamlets of Dogsthorp, Longthorp, Eastfield, and Newark.

STAMFORD BARON, a suburb of the town of Stamford in Lincolnshire, on the southern bank of the river Welland, 6 miles N. from Wansford, contains 194 houses, and 1190 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter. In the chancel is the monument of the Lord Treasurer Burghley, and others of the Cecil family. Burghley House, the seat of the Marquess of Exeter, is about a mile from the town, and is remarkable for its rich display of the sumptuous architecture of the reign of Elizabeth: it was erected by the illustrious Lord Burghley, and the architect employed in raising the sumptuous pile was John Thorpe. About two miles westward of Burghley is Woothorp, a hamlet of the parish of St. Martin. A mansion was also erected here by Lord Burghley, in which the Duke of Buckingham resided in the reign of Charles II.

THORNHAUGH, one mile N. from Wansford, contains 46 houses, and 266 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford; it contains some monuments of the Russell family. Sir William Russell was created Lord Russell of Thornhaugh 21 July, 1603; he died 9 Aug. 1613, and is buried here. There are some remains of their ancient seat.

UFFORD, or Ufwörth, 4 miles N. from Wansford, contains 31 houses, and 148 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. Ashton is a hamlet of this parish.

WANSFORD, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 8 miles W. from Peterborough, contains 29 houses, and 179 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy: it is situated on the banks of the Nen.

WHITTERING, or Wittering, 3 miles N. from Wansford, contains 37 houses, and 183 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Exeter. Here was a Priory as early as the year 1308.

9. Navisford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Polebrook hundred; on the east by a detached portion of Huxloe hundred; on the south by Huntingdonshire and Higham Ferrers hundred; and on the west by Huxloe hundred.

CLAPTON, or Clopton in the Wold, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 4 miles E. from Thrapston, contains 12 houses, and 94 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*: it contains several monuments of the Dudley family. Clapton Hall is the seat of —— Moreland, Esq. Sir William Dudley, of Clapton, was created baronet 1 August, 1660; the title is now extinct. Liveden, a curious unfinished edifice, is in this parish.

PILTON, on the river Nen, 3 miles S. from Oundle, contains 23 houses, and 116 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Lilford.

STOKE DOYLE, on a branch of the river Nen, 1½ mile S. from Oundle, contains 23 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Rumbald, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

THORP ACHURCH, on the river Nen, 3 miles N.E. from Thrapston, contains 49 houses, and 239 inhabitants, including Thorp and Waterville hamlets. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Lilford.

THRAPSTON, 22 miles N.E. from Northampton, and 73 miles from London, contains 159 houses, and 854 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Nen, over which is a stone bridge, and consists of four streets, forming the roads from Huntingdon to Kettering, and from Peterborough to Northampton. The market on Tuesday is a very great one, and the first market-day after Michaelmas is as large as a fair. There are annual fairs on the first Tuesday in May, and on the 5th of August. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The adjacent country is remarkably fertile, and is in a high state of cultivation.

TITCHMARSH, or Tichmersh, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 2 miles N.E. from Thrapston, contains 161 houses, and 748 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 45*l.* Here was anciently a small chantry, dedicated to St. Stephen, near the precinct of the castle, the seat of the Lords Lovel of Titchmarsh.

WADENHO, on the river Nen, 4 miles N. from Thrapston, contains 49 houses, and 243 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* Wadenho Hall is the seat of the Rev. S. Hodson.

10. Newbottle Grove Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Guilsborough hundred; on the east by Spelho hundred; on the south by Towcester hundred; and on the west by Fawsley hundred.

BRAMPTON, 5 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 74 houses, and 392 inhabitants, including Church and Chapel Brampton. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford.

BRINGTON, or Brighton, 7 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 165 houses, and 874 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Little Brington, Newbottle, Althorp, and part of Clasthorp. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a rectory, value 40*l.*, in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The north chapel contains an interesting series of sepulchral memorials of the Spencer family, from the reign of Henry VIII. to the present time. Althorp Park is the principal seat of Earl Spencer. The house was built by the Earl of Sunderland in 1688; it stands low, and the approach is by avenues of trees. The gallery, 115 feet by 20, contains a collection of portraits hardly perhaps exceeded by any in the kingdom, not only in point of number but of beauty: the family portraits alone amount to above fifty. In the splendid and matchless library, the number of volumes is computed at about 33,000, deposited in five rooms, extending 300 feet in length.

BROCKHOLE, or Brockhall, 4 miles E. from Daventry, contains 11 houses, and 69 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Muscote. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 13*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Brockhole House, the seat of Thomas Reeve Thornton, Esq., occupies an elevated site, commanding a pleasingly diversified view over the valley. In the hall is a portrait of Robert Catesby the conspirator, by an unknown artist. The Watling-street passes through the parish.

BUGBROOK, 6 miles S.W. from Northampton, and 9 miles S.E. from Daventry, contains 160 houses, and 835 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 34*l.*, in the patronage of the Rev. H. B. Harrison. The Grand Junction canal passes westward of the village.

DALLINGTON, on a branch of the river Nen, 2 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 71 houses, and 369 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough: it contains monuments of the Raynsfords and Jekyls.

DUSTON, 2 miles W. from Northampton, contains 103 houses, and 484 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, in the presentation of the inhabitants. St. James's Abbey is in this parish.

FLORE, or Floore, 6 miles S.E. from Daventry, and 7 miles W. from Northampton, contains 230 houses, and 861 inhabitants, including part of Clasthorp and Upper Heyford hamlets. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 17*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford. Flore House is the seat of Richard Pack, Esq.

EAST HADDON, 8 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 135 houses, and 617 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of C. Smyth, Esq. Haddon House, the seat of William Sawbridge, Esq., contains Hogarth's original illustrations of Hudibras.

HARLESTON, 4½ miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 100 houses, and 564 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*: it contains monuments of the Andrew family. Harleston Park contains about 160 acres.

HARPOLE, 4 miles W. from Northampton, contains 139 houses, and 687 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. Sir Richard Lane, Lord Keeper to Charles I., was born here in 1584.

HEYFORD, 6 miles W. from Northampton, contains 114 houses, and 544 inhabitants, including the two villages of Nether and Over Heyford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. John Lloyd Crawley: it contains a monument of Judge Morgan and his lady, 1558; a brass of Sir Walter Mauntell and his lady, 1467, &c. Indications of a Roman villa were found here in 1699, about a mile and a half from the Watling-street.

HOLDENBY, or Holmby, 7 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 28 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Holdenby House, built by Lord Chancellor Hatton, and memorable for the imprisonment of King Charles I., has been entirely destroyed: Two gateways, the only remains, are dated 1583.

KISLINGBURY, 4 miles W. from Northampton, contains 117 houses, and 643 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. R. B. Hughes.

RAVENSTHORP, 9 miles N.W. from Northampton, contains 102 houses, and 500 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Oxford. Teeton and Coton are hamlets of this parish. Teeton House is the seat of Thomas Langton, Esq.

UPTON, 2 miles W. from Northampton, contains 6 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Upton House, the seat of Mrs. Samwell, contains several very interesting portraits.

WHILTON, 5 miles N.E. from Daventry, contains 73 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of William Rose Rose, Esq.

11. Norton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Fawsley hundred; on the east by Towcester and Cleley hundreds; on the south by Buckinghamshire; and on the west by Sutton and Wardon hundreds.

BLAKESLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Towcester, contains 101 houses, and 463 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 17*s.* Blakesley Hall is the seat of H. Wight, Esq. Here is an endowed grammar-school; and the parish contains the hamlets of Kirby, Sewell, and Wood End.

BRADDEN, or Braden, 3 miles W. from Towcester, contains 30 houses, and 135 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough.

CANONS ASHBY, 8 miles N.W. from Towcester, contains 5 houses, and 32 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rev. Sir Henry Dryden, Bart. The village received its appellation from a priory of Black Canons, dedicated to the Holy Virgin, founded here as early as the reign of King John: it was valued at the Dissolution at 127*l.* 19*s.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1537 to Sir Francis Bryan, from whom it passed to Sir John Cope. There are no remains of the monastery, excepting the chapel, now the parish church, in which are several monuments of the Dryden family. Canons Ashby House is the seat of the Rev. Sir Henry Dryden, Bart. One room, 30 feet by 20, is floored and panelled with the timber of a single oak, which grew on the estate. Sir Erasmus Dryden, of Canons Ashby, was created baronet 16th Nov. 1619, but the title became extinct on the death of Sir John Dryden, eighth baronet of this ancient family. Sir Edward Turner, created baronet 2nd May, 1795, married Elizabeth, niece of Sir John Dryden, and assumed the name. Adstone is a chapelry of this parish.

GREEN'S NORTON, 2 miles N.W. from Towcester, contains 147 houses, and 740 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 38*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it contains a monument of Thomas Greene, of the date of Edward III., and others of the Green family. The font also is ancient and curious. Here were born Queen Katharine Parr, and her brother William Parr, Marquess of Northampton, K.G.

MAIDFORD, 6 miles N.W. from Towcester, contains 62 houses, and 319 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

MORTON PINKENEY, or Gildene Morton, 8 miles W. from Towcester, contains 116 houses, and 540 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of Oriel College Oxford.

PLUMPTON, 6 miles W. from Towcester, contains 13 houses, and 63 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

SILVERSTON, in Whittlebury Forest, 4 miles S. from Towcester, contains 177 houses, and 837 inhabitants. It is a curacy, and is said to have been the site of a royal palace, of which there are no vestiges. Luffield Abbey, an extra-parochial district, is partly in this parish, and partly in that of Stowe in Buckinghamshire.

SLAPTON, 3½ miles S.W. from Towcester, contains 45 houses, and 201 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

WEDON PINKENEY, or Wedon Loys, 6 miles W. from Towcester, contains 101 houses, and 477 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Weston. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of King's College Cambridge. Here is a mineral spring, called St. Loy's or Louis Well. A Benedictine Priory, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded by Gilo de Wedon as early as the reign of Henry I., which was a cell to St. Lucien, near Beauvais, the monks of which sold it to the Abbey of Bittlesden, in Buckinghamshire; and about 1440 it was made part of the endowment of All Souls' College Oxford.

WHITTLEBURY, 3 miles S. from Towcester, contains 141 houses, and 642 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. Whittlebury Forest extends into Buckinghamshire, and is part of the honour of Grafton: it contains 5424 acres, 1 rood, and 11 poles, almost entirely encompassed with a mound, which is considered its boundary, all within being subject to forest laws. The whole is divided into five walks; Hasleborough, Shelbrook, Wakefield, Hanger, and Shrobb. By grant from Queen Anne in 1712, the Duke of Grafton is Lord Warden, with possession of Wakefield Lodge, &c., and as hereditary Ranger, has the custody of the deer, being required to supply His Majesty's household, and those public offices accustomed to have an allowance of venison from the royal forests. Wakefield Lodge is delightfully situated on a gentle eminence, which slopes gradually to the margin of a lake. The opposite bank swells into a noble lawn, nearly a mile in extent, which is contrasted by the bold and abrupt aspect of a dense woodland scene. The Lodge was nearly rebuilt from designs by Kent for the Duke of Grafton, and has been very greatly improved by the present noble owner. Shelbrook Lawn is the seat of the Honourable General Fitzroy.

12. Orlingbury Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Rothwell hundred; on the east by Huxloe hundred; on the south by Hamfordsho and Spelho hundreds; and on the west by Guilsborough hundreds.

BROUGHTON, 3 miles S.W. from Kettering, contains 77 houses, and 455 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch.

CRANSLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Kettering, contains 53 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.*

FAXTON, 6 miles S.W. from Kettering, contains 20 houses, and 85 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a curacy; it contains a monument of Sir Augustine Nicholas, ob. 1616.

HANNINGTON, 6 miles N.W. from Wellingborough, contains 37 houses, and 177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Francis Godwin, Bishop of Hereford, was born here in 1561.

HARDWICK, 3 miles N.W. from Wellingborough, contains 15 houses, and 87 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

GREAT HARROWDEN, 2 miles N.W. from Wellingborough, contains 25 houses, and 140 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. Nicholas Vaux was created Lord Vaux of Harrowden 27th April 1523. He lived here in great splendour. The title became extinct in 1661. The manor-house was rebuilt by the Hon. Thomas Wentworth. Little Harrowden, one mile W. from the above, contains 93 houses, and 420 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Here is a free grammar-school.

ISHAM, on the river Ise, 3 miles S. from Kettering, contains 63 houses, and 322 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, in two portions, each value 7*l.* 10*s.* Isham inferior is in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

LAMPORT, 9 miles N. from Northampton, and the same distance S. from Market Harborough, contains 23 houses, and 122 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 48*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Sir J. Isham, Bart. The Isham chapel contains many memorials of the family. Lamport Hall, the seat of Sir Justinian Isham, was erected from a design by Webb, son-in-law of Inigo Jones; the distant views over a tract adorned with woods, contribute much to the beauty of the diversified grounds. Sir John Isham of Lamport was created a baronet 30th May 1627. Hanging Houghton is a hamlet of this parish.

OLD, or Wold, 9 miles N.E. from Northampton, contains 83 houses, and 450 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Brazen Nose College Oxford.

ORLINGBURY, 4 miles N.W. from Wellingborough, contains 63 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* The Rev. Owen Manning, the Historian of Surrey, was born here in 1721.

PYTCHLEY, or Pightesley, 3 miles S.W. from Kettering, contains 78 houses, and 452 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Pytchley Hall, is the property of Sir C. Knightley, Bart.: it is celebrated in the annals of sporting for its fox-hunts.

SCALDWELL, 8 miles N. from Northampton, contains 70 houses, and 323 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch.

WALGRAVE, 7 miles N.W. from Wellingborough, contains 112 houses, and 529 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

13. Polebrook Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Willybrook hundred; on the east by Huntingdonshire; on the south by Navisford hundred and part of Huxloe hundred; and on the west by Corby hundred.

BARNWELL, ST. ANDREW, 2 miles S. from Oundle, contains 42 houses, and 255 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* Here are extensive remains of a castle, erected in the reign of Henry I. by Reginald La Moyne.

BENEFIELD, 3 miles W. from Oundle, contains 70 houses, and 444 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* The swallows near this village are curious phænomena.

HEMINGTON, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 4 miles S.E. from Oundle, contains 13 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

LUDDINGTON IN THE BROOK, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, and partly in that county, 5 miles S.E. from Oundle, contains 23 houses, and 119 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

OUNDLE, 30 miles N.E. from Northampton, and 82 miles from London, contains 434 houses, and 2150 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Elmington. This town is situated on the Nen, which almost surrounds it; many of the houses are of the time of James I. and the Talbot Inn is particularly curious. Two bridges over the river form a communication with the roads to Thrapston and Yaxley; the last, called the North Bridge, consists of an extensive causeway over the low grounds, necessary in time of floods. The market is held on Saturday, and there are annual fairs 24th Feb., Whit Monday, 21st Aug., and 11th Oct. for all sorts of stock and cheese. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The tower is crowned by a very beautiful hexagonal spire 201 feet high. An alms-house and free grammar-school were founded here by Sir William Laxton, Lord Mayor of London in 1544; and a charity-school by Nicholas Latham in 1620. Ashton on the eastern side of the Nen is a hamlet of this parish.

POLEBROOK, on a branch of the Nen, 2 miles E. from Oundle, contains 43 houses, and 316 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Armston is a hamlet of this parish.

WARMINGTON, on the river Nen, 3 miles N.E. from Oundle, contains 91 houses, and 519 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Westmoreland.

14. Rothwell Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Leicestershire and Corby hundred; on the east by Huxloe hundred; on the south by Guilsborough and Orlingbury hundreds; and on the west by Leicestershire.

ARTHINGWORTH, 4 miles S. from Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, contains 44 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

LITTLE BOWDEN, on the Welland, one mile S. from Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, contains 74 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Little Oxenden is a hamlet of this parish.

BRAYBROOK, 3 miles S.E. from Market Harborough, contains 91 houses, and 379 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*; it contains a monument of Sir Nicholas Griffin, ob. 1509. Braybrook Castle, on a branch of the Welland, was the seat of the Griffins. Sir John Griffin, K.B., Lord Howard of Walden, was created Lord Braybrook 5th Sept. 1788: he was a descendant of Edward Lord Griffin of Braybrook, which title became extinct in 1742.

CLIPSTON, 5 miles S.W. from Market Harborough, contains 166 houses, and 813 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, in three portions, two of which are valued at 11*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, and the third, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of Christ's College Cambridge. Here are a free grammar-school and hospital, built and endowed by Sir George Buswell, Bart. 1667.

DESBOROUGH, 6 miles N.W. from Kettering, contains 205 houses, and 908 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

DRAUGHTON, 7 miles W. from Kettering, contains 37 houses, and 170 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

EAST FARNDON, 2 miles S.W. from Market Narborough, contains 67 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford.

GLENDON, 3 miles N.W. from Kettering, contains 6 houses, and 37 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of J. Booth, Esq. Glendon Hall, the seat of John Booth, Esq., contains several portraits of the family and its connections, also a full-length portrait of Katherine Parr, Queen of Henry VIII., by Holbein. Barford, an extraparochial liberty, adjoins this parish.

HARRINGTON, 6½ miles W. from Kettering, contains 32 houses, and 184 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

HASELBEECH, 5 miles S.E. from Welford, contains 30 houses, and 170 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

KELMARSH, 5½ miles S. from Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, contains 32 houses, and 172 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of W. Hanbury, Esq.: it contains several ancient monuments of his family. Kelmarsh Hall is the seat of William Hanbury, Esq.

LODDINGTON, 3½ miles W. from Kettering, contains 38 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

MAIDWELL, 7 miles S. from Market Harborough, contains 49 houses, and 279 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* Maidwell was the seat of Lord James Russell, son of the first Duke of Bedford.

MARSTON TRUSSEL, on the river Welland, and borders of Leicestershire, 3 miles S.W. from Market Harborough, contains 47 houses, and 215 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Thorp Lubenham is a township of this parish.

GREAT OXENDEN, 2½ miles S. from Market Harborough, contains 56 houses, and 277 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*: in it are monuments of Katherine Lady Gorges, ob. 1663, and the Rev. J. Morton, rector, who here wrote his Natural History of this county.

ROTHWELL, or Rowell, 4 miles N.W. from Kettering, contains 388 houses, and 1742 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*: in it are several monuments of the Tresham, Lant, Humble, Lane, and Hill families. The market here has been long disused, but the splendid market-house, erected by Sir Thomas Tresham, in the reign of Elizabeth, still remains: it was repaired by the gentlemen of the county in 1827. Here was a priory of the order of St. Augustine, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, founded by one of the Clare family. At the Dissolution it was valued at 10*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1545 to Henry Lee. Orton is a chapelry, and Thorp Underwood is a hamlet of this parish.

RUSHTON, 4 miles N.W. from Kettering, contains 72 houses, and 366 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: in it are several monuments of the Cockayne family. Rushton Hall, the seat of Thomas Williams Hope, Esq., was commenced by Sir Thomas Tresham, in the reign of Elizabeth, about 1595, but appears to have been carried on and finished by the Cockayne family, at different periods, to 1630. It still remains nearly in its original state, and time has imparted its mellow hue to the building, which exhibits some peculiarities of style, the Roman being blended with that of our ancient domestic architecture. It surrounds three sides of a quadrangle, having upon the front a Doric screen. The house contains one of the very finest collections of pictures in the kingdom. Amidst the delightful shades of the wilderness Dryden passed much of his time, and is said to have written the Hind and the Panther, published in 1687, at this seat. At the extremity of the grounds is a very curious triangular lodge, built by Sir Thomas Tresham.

SIBBERTOFT, on the borders of Leicestershire, 2 miles N.W. from Welford, and 5 miles S.W. from Market Harborough, contains 82 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The river Welland rises near the vicarage-house. Hothorp, a hamlet on the banks of this river, is in Theddingworth parish, Leicestershire. Fox Hill, near it, is a remarkable elevation. Castle-yard, in this parish, is said to be the site of an ancient castle.

SULBY, on the borders of Leicestershire, one mile W. from Welford, contains 9 houses, and 59 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Sulby Abbey was founded by William de Wideville, about 1115, for monks of the Premonstratensian order. Sir Robert de Paveley was also a great benefactor to this monastery: it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and at the Dissolution was valued at 305*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.* per annum. In 1567 it was granted to Sir Cristopher Hatton: its site is now occupied by farming buildings and is the property of Lord Willoughby de Broke. Sulby Hall, the seat of George Payne, Esq., is a stone edifice, erected about the year 1795, after a design by Soane. In the grounds is a fine piece of water, over which is a bridge. The celebrated field of Naseby is comprised in the views.

THORP MALSOR, or Malsovers, 2 miles W. from Kettering, contains 56 houses, and 299 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*

15. Sutton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wardon and Norton hundreds; on the east by Buckinghamshire; and on the south and west by Oxfordshire.

AYNHO, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 6 miles S.W. from Brackley, contains 141 houses, and 719 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of W. R. Cartwright, Esq.; it contains several monuments of his family. A hospital was here, which is supposed to have been founded by Roger Fitz Richard, and his son Robert Fitz Roger, in the reign of Henry II.: it was united to Magdalen College Oxford, by the gift of William Fitz Allen, the patron, in 1484. Aynho Hall, the seat of William Ralph Cartwright, Esq., has been modernized after designs by Soane. In the principal apartments are bronzes and pictures, collected by Mr. Blackwood. The old house at Aynho was burnt down by the King's forces, on their retreat from Naseby to Oxford, in 1645. Shakerley Marmion, a dramatic writer, was born here in 1603; and also Sir Ralph Winwood, an eminent statesman.

BRACKLEY, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 8 miles from Buckingham, 20 miles from Northampton and 64 from London, contains 341 houses, and 1851 inhabitants. This town is situated on the Ouse, and consists of one street unusually wide, extending from the bridge up the side of a hill, about a mile in length. It has a market on Wednesday, with a good market-house and town-hall united; but its only manufacture is lace-making. There are annual fairs, on Wednesday after 25th February, on 2nd Wednesday in April, on Wednesday after 10th October, and on 30th December, St. Andrew's Day, for cattle and articles of clothing, particularly shoes. The town is governed by a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty six burgesses; the mayor being annually chosen by the burgesses, at the court-leet of the lord of the manor; the arms of the borough are those of Egerton and Stanley quarterly. It returns two members to Parliament, which privilege was, in the 1st year of Edward VI., vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, consisting of 33 voters; the present members are Robert Haldane Bradshaw, Esq., and James Bradshaw, Esq. The site of an ancient castle retains the name of Castle Hill. Here are two parishes, St. James and St. Peter. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bridgewater family; St. James is a chapel to the vicarage. A free-school was founded here in the reign of Edward VI. An hospital, dedicated to St. James and St. John, was founded by Robert Bossu, Earl of Lancaster, in the reign of Henry I., which was granted to Magdalen College Oxford in 1484; the ancient chapel is almost the only remains: besides this was an hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, entirely destroyed; and an alms-house, founded by Sir Thomas Crewe in 1633, which still exists. Thomas Payne, the celebrated bibliopolist, was born here in 1719. Sir Thomas Egerton, Lord Ellesmere, and Lord Chancellor, was created Viscount Brackley 7 Nov. 1616, a title which merged in the Dukedom and Earldom of Bridgewater; the manor, long in possession of this family, descends through the Marquess of Stafford to Lord Francis Leveson Gower.

CHACOMBE, or Chalcombe, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 8 miles N.W. from Brackley, contains 87 houses, and 485 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of Fyennes Wykeham Martin, Esq. Henry de Chacombe, in the reign of Henry II., founded here a Priory for Canons Augustines, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: it was valued at 93*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, and was granted in 1543 to Michael Fox, of London, whose monument is in the church.

CROUGHTON, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles S.W. from Brackley, contains 87 houses, and 376 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Viscount Ashbrook. The chancel has been lately rebuilt by the rector. Robert Friend, D.D., a distinguished scholar, was born here in 1667; and John Friend, his brother, the most eminent physician of his day, was born here in 1675.

CULWORTH, 8 miles N.W. from Brackley, and 7 miles N.E. from Banbury, in Oxfordshire, contains 122 houses, and 581 inhabitants. The village is approached from the north and west by a steep ascent and extends along the brow. On the north side of the churchyard is a circular hill, surrounded by a deep ditch, called Berrymount Hill, supposed the site of a castle. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Sawyer Spence, Esq. In the chancel is a monument of the Danvers family, formerly lords of the manor. Sir Samuel Danvers, of Culworth, was created baronet 21 March 1643, but the title is now extinct. Culworth is the seat of Peter Rye, Esq., Capt. R.N. Stotesbury, or Stuchbury, 5 miles N. from Brackley, presents the singular anomaly of a parish without either church or village. It contains 4 dispersed farm-houses, and 32 inhabitants.

EVENLEY, or Imley, on the borders of Oxfordshire, and banks of the Ouse, one mile S. from Brackley, contains 92 houses, and 468 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Astwick. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford: it contains a large and costly monument of Sir Creswell Levinz, ob. 1701. This parish is so situated, as to connect three counties, three dioceses, and three circuits.

FARTHINGHO, or Farningho, on a hill, 4 miles N.W. from Brackley, contains 82 houses, and 476 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of George Rush, Esq.: the tower was repaired in 1654 by Sir John Egerton. Philip Thicknesse, father of Lord Audley, was born here in 1719. The river Ouse rises in Ouse Well, at the foot of the hill, and descending eastward from the village, directs its course to Brackley.

HELMDON, or Helmenden, on the Ally brook, 4 miles N. from Brackley, contains 109 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Oxford. In the rectory-house is a chimney-piece, with the initials W.R. and the date 1555; which excited much disputation amongst the antiquaries of the last century: it was doubtless erected by Will. Renalde, rector, from 1523 to 1560.

HINTON IN THE HEDGES, 2 miles W. from Brackley, contains 41 houses, and 188 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Earl Spencer. NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.—Midland Circuit.

This county is bounded on the north by Yorkshire; on the east by Lincolnshire; on the south by Leicestershire; and on the west by Derbyshire. It is about fifty miles in length, twenty-five in breadth, and about one hundred and forty in circumference. The inhabitants were called Coritani by the Romans, and it formed a part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis. The Roman stations are supposed to have been Ad Pontem, Southwell; Crocolana, Brough; Margidunum, East Bridgford; Agelocum, Littleborough; and Vernometum, near Willoughby, on the borders of Leicestershire. Extensive remains of a Roman villa were discovered near Mansfield Woodhouse, and encampments are found at Barton Hill, Combe's Farm, Gringley on the Hill, Hexgrave, Holly Hill, and Winny Hill. During the Saxon Heptarchy, Nottinghamshire formed part of the kingdom of Mercia. The castles of its early lords were at Nottingham and Newark. A royal palace was at Clipston, and archiepiscopal palaces at Southwell and Scrooby. There were abbeys at Newstead, Rufford, and Welbeck; and priories at Blyth, Lenton, Mattersey, Worksop, Shelford, Thurgarton, and Radford. This county contains one county-town, nine market-towns, one hundred and sixty-eight parishes, 35,022 houses, and 186,873 inhabitants, and returns eight members to Parliament,—two for Newark, two for Nottingham, two for Bassetlaw hundred and East Retford, and two for the county, which at present is represented by John Evelyn Denison, Esq., and John Savile Lumley, Esq. The surface of this county, except the level through which the Trent runs, is uneven, and may perhaps be said to be hilly, though none of the hills rise to any considerable degree of elevation. In point of soil, it consists of three divisions, sand or gravel, clay, and limestone and coal-land. In the first is included the ancient forest of Sherwood and the borders of it, the Trentbank land, or the level ground accompanying the Trent, from its entrance into the county, down to Sutton-upon-Trent, and also the level ground running up the river Soar from its junction with the Trent to Rempston. The clay district lies north of Trent, and includes the hundred of Thurgarton, the Vale of Belvoir, and the Nottinghamshire Wolds,—a range of high bleak country. The lime and coal districts may be defined to lie westward of a line drawn from the river at Shire Oaks to the river Lene, near Wollaton and Radford, no lime being found eastward of the Lene. This county is well watered for different purposes. The navigable river Trent enters the county near Thrumpton, and runs through it on both sides till a little below North Clifton, whence to the northern point of the county it forms a boundary between it and Lincolnshire. The Erwash forms the boundary between this county and Derbyshire for ten or twelve miles down to its junction with the Trent, below Thrumpton. The Soar forms the boundary between Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire for seven or eight miles above its junction with the Trent, near Thrumpton. On the forest side no less than five fine streams cross from east to west, almost parallel to each other, and afterwards run to the north, forming the river Idle:—The Rainworth water from near Newstead Park to Inkersall Dam and Rufford, joins the Maun at Ollerton. The Maun goes from Mansfield by Clipston and Edwinstow to Ollerton. The Meden by Budby, and through Thoresby Park, joining the Maun near Perlthorp: from this junction, the river is called the Idle. The Wallen, through Welbeck Park, and after receiving the Poulter, from Langwith and Cuckney, by Carburton, and through Clumber Park, into the Idle near Elksley. The Ryton river runs by Worksop, Bilby, Blyth, and Scrooby, into the Idle at Bawtry. Two other rivers run southward: the Lene, from Newstead Park, by Papplewick, Bullwell, Basford, and Lenton, into the Trent, near Nottingham Bridge; the Dover, or Darebeck, from near Blidworth, by Oxton and Calverton, Eperston and Lowdham, into the Trent, near Caythorp. In the clay district are the Greet and many nameless streams; and in the Vale of Belvoir are the Devon, the Smite, and other smaller rills. The inland navigation consists of the Chesterfield canal, which entering this county on the western side passes Worksop and Retford, and joins the Trent near the mouth of the Idle. The Nottingham canal commences near Eastwood in the west, communicates with the Cromford and Erwash canals, and is met by the Beeston Cut two miles from Nottingham, where it unites with the Grantham canal, which after passing over the Trent leaves this county near Hickling. The productions of Nottinghamshire are coals, lead, wool, cattle, fowls, abundance of fresh-water fish, liquorice, grain of all sorts, hops and weld, "the yellow staining weed, luteola." Botanists find in this county ample scope for their interesting pursuit. Amongst many rare indigenous plants, the following may be mentioned:—the spring and autumnal crocus; the wild yellow tulip; the spreading bell-flower; the yellow, common, and drooping star of Bethlehem; the maiden pink; the Nottingham catchfly, Silene nutans; and that elegant and very rare moss the Schistostega pennata, with many other species less ornamental in appearance, but not less interesting to the inquisitive naturalist. A Botanical Calendar for the county, far surpassing the catalogue of Deering in scientific arrangement, and rendered entertaining by apt quotations from eminent poets, has already been printed by Mr. Thomas Jowett, surgeon, of Nottingham; and it is to him, who has left no part of the county unexplored, the editor is indebted for the very slight notice of its plants to which he is necessarily confined. The commerce and manufactures of this county are extensive. The malting business is carried on at Nottingham, Newark, Mansfield, and in many other places. At Newark are breweries which vie with Burton-upon-Trent in the trade to the Baltic and other parts; and at Nottingham is a brewery established on an extensive plan. The stocking trade occupies a great many hands at Nottingham, and the villages for many miles round; as also at Mansfield, Southwell, and other places in its neighbourhood. Many cotton-mills in this county prepare the thread; and large woollen-mills are at Arnold, Retford and Cuckney. Frame-work knitted lace, a source of increasing wealth to the town of Nottingham, is of modern origin; but in 1810 there were at least 1500 frames employed. Clumber Park, in Sherwood Forest, is the seat of His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Bassetlaw Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Yorkshire; on the east by Lincolnshire; on the south by Broxtow and Thurgarton hundreds; and on the west by Derbyshire. It is again subdivided into North and South Clay and Hatfield divisions, which make it equal to three hundreds.

Hatfield Division.

BABWORTH, one mile W. from Retford, contains 68 houses, and 416 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Great and Little Moreton, Norton Grange, and part of Ranby. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of J. B. Simpson. Babworth Hall, the seat of John Bridgeman Simpson, Esq., is beautifully situated and adorned with tasteful plantations, having in front of the house an open lawn and fine sheet of water. Ranby Hall is the seat of the Duchess dowager of Newcastle.

BLYTH, on the river Ryton, 4 miles S. from Bawtry, and 6 miles N.W. from Retford, contains 171 houses, and 801 inhabitants. It has a market on Wednesday, and annual fairs on Holy Thursday for cattle and horses, and 20th Oct. for sheep and swine. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: it is a large structure, with a fine lofty tower; in the chancel are several ancient monuments. Roger de Builli and Muriel his wife founded here in 1088 a Benedictine priory in honour of the Blessed Virgin, which at the Dissolution was valued at 126*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.*: the site was granted in 1543 to Richard Andrews and William Ramsden. Blyth Spittal is the site of a hospital founded by William de Cressy of Hodsock, and dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. The parish of Blyth is large, and contains the following townships: Barnby Moor, Bilby, part of Styrrup, Torworth, and the lordship of Hodsock. About a mile northward from the town of Blyth is Serlby Hall, the seat of Viscount Galway: it contains a fine collection of family portraits, and a large picture of Charles I. and his Queen; with horses and dogs, by Daniel Mytens, which was presented by Queen Anne to Addison: a full-length portrait of Charles I., by Vandyck, &c. &c. Woodhouse Hall is extra-parochial.

BOTHAMSALL, 4 miles N.W. from Tuxford, contains 58 houses, and 310 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Newcastle.

BOUGHTON, 2 miles N.E. from Ollerton, contains 63 houses, and 289 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the chapter of Southwell.

CARLTON IN LINDRICK, on the borders of Yorkshire, 3 miles N. from Worksop, contains 170 houses, and 888 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory; value 15*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. Carlton Hall is the seat of Sir Thomas Woolaston White, Bart. About a mile westward of the village is Walling Wells, an extra-parochial liberty. Ralph de Chevercourt, in the reign of Stephen, founded and endowed a Benedictine nunnery, in honour of the Virgin Mary, which was sometimes called St. Mary-in-the-Park: at the Dissolution it was valued at 87*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1563 to Richard Pipe and Francis Bowyer. Sir Thomas Woolaston White, of Tuxford and Walling Wells, Colonel of the Sherwood Rangers, a corps raised at his own expense, was created baronet 20th Dec. 1802.

CUCKNEY, on the borders of Derbyshire, 7 miles N.W. from Ollerton, and 4 miles S. from Worksop, contains 57 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Manvers. Holbeck, Langwith and Norton, are townships of this parish. Welbeck, the seat of the Duke of Portland, is extra-parochial. The abbey here, dedicated to St. James, was founded in the reign of Henry II. for Premonstratensian Canons, by Thomas de Cuckney. John Hotham, Bishop of Ely, in 1329 settled the whole manor of Cuckney upon the abbey; and his successors in the see of Ely were accounted patrons of Welbeck Abbey, which was constituted the superior of all the houses of the Premonstratensian order in England and Wales in 1512. At the Dissolution it was valued at 298*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1538 to Richard Whalley, from whom it afterwards came to Sir Charles Cavendish, brother of William Earl of Devonshire, who converted the monastic building into a residence in 1604. It is spacious, and remains nearly in the original style. The interior displays a great degree of elegance and convenience, the apartments having been re-arranged by the late Duke of Portland. The library, forty-four feet by thirty, is in the Tudor style of architecture. Besides a collection of portraits of the Cavendish and Bentinck families, here are others of peculiar interest as connected with English history: a portrait of Edward VI. in crimson and gold; an equestrian portrait of Queen Elizabeth, with a view of the old mansion at Wanstead in the back-ground, by Lucas de Heere, &c. Sir Charles Cavendish dying in 1617, Welbeck Abbey became the residence of his son, the celebrated and loyal Duke of Newcastle, whose taste for horsemanship was so conspicuous: he built here a magnificent riding-house and stables, under the direction of John Smithson, in 1623,—still the finest in the kingdom. Margaret his granddaughter and heiress married John Holles Earl of Clare, who was created Duke of Newcastle in 1694; and his daughter and heiress Henrietta married Edward Harley Earl of Oxford, whose only daughter and heiress Lady Margaret Cavendish Harley married in 1734 William second Duke of Portland, from whom this ancient seat, together with large estates in this county and Derbyshire, descended to the present noble possessor. The park is about eight miles round, and is adorned with woods of venerable oaks, some of remarkable size; as the Greendale oak, the Duke's Walking-stick, and Two Porters: near the house the plantations are upon a very large scale, and are diversified with a fine piece of water, occupying a winding valley, which sweeping round the several headlands produces a most picturesque effect at every turn.

EDWINSTOW, in the northern part of Sherwood Forest, 2 miles W. from Ollerton, contains 139 houses, and 648 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. Budby and Clipston are townships, and Carburton, Ollerton and Perlthorp, are chapelries, of this parish.

Clipston, or King's Clipston, was a royal residence as early as the reign of Henry II. Richard I. received the King of Scots here in 1194; and King John made a park to the mansion. Edward I. held a parliament here, whence an oak on the western side of the park was called the Parliament Oak; and Edward II. kept his Christmas here in 1315 and 1316. Edward III. also resided here. Henry VI. granted a charter to the town of Nottingham at Clipston, 19th March, in the first year of his reign. Henry VIII., in 1514, granted Clipston Park to Thomas Earl of Surrey, Lord Treasurer, when he created him Duke of Norfolk; it afterwards reverted to the Crown, and was granted by James I. to Gilbert Earl of Shrewsbury. The remain of the palace in the midst of the park is still called the King's House, and belongs to the Duke of Portland. Ollerton, or Alreton, containing 106 houses, and 576 inhabitants, has an annual fair on the 1st of May for cattle and sheep, and on 27th Sept. for hops. Northward of the village, and almost adjoining it, is Thoresby Park, the seat of Earl Manvers. This extensive demesne is computed to be thirteen miles in circumference, abounding with a variety of beautiful plantations on an enlarged scale, and presenting a succession of interesting scenery. Here are also several pieces of water, the largest of which represents an extensive river flowing in front of the mansion. The house was built about 1750 by the Duke of Kingston, from whose sister the present noble possessor is immediately descended, and has inherited the vast estates of the dukedom. It is constructed of brick and stone of the Ionic order, and stands in a fine open situation on a gentle eminence; the apartments on the garden front command a view of a fine cascade in the shrubbery: the gardens, originally laid out in the German style, have been very greatly improved by a more natural disposition.

Rufford Abbey, the seat of John Savile Lumley, Esq. M.P. for the county, one mile and a half south from Ollerton, is extra-parochial. Gilbert Earl of Lincoln in 1148 founded here a Cistercian abbey in honour of the Blessed Virgin, which at the Dissolution was valued at 254*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum: the site and the greatest part of its possessions were afterwards granted in exchange to George Earl of Shrewsbury. Some remains of the monastic edifice are included in the present structure, which stands in an extremely sequestered situation, having its entrance front completely embowered in a grove of elm and beech. The mansion contains a numerous and valuable collection of pictures. Richard, fourth Earl of Scarborough, deputy Earl Marshal of England, married Barbara sister and heiress of the patriotic Sir George Savile, Bart. of Rufford. His descendant is the present possessor.

ELKSLEY, 4 miles N.W. from Tuxford, contains 68 houses, and 347 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Newcastle.

FINNINGLEY, on the borders of Yorkshire, 4 miles N. from Bawtry, contains 70 houses, and 368 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* Aukley and Blaxton are townships of this parish; the last is in Yorkshire.

HARWORTH, on the borders of Yorkshire, 3 miles W. from Bawtry, contains 80 houses, and 395 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* At the northern extremity of this parish Robert Moreton in 1316 founded a hospital, which was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and was valued in 1534 at 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum: it still remains, and is under the patronage of the Archbishop of York. In the chapel are monuments of the Moretons.

HAUGHTON, or Houghton, 4 miles N.W. from Tuxford, contains 7 houses, and 40 inhabitants. The church is a ruin. Sir William Holles, Lord Mayor of London in 1540, purchased this estate; his great grandson Sir John Holles was created Lord Houghton in 1616, and Earl of Clare in 1624. John, fourth Earl of Clare, was created Duke of Newcastle in 1694. Near the park-gates a school was founded and endowed in 1692 by Henry Walters, steward to Gilbert and John Earls of Clare.

MATTERSEY, or Maresey, on the river Idle, 3½ miles S.E. from Bawtry, contains 78 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. Roger Fitz Ralph de Mattersey founded here before 1192 a Priory of Gilbertine Canons, dedicated to St. Helen, which was valued in 1534 at 61*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1539 to Anthony Nevile, Esq. There are still some remains of the priory on the banks of the river eastward of the village.

MISSON, or Misne, on the borders of Lincolnshire and banks of the Idle, 2 miles N.E. from Bawtry, contains 148 houses, and 720 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Misson Car is an extensive level on the banks of the river.

ORDSALL, on the Idle, one mile S. from Retford, contains 80 houses, and 632 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* Ordsall Hall is the seat of George Brown, Esq. Thrumton is a hamlet of this parish.

WALESBY, 3 miles W. from Tuxford, contains 60 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of J. Savile Lumley, Esq.

WARSOP, on the river Meden and borders of Sherwood Forest, 5 miles N. from Mansfield, contains 202 houses, and 1072 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* In the churchyard are three remarkable elm-trees. Here are annual fairs Monday before Whit Monday and 17th Nov. for horses and cattle. It was formerly a market-town. The township of Sokeholm is in this parish.

WEST RETFORD, distant a quarter of a mile from East Retford, and separated by the river Idle, contains 144 houses, and 571 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the bailiffs and burgesses of East Retford. Here is a hospital, founded by Dr. John Darrell in 1666, for a master and ten brethren. West Retford House is the seat of Peter Dickonson, Esq., and near it is the seat of James Lee, Esq.

WORKSOP, on the river Ryton, 26 miles N. from Nottingham, and 146 from London, contains 944 houses, and 4567 inhabitants. The town consists of one principal street in the road from Ollerton to Sheffield, which is intersected by two others. The houses are well built, and by means of the Chesterfield canal the trade has been improved. A market is held on Wednesday, and there are annual fairs on the 31st of March and 4th of Oct. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam: it is a handsome spacious structure, built on a cruciform plan, and once belonged to a Priory of Augustins, founded in 1102 by William Lovetot, to which the Furnivals and Talbots were also benefactors. At the Dissolution it was valued at 302*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1541 to Francis Earl of Shrewsbury, in exchange for the manor of Farnham Royal in Bucks; and is now held by the peculiar tenure of providing a glove for the right hand of the king, and supporting his right arm while His Majesty holds the scepter during the ceremony of the coronation. Worksop Manor, the seat of the Duke of Norfolk, to whom it has lineally descended from the Talbots, is situated on the borders of Sherwood Forest, the entrance to the park being about half a mile from the town on the Mansfield road, which opens upon a long avenue leading direct to the office court of the mansion. The old house, the seat of the Talbots, was destroyed by fire in 1761, and the present noble edifice, which has never yet been completed, was founded by Edward Duke of Norfolk in 1763. Paine was the architect employed; the front 318 feet in length, of the Corinthian order, is only one side of an intended quadrangle. The entrance hall and staircase, painted by Thomas de Bruyn, are of noble proportions. In the principal apartments on the east is a collection of family portraits, amongst which is that of Henry Earl of Surrey the poet, beheaded in January 1547. The park is eight miles in circumference, and contains within its limits the greatest diversity of scenery, and a range of hills richly covered with wood. Large plantations were also made by the late Duke of Norfolk. It is now the residence of the Earl of Surrey. The hamlets of Gateford, Kelton, Osberton, Radford, Ratcliffe, Ryton, Scefton, Shire Oaks, and Sloswicks, are all in this parish. Osberton Hall is the seat of F. F. Foljambe, Esq., and Radford Hall the seat of —— Elliot, Esq.

Clumber Park, the seat of the Duke of Newcastle, K.G., Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county, is about four miles from Worksop; it is nearly thirteen miles in circumference, and contains a noble lake and river with extensive plantations. The terraces, lately formed by Smirke, are a vast improvement to the scene. In it are the remains of Clumber wood and Hardwick wood; the first of which gave name to the park. The mansion was erected in 1767, from designs by Stephen Wright, and of stone quarried on the estate. It is a quadrangular edifice, the angles being occupied by the drawing-room, dining-room, library and kitchen, each 48 feet by 33 in dimension: nearly the whole of the apartments, in number 105, contain something rare or valuable, and the collection of pictures is of considerable extent and excellence. The principal staircase is elliptical in plan, and of the most pleasing construction; it is lighted by three very splendid armorial windows by Willement. In the north-west wing is the chapel, in which are four large painted windows by Peckitt of York, in which it would not have been possible to have shown more favourably his excellence in mosaic; and although the arrangement is not the best calculated to produce grandeur of effect, the general appearance is extremely beautiful. The library has lately been re-arranged, and now consists of two rooms with a marble arch connecting them, an entirely new disposition has been given to these rooms under the immediate superintendence of the Duke himself, and may be safely called the most magnificent book-room in England, combining in its decoration the graceful simplicity of the Grecian, with the richness of the modern Italian styles. It contains a copy of Raphael's School of Athens by Kent, and a very splendid armorial ceiling by Willement, which is not to be exceeded for its admirable effect. The book-cases also are of the most beautiful workmanship.

The ancient Royal Forest of Sherwood, the scene of the exploits of Robin Hood, extends from near Worksop to Nottingham, about twenty-five miles, and is in breadth from seven to nine miles. The whole has been granted from the Crown to different lords of manors, reserving the vert and the venison, the trees and the deer; the last were all of the red kind, but are now entirely extirpated; and much the greater part of the forest is inclosed: in it are comprehended the parks of Clumber, Welbeck, Thoresby, Beskwood, Newstead and Clipston. It is the only forest north of Trent which now belongs to the Crown, and remains under the superintendence of the Chief Justice in Eyre. The Duke of Newcastle is steward or lord warden, appointed by the Crown. The bow-bearer and ranger is appointed by the steward, besides whom there are four verdurers, nine keepers, of as many different walks in the forest, and two woodwards for Sutton and Carlton. The Earl of Chesterfield also is hereditary keeper of Thorney Wood Chase, a branch of the forest, by grant from Queen Elizabeth.

North Clay Division.

APPLESTHORP, or Alblethorp, 6 miles E. from Retford, contains 21 houses, and 103 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Prebendary of Applesthorp, in York Cathedral.

BOLE, on the river Trent and borders of Lincolnshire, 7 miles N.E. from Retford, and 2 miles S. from Gainsborough, contains 36 houses, and 193 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bole, in the cathedral of York.
